EN VENTRE SA MÈRE (Fr.). In its mother's womb. For certain purposes, indeed for all beneficial purposes, a child en ventre sa mère is to be considered as born; 5 T. R. 49; 1 P. Wms. 329. It is regarded as in esse for all purposes beneficial to itself, but not to another; Marsellis v. Thalhimier, 2 Paige (N. Y.) 35, 21 Am. Dec. 66; Gillespie v. Nabors, 59 Ala. 441, 31 Am. Rep. 20; [1908] 1 Ch. 4; [1907] A. C. 139. Formerly this rule would not be applied if the child's interests would be injured thereby; 2 De G., J. & S. 665; but, for the purpose of the rule against perpetuities, such a child is now regarded as a life in being, even though it is prejudiced by being considered as born; [1903] 1 Ch. 894; [1907] A. C. 139. Its civil rights are equally respected at every period of gestation; it is capable of taking under a will, by descent, or under a marriage settlement, may be appointed executor, may have a guardian assigned to it, may obtain an injunction to stay waste; Stedfast v. Nicoll, 3 Johns. Cas. (N. Y.) 18; Swift v. Duffield, 5 S. & R. (Pa.) 38; 1 Ves. 81; 2 Atk. 117; Bacon, Abr. Infancy (B); 2 H. Bla. 399; 2 Vern. 710; 4 Ves. Jr. 227. Such a child is to be considered as living so as to vest in the parent on the death of the life tenant a devise made by a testator to A for life, and on her death to the parent of the child, "for her absolute use and benefit in case she has issue living at the death" of A, "but in case she has no issue then living," then over, when the parent was enccinte at the time of A's death; [1895] 2 Ch. 497. The right of an unborn infant to take property by descent or otherwise has been said to be an inchoate right, which will not be completed by a premature birth; 1 Sharsw. Bla. Com. 130, n.; but as the word premature is used in the authorities, the rule accurately stated is that it must be born alive or after such period of foetal existence that it might reasonably be expected to survive; Harper v. Archer, 4 Smedes & M. (Miss.) 99, 43 Am. Dec. 472; Swift v. Duffield, 5 S. & R. (Pa.) 38; 4 Kent 248; Marsellis v. Thalhimier, 2 Paige (N. Y.) 35, 21 Am. Dec. 66.

A bastard en ventre sa mère is not regarded as in esse because, as it was said, such child could not take "until they have gained a name by reputation" and "that reputation could not be gained before the child was born"; 1 P. Wms. 529; but in a case decided long afterwards Lord Eldon (with whom, he stated, Sir William Grant concurred) held that a bequest to an illegitimate child en ventre sa mère was valid if there were a sufficient description to identify it; 1 Mer. 141; and the court of appeal followed this (though with Selborne, L. C. dissenting); 9 Ch. App. 147, which case was followed in [1906] 1 Ch. 542, and [1905] P. 137. The question whether an illegitimate child en ventre sa mère at the testator's death, but not when his will was made, might take as his reputed child, was left undecided; 31 Ch. D. 542; and a bequest to an illegitimate child en ventre sa mère at the date of the will was held good and not contrary to public policy; 3 Ch. D. 773. These questions derive special interest in England because they frequently arise in case of marriages with a deceased wife's sister.

Such unborn child may have an injunction to stay waste, have a guardian, and take under a charge of a portion, or be executor; 2 Ves. Jr. 319; but it is held that an infant may not recover damages for injuries received before its birth; Dietrich v. Northampton, 138 Mass. 14, 52 Am. Rep. 242.

See an elaborate article on unborn infants, action by, when they take, conveyance to, degree of development necessary and rights of action in detail; 61 C. L. J. 364. And see Tyler, Inf. & Cov. ch. xiv.; 21 Harv. L. Rev. 360; POSTHUMOUS CHILD; FETUS; NEGLIGENCE; UNBORN CHILD.

ENABLE. To give power to do something. In the case of a person under disability as to dealing with another, "enable" has the primary meaning of removing that disability; not of conferring a compulsory power as against that other; 66 L. J. Ch. 208; [1897] A. C. 647.

ENABLING POWERS. A term used in equity. When the donor of a power, who is the owner of the estate, confers upon persons not seised of the fee the right of creating interests to take effect out of it, which could not be done by the donee of the power unless by such authority, this is called an enabling power.

ENABLING STATUTE. The act of 32 Henry VIII. c. 28, by which tenants in tail, husbands seised in right of their wives, and others, were empowered to make leases for their lives or for 21 years, which they could not do before. 2 Bla. Com. 319; Co. Litt. 44 a. The phrase is also applied to any statute enabling persons or corporations to do what before they could not.

As to enabling acts of territories, see TERRITORY.

ENACT. To establish by law; to perform or effect; to decree. The usual formula in a statute is, Be it enacted.

ENAJENACION. In Spanish Law. The act by which one person transfers to another a property, either gratuitously, as in the case of a donation, or by an owner's title, as in the case of a sale or an exchange.

In Mexican Law. This word is used in conveyancing to convey the fee, and not a mere servitude upon the land. Mulford v. Le Franc, 26 Cal. 88.

ENCEINTE (Fr.). Pregnant. See PRÉGNANCY.

ENCLOSURE. An artificial fence around one's estate. Keith v. Bradford, 39 Vt. 34; Porter v. Aldrich, 39 Vt. 326; Taylor v. Welbey, 36 Wis. 42. See CLOSE.

ENCOMIENDA. A charge or mandate conferring certain important privileges on the four military orders of Spain, to wit, those of Santiago, Calatrava, Alcantara, and Montesa. In the legislation of the Indias, it signified the concession of a certain number of Indians for the purpose of instructing them in the Christian religion and defending their persons and property.

ENCOURAGE. To intimate, to incite to anything, to give courage to, to inspirit, to embolden, to raise confidence, to make confident. 7 Q. B. Div. 258.

ENCROACH. To gain unlawfully upon the lands, property, or authority of another: as if one man presseth upon the grounds of another too far, or if a tenant owe two shillings rent-service and the lord exact three. So, too, the Spencers were said to encroach the king's authority. Blount; Plowd. 94 a. Quite a memorable instance of punishment for encroaching (accroaching) royal power took place in 21 Edw. III. 1 Hale, Pl. Cr. 80. Taking fees by clerks of the courts has been held encroaching; 1 Leon. 5.

ENCUMBRANCE. See INCUMBRANCE.

ENDORSE. See INDORSEMENT.

ENDOWMENT. Now generally used of a permanent provision for any public object, as a school or hospital. By the endowment of such institutions is commonly understood, not the building or providing sites for them, but the providing of a fixed revenue for their support. 25 L. J. Ch. 82; 6 De G., M. & G. 87; State v. Lyon, 32 N. J. L. 361. But more technically, of the assigning dower to a woman, or the severing of a sufficient portion for a vicar towards his perpetual maintenance. 1 Bla. Com. 387; 2 id. 135; 3 Steph. Com. 99; French v. Pratt, 27 Me. 381; State v. Lyon, 32 N. J. L. 360; Runkel v. Winemiller, 4 Harr. & McH. (Md.) 429, 1 Am. Dec. 411.

ENDOWMENT INSURANCE. See INSURANCE.

ENEMY. A nation which is at war with another. A citizen or a subject of such a nation. Any of the subjects or citizens of a state in amity with another state who have commenced or have made preparations for commencing hostilities against the latter state, and also the citizens or subjects of a state in amity with another state who are in the service of a state at war with it. See Salk. 635; Bacon, Abr. Treason, G; Monongahela Ins. Co. v. Chester, 43 Pa. 491.

By the term enemy is also understood a person who is desirous of doing injury to another. The Latins had two terms to signify these two classes of persons: the first, or the public enemy, they called hostis, and the latter, or the private enemy, inimicus.

An enemy subject cannot, as a general rule, enter into any contract which can be enforced in the courts of law; but the rule is not without exceptions: as, for example, in suits brought upon ransom bills (q. v.), bills of exchange drawn by prisoners of war, contracts entered into under licenses to trade with the enemy granted by a belligerent to its citizens; Scholefield v. Eichelberger, 7 Pet. (U. S.) 586, 8 L. Ed. 793; Kershaw v. Kelsey, 100 Mass. 561, 97 Am. Dec. 124, 1 Am. Rep. 142.

United States citizens in Cuba during the war with Spain were enemies, and cannot recover from the United States for property destroyed; Juragua Iron Co. v. U. S., 212 U. S. 297, 29 Sup. Ct. 385, 53 L. Ed. 520. See PUBLIC ENEMY.

ENFEOFF. To make a gift of any corporeal hereditaments to another. See FEOFFMENT.

ENFRANCHISE. To make free; to incorporate a man in a society or body politic. Cun. Dict.

ENFRANCHISEMENT. Giving freedom to a person. Admitting a person to the freedom of a city. A denizen of England, or a citizen of London, is said to be enfranchised. So, too, a villein is enfranchised when he obtains his freedom from his lord. Termes de la Ley; 11 Co. 91.

The word is now used principally either of the manumission of slaves (q. v.), of giving to a borough or other constituency a right to return a member or members to parliament, or of the conversion of copyhold into freehold. Moz. & W. L. Dict.

ENFRANCHISEMENT OF COPYHOLD. The change of the tenure by which lands are held from copyhold to freehold, as by a conveyance to the copyholder or by a release of the seigniorial rights. 1 Watk. Copy. 362; 1 Steph. Com. 632; 2 id. 51.

ENGAGED. Within the meaning of a by-law of a fraternal order, one is engaged in the sale of liquor who is a partner in the saloon business, though he performs no labor in or about the saloon and takes no active part in the business. Graves v. Knights of Maccabees of the World, 199 N. Y. 397, 92 N. E. 792, 139 Am. St. Rep. 912.

ENGAGEMENT. In French Law. A contract. The obligations arising from a quasi contract.

The terms obligation and engagement are said to be synonymous; 17 Toullier, n. 1; but the Code seems specially to apply the term engagement to those obligations which the law imposes on a man without the intervention of any contract, either on the part of the obligor or the obligee; art. 1370. An engagement to do or omit to do something amounts to a promise; Rue v. Rue, 21 N. J. L. 369.

Promises or debts of a married woman, not expressly charged on her separate estate, are termed her general engagements, not binding it unless made with reference to and upon the credit of it. L. R. 4 C. P. 593; L. R. 2 Eq. 182; 3 De G.; F. & J. 513. See AGREEMENT; CONTRACT; PROMISE.

ENGLAND. See UNITED KINGDOM OF GREAT BRITAIN AND IRELAND.

ENGLESHIRE. A law was made by Canute, for the preservation of his Danes, that, when a man was killed, the hundred or town should be liable to be amerced, unless it could be proved that the person killed was an Englishman. This proof was called Engleshire. It consisted, generally, of the testimony of two males on the part of the father of him who had been killed, and two females on the part of his mother. 1 Hale, Pl. Cr. 447; 4 Bla. Com. 195; Spelman, Gloss.

ENGLISH MARRIAGE. This phrase may refer to the place where the marriage was solemnized, or it may refer to the nationality and domicile of the parties between whom it was solemnized, the place where the union so created was to have been enjoyed. 6 Prob. Div. 51.

ENGRAVING. See COPYRIGHT.

ENGROSS. To copy the rude draught of an instrument in a fair, large hand. To write out, in a large, fair hand, on parchment. The term is applied to statutes, which, after being read and acted on a sufficient number of times, are ordered to be engrossed. Anciently, also, used of the process of making the indenture of a fine. 5 Co. 39 b.

In Criminal Law. To buy up such large quantities of an article as to obtain a monopoly of it for the purpose of selling at an unreasonable price. The tendency of modern law is very decidedly to restrict the application of the law against engrossing; and is very doubtful if it applies at all except to obtaining a monopoly of provisions; 1 East 143. And now the common-law offence of the total engrossing of any commodity is abolished by Stat. 7 & 8 Vict. c. 24. Merely buying for the purpose of selling again is not necessarily engrossing. 14 East 406; 15 id. 511. See COMBINATIONS; RESTRAINT OF TRADE; MONOPOLY.

ENGROSSER. One who engrosses or writes on parchment in a large, fair hand.

One who purchases large quantities of any commodity in order to have the command of the market and to sell them again at high prices.

ENGROSSING. The offence committed by an engrosser.

ENHANCED. Taken in an unqualified sense, it is equivalent to "increased," and comprehends any increase in value however caused or arising. Thornburn v. Doscher, 32 Fed. 812.

ENITIA PARS (L. Lat.). The part of the eldest. Co. Litt. 166; Bacon, Abr. Coparceners (C).

When partition is voluntarily made among coparceners in England, the eldest has the first choice, or primæ election (q. v.); and the part which she takes is called enitia pars. This right is purely personal, and descends: it is also said that even her assignee shall enjoy it; but this has been doubted. The word enitia is said to be derived from the old French eisne, the eldest; Bac. Abr. Coparceners (C); Keilw. 1a, 49a; Cro. Eliz. 18.

ENJOIN. To command; to require: as, private individuals are not only permitted, but enjoined, by law, to arrest an offender when present at the time a felony is committed or a dangerous wound given, on pain of fine and imprisonment if the wrong-doer escape through their negligence. 1 Hale, Pl. Cr. 587; 1 East, Pl. Cr. 298; Ry. & M. 93.

To command or order a defendant in equity to do or not to do a particular thing by writ of injunction. See 55 Ch. Div. 418; INJUNCTION.

ENLARGE. To extend: as, to enlarge a rule to plead is to extend the time during which a defendant may plead. To enlarge means, also, to set at liberty: as, the prisoner was enlarged on giving bail.

ENLARGING. Extending, or making more comprehensive: as, an enlarging statute, which is one extending the common law. Enlarging an estate is the increasing an estate in land, as where A. has an estate for life with remainder to B. and his heirs, and B. releases his estate to A. 2 Bla. Com. 324. See RELEASE.

ENLISTMENT. The act of making a contract to serve the government in a subordinate capacity, either in the army or navy. The contract so made is also called an enlistment. A drafted man is said to be "enlisted" as well as a volunteer, but the term does not apply to one entering the army under a commission; Inhabitants of Sheffield v. Inhabitants of Otis, 107 Mass. 282; Hilliard v. Stewartstown, 48 N. H. 280. The contract of enlistment involves a change in the status of the recruit, which he cannot throw off at will, though he may violate his contract; In re Grimley, 137 U. S. 147, 11 Sup. Ct. 54, 34 L. Ed. 636.

Fraudulent enlistment is an offense punishable by general court-martial; Act March 3, 1893. Boys between the ages of 16 and 18 are authorized to enlist if they have the consent of their parents or guardians; R. S. § 1419. But a minor who has been enlisted in either service without the consent of his parents or guardian is both de facto and de jure in the service, and is liable to be tried and punished for any infraction of the regulations. The lack of such consent will require his discharge from the service, but it will not absolve him from punishment for offences committed while in the service; Dillingham v. Booker, 163 Fed. 696, 90 C. C. A. 280, 18 L. R. A. (N. S.) 956, 16 Ann. Cas. 127; U. S. v. Reaves, 126 Fed. 127, 60 C. C. A. 675; In re Scott, 144 Fed. 79, 75 C. C. A. 237; In re Lessard, 134 Fed. 305. But in Ex parte Lisk, 145 Fed. 860, it was held that where the statute required the consent of the parents, and such consent was not given, the minor was not a person "belonging to the navy," and the naval authorities could not detain him in custody with a view to having him tried by a naval court-martial for fraudulent enlistment, when the real issue was his legal right to enter the navy, and whether he was lawfully therein or not; followed in Dillingham v. Bakley, 152 Fed. 1022, 82 C. C. A. 659, affirming Ex parte Bakley, 148 Fed. 56.

Where the jurisdiction of the civil courts has attached in habeas corpus proceedings before charges are preferred against a minor for fraudulent enlistment and an arrest made, he is entitled to be discharged; Ex parte Houghton, 129 Fed. 239; contra, Ex parte Lewkowitz, 163 Fed. 646. In U. S. v. Wright, 5 Phila. 299, Fed. Cas. No. 16,778, it was held the enlistment of a minor without his parents' consent was illegal, and his subsequent desertion was but a disclaimer of his contract, which he had a right to make, citing and following Com. v. Fox, 7 Pa. 336. But the right to a discharge is denied to a minor, himself the petitioner, on the ground that the contract was valid so far as the minor himself is concerned; In re Morrissey, 137 U. S. 157, 11 Sup. Ct. 57, 34 L. Ed. 644; In re Hearn, 32 Fed. 141. See 22 H. L. R. 144. A federal court may discharge on habeas corpus; Ex parte Schmeid, 1 Dill. 587, Fed. Cas. No. 12,461; but not a state court; Tarble's Case, 13 Wall. (U. S.) 397, 20 L. Ed. 597.

The receipt of pay seems to be tantamount to an enlistment or perhaps evidence thereof. Art. of War 47 provides for the punishment of "any soldier who, having received pay or having been duly enlisted," etc., "deserts." etc. In re Grimley, 137 U. S. 147, 11 Sup. Ct. 54, 34 L. Ed. 636, it was held that taking the oath of enlistment "was the pivotal fact which operated to change the status."

ENORMIA (Lat.). Wrongs. See ALIA ENORMIA.

ENQUETE or ENQUEST. In Canon Law. An examination of witnesses in the presence of a judge authorized to sit for this purpose, taken in writing, to be used as evidence in the trial of a cause. The day of hearing must be specified in a notice to the opposite party; 9 Low. C. 392. It may be opened, in some cases, before the trial; 10 Low. C. 19.

ENROLL. To register; to enter on the rolls of chancery, or other courts; to make a record.

ENROLMENT. The registering or entering on the rolls of chancery, king's bench, common pleas, or exchequer, or by the clerk of the peace in the records of the quarter sessions, of any lawful act: as, a recognition, a deed of bargain and sale, and the like. Jacob, Law Dict. For the terms "enrolment" and "registration" as used in the United States merchant shipping laws, see R. S. tit. 50; 21 Stat. L. 271; 18 id. 30; The Mohawk, 3 Wall. (U. S.) 566, 18 L. Ed. 67; VESSEL.

ENS LEGIS. A being of the law; a legal entity. Used of corporations.

ENTAIL. A fee abridged or limited to the issue, or certain classes of issue, instead of descending to all the heirs. 1 Washb. R. P. 66; 2 Bla. Com. 112, n.; Wms. R. P. 61.

To restrict the inheritance of lands to a particular class of issue. 1 Washb. R. P. 66; 2 Bla. Com. 113. See FEE-TAIL.

ENTENCION. In Old English Law. The plaintiff's declaration.

ENTER. To go upon lands for the purpose of taking possession; to take possession. In a strict use of terms, entry and taking possession would seem to be distinct parts of the same act; but, practically, entry is now merged in taking possession. 1 Washb. R. P. 10, 32; Stearn, Real Act. 2.

To cause to be put down upon the record. An attorney is said to enter his appearance, or the party himself may enter an appearance. See ENTRY.

ENTERTAINMENT. Something connected with the enjoyment of refreshment rooms, tables, and the like. It is something beyond refreshments; it is the accommodation provided whether that includes musical or other amusements or not. L. R. 10 Q. B. 595. It is synonymous with board; Scattergood v. Waterman, 2 Miles (Pa.) 323; but it may include refreshment, without seating accommodation; 1 Ex. Div. 385. See PLACE OF AMUSEMENT.

ENTICE. To solicit, persuade, or procure. Nash v. Douglass, 12 Abb. Pr. N. S. (N. Y.) 187. The enticing desertions from the army or navy or arsenals of the United States is punishable by fine and imprisonment. R. S. §§ 1553, 1668, 5455, 5525.

A husband may recover compensation for enticing his wife away; French v. Deane, 19 Colo. 504, 36 Pac. 609, 24 L. R. A. 387; Tasker v. Stanley, 153 Mass. 148, 26 N. E. 417, 10 L. R. A. 468. It is no defence to show that they had not lived happily together, though it may go in mitigation of damages; Hadley v. Heywood, 121 Mass. 236; Bailey v. Bailey, 94 Ia. 598, 63 N. W. 341. Stronger evidence is required where a parent harbors his daughter; it ought to appear that there were improper motives; Hutcheson v. Peck, 5 Johns. (N. Y.) 196; Schoul. Husb. & W. § 64; Glass v. Bennett, 89 Tenn. 478, 14 S. W. 1085; White v. Ross, 47 Mich. 172, 10 N. W. 188. So of a wife's action against her husband's parents for enticing him away from her; Reed v. Reed, 6 Ind. App. 317, 33 N. E. 638, 51 Am. St. Rep. 310; and probably of a brother's harboring his sister; Glass v. Bennett, 89 Tenn. 479, 14 S. W. 1085. It has been held that neither at common law nor under statutes giving a wife the right to sue has she a right of action for enticing away her husband; Duffies v. Duffies, 76 Wis. 374, 45 N. W. 522, 8 L. R. A. 420, 20 Am. St. Rep. 79; Doe v. Roe, 82 Me. 503, 20 Atl. 83, 8 L. R. A. 833, 17 Am. St. Rep. 499; Hester v. Hester, 88 Tenn. 270, 12 S. W. 446; but the weight of authority is that the action will lie at common law; Holmes v. Holmes, 133 Ind. 386, 32 N. E. 932; Waldron v. Waldron, 45 Fed. 315; Hodgkinson v. Hodgkinson, 43 Neb. 269, 61 N. W. 577, 27 L. R. A. 120, 47 Am. St. Rep. 759; Bennett v. Bennett, 116 N. Y. 584, 23 N. E. 17, 6 L. R. A. 553; 9 H. L. Cas. 577. See Warren v. Warren, 89 Mich. 123, 50 N. W. 842, 14 L. R. A. 545. See ALIENATION OF AFFECTION.

A parent has a right of action against one who improperly entices his minor child away from him; Grand Rapids & I. R. R. Co. v. Showers, 71 Ind. 451; Caughey v. Smith, 50 Barb. (N. Y.) 351; L. R. 2 C. P. 615; in tort or assumpsit; Tiffany, Pers. & Dom. Rel. 284. The action is on the theory of loss of services, and the relation of master and servant, either actual or constructive, must be proven; id.; Magee v. Holland, 27 N. J. L. 86, 72 Am. Dec. 341.

A master has a right of action for knowingly enticing his servant; 2 El. & Bl. 216; Bixby v. Dunlap, 56 N. H. 456, 22 Am. Rep. 475 and note; Jones v. Blocker, 43 Ga. 331; Duckett v. Pool, 33 S. C. 238, 11 S. E. 689; even though the contract of employment was one which the servant could terminate at will; Haskins v. Royster, 70 N. C. 601, 16 Am. Rep. 780; L. R. 2 C. P. 615; but not where it had expired by its own limitations; Boston Glass Manufactory v. Binney, 4 Pick. (Mass.) 425. The doctrine extends to all kinds of employés; Walker v. Cronin, 107 Mass. 555; though it has been held to apply, at common law, only to domestic servants and apprentices; Huff v. Watkins, 15 S. C. 82, 40 Am. Rep. 680.

Where one after notice continues to employ another's servant, the latter has a right of action, though at the time he hired him the second master did not know that he was hiring another man's servant; Schoul. Dom. Rel. § 487; but in Lumley v. Gye, 2 El. & Bl. 216, which was an action for damages caused by the enticement of Wagner, a celebrated singer, from one theatre to another, the majority of the court thought the action would lie.

Enticement in some states renders one liable to criminal prosecution; Bryan v. State, 44 Ga. 328; Roseberry v. State, 50 Ala. 160; State v. Daniel, 89 N. C. 553. See Chipley v. Atkinson, 23 Fla. 206, 1 South. 934, 11 Am. St. Rep. 367.

ENTIRE. That which is not divided; that which is whole.

When a contract is entire, it must, in general, be fully performed before the party can claim the compensation which was to have been paid to him: for example, when a man hires to serve another for one year, he will not be entitled to leave him at any time before the end of the year, and claim compensation for the time unless it be done by the consent or default of the party hiring; Hair v. Bell, 6 Vt. 35; Stark v. Parker, 2 Pick. (Mass.) 267, 13 Am. Dec. 425; McClure v. Pratt, 4 McCord (S. C.) 26; Byrd v. Boyd, 4 McCord (S. C.) 246, 17 Am. Dec. 740; Rounds v. Baxter, 4 Greenl. (Me.) 454; Hoar v. Clute, 15 Johns. (N. Y.) 224; Watkins v. Hodges, 6 H. & J. (Md.) 38. See Olmstead v. Bach, 78 Md. 132, 27 Atl. 501, 22 L. R. A. 74, 44 Am. St. Rep. 273. A contract is entire if the consideration be single and entire, notwithstanding the subject of the contract consists of several distinct items; 2 Pars. Cont. 517. See DIVISIBLE.

An entire day is an undivided day, from midnight to midnight; Robertson v. State, 43 Ala. 325; Haines v. State, 7 Tex. App. 30; Lawrence v. State, 7 Tex. App. 192. The words "entire use, benefit," etc., in a trust deed for the benefit of a married woman, have been construed as equivalent to "sole and separate use"; Heathman v. Hall, 38 N. C. 414. Entire tenancy "is contrary to several tenancy, signifying a sole possession in one man, whereas the other signifieth joint or common in more." Cowell.

ENTIRETY. This word denotes the whole, in contradistinction to moiety, which denotes the half part. A husband and wife, when jointly seized of land, are seized by entireties per tout and not per my et per tout, as joint tenants are. Jacob, Law Dict.; 2 Kent 132. See In re Bramberry's Estate, 156 Pa. 628, 27 Atl. 405, 22 L. R. A. 594, 36 Am. St. Rep. 64. PER TOUT ET NON PER MY.

The same words of conveyance that would make two other persons joint tenants will make the husband and wife tenants of the entirety; Georgia, etc., R. Co. v. Scott, 38 S. C. 34, 16 S. E. 185, 839; Oglesby v. Birmingham, 69 Miss. 795, 13 South. 852; Noblitt v. Beebe, 23 Or. 4, 35 Pac. 248; Chambers v. Chambers, 92 Tenn. 707, 23 S. W. 67.

Such an estate has the quality of survivorship, whereby the heirs of the survivor take, to the exclusion of the heirs of the first deceased; Marburg v. Cole, 49 Md. 402, 33 Am. Rep. 266; Kunz v. Kurtz, 8 Del. Ch. 404, 68 Atl. 450. There can be no partition between tenants by entireties; Chandler v. Cheney, 37 Ind. 391; no interest in it can be sold on execution for the debts of the husband or wife; id.; Almond v. Bonnell, 76 Ill. 537. But in Hiles v. Fisher, 144 N. Y. 306, 39 N. E. 337, 30 L. R. A. 305, 43 Am. St. Rep. 762, a purchaser at a mortgage foreclosure sale which covered the property held in entirety and in which the wife did not join was held to become a tenant in common with the wife as to such property; and to the same effect Washburn v. Burns, 34 N. J. L. 18. In Buttler v. Rosenblath, 42 N. J. Eq. 651, 9 Atl. 695, 59 Am. Rep. 52, an act which in terms preserves to a married woman her separate right of property was held to change the status of an estate by entirety to the extent of limiting the rights of the creditors of the husband to subject the use of only his half of such an estate to the payment of his debts.

That a judgment against the husband is not a lien on real estate owned by himself and wife by entirety, and that they can convey it free and clear of an unsatisfied judgment lien against him (valid on land owned by him personally), is held; Davis v. Clark, 26 Ind. 424, 89 Am. Dec. 471, where it is said: "As between husband and wife, there is but one owner, and that is neither the one nor the other, but both together. The estate belongs as well to the wife as to the husband." The husband cannot therefore possess any interest separate from his wife, nor can he alienate or encumber the estate. From the peculiar nature of this estate and from the legal relation of the parties, there must be unity of estate, unity of possession, unity of control, and unity in conveying or encumbering it; and it necessarily results that it cannot be seized and sold upon execution for the separate debts of either the husband or the wife; followed in Hulett v. Inlow, 57 Ind. 412, 26 Am. Rep. 64; Barren Creek Ditching Co. v. Beck, 99 Ind. 247; and to the same effect, Alles v. Lyon, 216 Pa. 604, 66 Atl. 81, 10 L. R. A. (N. S.) 463, 116 Am. St. Rep. 791, 9 Ann. Cas. 137; Dickey v. Converse, 117 Mich. 449, 76 N. W. 80, 72 Am. St. Rep. 568; Bank v. Corder, 32 W. Va. 232, 9 S. E. 220; Cole Mfg. Co. v. Collier, 95 Tenn. 115, 31 S. W. 1000, 30 L. R. A. 315, 49 Am. St. Rep. 921; Ray v. Long, 132 N. C. 891, 44 S. E. 652.

Where a husband and wife sold land owned by them as tenants by entirety, taking a mortgage to husband and wife, the wife died, and the bond was paid, it was held that one-half the proceeds belonged to the wife's legal representatives; In re Baum, 121 App. Div. 496, 106 N. Y. Supp. 113.

Where a wife pays for land and consents that the title may be taken in the name of herself and husband, they hold as tenants in entirety, and a conveyance by the husband passes the rights to the possession of the land during their joint lives, and to the fee in case the husband survive; Hiles v. Fisher, 67 Hun 229, 22 N. Y. Supp. 795; Phelps v. Simons, 159 Mass. 415, 34 N. E. 657, 38 Am. St. Rep. 430.

In Merritt v. Whitlock, 200 Pa. 50, 49 Atl. 786, it was said it might be considered as still an open question whether husband and wife may not, since the married woman's acts, take, as well as hold in common, if there be a clear actual intent, notwithstanding the presumption to the contrary. But a later case in the same state holds that as the quality of the estate is determined at its inception, that estate could not be stripped of any of its incidents except by express statutory provision existing at the time of its inception; Alles v. Lyon, 216 Pa. 604, 66 Atl. 81, 10 L. R. A. (N. S.) 463, 116 Am. St. Rep. 791, 9 Ann. Cas. 137.

This estate, where it exists as at common law, is not affected by the statutes for the protection of married women, nor by statutes providing that conveyances to two or more persons shall be deemed to create a tenancy in common and not a joint tenancy; Kunz v. Kurtz, 8 Del. Ch. 404, 68 Atl. 450.

As to the effect of the married woman's acts on estates held by entirety, see MARRIED WOMAN.

The divorce of the parties will not sever an estate by entirety; Alles v. Lyon, 216 Pa. 604, 66 Atl. 81, 10 L. R. A. (N. S.) 463, 116 Am. St. Rep. 791, 9 Ann. Cas. 139; contra, Joerger v. Joerger, 193 Mo. 133, 91 S. W. 918, 5 Ann. Cas. 534; Hayes v. Horton, 46 Or. 597, 81 Pac. 386 (by changing it into a tenancy in common).

ENTRY. In Common Law. The act of setting down the particulars of a sale, or other transaction, in a merchant's or tradesman's account-books: such entries are, in general, prima facie evidence of the sale and delivery, and of work done; but unless the entry be the original one, it is not evidence. See SHORT ENTRY; SINGLE ENTRY.

In Revenue Law. The submitting to the inspection of officers appointed by law, to collect customs, goods imported into the United States, together with a statement or description of such goods, and the original invoices of the same, for the purpose of estimating the duties to be paid thereon.

The term "entry" in the acts of congress is used in two senses. In many of the acts it refers to the bill of entry,—the paper or declaration which the merchant or importer in the first instance hands to the entry clerk. In other statutes it is used to denote, not a document, but a transaction; a series of acts which are necessary to the end to be accomplished, viz. the entering of the goods; U. S. v. Cargo of Sugar, 3 Sawy. 46, Fed. Cas. No. 14,722.

In Criminal Law. The act of entering a dwelling-house, or other building, in order to commit a crime. See BURGLARY.

Upon Real Estate. The act of going upon the lands of another, or lands claimed as one's own, with intent to take possession. See Guion v. Anderson, 8 Humph. (Tenn.) 306.

In general, any person who has a right of possession may assert it by a peaceable entry, without the formality of a legal action, and, being so in possession, may retain it, and plead that it is his soil and freehold; 3 Term 295. A notorious act of ownership of this kind was always equivalent to a feudal investiture by the lord, and is now allowed in all cases where the original entry of a wrong-doer was unlawful. But, in all cases where the first entry was lawful and an apparent right of possession was thereby gained, the owner of the estate cannot thus enter, but is driven to his action at law; 3 Bla. Com. 175. See RE-ENTRY; FORCIBLE ENTRY.

At common law, no person could make a valid sale of land unless he had lawfully entered, and could make livery of seisin,—that is, could make an actual delivery of possession to the purchaser. This provision was early incorporated into the English statutes, to guard against the many evils produced by selling pretended titles to land. A pretended title within the purview of the law is where one person claims land of which another is in possession holding adversely to the claim; 1 Plowd. 88 a; Littleton § 347; Livingston v. Iron Co., 9 Wend. (N. Y.) 511. And now in most of the states, every grant of land, except as a release, is void as an act of maintenance, if, at the time it is made, the lands are in the actual possession of another person claiming under a title adverse to that of the grantor; 4 Kent 446; Williams v. Jackson, 5 Johns. (N. Y.) 489; Wolcot v. Knight, 6 Mass. 418; Cornwell v. Clement, 87 Hun 50, 33 N. Y. Supp. 866; Sneed v. Hope (Ky.) 30 S. W. 20; contra, Hadduck v. Wilmarth, 5 N. H. 181, 20 Am. Dec. 570; Stoever v. Whitman's Lessee, 6 Binn. (Pa.) 420; Matthews v. Hevner, 2 App. Cas. D. C. 349. See CHAMPERTY; BUYING TITLES.

In a more limited sense, an entry signifies the simply going upon another person's premises for some particular purpose. The right to land is exclusive, and every unwarranted entry thereon without the owner's leave, whether it be enclosed or not, or unless the person entering have an authority given him by law, is a trespass; Adams v. Freeman, 12 Johns. (N. Y.) 408, 7 Am. Dec. 327; Wells v. Howell, 19 Johns. (N. Y.) 385. But the owner's license will sometimes be presumed, and then will continue in force until it is actually revoked by the owner; Dexter v. Hazen, 10 Johns. (N. Y.) 246; Willes 195; Tayl. L. & T. 766. See LICENSE.

Authority to enter upon lands is given by law in many cases. See ARREST.

The proprietor of chattels may under some circumstances enter the land of another upon which they are placed, and remove them, provided they are there without his default: as, where his tree has blown down into the adjoining close by the wind, or his fruit has fallen from a branch which overhung it; 20 Vin. Abr. 418; 2 Greenl. Ev. § 627.

A landlord also may enter, to distrain or to demand rent, to see whether waste has been committed, or repairs made, and may go into the house for either purpose, provided the outer door be open; Cro. Eliz. 876; 2 Greenl. Ev. § 627. So, if he is bound to repair, he has a right of entry given him by law for that purpose; Moore 889. Or if trees are excepted out of a demise, the lessee has a right of entering to prune or fell them; 11 Co. 53; Tayl. L. & T. § 767. A tenant becomes a trespasser after the expiration of his term, though his holding is in good faith under color of a reasonable claim of right; and the landlord may forcibly enter thereon and eject him without legal process; Freeman v. Wilson, 16 R. I. 524, 17 Atl. 921; Allen v. Kelly, 17 R. I. 731, 24 Atl. 776, 16 L. R. A. 798, 33 Am. St. Rep. 905.

So any man may throw down a public nuisance; and a private one may be thrown down by the party grieved, and this before any prejudice happens, but only from the probability that it may happen; Webb, Poll. Torts 513; 5 Co. 102. And see 1 Brownl. 212; 12 Mod. 510; W. Jones 221; 1 Stra. 683; Kiefer v. Carrier, 53 Wis. 404, 10 N. W. 562. To this end, the abator has authority to enter the close in which it stands. See NUISANCE.

In Practice. The placing on record the various proceedings in an action, in technical language and order. The extreme strictness of the old practice is somewhat relaxed, but the term entry is still used in this connection. "Books of Entries" were formerly much relied on, containing forms or precedents of the proceedings in various actions as they appear on record.

In the law books the words entry and entered are frequently used as synonymous with recorded; Lent v. Ry. Co., 130 N. Y. 504, 29 N. E. 988. See Blatchford v. Newberry, 100 Ill. 484; McLaughlin v. Doherty, 54 Cal. 519.

For entry of public lands, see PRE-EMPTION RIGHT. For the terms entry of judgment, entry of appearance, entry for copyright, see JUDGMENT; APPEARANCE; COPYRIGHT.

ENTRY AD COMMUNEM LEGEM. A writ which lay in favor of the reversioner, when the tenant for term of life, tenant for term of another's life, tenant by the curtesy, or tenant in dower had aliened and died. Tomlin, Law Diet. Long obsolete, and abolished in 1833.

ENTRY, WRIT OF. In Old Practice. A real action brought to recover the possession of lands from one who wrongfully withholds possession thereof.

Such writs were said to be in the Quibus, where the suit was brought against the party who committed the wrong; in the Per, where the tenant against whom the action was brought was either heir or grantee of the original wrong-doer; in the Per and Cui, where there had been two descents, two alienations, or descent and an alienation; in the Post, where the wrong was removed beyond the degrees mentioned.

The above designations are derived from significant Latin words in the respective forms adapted to the cases given. A descent or alienation on the part of the disseisor constituted a degree (see Co. Litt. 239 a); and at common law the writ could be brought only within the degrees (two), the demandant after that being driven to his writ of right. By the statute of Marlbridge (q. v.), 52 Hen. III. c. 30 (A. D. 1267), however, a writ of entry, after (post) those degrees had been passed in the alienation of the estate, was allowed. Where there had been no descent and the demandant himself had been dispossessed, the writ ran, Præcipe A quod reddat B sex acras terræ, etc. de quibus idem A, etc. (command A to restore to B six acres of land, etc., of which the said A, etc.); if there had been a descent after the description came, the clause, in quod idem A non habet ingressum nisi per C qui illud ei demisit (into which the said A, the tenant, has no entry but through C, who demised it to him); where there were two descents, nisi per D cui C illud demisit (but by D, to whom C demised it); where it was beyond the degrees, nisi post disseisinam quam C (but after the disseisin which C, the original disseisor, did, etc.).

The writ was of many varieties, also, according to the character of the title of the claimant and the circumstances of the deprivation of possession. Booth enumerates and discusses twelve of these, of which some are sur disseisin, sur intrusion, ad communem legem, ad terminum qui preterit, cui in vita, cui ante divortium, etc. Either of these might, of course, be brought in any of the four degrees, as the circumstances of the case required. The use of writs of entry has been long since abolished in England; but they are still in use in a modified form in some states, as the common means of recovering possession of realty against a wrongful occupant; Emerson v. Thompson, 2 Pick. (Mass.) 473; Tilson v. Thompson, 10 Pick. (Mass.) 359; Bean v. Moulton, 5 N. H. 450; Rowell v. Mitchell, 68 Me. 21; Day v. Philbrook, 85 Me. 90, 26 Atl. 999; Cole v. Inhabitants of Eastham, 124 Mass. 307; Wilbur v. Ripley, 124 Mass. 468; Pettingell v. Boynton, 139 Mass. 244, 29 N. E. 655; Tappan v. Power Co., 157 Mass. 24, 31 N. E. 703, 16 L. R. A. 353. See Stearn, Real Act.; Booth, R. A.; Co. Litt. 238 b.

To maintain a writ of entry, the demandant who declares on his own seisin, and alleges a disseisin, is required to prove only that he has a right of entry and need not prove an actual wrongful dispossession or an adverse possession by the tenants; Twomey v. Linnehan, 161 Mass. 91, 36 N. E. 590.

ENURE. To take or have effect. To serve to the use, benefit, or advantage of a person. The word is often written inure. A release to the tenant for life enures to him in reversion; that is, it has the same effect for him as for the tenant for life. A discharge of the principal enures to the benefit of the surety.

ENVOY. In International Law. A diplomatic agent sent by one state to another.

In accordance with the rules adopted at the Congress of Vienna, in 1815, envoys are placed among diplomatic agents of the second class. They are not regarded as representing the person and dignity of their sovereigns, and thus they rank below ambassadors. On the other hand, they are accredited to the sovereign of the state and, except for the obsolete privilege of treating with the head of the foreign state personally, their position is not substantially different from that of an ambassador (q. v.). 1 Opp. 443-446.

EO INSTANTI. At that instant; at the very or same instant; immediately. 1 Bla. Com. 196, 249; 1 Co. 138; Black, L. Dict.

EORLE (Sax.). An earl. Blount; 1 Bla. Com. 398. The governor of a province.

EPILEPSY. A disease of the brain, which occurs in paroxysms with uncertain intervals between them.

These paroxysms are characterized by the loss of sensation, and convulsive motions of the muscles. When long continued and violent, this disease is very apt to end in dementia. It gradually destroys the memory and impairs the intellect, and is one of the causes of an unsound mind.

A statute forbidding the marriage of epileptics is held not unconstitutional as unjustly discriminating against certain persons; Gould v. Gould, 78 Conn. 242, 61 Atl. 604, 2 L. R. A. (N. S.) 531. As to the effect of concealment of epilepsy under this statute, see DIVORCE.

EPIQUEYA. In Spanish Law. The benignant and prudent interpretation of the law according to the circumstances of the time, place, and person. This word is derived from the Greek, and is synonymous with the word equity. See Murillo, nn. 67, 68.

EPISCOPACY. A form of government by diocesan bishops; the office or condition of a bishop.

EPISCOPALIA. Synodals, or payments due the bishop.

EPISCOPUS (L. Lat.). In Civil Law. A superintendent; an inspector. Those in each municipality who had the charge and oversight of the bread and other provisions which served the citizens for their daily food were so called. Vicat; Du Cange.

A bishop. These bishops, or episcopi, were held to be the successors of the apostles, and have various titles at different times in history and according to their different duties. It was applied generally to those who had authority or were of peculiar sanctity. After the fall of the Roman empire they came to have very considerable judicial powers. Du Cange; Vicat; Calvinus, Lex.

EPISTOLÆ (Lat.). In Civil Law. Rescripts; opinions given by the emperors in cases submitted to them for decision.

Answers of the emperors to petitions.

The answers of counsellors (jurisconsulti), as Ulpian and others, to questions of law proposed to them, were also called epistolæ.

Opinions written out. The term originally signified the same as literæ. Vicat.

EQUAL PROTECTION OF THE LAWS.

The fourteenth amendment of the constitution of the United States, among other provisions respecting the life, liberty, and property of citizens, provides that no state shall "deny to any person within its jurisdiction the equal protection of the laws." This provision has been subjected to much judicial construction. The protection extends to "acts of the state whether through its legislative, its executive, or its judicial authorities"; Scott v. McNeal, 154 U. S. 45, 14 Sup. Ct. 1108, 38 L. Ed. 896; Virginia v. Rives, 100 U. S. 313, 25 L. Ed. 667; Ex parte Virginia, 100 U. S. 339, 25 L. Ed. 676; Neal v. Delaware, 103 U. S. 370, 26 L. Ed. 567. In Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co. v. Chicago, 166 U. S. 226, 17 Sup. Ct. 581, 41 L. Ed. 979, Harlan, J., for the court, said: "But it must be observed that the prohibitions of the amendment refer to all the instrumentalities of the state, to its legislative, executive, and judicial authorities, and, therefore, whoever by virtue of public position under a state government deprives another of any right protected by that amendment against deprivation by the state, 'violates the constitutional inhibition, and, as he acts in the name and for the state, and is clothed with the state's power, his act is that of the state.' This must be so, or, as we have often said, the constitutional prohibition has no meaning, and 'the state has clothed one of its agents with power to annul or evade it.'" See Gibson v. Mississippi, 162 U. S. 565, 16 Sup. Ct. 904, 40 L. Ed. 1075; Yick Wo v. Hopkins, 118 U. S. 356, 6 Sup. Ct. 1064, 30 L. Ed. 220. That amendment conferred no new and additional rights, but only extended the protection of the federal constitution over rights of life, liberty, and property that previously existed under all state constitutions. Prior to the passage of this amendment "the laws of all the states in terms gave equal protection to all white persons. This amendment, however, is general, and forbids the denial to any class of persons the equal protection of the laws by any state; and there is no doubt that class legislation is forbidden;" State v. Holden, 14 Utah, 71, 46 Pac. 756, 37 L. R. A. 103. "What must constitute a denial of the equal protection of the law will depend, in this view, in a large measure, upon what rights of the law have been conferred, or protection extended, under the constitution and laws of the particular state in which the question arises. As the constitution and laws of the states vary, the proposition that each case must, to an extent, depend upon its own facts, is especially applicable to this class of cases. When the state itself undertakes to deal with its citizens by legislation, it does so under certain limitations, and it may not single out a class of citizens, and subject that class to oppressive discrimination, especially in respect to those rights so important as to be protected by constitutional guaranty. That the prohibitions of that amendment are now regarded as protecting the citizen against a denial of the equal protection of the law, and against taking property without due process of law, under the power of taxation, is a proposition clearly deducible from the many causes in which that question has been considered;" Nashville, C. & St. L. Ry. v. Taylor, 86 Fed. 168, 185. See PRIVILEGES AND IMMUNITIES; CIVIL RIGHTS; DUE PROCESS OF LAW.

The guaranties of due process of law and of equal protection of the laws are rights secured to all persons whether citizens or not. The two are in most cases treated together, though occasionally differentiated. The guaranty means as well equal exemption from all burdens as equal accessibility to the courts; In re Ah Fong, 3 Sawy. 144, Fed. Cas. No. 102; San Mateo County v. R. Co., 13 Fed. 722; Santa Clara County v. R. Co., 18 Fed. 385; and it is not confined to citizens, but applies to all persons, native or foreign, within this country; Fraser v. Torley Co., 82 Fed. 257; In re Ah Fong, 3 Sawy. 144, Fed. Cas. No. 102; though not non-residents; Steed v. Harvey, 18 Utah 367, 54 Pac. 1011, 72 Am. St. Rep. 789. But in State v. Ins. Co., 70 Conn. 590, 40 Atl. 465, 66 Am. St. Rep. 138, it was said to be only for the benefit of persons physically present within the territorial jurisdiction of the state. A corporation is not a citizen within the meaning of the amendment securing privileges and immunities, but it is a person under the equal protection clause; Pembina Consol. Silver Min. & Mill. Co. v. Pennsylvania, 125 U. S. 181, 8 Sup. Ct. 737, 31 L. Ed. 650; McQuire v. R. Co., 131 Ia. 340, 108 N. W. 902, 33 L. R. A. (N. S.) 706; Hammond Beef & Provision Co. v. Best, 91 Me. 431, 40 Atl. 338, 42 L. R. A. 528; and so is a railroad corporation; Smyth v. Ames, 169 U. S. 466, 18 Sup. Ct. 418, 42 L. Ed. 819; and a mutual insurance company; Huber v. Martin, 127 Wis. 412, 105 N. W. 1031, 1135, 3 L. R. A. (N. S.) 653, 115 Am. St. Rep. 1023, 7 Ann. Cas. 400. But a private corporation not created by the laws of the state nor doing business in it is not within its jurisdiction so as to invoke the protection of the 14th Amendment; Blake v. McClung, 172 U. S. 239, 19 Sup. Ct. 165, 43 L. Ed. 432; Hawley v. Hurd, 72 Vt. 122, 47 Atl. 401, 52 L. R. A. (N. S.) 195, 82 Am. St. Rep. 922; the only limitation being when the corporation is in the employment of the federal government or in business which is strictly interstate commerce; Pembina Consol. Silver Min. & Mill. Co. v. Pennsylvania, 125 U. S. 181, 8 Sup. Ct. 737, 31 L. Ed. 650.

The amendment "was not intended to compel the state to adopt an iron rule of equal taxation," nor "to prevent a state from adjusting its system of taxation in all proper and reasonable ways"; Bell's Gap R. Co. v. Pennsylvania, 134 U. S. 232, 10 Sup. Ct. 533, 33 L. Ed. 892. Taxation must be equal and uniform as well as regards the mode of assessment as in the rate of charge; San Mateo County v. R. Co., 13 Fed. 722; Santa Clara County v. R. Co., 18 id. 385; but this may be done by different officers if the method is uniform; San Francisco & N. P. R. Co. v. State Board of Equalization, 60 Cal. 12.

The prohibition against the denial of equal protection of the laws does not require that the law shall have an equality of operation, in the sense of an indiscriminate operation on persons merely as such, but on persons according to their relation. It does not prevent states from distinguishing, selecting and classifying objects of legislation within a wide range of discretion, provided only that the discretion must be based upon some reasonable ground; Interstate Consol. St. Ry. Co. v. Massachusetts, 207 U. S. 79, 28 Sup. Ct. 26, 52 L. Ed. 111, 12 Ann. Cas. 555; affirming Com. v. Ry. Co., 187 Mass. 436, 73 N. E. 530, 11 L. R. A. (N. S.) 973, 2 Ann. Cas. 419; some difference which bears a just and proper relation to the classification and not a mere arbitrary selection; Magown v. Bank, 170 U. S. 283, 18 Sup. Ct. 594, 42 L. Ed. 1037; Watson v. Maryland, 218 U. S. 173, 30 Sup. Ct. 644, 54 L. Ed. 987. Legislation which regulates business may well make distinctions dependent upon the degrees of evil without being unreasonable or in conflict with the equal protection of the laws; Heath & Milligan Mfg. Co. v. Worst, 207 U. S. 338, 28 Sup. Ct. 114, 52 L. Ed. 236. The mere fact of classification will not relieve; it must be based on reasonable grounds and not mere arbitrary selection; but it suffices if the statute is applicable to all persons under like circumstances and does not subject individuals to an arbitrary exercise of power; Jones v. Brim, 165 U. S. 180, 17 Sup. Ct. 282, 41 L. Ed. 677; or if a law operates alike upon all persons similarly situated; Walston v. Nevin, 128 U. S. 578, 9 Sup. Ct. 192, 32 L. Ed. 544; or a law or course of proceedings has been applied to any other person in the state under similar circumstances and conditions; Tinsley v. Anderson, 171 U. S. 101, 18 Sup. Ct. 805, 43 L. Ed. 91. Legislation may be limited as to objects or territory if all persons subject to it are treated alike under like circumstances and conditions; Hayes v. Missouri, 120 U. S. 68, 7 Sup. Ct. 350, 30 L. Ed. 578; Giles v. Teasley, 193 U. S. 148, 24 Sup. Ct. 359, 48 L. Ed. 655. It cannot discriminate in taxation against foreign corporations lawfully doing business within the state; Southern R. Co. v. Greene, 216 U. S. 400, 30 Sup. Ct. 287, 54 L. Ed. 536, 17 Ann. Cas. 1247.

"Classification must have relation to the purpose of the legislature, but logical appropriateness of the inclusion or exclusion of objects or persons is not required. A classification may not be merely arbitrary, but necessarily there must be great freedom of discretion even though it result in 'ill-advised, unequal and oppressive legislation';" Heath & Milligan Mfg. Co. v. Worst, 207 U. S. 338, 28 Sup. Ct. 114, 52 L. Ed. 236, quoting Mobile County v. Kimball, 102 U. S. 691, 26 L. Ed. 238.

In order to avoid denial of equal protection of the laws the police power must be exercised reasonably and not arbitrarily; Yick Wo v. Hopkins, 118 U. S. 365, 6 Sup. Ct. 1064, 30 L. Ed. 220.

The guaranties for equal protection of the laws and of due process of law are not violated by discrimination in the statute; Clark v. Kansas City, 176 U. S. 114, 20 Sup. Ct. 284, 44 L. Ed. 392.

As there is no vested right in procedure, the guaranty of equal protection of the laws is not violated by change of previous decisions of the state court on questions of procedure; Backus v. Union Depot Co., 169 U. S. 557, 18 Sup. Ct. 445, 42 L. Ed. 853.

What may be regarded as a denial of the equal protection of the laws is a question not always easily determined, as the decisions of this court and the highest courts of the states will show. It is sometimes difficult to show that a state enactment, having its source in a power not controverted, infringes rights protected by the national constitution. No rule can be formulated that will cover every case. But upon this general question we have said that the guaranty of the equal protection of the law means "that no person or class of persons shall be denied the same protection of the laws which is enjoyed by other persons or other classes in the same place and in like circumstances." Connolly v. Union Sewer Pipe Co., 184 U. S. 540, 558, 22 Sup. Ct. 431, 46 L. Ed. 679, quoting Bowman v. Lewis, 101 U. S. 22, 25 L. Ed. 989; In re Doo Woon, 18 Fed. 898.

The South Carolina supreme court, in reference to the law imposing special liability for fires caused by locomotives, thus comments on the federal cases "Let it be noted . . . the classification for the imposition of special liability was not affected by the fact that there were other common carriers operating with steam which might communicate fire or whose employes might sustain injury through the negligence of their fellow servants; thus showing that a classification need not include all engaged in a general business, as the business of carrying freight and passengers, it may simply embrace a more limited class, who carry freight and passengers in a particular way, or by particular instrumentalities." McCandless v. R. Co., 38 S. C. 116, 16 S. E. 429, 18 L. R. A. 440.

State laws or official action held not to deny the equal protection of the laws are: Prescribing rules of evidence, as by preventing Chinese from testifying in a case where a white person is a party; People v. Brady, 40 Cal. 198, 6 Am. Rep. 604 (but under the Civil Rights Bill, negroes were entitled to the benefit of this law; People v. Washington, 36 Cal. 658); prohibiting the landing of lewd women from passenger steamers; Ex parte Ah Fook, 49 Cal. 402; regulating slaughter houses; Slaughter-House Cases, 16 Wall. (U. S.) 36, 21 L. Ed. 394; authorizing the recovery of double value for property destroyed by railroad trains; Tredway v. R. Co., 43 Ia. 527; excluding women from employment in saloons or other places where intoxicating liquor is sold; Ex parte Hayes, 98 Cal. 555, 33 Pac. 337, 20 L. R. A. 701; Foster v. Board of Police Com'rs, 102 Cal. 483, 37 Pac. 763, 41 Am. St. Rep. 194; State v. Reynolds, 14 Mont. 383, 36 Pac. 440; City of Hoboken v. Goodman, 68 N. J. L. 217, 51 Atl. 1092; Bergman v. Cleveland, 39 Ohio St. 651; State v. Considine, 16 Wash. 358, 47 Pac. 755; In re Considine, 83 Fed. 157; but contra, In re Maguire, 57 Cal. 604, 40 Am. Rep. 125 (and an ordinance making it a misdemeanor for any woman to go into a building where liquor is sold, or to stand within fifty feet of such a building, was held an unnecessary interference with individual liberty; Gasteneau v. Com., 108 Ky. 473, 56 S. W. 705, 49 L. R. A. 111, 94 Am. St. Rep. 386); prohibiting women from frequenting places for the sale of intoxicating liquors; Ex parte Smith, 38 Cal. 709; People v. Case, 153 Mich. 98, 116 N. W. 558, 18 L. R. A. (N. S.) 657; Cronin v. Adams, 192 U. S. 108, 24 Sup. Ct. 219, 48 L. Ed. 365, affirming Adams v. Cronin, 29 Colo. 488, 69 Pac. 590, 63 L. R. A. 61; imposing more severe penalties for adultery between persons of different races; Ellis v. State, 42 Ala. 525; Ford v. State, 53 Ala. 150; Green v. State, 58 Ala. 190, 29 Am. Rep. 739; Pace v. Alabama, 106 U. S. 583, 1 Sup. Ct. 637, 27 L. Ed. 207; forbidding marriages between whites and blacks; Hoover v. State, 59 Ala. 57; Ex parte Francois, 3 Woods 367, Fed. Cas. No. 5,047; Ex parte Kinney, 3 Hughes 9, Fed. Cas. No. 7,825; or declaring such marriages null and void; In re Hobbs, 1 Woods 537, Fed. Cas. No. 6,550; regulating the charges of storage warehouses; Munn v. Illinois, 94 U. S. 113, 24 L. Ed. 77; Munn v. People, 69 Ill. 80; providing for territorial and municipal regulations for different parts.

of the state; Missouri v. Lewis, 101 U. S. 22, 25 L. Ed. 989; forbidding bankers and brokers, knowing that they are insolvent, to receive money; Baker v. State, 54 Wis. 368, 12 N. W. 12; imposing a tax on corporations measured by the amount of dividends paid, part of such dividends being derived from capital invested in United States bonds exempted from taxation; Home Ins. Co. v. New York, 134 U. S. 594, 10 Sup. Ct. 593, 33 L. Ed. 1025; the provision of the Mississippi constitution prescribing a test of literacy for voting; Williams v. Mississippi, 170 U. S. 213, 18 Sup. Ct. 583, 42 L. Ed. 1012; an order dismissing a writ of habeas corpus and remanding to custody a prisoner held in contempt when it appeared that the same procedure would be applied to any other person in the state under similar circumstances and conditions; Tinsley v. Anderson, 171 U. S. 101, 18 Sup. Ct. 805, 43 L. Ed. 91; as a penalty for non-compliance with police regulations; Dow v. Beidelman, 49 Ark. 455, 5 S. W. 718; allowing a reasonable attorney's fee as part of a judgment against a railroad company for damage by fire; Atchison, T. & S. F. R. Co. v. Matthews, 174 U. S. 96, 19 Sup. Ct. 609, 43 L. Ed. 909 (distinguishing Gulf, C. & S. F. R. Co. v. Ellis, 165 U. S. 150, 17 Sup. Ct. 253, 41 L. Ed. 666, where a statute, allowing such fees in suits against railroad companies, for ordinary claims, was held unconstitutional); allowing a defendant on trial for homicide a less number of challenges with a struck jury than an ordinary one; Brown v. New Jersey, 175 U. S. 172, 20 Sup. Ct. 77, 44 L. Ed. 119; prohibiting any person, corporation or firm from issuing any order, etc., payable otherwise than in money—what are commonly known as store orders; Johnson, Lytle & Co. v. Spartan Mills, 68 S. C. 339, 47 S. E. 695, 1 Ann. Cas. 409; Fraser v. People, 141 Ill. 171, 31 N. E. 395, 16 L. R. A. 492; establishing separate schools for colored children; Bertonneau v. Board, 3 Woods 177, Fed. Cas. No. 1,361; Ward v. Flood, 48 Cal. 36, 17 Am. Rep. 405; State v. McCann, 21 Ohio St. 198; Chrisman v. City of Brookhaven, 70 Miss. 477, 12 South. 458; Corey v. Carter, 48 Ind. 327, 17 Am. Rep. 738; see Marshall v. Donovan, 10 Bush. (Ky.) 681; denial of injunction against maintaining a high school for white children while failing to maintain one for colored children; Cumming v. County Board of Education, 175 U. S. 528, 20 Sup. Ct. 197, 44 L. Ed. 262; imposing upon railroad companies future liabilities for damages to employees by negligence of their fellow servants, etc., since it met a particular necessity, and all railroad companies without distinction were made subject to the same liability; Missouri Pac. Ry. Co. v. Mackey, 127 U. S. 205, 8 Sup. Ct. 1161, 32 L. Ed. 107; Tullis v. R. Co., 175 U. S. 348, 20 Sup. Ct. 136, 44 L. Ed. 192, making railroad companies liable for property destroyed by fire communicated by their locomotives, even though the liability did not depend on any negligence of the railroad company; St. Louis & S. F. Ry. Co. v. Matthews, 165 U. S. 1, 17 Sup. Ct. 243, 41 L. Ed. 611; McCandless v. R. Co., 38 S. C. 116, 16 S. E. 429, 18 L. R. A. 440; giving damages for sheep grazing on public lands; Bown v. Walling, 204 U. S. 320, 27 Sup. Ct. 292, 51 L. Ed. 503; taxing transfers of corporate stock; New York v. Reardon, 204 U. S. 152, 27 Sup. Ct. 188, 51 L. Ed. 415, 9 Ann. Cas. 736; the separation of white and black persons in public conveyances; Chilton v. Ry. Co., 114 Mo. 88, 21 S. W. 457, 19 L. R. A. 269; U. S. v. Stanley, 109 U. S. 3, 3 Sup. Ct. 18, 27 L. Ed. 835; West Chester & P. R. Co. v. Miles, 55 Pa. 209, 93 Am. Dec. 744; Anderson v. R. Co., 62 Fed. 46; or in theatres if equally good seats were provided for both; Younger v. Judah, 111 Mo. 303, 19 S. W. 1109, 16 L. R. A. 558, 33 Am. St. Rep. 527 (but to require colored persons to occupy particular seats was held a violation of the Illinois Civil Rights Act of June 10, 1885; Baylies v. Curry, 128 Ill. 287, 21 N. E. 595).

In Adair v. U. S., 208 U. S. 161, 28 Sup. Ct. 277, 52 L. Ed. 436, 13 Ann. Cas. 764, reversing U. S. v. Adair, 152 Fed. 737, it was held that congress could not make it a criminal offence against the United States for a carrier engaged in interstate commerce to discharge an employé simply because of membership in a labor organization, and that the provision to that effect in section 10 of the Act of June 1, 1898, was an invasion of personal liberty as well as of the right of property guaranteed by the Vth Amendment to the constitution and therefore unenforceable.

Statutes held to violate the guaranty of "equal protection of the laws are: A law taxing miners, which discriminates between persons of different races; U. S. v. Jackson, 3 Sawy. 59, Fed. Cas. No. 15,459; excluding colored children from the benefits of the public school system; Ward v. Flood, 48 Cal. 36, 17 Am. Rep. 405; or from sharing in the use of the common school fund; Dawson v. Lee, 83 Ky. 49 (but not establishing separate schools, see supra); discriminating against non-residents, with respect to legal remedies; Pearson v. City of Portland, 69 Me. 278, 31 Am. Rep. 276; discriminating between Chinese and other aliens; Baker v. Portland, 5 Sawy. 506, Fed. Cas. No. 777; In re Parrott, 6 Sawy. 349, 1 Fed. 481; a city ordinance requiring the cutting of a prisoner's hair, it being considered more degrading to the Chinese; Ho Ah Kon v. Nunan, 5 Sawy. 552, Fed. Cas. No. 6,546; forbidding the employment of Chinese; In re Parrott, 1 Fed. 481, 6 Sawy. 349; prohibiting aliens incapable of acquiring citizenship from fishing in public waters; In re Ah Chong, 6 Sawy. 451, 2 Fed. 733; authorizing the overseers of the poor to commit paupers and vagrants to the workhouse without trial;

City of Portland v. City of Bangor, 65 Me. 120, 20 Am. Rep. 681; prescribing a penalty and counsel fees in suits on insurance policies; Gulf, C. & S. F. Ry. Co. v. Ellis, 165 U. S. 150, 17 Sup. Ct. 255, 41 L. Ed. 666; St. Louis, I. M. & S. Ry. Co. v. Williams, 49 Ark. 492, 5 S. W. 883; San Antonio & A. R. Ry. Co. v. Wilson (Tex.) 19 S. W. 910; Wilder v. Ry. Co., 70 Mich. 382, 38 N. W. 289; Lafferty v. Ry. Co., 71 Mich. 35, 38 N. W. 660; New York Life Ins. Co. v. Smith (Tex.) 41 S. W. 680. But it is said in a dissenting opinion in Gulf, C. & S. F. Ry. Co. v. Ellis, 165 U. S. 150, 17 Sup. Ct. 255, 41 L. Ed. 666: "The constitutionality of statutes allowing plaintiffs only to recover an attorney's fee as part of the judgment in particular classes of actions selected by the legislature appears to have been upheld by the courts of most of the states in which it has been challenged; Kansas Pac. Ry. Co. v. Mower, 16 Kan. 573; Kansas Pac. Ry. Co. v. Yanz, id. 583; Missouri, K. & T. Ry. Co. v. Simonson, 64 Kan. 802, 68 Pac. 653, 57 L. R. A. 765, 91 Am. St. Rep. 248; Peoria, D. & E. Ry. Co. v. Duggan, 109 Ill. 537, 50 Am. Rep. 619; Vogel v. Pekoc, 157 Ill. 339, 42 N. E. 386, 30 L. R. A. 491; Dow v. Beidelman, 49 Ark. 455, 5 S. W. 718; Perkins v. Ry. Co., 103 Mo. 52, 15 S. W. 320, 11 L. R. A. 426; Burlington, C. R. & N. Ry. Co. v. Dey, 82 Ia. 312, 48 N. W. 98, 12 L. R. A. 436, 31 Am. St. Rep. 477; Wortman v. Kleinschmidt, 12 Mont. 316, 30 Pac. 280; Gulf, C. & S. F. Ry. Co. v. Ellis, 87 Tex. 19, 26 S. W. 985; Cameron v. Ry. Co., 63 Minn. 384, 65 N. W. 652, 31 L. R. A. 553; Morris-Scarboro-Moffit Co. v. Express Co., 146 N. C. 167, 59 S. E. 667, 15 L. R. A. (N. S.) 983; Gulf, C. & S. F. Ry. Co. v. Ellis, 165 U. S. 150, 17 Sup. Ct. 255, 41 L. Ed. 666, where it is further said: "The legislature of a state must be presumed to have acted from lawful motives, unless the contrary appears upon the face of the statute. If, for instance, the legislature of Texas was satisfied, from observation and experience, that railroad corporations within the state were accustomed, beyond other corporations or persons, to unconscionably resist the payment of such petty claims, with the object of exhausting the patience and means of the claimants by prolonged litigation and perhaps repeated appeals, railroad corporations alone might well be required, when ultimately defeated in such a claim, to pay a moderate attorney's fee, as a just, though often inadequate, contribution to the expenses to which they had put the plaintiff in establishing a rightful demand."

An act was held void providing that a prisoner who escaped and was retaken should be punished by imprisonment for a term equal to his original one; In re Mallon, 16 Idaho 737, 102 Pac. 374, 22 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1123; so also a statutory provision for the imprisonment of one who after receiving advances commits a breach of a contract for farm labor; Ex parte Hollman, 79 S. C. 9, 60 S. E. 19, 21 L. R. A. (N. S.) 242 with note, 14 Ann. Cas. 1105; and a statute regulating railroad rates, in which the penalties for violation were so excessive and enormous as to deter and intimidate parties affected from testing its validity in the courts; Ex parte Young, 209 U. S. 123, 28 Sup. Ct. 441, 52 L. Ed. 714, 13 L. R. A. (N. S.) 932, 14 Ann. Cas. 1164.

When a state, either through its legislature, courts, or administrative officers, excludes persons of the African race, solely because of race or color, from serving as grand jurors in the prosecution of a person of that race, the equal protection of the laws is denied him and a judgment of the state court, sustaining the conviction will be reversed; Carter v. Texas, 177 U. S. 412, 20 Sup. Ct. 687, 44 L. Ed. 839; Strauder v. West Virginia, 100 U. S. 303, 25 L. Ed. 664; Neal v. Delaware, 103 U. S. 370, 26 L. Ed. 567; Gibson v. Mississippi, 162 U. S. 565, 16 Sup. Ct. 905, 40 L. Ed. 1075; but statutes prescribing counsel fees have been in some distinguishing cases upheld, as in the case of wrongfully discharged railroad employees; St. Louis, I. M. & S. Ry. Co. v. Paul, 173 U. S. 409, 19 Sup. Ct. 419, 43 L. Ed. 746; or statutes against railroad companies for damage by fire from locomotives; Atchison, T. & S. F. R. Co. v. Matthews, 174 U. S. 96, 19 Sup. Ct. 609, 43 L. Ed. 909; and a law requiring monthly payment of corporation employees; Skinner v. Min. Co., 96 Fed. 743; or compelling railroad companies to pay employees at the time of discharge; St. Louis, I. M. & S. Ry. Co. v. Paul, 64 Ark. 83, 40 S. W. 705, 37 L. R. A. 504, 62 Am. St. Rep. 154; or to furnish free return transportation to shippers of live stock; George v. Ry. Co., 214 Mo. 551, 113 S. W. 1099, 127 Am. St. Rep. 690; an act punishing any one who by threats or extortion obtains money from citizens or residents of a state; Greene v. State, 83 Neb. 84, 119 N. W. 6, 131 Am. St. Rep. 626; making it a misdemeanor to admit a child under sixteen to theatres except entertainments on piers; In re Van Horne, 74 N. J. Eq. 600, 70 Atl. 986; giving the owner of live stock accidentally killed or destroyed on a railroad track double its value; Atchison & N. R. Co. v. Baty, 6 Neb. 37, 29 Am. Rep. 356; one requiring owners and operators of coal mines to weigh coal in a certain specified manner; Millett v. People, 117 Ill. 294, 7 N. E. 631, 57 Am. Rep. 869.

Probably the most numerous cases requiring the construction of this guaranty have arisen under statutes establishing some classification of persons, property or occupations.

The classification "must always rest upon some difference which bears a reasonable and just relation to the act in respect of which the classification is proposed, and can never be made arbitrarily and without any such basis. . . . But arbitrary selection can never be justified by calling it classification. The equal protection demanded by the Fourteenth Amendment forbids this. . . . It is apparent that the mere fact of classification is not sufficient to relieve a statute from the reach of the equality clause of the Fourteenth Amendment, and that in all cases it must appear not only that a classification has been made, but also that it is one based upon some reasonable ground—some difference which bears a just and proper relation to the attempted classification—and is not a mere arbitrary selection." Gulf, C. & S. F. Ry. Co. v. Ellis, 165 U. S. 150, 17 Sup. Ct. 255, 41 L. Ed. 666, quoted in Connolly v. Pipe Co., 184 U. S. 540, 560, 22 Sup. Ct. 431, 46 L. Ed. 679; Cotting v. Stock Yards Co., 183 U. S. 79, 22 Sup. Ct. 30, 46 L. Ed. 92; Bachtel v. Wilson, 204 U. S. 41, 27 Sup. Ct. 243, 51 L. Ed. 357.

"The equal protection of the laws which, by the Fourteenth Amendment, no state can deny to the individual, forbids legislation, in whatever form it may be enacted, by which the property of an individual is, without compensation, wrested from him for the benefit of another or of the public." Cotting v. Stock Yards Co., 183 U. S. 79, 87, 22 Sup. Ct. 30, 46 L. Ed. 92 (quoting Reagan v. Loan & Trust Co., 154 U. S. 362, 399, 14 Sup. Ct. 1047, 38 L. Ed. 1014), where it was held that a classification between stockyards doing a large business and those doing a small business was invalid.

A state may without violating the guaranty put into one class all engaged in business of a special and public character and require them to perform a duty which they can do better and more quickly than others, and impose a penalty for non-performance; Seaboard Air Line Ry. v. Seegers, 207 U. S. 73, 28 Sup. Ct. 28, 52 L. Ed. 108; where a penalty for the failure of a railroad to adjust and average claims within forty days was held constitutional.

Mere direction of the state law that under given circumstances the venue shall be changed does not violate the equal protection of the laws; Cincinnati Street Ry. Co. v. Snell, 193 U. S. 30, 24 Sup. Ct. 319, 48 L. Ed. 604; where it was said: "But it is clear that the Fourteenth Amendment in no way undertakes to control the power of a state to determine by what process legal rights may be asserted or legal obligations enforced, provided the method of procedure adopted for these purposes gives reasonable notice and affords a fair opportunity to be heard before the issues are decided." "It is fundamental rights which the Fourteenth Amendment safeguards and not the mere form which a state may see proper to designate for the enforcement and protection of such rights."

The following statutes have been held to enact a reasonable classification, valid as not denying equal protection of the laws:

Distinguishing between street railways and steam railroads in imposing a tax; Savannah, T. & I. of H. Ry. Co. v. Savannah, 198 U. S. 392, 25 Sup. Ct. 690, 49 L. Ed. 1097; between life and health companies and fire, marine and inland insurance companies with respect to taxation; Fidelity Mut. Life Ass'n v. Mettler, 185 U. S. 308, 22 Sup. Ct. 662, 46 L. Ed. 922; between bituminous coal mines and block coal mines as to working; Barrett v. Indiana, 229 U. S. 26, 33 Sup. Ct. 692, 57 L. Ed. —; a distinction in inheritance tax laws between lineal and collateral relatives; Billings v. Illinois, 188 U. S. 97, 23 Sup. Ct. 272, 47 L. Ed. 400; as also the exemption of step-children from the collateral inheritance tax on bequests and devises from step-parents; Com. v. Randall, 225 Pa. 197, 73 Atl. 1109; the exemption in a medical registration act of those who had practiced before a certain date or gratuitously or in a hospital; Watson v. Maryland, 218 U. S. 173, 30 Sup. Ct. 644, 54 L. Ed. 987; between individuals and corporations, the classification between the two being approved because of the difference of the power which the state may exercise over the doing of business within its borders by an individual on the one hand or a corporation on the other; Hammond Packing Co. v. Arkansas, 212 U. S. 322, 29 Sup. Ct. 370, 53 L. Ed. 530, 15 Ann. Cas. 645; of a municipal ordinance distinguishing between those having cows inside and those outside a city; Adams v. City of Milwaukee, 228 U. S. 572, 33 Sup. Ct. 610, 57 L. Ed. —; a provision of one gas rate act for the municipality and another for individual consumers; Willcox v. Gas Co., 212 U. S. 19, 29 Sup. Ct. 192, 53 L. Ed. 382, 15 Ann. Cas. 1034; a discrimination between the residential and commercial portions of a city as to the height of buildings based on practical and not merely æsthetic grounds; Welch v. Swasey, 214 U. S. 91, 29 Sup. Ct. 567, 53 L. Ed. 923; or excepting churches from a statute limiting the height of buildings; Cochran v. Preston, 108 Md. 220, 70 Atl. 113, 23 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1163, 129 Am. St. Rep. 432, 15 Ann. Cas. 1048; a discrimination by a municipal corporation for the purpose of taxation between automobiles and other vehicles; Kersey v. Terre Haute, 161 Ind. 471, 68 N. E. 1027; classification of distilled spirits in bond as distinguished from other property in regard to the payment of interest on taxes; Thompson v. Kentucky, 209 U. S. 340, 28 Sup. Ct. 533, 52 L. Ed. 822.

So of the following: A state statute imposing a license tax on persons compounding, rectifying, adulterating or blending distilled spirits does not deny equal protection of the laws because it discriminates in favor of the distilleries and rectifiers or straight distilled spirits; Brown-Forman Co. v. Commonwealth of Kentucky, 217 U. S. 563, 30 Sup. Ct. 578, 54 L. Ed. 883, where the court accepted the construction by the highest court of the state that the tax in question was not a property tax but a license tax imposed on the doing of a business. Other classifications held valid are one prohibiting drumming or soliciting on trains for any hotel, lodging house, eating house, bath house, physician, masseur, surgeon or other medical practitioner; Williams v. Arkansas, 217 U. S. 79, 30 Sup. Ct. 493, 54 L. Ed. 673, 18 Ann. Cas. 805, affirming 85 Ark. 470, 108 S. W. 838, 26 L. R. A. (N. S.) 482, 122 Am. St. Rep. 47 (where as in some other cases the statute was said by the court to meet an existing condition which was required to be met); of express companies with railroad and telegraph companies as subject to the unit rule; Adams Exp. Co. v. Ohio State Auditor, 165 U. S. 194, 17 Sup. Ct. 305, 41 L. Ed. 683, where the court said that there was "doubtless a distinction between the property of railroad and telegraph companies and that of express companies, the physical unity existing in the former is lacking in the latter; but there is the same unity in the use of the entire property for one specific purpose and there are the same elements of value arising from such use." The case involved the constitutionality of an act requiring the apportionment of the value of the property of the express companies among the several counties, in which they did business, in the proportion which the gross receipts in each county bore to the gross receipts in the state and provided for a tax for county purposes on such proportion.

A statute defining express companies as those carrying on the business of transportation under contracts with steamboat companies or railroads did not invidiously discriminate as to express companies by exempting other companies from carrying express matter in vehicles of their own; Pacific Exp. Co. v. Seibert, 142 U. S. 339, 12 Sup. Ct. 250, 35 L. Ed. 1035; nor did a state license tax on the business of refining sugar and molasses, by exempting planters and farmers refining their own sugar and molasses, deny equal protection of the laws; American Sugar Refining Co. v. Louisiana, 179 U. S. 89, 21 Sup. Ct. 43, 45 L. Ed. 102; nor those which adjust the revenue laws of the state to favor certain industries; Quong Wing v. Kirkendall, 223 U. S. 59, 32 Sup. Ct. 192, 56 L. Ed. 350; nor a collateral inheritance tax imposing a higher rate on strangers in blood and on larger sums; Magoun v. Sav. Bank, 170 U. S. 283, 18 Sup. Ct. 594, 42 L. Ed. 1037. The objection must come from one claiming to be discriminated against; Darnell v. Indiana, 226 U. S. 390, 33 Sup. Ct. 120, 57 L. Ed. 267, following New York v. Reardon, 204 U. S. 152, 27 Sup. Ct. 188, 51 L. Ed. 415, 9 Ann. Cas. 736, distinguishing Sprague v. Thompson, 118 U. S. 90, 6 Sup. Ct. 988, 30 L. Ed. 115.

A state statute providing that "all telegraph companies doing business in this state shall be liable in damages for mental anguish or suffering even in the absence of bodily injury or pecuniary loss for negligence in receiving, transmitting or delivering messages" is based upon a reasonable and not an arbitrary classification and is not an unconstitutional discrimination against telegraph companies; Ivy v. Tel. Co., 165 Fed. 371; nor is one which recognizes a difference between ordinary vehicles and electric cars; Detroit, Ft. W. & B. I. Ry. v. Osborn, 189 U. S. 383, 23 Sup. Ct. 540, 47 L. Ed. 860, where it was held that the commissioner of railroads had power to require an electric company to install safety devices and share the cost with the steam railroad on the same street notwithstanding the latter was the junior occupant. The exception of newspapers, etc., in a law forbidding the use of the flag for advertising purposes, does not violate the prohibition; Halter v. Nebraska, 205 U. S. 34, 27 Sup. Ct. 419, 51 L. Ed. 696, 10 Ann. Cas. 525; nor does singling out the milk business, in a city, as a proper subject of regulation; New York v. Van De Carr, 199 U. S. 552, 26 Sup. Ct. 144, 50 L. Ed. 305; nor the selection of mine owners as a class to be subjected to responsibility for the defaults of certain employees; Wilmington Mining Co. v. Fulton, 205 U. S. 60, 27 Sup. Ct. 412, 51 L. Ed. 708.

Classification was held proper between itinerant dealers in sewing machines and those selling in regularly established places of business; Singer Sewing Mach. Co. v. Brickell, 199 Fed. 654; and also one of railroad employees as distinct from those of other carriers; Mondou v. R. Co., 223 U. S. 1, 32 Sup. Ct. 169, 56 L. Ed. 327, 38 L. R. A. (N. S.) 44; and a statute prohibiting the sale of adulterated milk; St. John v. New York, 201 U. S. 633, 26 Sup. Ct. 554, 50 L. Ed. 896, 5 Ann. Cas. 909; and one regulating the sale of mixed paints and requiring a label showing the ingredients is not an unconstitutional discrimination against the manufacture and sale of paste paint, which is a substantial part of the paint business; Heath & Milligen Mfg. Co. v. Worst, 207 U. S. 338, 28 Sup. Ct. 114, 52 L. Ed. 236; nor a statute forbidding the employment of workmen for more than eight hours a day in mines and in the smelting reduction or refining of ores and metals; Holden v. Hardy, 169 U. S. 366, 18 Sup. Ct. 383, 42 L. Ed. 780 (and see comments thereon in Johnson, Lytle & Co. v. Mills, 68 S. C. 339, 47 S. E. 695, 1 Ann. Cas. 409); a statute requiring, for the safety of persons employed therein, the owner or agent of every coal mine or colliery to make an accurate map of the workings; Daniels v. Hilgard, 77 Ill. 640; and another prohibiting the employment of persons under eighteen and of women from laboring more than sixty hours a week; Com. v. Mfg. Co., 120 Mass. 383; a statute making eight hours a day's work for all laborers except farm and domestic; People v. Metz, 193 N. Y. 148, 85 N. E. 1070, 24 L. R. A. (N. S.) 201; one authorizing a state commission to fix the maximum price to be charged for service by gas and electric light companies, and an order of the commission fixing the maximum price of gas or electricity for three years was held to be reasonable and valid, but the further provision that the rate so fixed should continue indefinitely thereafter until fixed anew on complaint made was inequitable and violated the guaranty of equal protection of the laws, inasmuch as the statute did not confer equal rights on both parties, authorizing only certain municipal officers or a designated number of consumers to make complaint, and giving no opportunity to the company at the end of three years, or at any time thereafter, to apply for a new adjustment of rates; Village of Saratoga Springs v. Power Co., 191 N. Y. 123, 83 N. E. 693, 18 L. R. A. (N. S.) 713. An act requiring the substitution of water-closets for school sinks in tenement houses; Tenement House Dep't of New York v. Moeschon, 179 N. Y. 325, 72 N. E. 231, 70 L. R. A. 704, 103 Am. St. Rep. 910, 1 Ann. Cas. 439; one providing that having in possession more than a quart of liquor, without license to sell, shall be prima facie evidence of intent to make an illegal sale thereof; State v. Barrett, 138 N. C. 630, 50 S. E. 506, 1 L. R. A. (N. S.) 626, and note; an act regulating the keeping of employment agencies in cities of first and second class; People v. Warden of City Prison, 183 N. Y. 223, 76 N. E. 11, 2 L. R. A. (N. S.) 859, 5 Ann. Cas. 325; an act imposing heavier punishment on criminals for a second offence; McDonald v. Com., 173 Mass. 322, 53 N. E. 874, 73 Am. St. Rep. 293; Moore v. Missouri, 159 U. S. 673, 16 Sup. Ct. 179, 40 L. Ed. 301; Ughbanks v. Armstrong, 208 U. S. 481, 28 Sup. Ct. 372, 52 L. Ed. 582; one imposing a license tax on all laundries not run by steam; Quong Wing v. Kirkendall, 223 U. S. 59, 32 Sup. Ct. 192, 56 L. Ed. 350; an act requiring certain public service corporations to pay employees each week in lawful money; Lawrence v. R. Co., 80 Vt. 370, 67 Atl. 1091, 15 L. R. A. (N. S.) 350, 13 Ann. Cas. 475; an act imposing on railroad companies the weekly payment of wages; Skinner v. Min. Co., 96 Fed. 735 (but see infra); were all held valid.

A statute was held valid requiring an examination of graduates of foreign medical colleges as a prerequisite to obtaining a license to practice medicine, the same not being required of graduates of colleges in the state; State v. Currens, 111 Wis. 431, 87 N. W. 561, 56 L. R. A. 252; and so were statutes recognizing the diploma of some named medical schools as sufficient for permission to practice medicine; Shaw, C. J., in Hewitt v. Charier, 16 Pick. (Mass.) 353; Wright v.

Lanekton, 19 Pick. (Mass.) 288; Bibber v. Simpson, 59 Me. 181; Brooks v. State, 88 Ala. 122, 6 South. 902; and statutes accepting as sufficient the approval of a state dental association for practicing dentistry; Wilkins v. State, 113 Ind. 514, 16 N. E. 192; or the fact of practicing in the state at the date of the law as a sufficient reason for exemption from examination to practice medicine; State v. Creditor, 44 Kan. 565, 24 Pac. 346, 21 Am. St. Rep. 306; and one which distinguished between graduates of a university or college authorized to grant diplomas in dental surgery and those of a regular college of dentistry; State v. Knowles, 90 Md. 646, 45 Atl. 877, 49 L. R. A. 695.

The legal duty of persons, firms or corporations operating railroads may be of a peculiar nature, and essentially different from the duties of other persons, firms or corporations, or even different from other common carriers, such, for example, as the fencing of tracks, the operation of trains, construction of tracks, maintenance or operation of terminals, depots, or crossings, protection of employees, and the like. As to such matters peculiar to railroads, they may be separately classified for the purposes of legislative regulation; Minneapolis & St. L. R. Co. v. Beckwith, 129 U. S. 26, 9 Sup. Ct. 207, 32 L. Ed. 585; Missouri Pac. R. Co. v. Mackey, 127 U. S. 205, 8 Sup. Ct. 1161, 32 L. Ed. 107; Missouri, K. & T. R. Co. v. May, 194 U. S. 267, 24 Sup. Ct. 638, 48 L. Ed. 971; Atchison, T. & S. F. R. Co. v. Matthews, 174 U. S. 96, 19 Sup. Ct. 609, 43 L. Ed. 909; Tullis v. R. Co., 175 U. S. 348, 20 Sup. Ct. 136, 44 L. Ed. 192; Lake Shore & M. S. R. Co. v. Ohio, 173 U. S. 285, 19 Sup. Ct. 465, 43 L. Ed. 702; Pittsburgh, C., C. & St. L. R. Co. v. Lightheiser, 168 Ind. 438, 78 N. E. 1033, and other cases supra. That the peculiar rights, duties and responsibilities of common carriers justifies a classification including only common carriers is held in Seaboard Air Line Ry. v. Seegers, 207 U. S. 73, 28 Sup. Ct. 28, 52 L. Ed. 108; but where the particular subject of legislative regulation discriminates against one class of common carriers (in this case railroad companies were required to pay for the loss of or damage to any shipment the sum of 25 per cent per annum on the principal sum of the claim) it was held unreasonable, as imposing upon one class of carriers a burden to which others are not subjected; Seaboard A. L. R. Co. v. Simon, 56 Fla. 545, 47 South. 1001, 20 L. R. A. (N. S.) 126, 16 Ann. Cas. 1234. Where, however a statute imposed a penalty on railroad companies for delay in the delivery of freight, it was held not an unwarranted discrimination against such carriers as singling them out from all other carriers engaged in the same business, as carriage by water is subject to many contingencies which do not affect carriage by railroads, and it would not be reasonable to subject both alike to the same regulations as to time; McCutchen v. R. Co., 81 S. C. 71, 61 S. E. 1108.

Statutes held void as against both guaranties of the 14th Amendment are those imposing a high privilege tax on lenders of money upon furniture etc.; Rodge v. Kelly, 88 Miss. 209, 40 South. 552, 11 L. R. A. (N. S.) 635, 117 Am. St. Rep. 733; Ex parte Sohneke, 148 Cal. 262, 82 Pac. 956, 2 L. R. A. (N. S.) 813, 113 Am. St. Rep. 236, 7 Ann. Cas. 475; (aliter as to a statute limiting the amount of interest; State v. Cary, 126 Wis. 135, 105 N. W. 792, 11 L. R. A. [N. S.] 174; or requiring certain specifications in the instrument securing the loan; In re Home Discount Co., 147 Fed. 538; or requiring a license to do the business; City Council of Augusta v. Clark & Co., 124 Ga. 254, 52 S. E. 881; Cowart v. City Council of Greenville, 67 S. C. 35, 45 S. E. 122; State v. Wickenhoefer, 6 Pennewill [Del.] 120, 64 Atl. 273).

Among the acts held void as against the equality clause are those forbidding store orders in payment of wages; State v. Goodwill, 33 W. Va. 179, 10 S. E. 285, 6 L. R. A. 621, 25 Am. St. Rep. 863; State v. Coal & Coke Co., 33 W. Va. 188, 10 S. E. 288, 6 L. R. A. 359, 25 Am. St. Rep. 891; requiring weekly payment of wages by certain corporations; Braceville Coal Co. v. People, 147 Ill. 66, 35 N. E. 62, 22 L. R. A. 340, 37 Am. St. Rep. 206 (contra, Skinner v. Mining Co., 96 Fed. 735); imposing on private corporations a liability for injuries to employees as being an abrogation of the fellow servant rule which does not exist in case of individuals; Bedford Quarries Co. v. Bough, 168 Ind. 671, 80 N. E. 529, 14 L. R. A. (N. S.) 418; an ordinance prohibiting the use of property for business on certain streets; City of St. Louis v. Dorr, 145 Mo. 466, 41 S. W. 1094, 46 S. W. 976, 42 L. R. A. 686, 68 Am. St. Rep. 575; an act forbidding combinations in restraint of trade, except agricultural products and live stock in the hands of the producer; In re Grice, 79 Fed. 627; an ordinance allowing four livery stables in the business centre of the city while the fifth and all others must be relegated and confined to a remote district; Town of Crowley v. West, 52 La. Ann. 526, 27 South. 53, 47 L. R. A. 652, 78 Am. St. Rep. 355; a Missouri statute prescribing a different registration law for St. Louis from that of other cities in the state; Mason v. Missouri, 179 U. S. 328, 21 Sup. Ct. 125, 45 L. Ed. 214; a classification for taxation distinguishing between retail and wholesale dealers; Cook v. Marshall County, 196 U. S. 261, 25 Sup. Ct. 233, 49 L. Ed. 471; or between different occupations; Kehrer v. Stewart, 197 U. S. 60, 25 Sup. Ct. 403, 49 L. Ed. 663; an act permitting water from coal mines and tunnels and city sewage to flow into streams and prohibiting individuals and corporations to do the same; Com. v. Emmers, 221 Pa. 298, 70 Atl. 762; an act setting apart mineral springs bored in the rock as a class by themselves; Hathorn v. Gas Co., 128 App. Div. 33, 112 N. Y. Supp. 374; forbidding barbers, and barbers only, from keeping open their shops or working their trade on Sundays; Eden v. People, 161 Ill. 296, 43 N. E. 1108, 32 L. R. A. 659, 52 Am. St. Rep. 365; City of Tacoma v. Kreeh, 15 Wash. 296, 46 Pac. 255, 34 L. R. A. 68 (contra, McClelland v. City of Denver, 36 Colo. 486, 86 Pac. 126, 10 Ann. Cas. 1014; Ex parte Northrup, 41 Or. 489, 69 Pac. 445); providing that no costs should be recovered against the city in an action commenced to set aside any assessment or tax deed, or to prevent the collection of taxes in said city; Durkee v. City of Janesville, 28 Wis. 464, 9 Am. Rep. 500; authorizing suits for injunction to be maintained in favor of certain parties under circumstances differing from those which obtained in respect to all other suits of a similar nature; City of Janesville v. Carpenter, 77 Wis. 288, 46 N. W. 128, 8 L. R. A. 808, 20 Am. St. Rep. 123; prohibiting persons engaged in mining and manufacturing from issuing for the payment of labor any order or paper, except such as was specified in the act; State v. Goodwill, 33 W. Va. 179, 10 S. E. 285, 6 L. R. A. 621, 25 Am. St. Rep. 863; limiting recovery in suits brought for libel in certain cases to actual damages as defined in the act; Park v. Free Press Co., 72 Mich. 560, 40 N. W. 731, 1 L. R. A. 599, 16 Am. St. Rep. 544; providing that no damages for injury to persons or property caused by a defect in the highway could be recovered of any city or town by any person, who, at the time the damage was done, was a resident of any country where damage done under similar circumstances was not, by the laws of that country recoverable; Pearson v. City of Portland, 69 Me. 278, 31 Am. Rep. 276.

In Soon Hing v. Crowley, 113 U. S. 703, 5 Sup. Ct. 730, 28 L. Ed. 1145, the court said: "The specific regulations for one kind of business which may be necessary for the protection of the public can never be a just ground of complaint because like restrictions are not imposed upon a business of a different kind. The discriminations which are open to objection are those where persons engaged in the same business are subjected to different restrictions or are held entitled to different privileges under the same conditions."

Whether a classification under a statute is a denial of equal protection of the laws "is a legislative question, subject to judicial revision only so far as to see that it is founded on real distinctions in the subjects classified, and not on artificial or irrelevant ones used for the purpose of evading the constitutional prohibition. If the distinctions are genuine the courts cannot declare the distinctions void, though they may not consider it on a sound basis. The test is not wisdom, but good faith in the classification." Seabolt v. Com'rs of Northumberland County, 187 Pa. 318, 41 Atl. 22; Com. v. Randall, 225 Pa. 197, 73 Atl. 1109.

The effect of the prohibition is that a state is hereby prevented from depriving particular persons or classes of persons of equal and impartial justice under the law; Caldwell v. Texas, 137 U. S. 692, 11 Sup. Ct. 224, 34 L. Ed. 816; as was said by the court in other cases, "no person or class shall be denied the same protection of the laws which is enjoyed by other persons or other classes in the same place and in like circumstances," quoted from Missouri v. Lewis, 101 U. S. 22, 31, 25 L. Ed. 989, in Connolly v. Sewer Pipe Co., 184 U. S. 540, 559, 22 Sup. Ct. 431, 46 L. Ed. 679, where the Illinois Anti-Trust Act of 1893 was held unconstitutional.

Congress may not by penal statutes enforce the guaranty of equal protection of the laws, as it is directed against legislation by the states; U. S. v. Harris, 106 U. S. 629, 1 Sup. Ct. 601, 27 L. Ed. 290.

The classification of crimes should be natural and not arbitrary and should be made with reference to the heinousness of the crime and not to matters disconnected therewith; In re Mallon, 16 Idaho 737, 102 Pac. 374, 22 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1123.

EQUALITY. Likeness in possessing the same rights and being liable to the same duties. See 1 Toullier, nn. 170, 193.

The word equal implies, not identity, but duality; the use of one thing as the measure of another. Kentucky & I. Bridge Co. v. R. Co., 37 Fed. 624, 2 L. R. A. 289; Little Rock & M. R. Co. v. R. Co., 63 Fed. 775, 11 C. C. A. 417, 26 L. R. A. 192.

Judges in court, while exercising their functions, are all upon an equality, it being a rule that inter pares non est potestas: a judge cannot, therefore, punish another judge of the same court for using any expression in court, although the words used might have been a contempt in any other person. Bacon, Abr., Of the Court of Sessions, Of Justices of the Peace.

In contracts, the law presumes that the parties act upon a perfect equality: when, therefore, one party uses any fraud or deceit to destroy this equality, the party grieved may avoid the contract. In case of a grant to two or more persons jointly, without designating what each takes, they are presumed to take in equal proportions; Treadwell v. Bulkley, 4 Day (Conn.) 395, 4 Am. Dec. 225; Henderson v. Womack, 41 N. C. 437; Appeal of Young, 83 Pa. 59.

It is a maxim that when the equity of the parties is equal, the law must prevail; Johnson v. Brown, 3 Call (Va.) 259; and that as between different creditors, equality is equity; De La Vergne v. Evertson, 1 Paige, Ch. (N. Y.) 181, 19 Am. Dec. 411. See Kames, Eq. 75; EQUITY.

Equalization in revenue statutes means to bring the assessment of different parts of a taxing district to the same relative standard; Huidekoper v. Hadley, 177 Fed. 1, 100 C. C. A. 395, 40 L. R. A. (N. S.) 505.

See Tax.

EQUINOX. The name given to two periods of the year when the days and nights are equal; that is, when the space of time between the rising and setting of the sun is one-half of a natural day. The vernal equinox occurs about March 21, the autumnal about September 23.

EQUIPMENT. Furnishings for the required purposes. In a legacy to be applied toward the rebuilding and equipment of a hospital it was held equipment meant everything required to convert an empty building into a hospital; 75 L. J. Ch. 163.

EQUITABLE ASSETS. Such assets as are chargeable with the payment of debts or legacies in equity, and which do not fall under the description of legal assets.

Those portions of the property which by the ordinary rules of law are exempt from debts, but which the testator has voluntarily charged as assets, or which, being non-existent at law, have been created in equity. Ad. Eq. 254.

They are so called because they can be reached only by the aid and instrumentality of a court of equity, and because their distribution is governed by a different rule from that which governs the distribution of legal assets. 2 Fonb. Eq. b. 4, pt. 2, c. 2, § 1, and notes; 2 Vern. 763; Willes 523; 3 Woodd. Lect. 486; Story, Eq. Jur. § 552.

The doctrine of equitable assets has been much restricted in the United States generally, and has lost its importance in England since the act of 1870, providing that simple contract and specialty creditors are, in future, payable pari passu out of both legal and equitable assets; Bisph. Eq. § 531; Benson v. Le Roy, 4 Johns. Ch. (N. Y.) 651; Backhouse v. Patton, 5 Pet. (U. S.) 160, 8 L. Ed. 82; Black v. Scott, 2 Brock. 325, Fed. Cas. No. 1,464; Hopkins v. Morgan's Ex'r, 3 Dana (Ky.) 18; Speed's Ex'r v. Nelson's Ex'r, 8 B. Monr. (Ky.) 499; Henderson v. Burton's Ex'r, 38 N. C. 259.

EQUITABLE ASSIGNMENT. An assignment of a chose in action, a thing not in esse, as a mortgage of personal property to be acquired in the future, and a mere contingency which, though not good at law, equity will recognize. Bisph. Eq. § 164; 10 H. L. Cas. 209; Butt v. Ellett, 19 Wall. (U. S.) 544, 22 L. Ed. 183; Shepherd v. Clark, 38 Ill. App. 66; Bacon v. Bonham, 33 N. J. Eq. 614; East Lewisburg Lumber & Mfg. Co. v. Marsh, 91 Pa. 96. In making such an assignment, no particular form of words is necessary; Buck v. Swazey, 35 Me. 41, 56 Am. Dec. 681; Kessel v. Albetis, 56 Barb. (N. Y.) 362; Noyes v. Brown, 33 Vt. 431; Gage v. Dow, 59 N. H.

383; Bower v. Stone Co., 30 N. J. Eq. 171; but the property must be specifically pointed out; Morrill v. Noyes, 56 Me. 465, 96 Am. Dec. 486; Benj. Sales 62; and there must be an appropriation or separation, and the mere intent to appropriate is not sufficient; Putnam Sav. Bank v. Beal, 54 Fed. 577; Shannon v. Mayor, etc., of Hoboken, 37 N. J. Eq. 123. A valid assignment may be made of a portion of the contract price of a building contracted to be erected by the assignor, but not yet erected, and such assignment need not be written nor accompanied by any transfer of the contract itself; Lanigan's Adm'r v. Bradley & Currier Co., 50 N. J. Eq. 201, 24 Atl. 505. The assignee of a chose in action takes it subject to existing equities in favor of third persons, as well as to those between the original parties; Schafer v. Reilly, 50 N. Y. 67; 3 Lead. Cas. Eq. 372, n. Equity will not recognize the assignment of certain kinds of property as against the policy of the law, such as, mere litigious rights, pensions, salaries of judges, commissions of officers in the army or navy, claims against the United States, and the like; 1 E. L. & Eq. 153; Appeal of Elwyn, 67 Pa. 369; L. R. 7 Ch. 109; 8 id. 76; Wanless v. U. S., 6 Ct. Cl. 123; Bates v. U. S., 4 Ct. Cl. 569; St. Paul & D. R. Co. v. U. S., 112 U. S. 733, 5 Sup. Ct. 366, 28 L. Ed. 861. The assignment of secured notes carries with it an equitable assignment of the security; Himrod v. Bolton, 44 Ill. App. 516. See ASSIGNMENT; EXPECTANCY.

EQUITABLE CONVERSION. See CONVERSION.

EQUITABLE DEFENCE. A defence to an action on grounds which, prior to the passing of the Common Law Procedure Act (17 and 18 Vict. c. 125), would have been cognizable only in a court of equity. Moz. & W. The codes of procedure and the practice in some of the states likewise permit both a legal and equitable defence to the same action.

EQUITABLE ELECTION. See ELECTION OF RIGHTS.

EQUITABLE ESTATE. A right or interest in land, which, not having the properties of a legal estate, but being merely a right of which courts of equity will take notice, requires the aid of such court to make it available.

These estates consist of uses, trusts, and powers. They possess in some respects the qualities of legal estates in modern law; Davis v. Mason, 1 Pet. (U. S.) 508, 7 L. Ed. 239; Houghton v. Hapgood, 13 Pick. (Mass.) 154; Ege v. Medlar, 82 Pa. 86; Duncomb v. Duncomb, 1 Johns. Ch. (N. Y.) 508, 7 Am. Dec. 504; 2 Vern. 536; 1 Bro. C. C. 499; Wms. R. P. 134; 1 Spence, Eq. Jur. 501; 1 Washb. R. P. 130, 161.

A contract for the sale of land gives the buyer an equitable estate; an interest which he can resell, or dispose of by will, etc.; his title is good against every one except a "purchaser for value without notice"; Pollock, First Book of Jurispr. 212.

EQUITABLE ESTOPPEL. See ESTOPPEL.

EQUITABLE MORTGAGE. A lien upon real estate of such a character that it is recognized in equity as a security for the payment of money and is treated as a mortgage. A mortgage of a merely equitable estate or interest is also so called.

Such a mortgage may exist by a deposit with the lender of money of the title-deeds to an estate; Story, Eq. Jur. § 1020; Bisph. Eq. 161; 1 Bro. Ch. C. 269; 17 Ves. 230; Mandeville v. Welch, 5 Wheat. (U. S.) 277, 5 L. Ed. 87; 20 Beav. 607. They must have been deposited as a present, bona fide security; 1 Washb. R. P. 503; and the mortgagee must show notice to affect a subsequent mortgagee of record; Hall v. McDuff, 24 Me. 311; 3 Ware 416; Story, Eq. Jur. § 1020. Such mortgages are recognized in some states; Hall v. McDuff, 24 Me. 311; Williams v. Stratton, 10 Smedes & M. (Miss.) 418; Hackett v. Reynolds, 4 R. I. 512; but under the usual system of the registration of deeds are of infrequent occurrence.

The doctrine is repudiated in many jurisdictions; Lehman, Durr & Co. v. Collins, 69 Ala. 127; Pierce v. Parrish, 111 Ga. 725, 37 S. E. 79; Gothard v. Flynn, 25 Miss. 58; Bloomfield State Bank v. Miller, 55 Neb. 243, 75 N. W. 569, 44 L. R. A. 387, 70 Am. St. Rep. 381; Harper v. Spainhour, 64 N. C. 629; Hackett v. Watts, 138 Mo. 502, 40 S. W. 113; on the ground that it would tend to embarrass lands with secret trusts; Lehman, Durr & Co. v. Collins, 69 Ala. 127; as coming in conflict with the statute of frauds, which provides that all agreements for the sale of land, etc., should be in writing, etc.; Williams v. Stratton, 10 Smedes & M. (Miss.) 418; and as being contrary to acts for the recording of mortgages, and for recording liens for public information; Shitz v. Diefenbach, 3 Pa. 233. In Georgia the code declares that the delivery of title deeds creates no pledge; Davis v. Davis, 88 Ga. 191, 14 S. E. 194. When, however, a written agreement accompanies the deposit of the title deeds, such agreement may become the basis for an equitable lien; Woodruff v. Adair, 131 Ala. 530, 32 South. 515.

No particular formality is necessary in order to make a valid mortgage between the parties thereto; Frick v. Fritz, 115 Ia. 438, 88 N. W. 961, 91 Am. St. Rep. 165. If the transaction resolves itself into a security, whatever may be its form, in equity it is a mortgage; Flagg v. Mann, 2 Sumn. 533, Fed. Cas. No. 4,847. A lien created by contract and not sufficient as a legal mortgage, will generally be regarded as partaking of the nature of an equitable mortgage; Kyle v. Bellenger, 79 Ala. 516. Though a lien may not be expressed in terms, equity will imply a security from the nature of the transaction, and give effect to it, as such, in furtherance of the agreement of the parties, if there appears an intention to create a security; Wood v. Holly Mfg. Co., 100 Ala. 326, 13 South. 948, 46 Am. St. Rep. 56. The form of the writing is not important provided it sufficiently appears that it was thereby intended to create a security; Howard v. Iron & Land Co., 62 Minn. 298, 64 N. W. 896; and to the same effect, Higgins v. Manson, 126 Cal. 467, 58 Pac. 907, 77 Am. St. Rep. 192; Martin v. Bowen, 51 N. J. Eq. 452, 26 Atl. 823; Dulaney v. Willis, 95 Va. 606, 29 S. E. 324, 64 Am. St. Rep. 815; Hackett v. Watts, 138 Mo. 502, 40 S. W. 113.

To place in the hands of another a deed to real estate, together with a written memorandum stating that the property is pledged to secure the other against loss from becoming a surety for the owner, will create an equitable lien enforceable against the owner's assignee for creditors; In re Snyder, 138 Ia. 553, 114 N. W. 615, 19 L. R. A. (N. S.) 206.

Such a mortgage has been said to exist in favor of the vendor of real estate as security for purchase-money due from the purchaser; in which case a lien is recognized in some jurisdictions; 15 Ves. 339; 1 Bro. Ch. C. 420, 424, n. It is occasionally spoken of as an equitable mortgage; Moreton v. Harrison, 1 Bland (Md.) 491, though it is doubtful if it is to be so considered. It is properly termed vendor's lien, which see. See also LIEN.

EQUITABLE WASTE. See WASTE.

EQUITATURA. In Old English Law. Needful equipments for riding or travelling.

EQUITY. A branch of remedial justice by and through which relief is afforded to suitors in the courts of equity.

In the broad sense in which this term is sometimes used it signifies natural justice.

In a more limited application, it denotes equal justice between contending parties. This is its moral signification, in reference to the rights of parties having conflicting claims; but applied to courts and their jurisdiction and proceedings, it has a more restrained and limited signification.

One division of courts is into courts of law and courts of equity. And equity, in this relation and application, is a branch of remedial justice by and through which relief is afforded to suitors in the courts of equity.

The difference between the remedial justice of the courts of common law and that of the courts of equity is marked and material. That administered by the courts of law is limited by the principles of the common law (which are to a great extent positive and inflexible), and especially by the nature and character of the process and pleadings, and of the judgments which those courts can render; because the pleadings cannot fully present all the matters in controversy, nor can the judgments be adapted to the special exigencies which may exist in particular cases. It is not uncommon, also, for cases to fail in those courts, from the fact that too few or too many persons have been joined as parties, or because the pleadings have not been framed with sufficient technical precision.

The remedial process of the courts of equity, on the other hand, admits, and, generally, requires, that all persons having an interest shall be made parties, and makes a large allowance for amendments by summoning and discharging parties after the commencement of the suit. The pleadings are usually framed so as to present to the consideration of the court the whole case, with its possible legal rights, and all its equities,—that is, all the grounds upon which the suitor is or is not entitled to relief upon the principles of equity. And its final remedial process may be so varied as to meet the requirements of these equities, in cases where the jurisdiction of the courts of equity exists, by "commanding what is right, and prohibiting what is wrong." In other words, its final process is varied so as to enable the courts to do that equitable justice between the parties which the case demands, either by commanding what is to be done, or prohibiting what is threatened to be done.

The principles upon which, and the modes and forms by and through which, justice is administered in the United States, are derived to a great extent from those which were in existence in England at the time of the settlement of this country; and it is therefore important to a correct understanding of the nature and character of our own jurisprudence, not only to trace it back to its introduction here on the early settlement of the colonies, but also to trace the English jurisprudence from its earliest inception as the administration of law, founded on principles, down to that period. It is in this way that we are enabled to explain many things in our own practice which would otherwise be entirely obscure. This is particularly true of the principles which regulate the jurisdiction and practice of the courts of equity, and of the principles of equity as they are now applied and administered in the courts of law which at the present day have equitable jurisdiction conferred upon them by statutes passed for that purpose. And for the purpose of a competent understanding of the course of decisions in the courts of equity in England, it is necessary to refer to the origin of the equitable jurisdiction there, and to trace its history, inquiring upon what principles it was originally founded, and how it has been enlarged and sustained.

The study of equity jurisprudence, therefore, comprises an inquiry into the origin and history of the courts of equity; the distinctive principles upon which jurisdiction in equity is founded; the nature, character, and extent of the jurisdiction itself; its peculiar remedies; the rules and maxims which regulate its administration; its remedial process and proceedings and modes of defence; and its rules of evidence and practice.

"The meaning of the word 'equity,' as used in its technical sense in English jurisprudence, comes back to this: that it is simply a term descriptive of a certain field of jurisdiction exercised in the English system, by certain courts, and of which the extent and boundaries are not marked by lines founded upon principle so much as by the features of the original constitution of the English scheme of remedial law, and the accidents of its development." Bisph. Eq. § 11.

ORIGIN AND HISTORY. The courts of equity may be said to have their origin as far back as the Aula or Curia Regis, the great court in which the king administered justice in person, assisted by his counsellors. Of the officers of this court, the chancellor was one of great trust and confidence, next to the king himself; but his duties do not distinctly appear at the present day. On the dissolution of that court, he exercised separate duties.

On the introduction of seals, he had the keeping of the king's seal, which he affixed to charters and deeds; and he had some authority in relation to the king's grants,—perhaps annulling those which were alleged to have been procured by misrepresentation or to have been issued unadvisedly.

As writs came into use, it was made his duty to frame and issue them from his court, which, as early as the reign of Henry II., was known as the chancery. And it is said that he exercised at this period a sort of equitable jurisdiction by which he mitigated the rigor of the common law,—to what extent it is impossible to determine. He is spoken of as one who “annuls unjust laws, and executes the rightful commands of the pious prince, and puts an end to what is injurious to the people or to morals,”—which would form a very ample jurisdiction; but it seems probable that this was according to the authority or direction of the king, given from time to time in relation to particular cases. He was a principal member of the king's council, after the conquest, in which, among other things, all applications for the special exercise of the prerogative in regard to matters of judicial cognizance were discussed and decided upon. In connection with the council, he exercised a separate authority in cases in which the council directed the suitors to proceed in chancery. The court of chancery is said to have sprung from this council. But it may be said that it had its origin in the prerogative of the king, by which he undertook to administer justice, on petitions to himself, without regard to the jurisdiction of the ordinary courts, which he did through orders to his chancellor. The great council, or parliament, also sent matters relating to the king's grants, etc., to the chancery; and it seems that the chancellor, although an ecclesiastic, was the principal actor as regards the judicial business which the select or king's council, as well as the great council, had to advise upon or transact. In the reign of Edward I. the power and authority of the chancellor were extended by the statute of Westminster 2d.

In the time of Edward III. proceedings in chancery were commenced by petition or bill, the adverse party was summoned, the parties were examined, and chancery appears as a distinct court for giving relief in cases which required extraordinary remedies, the king having, “by a writ, referred all such matters as were of grace to be dispatched by the chancellor or by the keeper of the privy seal.”

It may be considered to have been fully established as a separate and permanent jurisdiction, from the 17th of Richard II.

In the time of Edward IV. the chancery had come to be regarded as one of the four principal courts of the kingdom. From this time its jurisdiction and the progress of its jurisdiction become of more importance to us.

It is the tendency of any system of legal principles, when reduced to a practical application, to fail of effecting such justice between party and party as the special circumstances of a case may require, by reason of the minuteness and inflexibility of its rules and the inability of the judges to adapt its remedies to the necessities of the controversy under consideration. This was the case with the Roman law; and, to remedy this, edicts were issued from time to time, which enabled the consuls and prætors to correct “the scrupulosity and mischievous subtlety of the law;” and from these edicts a code of equitable jurisprudence was compiled.

So the principles and rules of the common law, as they were reduced to practice, became in their application the means of injustice in cases where special equitable circumstances existed, of which the judge could not take cognizance because of the precise nature of its titles and rights, the inflexible character of its principles, and the technicality of its pleadings and practice. And in a manner somewhat analogous to the Roman mode of modification, in order to remedy such hardships, the prerogative of the king or the authority of the great council was exercised in ancient times to procure a more equitable measure of justice in the particular case, which was accomplished through the court of chancery.

This was followed by the “invention” of the writ of subpoena by means of which the chancery assumed, upon a complaint made directly to that court, to require the attendance of the adverse party, to answer to such matters as should be objected against him. Notwithstanding the complaints of the commons, from time to time, that the course of proceeding in chancery “was not according to the course of the common law, but the practice of the holy church,” the king sustained the authority of the chancellor; the right to issue the writ was recognized and regulated by statute, and other statutes were passed conferring jurisdiction where it had not been taken before. In this way, without any compilation of a code, a system of equitable jurisprudence was established in the court of chancery, enlarging from time to time; the decisions of the court furnishing an exposition of its principles and of their application. It is said that the jurisdiction was greatly enlarged under the administration of Cardinal Wolsey, in the time of Henry VIII. The courts of equity also began to act in personam and to enjoin plaintiffs in common-law courts from prosecuting inequitable suits. A controversy took place between Lord Chancellor Ellesmere and Lord Coke, Chief Justice of the King's Bench, in the time of James I., respecting the right of the chancellor to interfere with any of the proceedings and judgments of the courts of law. The king sustained the chancellor; and from that time the jurisdiction then claimed has been maintained. See The Earl of Oxford's Case, 1 Ch. Rep. 1, 2 Lead. Cas. Eq. 601; Bisph. Eq. § 407; 1 Poll. & Maitl. 172; 1 Hallam, Const. Hist. 472; CANCELLARIUS.

It is from the study of these decisions and the commentaries upon them that we are enabled to determine, with a greater or less degree of certainty, the time when and the grounds upon which jurisdiction was granted or was taken in particular classes of cases, and the principles upon which it was administered. And it is occasionally of importance to attend to this; because we shall see that, chancery having once obtained jurisdiction, that jurisdiction continues until expressly taken away, notwithstanding the intervention of such changes in common-law practice and rules as, if they had been made earlier, would have rendered the exercise of jurisdiction in equity incompatible with the principles upon which it is founded.

A brief sketch of some of the principal points in the origin and history of the court of chancery may serve to show that much of its jurisdiction exists independently of any statute, and is founded upon an assumption of a power to do equity, having its first inception in the prerogative of the king, and his commands to do justice in individual cases, extending itself through the action of the chancellor, to the issue of a writ of summons to appear in his court without any special authority for that purpose, and, upon the return of the subpoena, to the reception of a complaint, to a requirement upon the party summoned to make answer to that complaint, and then to a hearing and decree, or judgment, upon the merits of the matters in controversy, according to the rules of equity and good conscience.

It appears as a noticeable fact that the jurisdiction of the chancery proceeded originally from and was sustained by successive kings of England against the repeated remonstrances of the commons, who were for adhering to the common law; though not, perhaps, approving of all its rigors, as equity had been to some extent acknowledged as a rule of decision in the common-law courts.

This opposition of the commons may have been owing in part to the fact that the chancellor was in those days usually an ecclesiastic, and to the existing antipathy among the masses of the people to almost everything Roman.

The master of the rolls, who for a long period was a judicial officer of the court of chancery, second only to the chancellor, was originally a clerk or keeper of the rolls or records, but seems to have acquired his judicial authority from being at times directed by the king to take cognizance of and determine matters submitted to him.

DISTINCTIVE PRINCIPLES. It is quite apparent that some principles other than those of the common law must regulate the exercise of such a jurisdiction. That law could not mitigate its rigor upon its own principles. And as, down to the time of Edward III., and, with few exceptions, to the 21st of Henry VIII., the chancellors were ecclesiastics, much more familiar with the principles of the Roman law than with those of the common law, it was but a matter of course that there should be a larger adoption of the principles of that law; and the study of it is of some importance in this connection. Still, that law cannot be said to be of authority even in equity proceedings. The commons were jealous of its introduction. "In the reign of Richard II. the barons protested that they would never suffer the kingdom to be governed by the Roman law, and the judges prohibited it from being any longer cited in the common-law tribunals."

This opposition of the barons and of the common-law judges furnished very sufficient reasons why the chancellors should not profess to adopt that law as the rule of decision. In addition to this, it was not fitted, in many respects, to the state of things existing in England; and so the chancellors were of necessity compelled to act upon equitable principles as expounded by themselves. In later times the common-law judges in that country have resorted to the Roman law for principles of decision to a much greater extent than they have given credit to it.

Since the time of Henry VIII. the chancery bench has been occupied by some of the ablest lawyers which England has produced, and they have given to the proceedings and practice in equity definite rules and forms, which leave little to the personal discretion of the chancellor in determining what equity and good conscience require. The discretion of the chancellor is a judicial discretion, to be exercised according to the principles and practice of the court. See DISCRETION.

The avowed principle upon which the jurisdiction was at first exercised was the administration of justice according to honesty, equity, and conscience,—which last, it is said, was unknown to the common law as a principle of decision.

In the 15th of Richard II. two petitions, addressed to the king and the lords of parliament, were sent to the chancery to be heard, with the direction, "Let there be done, by the authority of parliament, that which right and reason and good faith and good conscience demand in the case."

These may be said to be the general principles upon which equity is administered at the present day.

Although in its origin the result of efforts to avoid hardships sometimes resulting from the rigorous application of legal rules and processes, it has in modern times developed into a settled system; McElroy v. Master-son, 156 Fed. 36, 84 C. C. A. 202; and as was said in [1903] 2 Ch. 174, 195, it is not a court of conscience, in the sense that there being no question of legal liability, ripe for discussion, there was no occasion for judicial action.

give relief,—allowing it to be sought and administered through process and proceedings of less formality and technicality than are required in proceedings at law. This, however, has its limitations, some of its rules of pleading in defence being quite technical. And it is another peculiar feature that the relief is administered by a decree or process adapted to the exigencies of the particular case.

It was said by Jessel, M. R., in L. R. 13 Ch. D. 696, 710: "It must not be forgotten that the rules of the court of equity are not, like the rules of the common law, supposed to have been established from time immemorial. It is perfectly well known that they have been established from time to time—altered, improved, and refined from time to time. In many cases we know the names of the chancellors who invented them. No doubt they were invented for the purpose of securing the better administration of justice, but they were invented. Take such things as these: The separate use of a married woman, the restraint on alienation, the modern rule against perpetuities, and the rules of equitable waste. We can name the chancellors who first invented them, and state the date when they were first introduced into equity jurisprudence; and, therefore, in cases of this kind, the older precedents in equity are of very little value. The doctrines are progressive, refined and improved; and if we want to know what the rules of equity are, we must look, of course, rather to the more modern than the more ancient cases."

JURISDICTION. It is difficult to reduce a jurisdiction so extensive and of such diverse component parts to a rigid and precise classification. But an approach to it may be made. The general nature of the jurisdiction has already been indicated. It exists—

First, for the purpose of compelling a discovery from the defendant, respecting the truth of the matters alleged against him, by an appeal to his conscience to speak the truth. The discovery is enforced by requiring an answer to the allegations in the plaintiff's complaint, in order that the plaintiff may use the matters disclosed in the answer, as admissions of the defendant, and, thus, evidence is secured for the plaintiff, either in connection with and in aid of other evidence offered by the plaintiff, or to supply the want of other evidence on his part; or it may be to avoid the expense to which the plaintiff must be put in procuring other evidence to sustain his case.

When the plaintiff's complaint, otherwise called a bill, prays for relief in the same suit, the statements of the defendant in his answer are considered by the court in forming a judgment upon the whole case. A party, if uncertain to what specific relief he is entitled, may frame his bill with an alternative prayer for relief; Hardin v. Boyd, 113 U. S. 756, 763, 5 Sup. Ct. 771, 28 L. Ed. 1141; but he may not recognize a transaction and pray for the enforcement of his rights thereunder and ask that it be set aside as a fraud, particularly without specifying in what particular; Cella v. Brown, 144 Fed. 742, 75 C. C. A. 608.

To a certain extent, the statements of the defendant in answer to the bill are evidence for himself also.

The discovery which may be required is not only of facts within the knowledge of the defendant, but may, also, be of deeds and other writings in his possession.

The right to discovery is not, however, an unlimited one: as, for instance, the defendant is not bound to make a discovery which would subject him to punishment, nor, ordinarily, to discover the title upon which he relies in his defence; nor is the plaintiff entitled to require the production of all papers which he may desire to look into. The limits of the right deserve careful consideration. The discovery, when had, may be the foundation of equitable relief in the same suit, in which case it may be connected with all the classes of cases in which relief is sought; or it may be for the purpose of being used in some other court, in which case the jurisdiction is designated as an assistant jurisdiction. Since the new statutes on the admission of evidence of parties, bills of discovery have practically fallen into disuse. See DISCOVERY.

Second, where the courts of law do not, or did not, recognize any right, and therefore could give no remedy, but where the courts of equity recognize equitable rights and, of course, give equitable relief. This has been denominated the exclusive jurisdiction. In this class are trusts, charities, forfeited and imperfect mortgages, penalties and forfeitures, imperfect consideration.

Uses and trusts have been supposed to have had their origin in the restrictions laid by parliament upon conveyances in mortmain,—that is, to the church for charitable, or rather for ecclesiastical, purposes.

It may well be that the doctrine of equitable titles and estates, unknown to the common law but which could be enforced in chancery, had its origin in conveyances to individuals for the use of the church in order to avoid the operation of these restrictions,—the conscience of the feoffee being bound to permit the church to have the use according to the design and intent of the feoffment.

But conveyances in trust for the use of the church were not by any means the only cases in which it was desirable to convey the legal title to one for the use of another. In many instances, such a conveyance offered a convenient mode of making provision for those who, from any circumstances, were unable to manage property advantageously for themselves, or to whom it was not desirable to give the control of it; and the propriety in all such cases of some protection to the beneficiary is quite apparent. The court of chancery, by recognizing that he had an interest of an equitable character which could be protected and enforced against the holder of the legal title, exercised a jurisdiction to give relief in cases which the courts of common law could not reach, consistently with their principles and modes of procedure.

Mortgages, which were originally estates conveyed upon condition, redeemable if the condition were performed at the day, but absolute on non-performance, the right to redeem being thereby forfeited, owe their origin in the modern conception of the term, to the court of chancery; which, acting at first, perhaps, in some cases where the non-performance was by mistake or accident, soon recognized an equitable right of redemption after the day, as a general rule, in order to relieve against the forfeiture. This became known as an equity of redemption,—a designation, in use at the present day, although there has long been a legal right of redemption in such cases.

Relief against penalties and forfeitures also was formerly obtained only through the aid of the court of chancery.

In most of the cases which fall under this head, courts of law now exercise a concurrent jurisdiction.

Third, where the courts of equity administer equitable relief for the infraction of legal rights, in cases in which the courts of law, recognizing the right, give a remedy according to their principles, modes, and forms, but the remedy is deemed by equity inadequate to the requirements of the case. This is sometimes called the concurrent jurisdiction. This class embraces fraud, mistake, accident, administration, legacies, contribution, and cases where justice and conscience require the cancellation, or reformation of instruments, or the rescission, or the specific performance of contracts. (See these several titles.)

The adequate remedy at law to oust equitable jurisdiction must be as certain, prompt and efficient to attain the ends of justice as the remedy in equity; Boyce v. Grundy, 3 Pet. (U. S.) 210, 7 L. Ed. 655; Williams v. Neely, 134 Fed. 1, 67 C. C. A. 171, 69 L. R. A. 232; Castle Creek Water Co. v. City of Aspen, 146 Fed. 8, 76 C. C. A. 516, 8 Ann. Cas. 660; for example, an action requiring submission to jury of matters requiring accounting is insufficient; Castle Creek Water Co. v. City of Aspen, 146 Fed. 8, 76 C. C. A. 171, 8 Ann. Cas. 660; Butler Bros. Shoe Co. v. Rubber Co., 156 Fed. 1, 84 C. C. A. 167; and so, for another instance, if damages for breach of contract are too uncertain to be assessed the failure to provide for liquidated damages does not give an equitable cause for action; Utz v. Wolf, 159 Fed. 696, 86 C. C. A. 504.

The courts of law relieve against fraud, mistake, and accident where a remedy can be had according to their modes and forms; but there are many cases in which the legal remedy is inadequate for the purposes of justice.

The modes of investigation and the peculiar remedies of the courts of equity are often of the greatest importance in this class of cases.

Transfers to defraud or delay creditors, and purchases with notice of an outstanding title, come under the head of fraud.

It has been said that there is a less amount of evidence required to prove fraud, in equity, than there is at law; but the soundness of that position may well be doubted.

The court does not relieve in all cases of accident and mistake.

In many cases the circumstances are such as to require the cancellation or reformation of written instruments or the specific performance of contracts, instead of damages for the breach of them.

Fourth, where the court of equity administers a remedy because the relations of the parties are such that there are impediments to a legal remedy. Partnership furnishes a marked instance. Joint-tenancy and marshalling of assets may be included. (See these titles.)

From the nature of a partnership, there are impediments to suits at law between the several partners and the partnership in relation to matters involved in the partnership; and impediments of a somewhat similar character exist in other cases.

Fifth, where the forms of proceeding in the courts of law are not deemed adequate to the due investigation of the particulars and details of the case. This class includes account, partition, dower, ascertainment of boundaries.

Sixth, where, from a relation of trust and confidence, or from consanguinity, the parties do not stand on equal ground in their dealings with each other: as, the relations of parent and child, guardian and ward, attorney and client, principal and agent, executor or administrator and legatees or distributees, trustee and cestui que trust, etc.

Seventh, where the court grant relief from considerations of public policy, because of the mischief which would result if the court did not interfere. Marriage-brokerage agreements, contracts in restraint of trade, buying and selling public offices, agreements founded on corrupt considerations, usury, gaming, and contracts with expectant heirs, are of this class.

Many cases of this and the preceding class are sometimes considered under the head of constructive fraud.

Eighth, where a party from incapacity to take care of his rights is under the special care of the court of equity, as infants, idiots, and lunatics.

This is a branch of jurisdiction of very ancient date, and of a special character, said to be founded in the prerogative of the king.

In this country the court does not, in general, assume the guardianship, but exercises an extensive jurisdiction over guardians, and may hold a stranger interfering with the property of an infant accountable as if he were guardian.

Ninth, where the court recognizes an obligation on the part of a husband to make provision for the support of his wife, or to make a settlement upon her, out of the property which comes to her by inheritance or otherwise.

This jurisdiction is not founded upon either trust or fraud, but is derived originally from the maxim that he who asks equity should do equity.

Tenth, where the equitable relief appropriate to the case consists in restraining the commission or continuance of some act of the defendant, administered by means of a writ of injunction.

Eleventh, the court aids in the procurement or preservation of evidence of the rights of a party, to be used, if necessary, in some subsequent proceeding, the court administering no final relief.

See a full note as to equity jurisdiction in 19 Am. L. Reg. N. S. 563.

PECULIAR REMEDIES, AND THE MANNER OF ADMINISTERING THEM. Under this head are—specific performance of contracts; re-execution, reformation, rescission, and cancellation of contracts or instruments; restraint by injunction; bills quia timet; bills of peace; protection of a party liable at law, but who has no interest, by bill of interpleader; election between two inconsistent legal rights; conversion; priorities; tacking; marshalling of securities; application of purchase-money. (See these several titles.)

In recent periods, the principles of the court of chancery have in many instances been acted on and recognized by the courts of law (as, for instance, in relation to mortgages, contribution, etc.) so far as the rules of the courts of law admitted of their introduction.

In some states the entire jurisdiction has, by statute, been conferred upon the courts of law, who exercise it as a separate and distinct branch of their authority, upon the principles and according to the modes and forms previously adopted in chancery.

In a few, the jurisdictions of the courts of law and of equity have been amalgamated, and an entire system has been substituted, administered more according to the principles and modes and forms of equity than the principles and forms of the common law.

It is to be noted, however, that the equity system is not abolished or abridged by the changes in the courts which administer it, and it is held that the constitutional grant of equity powers to certain courts cannot be impaired by the legislature, so that acts requiring the trial by jury of facts in chancery cases are unconstitutional; Brown v. Kalamazoo Circuit Judge, 75 Mich. 274, 42 N. W. 827, 5 L. R. A. 226, 13 Am. St. Rep. 438; Callanan v. Judd, 23 Wis. 343. So, in an act requiring the court of chancery to direct an issue in suits to quiet title, a provision authorizing that court to set aside a verdict and order a new trial is not unconstitutional as violating the division of powers between courts of equity and law; Brady v. Realty Co., 70 N. J. Eq. 748, 64 Atl. 1078, 8 L. R. A. (N. S.) 866, 118 Am. St. Rep. 778. See an admirable discussion of this head of equitable jurisdiction in the opinion of Philips, J., in Big Six Development Co. v. Mitchell, 138 Fed. 286, 70 C. C. A. 569, 1 L. R. A. (N. S.) 332, affirmed in the Circuit Court of Appeals in s. c. 138 Fed. 279, 70 C. C. A. 569, 1 L. R. A. (N. S.) 332 (with note), and certiorari denied in id., 199 U. S. 606, 26 Sup. Ct. 746, 50 L. Ed. 330.

RULES AND MAXIMS. In the administration of the jurisdiction, there are certain rules and maxims which are of special significance.

First. Equity having once had jurisdiction of a subject-matter because there was no remedy at law, or because the remedy is inadequate, does not lose the jurisdiction merely because the courts of law afterwards give the same or a similar relief.

Second. Equity follows the law. This is true as a general maxim. Equity follows the law, except in relation to those matters which give a title to equitable relief because the rules of law would operate to sanction fraud or injustice in the particular case.

Third. Between equal equities, the law must prevail. The ground upon which the suitor comes into the court of equity is that he is entitled to relief there. But if his adversary has an equally equitable case, the complainant has no title to relief.

It has been said that the maxim that where equities are equal relief will be denied does not apply to a suit to reform a deed; Union Ice Co. v. Doyle, 6 Cal. App. 284, 92 Pac. 112.

Fourth. Equality is equity: applied to cases of contribution, apportionment of moneys due among those liable or benefited by the payment, abatement of claims on account of deficiency of the means of payment, etc.

Fifth. He who seeks equity must do equity. A party cannot claim the interposition of the court for relief unless he will do what it is equitable should be done by him as a condition precedent to that relief. See the eleventh maxim, infra.

See General Proprietors of Eastern Division of New Jersey v. Force's Ex'rs, 72 N. J. Eq. 56, 127, 68 Atl. 914. This maxim applies to one seeking equitable relief, whether he be plaintiff or defendant; Union Stock Yards Nat. Bank v. Day, 79 Neb. 845, 113 N. W. 530 (where in an action of ejectment an equitable defence was pleaded). It was also applied in refusing to permit plaintiff to dismiss after having acquired advantage from the suit; Johnson City Southern Ry. Co. v. R. Co., 148 N. C. 59, 61 S. E. 683.

Sixth. Equity considers that as done which ought to have been done. A maxim of much more limited application than might at first be supposed from the broad terms in which it is expressed. In favor of parties who would have had a benefit from something contracted to be done, and who have an equitable right to have the case considered as if it had been done, equity applies this maxim. Illustration: when there is an agreement for a sale of land, and the vendor dies, the land may be treated as money, and the proceeds of the sale, when completed, go to the distributees of personal estate, instead of to the heir. If the vendee die before the completion of the purchase, the purchase-money may be treated as land for the benefit of the heir.

Seventh. Equity will not permit a wrong without a remedy.

Eighth. Equity regards the spirit and not the letter, the intent and not the form, the substance rather than the circumstance, as it is variously expressed by different courts. See Moring v. Privott, 146 N. C. 558, 60 S. E. 509; Clinton v. Winnard, 135 Ill. App. 274; Curtin v. Krohn, 4 Cal. App. 131, 87 Pac. 243.

Ninth. Where equities are equal the first in time prevails—qui prior est in tempore, potior est in jure.

Eleventh. He who comes into equity must come with clean hands. The inequity which deprives a suitor of a right to relief in a court of equity is not general iniquitous conduct unconnected with the cause of action, but evil practice or wrong-doing in the particular matter as to which judicial protection or redress is sought; Liverpool & London & Globe Ins. Co. v. Clunie, 88 Fed. 160; Woodward v. Woodward, 41 N. J. Eq. 224, 4 Atl. 424; or where there is some duty springing from the relations of the parties; Cunningham v. Pettigrew, 169 Fed. 335, 94 C. C. A. 457. A good illustration is found in Toledo Computing Scale Co. v. Scale Co., 142 Fed. 919, 74 C. C. A. 89, where it was held that the manufacturers of a "butcher's computing scale," who advertised it as making a profit for butchers by counting fractions against the purchaser, could not have equitable relief against a competitor for calling attention to the fraudulent character of such scale. See CLEAN HANDS.

Twelfth. It is to the vigilant and not to those who sleep upon their rights, that Equity leads assistance—vigilantibus et non dor- micantibus equitas subvenit. This is a mere adaptation or limitation of the general maxim, vigilantibus et non dormientibus jura (or leges) subveniunt.

Thirteenth. Equity acts in personam and not in rem. As a result of this principle, jurisdiction of the person gives power to affect by the decree property outside the jurisdiction; Willhite v. Skelton, 149 Fed. 67, 78 C. C. A. 635; Massie v. Watts, 6 Cra. (U. S.) 159, 3 L. Ed. 181; Carpenter v. Strange, 141 U. S. 105, 11 Sup. Ct. 960, 35 L. Ed. 640; Selover, Bates & Co. v. Walsh, 226 U. S. 112, 33 Sup. Ct. 69, 57 L. Ed. 146. This power was notably exercised in the great case of Penn v. Lord Baltimore, 1 Ves. 444, where the Chancellor made a decree for the specific performance of a contract relating to land in the colonies.

Most of these maxims are given by Francis or Story and all but the first and last by Indermaur and Pomeroy; all of them are recognized and stated by approved writers on Equity and they are here collected as including all those principles which have been by competent authority selected as fundamental and designated as maxims of equity.

Story only enumerates the first six, and of those he states the first, not as a maxim strictly so termed, but as a doctrine of equity. The last one is given by Story in his Eq. Pl. § 72, where he quotes it from Talbott, Ld. Ch., in 3 P. Wms. 331.

Francis sets out fourteen maxims, as he terms them, but those numbered by him VII, VIII, IX, XI, XII, inclusive, are not stated supra, because they are mere statements of equitable rules of decision, or doctrines, rather than maxims. These, briefly stated, are that he who received the benefit should make, and he who sustained the loss should receive, satisfaction; Francis, Max. IV & V; that equity relieves against accidents, prevents mischief and multiplicity of suits; id. VII, VIII, IX; and that equity will not suffer a double satisfaction nor permit advantage to be taken of a forfeiture when satisfaction can be made; id. XI, XII.

To the above authorities reference may be made for the cases which gave early expression to these maxims, which have been so universally recognized as fundamental that, except in a few cases of special application or limitation, the citations are omitted.

REMEDIAL PROCESS, AND DEFENCE. A suit in equity is ordinarily instituted by a complaint, or petition, called a bill; and the defendant is served with a writ of summons, requiring him to appear and answer, called a subpoena.

In Pennsylvania the suit is begun by filing and serving a copy of the bill, the subpoena having been dispensed with by a rule of court.

The forms of proceedings in equity are such as to bring the rights of all persons interested before the court; and, as a general rule, all persons interested should be made parties to the bill, either as plaintiffs or defendants.

There may be amendments of the bill; or a supplemental bill,—which is sometimes necessary when the case is beyond the stage for amendment.

In case the suit fails by the death of the party, there is a bill of revivor, and after the cause is disposed of, there may be a bill of review.

The defence is made by demurrer, plea, or answer. If the defendant has no interest, he may disclaim. Discovery may be obtained from the plaintiff, and further matter may be introduced, by means of a cross-bill, brought by the defendant against the plaintiff, in order that it may be considered at the same time. Issue is joined by the plaintiff's filing a replication to the defendant's answer; Sto. Eq. Pl. § 878 n. But the new Equity Rule 31 (1913) of the United States Supreme Court (33 Sup. Ct. xxvii) does away with a replication unless required by a special order of the court. New or affirmative matter in the answer is deemed to be denied by the plaintiff. If the answer includes a set-off or counter-claim, the party against whom it is asserted must reply within 10 days. In some states, as Delaware, the replication is entered as of course without filing; and special replications are now as a rule not used.

The final process is directed by the decree, which being a special judgment can provide relief according to the nature of the case. This is sometimes by a perpetual injunction.

There may be a bill to execute, or to impeach, a decree.

EVIDENCE AND PRACTICE. The rules of evidence, except as to the effect of the answer and the taking of the testimony, are, in general, similar to the rules of evidence in cases at law. But to this there are exceptions.

The answer, if made on oath, is evidence for the defendant, so far as it is responsive to the calls of the bill for discovery, and as such it prevails, unless it is overcome by something more than what is equivalent to the testimony of one witness. If without oath, it is a mere pleading, and the allegations stand over for proof.

If the answer is incomplete or improper, the plaintiff may except to it, and it must, if the exceptions are sustained, be so amended as to be made sufficient and proper.

The case may be heard on the bill and answer, if the plaintiff so elects, and sets the case down for a hearing thereon.

If the plaintiff desires to controvert any of the statements in the answer, he files a replication by which he denies the truth of the allegations in the answer, and testimony is taken.

The testimony, according to the former practice in chancery, is taken upon interrogatories filed in the clerk's office, and propounded by the examiner, without the presence of the parties. But this practice has been very extensively modified. Equity rule 46 (33 Sup. Ct. xxxi) of the United States Supreme Court (in effect February 1, 1913), provides that the testimony of witnesses shall be taken in open court except as otherwise provided by statute or by the equity rules.

If any of the testimony is improper, there is a motion to suppress it.

The case may be referred to a master to state the accounts between the parties, or to make such other report as the case may require; and there may be an examination of the parties in the master's office. Exceptions may be taken to his report.

The hearing of the case is before the equity judge, who may make interlocutory orders or decrees, and who pronounces the final decree or judgment. There may be a rehearing, if sufficient cause is shown.

At the present day, wherever equity forms are used, the proceedings have become very much simplified.

The system of two distinct sets of tribunals administering different rules for the adjudication of causes has been changed in England. By the Judicature Acts of 1873 and 1876, the courts of law and equity were consolidated into one Supreme Court of Judicature, in which equitable rights and defences are recognized in all proceedings to the same effect as a court of chancery would have recognized them before the passing of the act. Equitable remedies are substantially applied.

In America, the federal courts have equity powers under the constitution, where an adequate remedy at law does not exist; R. S. § 723; Smyth v. Banking Co., 141 U. S. 656, 12 Sup. Ct. 113, 35 L. Ed. 891; Whitehead v. Shattuck, 138 U. S. 146, 11 Sup. Ct. 276, 34 L. Ed. 873. The adequate remedy at law, which is the test of the equitable jurisdiction of the courts of the United States, is that which existed when the judiciary act of 1789 was adopted, unless subsequently changed by congress; McConihay v. Wright, 121 U. S. 201, 7 Sup. Ct. 940, 30 L. Ed. 932. The equity jurisdiction conferred on the federal courts is the same as that of the former court of chancery in England, is subject to neither limitation nor restraint by state legislation, and is uniform throughout the states; Mississippi Mills v. Cohn, 150 U. S. 202, 14 Sup. Ct. 75, 37 L. Ed. 1052; Kirby v. R. Co., 120 U. S. 130, 7 Sup. Ct. 430, 30 L. Ed. 569; Smith v. Burnham, 2 Sumn. 612, Fed. Cas. No. 13,018; but these are only the powers which are judicial in their character, and not such as belong to the chancellor of England as the keeper of the conscience of the king, as representing his person and administering as his agent his prerogatives and duties; Gallego's Ex'rs v. Attorney General, 3 Leigh (Va.) 450, 24 Am. Dec. 650.

In the administration of that jurisdiction the federal courts are not to "look only to the statutes of congress. The principles of equity exist independently of, and anterior to, all congressional legislation, and the statutes are either enunciations of those principles or limitations upon their application in particular cases"; U. S. v. Lumber Co., 200 U. S. 321, 26 Sup. Ct. 282, 50 L. Ed. 499, where it was held that even "in passing upon transactions between the government and its vendees" the principles of equity must be borne in mind and applied, and that although, while the legal title to land remains in the government, the holder of an equitable title may not be able to enforce his equity by reason of inability to sue the government except upon contract, he may protect that equity when sued by the government.

Equity jurisdiction does not accrue to the federal courts because it is thought that the law as administered in equity is more favorable to a party seeking its aid than the law as administered by the courts of a state in which such party has been sued; Cable v. Ins. Co., 191 U. S. 288, 24 Sup. Ct. 74, 48 L. Ed. 188.

Courts of chancery were constituted in some of the states after 1776; and in Pennsylvania, for a short time, as early as 1723, a court of chancery existed; see Rawle, Eq. in Penna.; and in most of the colonies before the revolution; Bisph. Eq. § 14, n.

In colonial Pennsylvania, and until the act of June 16, 1836, equity, in the absence of courts of equity, was administered through common-law forms. It is pointed out in Rawle, Equity in Penna., that it was not first and only in Pennsylvania that common-law courts enforced equitable principles, and he mentions several heads going back to the Year Books. But the Pennsylvania courts administered under common-law forms all the principles and doctrines of equity. The earliest reported case is Riche v. Broadfield, 1 Dall. 16, 1 L. Ed. 18 (1768). The subject is treated in Laussat's Equity in Penna. and by Sidney G. Fisher in 1 L. Q. R. 455 (2 Sel. Essays in Anglo-Amer. L. H. 810). See also Brightly, Eq. in Penna. A paper in the Report of the Texas Bar Assoc. (1896) states that "Texas was unquestionably the first state in the American Union controlled by common-law principles to abolish the distinction between law and equity in the enforcement of private rights and redress of private wrongs."

At the present time, distinct courts of chancery now exist in but six states: Alabama, Arkansas, Delaware, Mississippi, New Jersey and Tennessee. In the greater number of states chancery powers are exercised by judges of common-law courts according to the ordinary practice in chancery. In the remaining states, the distinctions between actions at law and suits in equity have been abolished, but certain equitable remedies are still administered under the statutory form of the civil action. See Bisph. Eq. § 15.

EQUITY EVIDENCE. See EQUITY; EVIDENCE.

EQUITY PLEADING. See EQUITY; ANSWER; BILL; DEMURRER; PLEA.

EQUITY OF REDEMPTION. A right which the mortgagor of an estate has of redeeming it after it has been forfeited at law by the non-payment at the time appointed of the money secured by the mortgage to be paid, by paying the amount of the debt, interest, and costs.

The phrase of equity of redemption is indiscriminately, though often incorrectly, applied to the right of the mortgagor to regain his estate, both before and after breach of condition. In North Carolina, by statute, the former is called a legal right of redemption, and the latter the equity of redemption, thereby keeping a just distinction between these estates; 1 N. C. Rev. Stat. 266; State v. Laval, 4 McCord (S. C.) 340. The interest is recognized at law for many purposes: as a subsisting estate, although the mortgagor in order to enforce his right is obliged to resort to an equitable proceeding, administered generally in courts of equity, but in some states by courts of law; Anderson v. Neff, 11 S. & R. (Pa.) 223; or in some states may pay the debt and have an action at law; Jackson v. Davis, 18 Johns. (N. Y.) 7; Den v. Spinning, 6 N. J. L. 466; Morgan's Lessee v. Davis, 2 H. & McH. (Md.) 9.

This estate in the mortgagor is one which he may devise or grant; 2 Washb. R. P. 40; and which is governed by the same rules of devolution or descent as any other estate in lands; Chamberlain v. Thompson, 10 Conn. 243, 26 Am. Dec. 390; 2 Hare 35. He may mortgage it; Bigelow v. Willson, 1 Pick. (Mass.) 485; and it is liable for his debts; Fox v. Harding, 21 Me. 104; Pierce v. Potter, 7 Watts. (Pa.) 475; Freeby v. Tupper, 15 Ohio 467; United States Bank v. Huth, 4 B. Monr. (Ky.) 429; Curtis v. Root, 20 Ill. 53; Punderson v. Brown, 1 Day (Conn.) 93, 2 Am. Dec. 53; State v. Laval, 4 McCord (S. C.) 336; but see Palmer v. Foote, 7 Paige Ch. (N. Y.) 437; Goring's Ex'x v. Shreve, 7 Dana (Ky.) 67; Powell v. Williams, 14 Ala. 476, 48 Am. Dec. 105; Baldwin v. Jenkins, 23 Miss. 206; Buck v. Sherman, 2 Dougl. (Mich.) 176; Thornton v. Pigg, 24 Mo. 249; Van Ness v. Hyatt, 13 Pet. (U. S.) 294, 10 L. Ed. 168; and in many other cases, if the mortgagor still retains possession, he is held to be the owner; 5 Gray 470, note; Parish v. Gilman, 11 N. H. 293; City of Norwich v. Hubbard, 22 Conn. 587; Ralston v. Hughes, 13 Ill. 469.

Any person who is interested in the mortgaged estate, or any part of it, having a legal estate therein, or a legal or equitable lien thereon, provided he comes in as privy in estate with the mortgagor, may exercise the right; including heirs, devisees, executors, administrators, and assignees of the

mortgagor; Sheldon v. Bird, 2 Root (Conn.) 509; Craik's Adm'rs v. Clark, 3 N. C. 22; Merriam v. Barton, 14 Vt. 501; Coombs v. Warren, 34 Me. 89; Bell v. Mayor, etc., of New York, 10 Paige, Ch. (N. Y.) 49; Smith v. Manning, 9 Mass. 422; H. B. Claffin Co. v. Banking Co., 113 Fed. 958; Bovey De Laittre Lumber Co. v. Tucker, 48 Minn. 223, 50 N. W. 1038; subsequent incumbrancers; Burnett v. Denniston, 5 Johns. Ch. (N. Y.) 35; Cooper v. Martin, 1 Dana (Ky.) 23; Farnum v. Metcalf, 8 Cush. (Mass.) 46; Hoover v. Johnson, 47 Minn. 434, 50 N. W. 475; judgment creditors; Dabney v. Green, 4 Hen. & M. (Va.) 101, 4 Am. Dec. 503; Elliot v. Patton, 4 Yerg. (Tenn.) 10; Kent v. Laffan, 2 Cal. 595; Bowen v. Van Gundy, 133 Ind. 670, 33 N. E. 687; Schroeder v. Bauer, 140 Ill. 135, 29 N. E. 560; tenants for years; Loud v. Lane, 8 Metc. (Mass.) 517; even if only tenant of a portion of the land mortgaged; Kebabian v. Shinkle, 26 R. I. 505, 59 Atl. 743; one having an easement; Bacon v. Bowdoin, 22 Pick. (Mass.) 401; one having an interest as a partner; Emerson v. Atkinson, 159 Mass. 356, 34 N. E. 516; a jointress; 1 Vern. 190; 2 Wh. & T. Lead. Cas. 752; dowress and tenant by curtesy; Eaton v. Simonds, 14 Pick. (Mass.) 98; Jackson v. Mfg. Co., 86 Ark. 591, 112 S. W. 161, 20 L. R. A. (N. S.) 454; Davis v. Mason, 1 Pet. (U. S.) 503, 7 L. Ed. 239; Gatewood v. Gatewood, 75 Va. 407; Wilkins v. French, 20 Me. 111; Denton v. Nanny, 8 Barb. (N. Y.) 618; Wade v. Miller, 32 N. J. L. 296; Hart v. Chase, 46 Conn. 207; Robinson v. Lakanan, 28 Mo. App. 135 (but to be endowed by the law, the widow must pay the mortgage; Rossiter v. Cossit, 15 N. H. 38); a widow who had joined in the mortgage; McArthur v. Franklin, 15 Ohio St. 485; Posten v. Miller, 60 Wis. 494, 19 N. W. 540; McGough v. Sweetser, 97 Ala. 361, 12 South. 162, 19 L. R. A. 470; 34 U. C. Q. B. 389; or where the husband had mortgaged prior to the marriage; Merselis v. Van Riper, 55 N. J. Eq. 618, 38 Atl. 196; or where she had joined in the mortgage but the equity of redemption was reserved to the husband alone; [1894] 2 Ch. 133; and where she had released her dower, she was entitled to redeem as dowress, though the dower had not been assigned; Gibson v. Crehore, 5 Pick. (Mass.) 146 (followed in McCabe v. Bellows, 1 Allen [Mass.] 269); Simonton v. Gray, 34 Me. 50; also where she did not join in the mortgage, which was for purchase money; May v. Fletcher, 40 Ind. 575 (overruling Fletcher v. Holmes, 32 id. 497); Wing v. Ayer, 53 Me. 138; Wheeler v. Morris, 2 Bosw. (N. Y.) 524; and she may redeem where the husband alone had given a second mortgage; Hays v. Cretin, 102 Md. 695, 62 Atl. 1028, 4 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1039; so a widow, though not entitled under the statute to redeem as such, may do so when the mortgage property is the family homestead; Walden v. Speigner, 87 Ala. 379, 6 South. 81; and where she had not joined in a mortgage during coverture, she was held, on a bill to redeem, dowerable of the whole premises and not merely in the equity of redemption and she was not required to redeem; Opdyke v. Bartles, 11 N. J. Eq. 133.

A wife is entitled by reason of her inchoate right of dower to redeem during the lifetime of her husband; Lamb v. Montague, 112 Mass. 352; Mackenna v. Trust Co., 184 N. Y. 411, 77 N. E. 721, 3 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1068, 112 Am. St. Rep. 620, 6 Ann. Cas. 471; Gatewood v. Gatewood, 75 Va. 413; and her equity of redemption is stronger in case of homestead property; Moore v. Smith, 95 Mich. 71, 54 N. W. 701; Smith v. Hall, 67 N. H. 200, 30 Atl. 409.

A mortgagee for adequate value and in good faith may acquire the equity of redemption; Wilson v. Vanstone, 112 Mo. 315, 20 S. W. 612; and a second mortgagee who purchases such equity is entitled to any payments that may have been made on the first mortgage, but which were not credited thereon; Babbitt v. McDermott (N. J.) 26 Atl. 889.

Where the necessary amount has been tendered within the statutory period for redemption, it can be followed up by suit to redeem at any time before the right to bring suit is barred; Wood v. Holland, 57 Ark. 198, 21 S. W. 223. A court of equity has the discretion governed by the equities of each case, to name terms on which it will let in a party to redeem; Haannah v. Davis, 112 Mo. 599, 20 S. W. 686.

Where a bill to redeem is filed before the debt is due, it must be dismissed, although the hearing is not had until after the debt is due; Bernard v. Topfritz, 160 Mass. 162, 35 N. E. 673, 39 Am. St. Rep. 465.

Any provision or stipulation in a mortgage which will fetter or "clog the equity of redemption" (as the phrase goes) is void; [1902] A. C. 24; [1903] A. C. 253; and these two cases in the House of Lords may be considered as settling the question in England after many and varying decisions since the leading case of Howard v. Harris, 1 Vern. 33. The same doctrine prevails in this country; Parmer v. Parmer, 74 Ala. 285; Walling v. Alken, 1 McM. Eq. (S. C.) 1; Clark v. Henry, 2 Cow. (N. Y.) 324; Quartermous v. Kennedy, 29 Ark. 544; Baxter v. Child, 39 Me. 110; Stover's Heirs v. Bounds' Heirs, 1 Ohio St. 107; Bayley v. Bailey, 5 Gray (Mass.) 505; Hazeltine v. Granger, 44 Mich. 503, 7 N. W. 74. The "equity of redemption is inseparably connected with a mortgage and the right cannot be abandoned by any stipulation of the parties made at the time, even if embodied in the mortgage"; Peugh v. Davis, 96 U. S. 332, 24 L. Ed. 775; the rule protecting the equity of redemption is "well settled" and "characterized by a jealous and salutary policy," and a sale by the mortgagor must be almost as closely examined as one by a cestui que trust; Villa v. Rodriguez, 12 Wall. (U. S.) 323, 20 L. Ed. 406.

The doctrine that equity will not permit the parties to a mortgage to "clog the equity of redemption" is only another expression of the maxim "once a mortgage always a mortgage"; 1 Vern. 33 (where the latter expression seems to have originated).

The provision is invalid, not only if contained in the mortgage, but also if there is a separate contract which is part of the same transaction, whether in writing or by parol; Mooney v. Byrne, 163 N. Y. 86, 57 N. E. 163; Turpie v. Lowe, 114 Ind. 37, 15 N. E. 834; Wright v. Bates, 13 Vt. 341; [1904] A. C. 323; 11 Ir. Ch. 367; [1892] A. C. 1; Plummer v. Ilse, 41 Wash. 5, 82 Pac. 1009, 2 L. R. A. (N. S.) 627, 111 Am. St. Rep. 997; First Nat. Bank of David City v. Sargeant, 65 Neb. 594, 91 N. W. 595, 59 L. R. A. 296; Ind. Rep. Allahabad Series 559 (where the rule was enforced in India); though not necessarily of the same date; Batty v. Snook, 5 Mich. 231; Tennery v. Nicholson, 87 Ill. 464; Bradbury v. Davenport, 114 Cal. 593, 46 Pac. 1062, 55 Am. St. Rep. 92; but a separate and independent agreement, subsequent to the mortgage, depriving the mortgagor, in effect, of his right to redeem, has been held valid; [1902] A. C. 461; Gleason's Adm'x v. Burke, 20 N. J. Eq. 300; Wynkoop v. Cowing, 21 Ill. 570; Bradbury v. Davenport, 120 Cal. 152, 52 Pac. 301; Trull v. Skinner, 17 Pick. (Mass.) 213 (where the subject is discussed by Shaw, C. J.); Shouler v. Bonander, 80 Mich. 531, 45 N. W. 487; McMillan v. Jewett, 85 Ala. 478, 5 South. 145; though it "will be closely scrutinized to guard the debtor from oppression" and there must be a new and adequate consideration; Linnell v. Lyford, 72 Me. 280; Brown v. Gaffney, 28 Ill. 149; and indeed cases may be found which treat the subject wholly with respect to the question whether the transaction was unconscionable; Pritchard v. Elton, 38 Conn. 434; or deny that there is any fiduciary relation between a mortgagor and mortgagee; De Martin v. Phelan, 115 Cal. 538, 47 Pac. 356, 56 Am. St. Rep. 115. See MORTGAGE.

Many of the cases cited supra are those of absolute conveyances held to be mortgages carrying an equity of redemption and this fact may be shown by parol; Strong v. Stewart, 4 Johns. Ch. (N. Y.) 167; Cullen v. Carey, 146 Mass. 50, 15 N. E. 131; Miller v. Thomas, 14 Ill. 428.

So where the parties to a mortgage negotiated an absolute sale for a larger amount, with conveyance in fee and a lease with an option to purchase if rent were punctually paid, a default was held fatal to the right to repurchase; 1 Russ. & M. 506; it being no debt, but a conditional sale, which carries no equity of redemption; Conway v. Alexander, 7 Cra. (U. S.) 218, 3 L. Ed. 321; Haynie v. Robertson, 58 Ala. 37; Robinson

v. Cropsey, 2 Edw. Ch. (N. Y.) 138; but the transaction will be closely scrutinized; Spence v. Steadman, 49 Ga. 133. See a full discussion of the "The Clog on the Equity of Redemption" by Prof. Bruce Wyman in 21 Harv. L. Rev. 459.

Where a mortgagee of the equitable interest of the beneficiary in a resulting trust purchased the equity of redemption of such beneficiary, they did not merge where such merger was not for the interest of the mortgagee; Coryell v. Klehm, 157 Ill. 463, 41 N. E. 864.

A foreclosure sale without redemption may be decreed in case of a mortgage of a railroad or a business plant, of which the value is in keeping it in its entirety; Hammock v. Loan & Trust Co., 105 U. S. 77, 26 L. Ed. 1111; even when a state statute provides that all sales of real estate shall be subject to redemption; Pacific Northwest Packing Co. v. Allen, 116 Fed. 312, 54 C. C. A. 648; Sioux City Terminal R. & Warehouse Co. v. Trust Co., 82 Fed. 124, 27 C. C. A. 73.

See MORTGAGE.

EQUIVALENT. Of the same value. Sometimes a condition must be literally accomplished in forma specifica; but some may be fulfilled by an equivalent, per æquipolens, when such appears to be the intention of the parties: as, if I promise to pay you one hundred dollars, and then die, my executor may fulfill my engagement; for it is equivalent to you whether the money be paid to you by me or by him. Rolle, Abr. 451. For its meaning in patent law, see Tyler v. Boston, 7 Wall. (U. S.) 327, 19 L. Ed. 93; PATENT.

EQUIVOCAL. Having a double sense.

In the construction of contracts, it is a general rule that when an expression may be taken in two senses, that shall be preferred which gives it effect. See CONSTRUCTION; INTERPRETATION.

EQUULEUS (Lat.). A kind of rack for extorting confessions. Encyc. Lond.

ERASURE. The obliteration of a writing. The effect of an erasure is not per se to destroy the writing in which it occurs, but is a question for the jury, and will render the writing void or not, under the same circumstances as an interlineation. See 11 Co. 88; 5 Bingh. 183; Bailey v. Taylor, 11 Conn. 531, 29 Am. Dec. 321; Solibellas v. Reeves' Curator, 3 La. 56; Brooks v. Allen, 62 Ind. 401; Whittlesey v. Hughes, 39 Mo. 34; Cole v. Hills, 44 N. H. 227; Page v. Donaher, 43 Wis. 221; Dodge v. Haskell, 69 Me. 429; Simpson v. Davis, 119 Mass. 269, 20 Am. Rep. 324. See ALTERATION; INTERLINEATION.

ERCISCUNDUS (Lat. erciscere). For dividing. Familia eriscundæ actio. An action for dividing a way, goods, or any matter of inheritance. Vicat, Voc. Jur.; Calvinus, Lex.

ERECTION. This term is generally used of a completed building. McGary v. People, 45 N. Y. 153; Shaw v. Hitchcock, 119 Mass. 254; but it is held to be of wider import; it may include trade fixtures; 17 W. R. 153; or a fence; 36 J. P. 743.

The repairing, alteration, and enlarging, or the removal from one spot to another, of a building, is not erection within the meaning of a statute forbidding the erection of wooden buildings; Brown v. Hunn, 27 Conn. 332, 71 Am. Dec. 71; Douglass v. Com., 2 Rawle (Pa.) 262; Martine v. Nelson, 51 Ill. 422. The moving of a building is not an erection of a building; Trask v. Searle, 121 Mass. 229; but the painting of a house has been held to be part of the erection; Martine v. Nelson, 51 Ill. 422. See LIEN.

EREGIMUS (Lat. we have erected). A word proper to be used in the creation of a new office by the sovereign. Bac. Abr. Offices, E.

EROSION. The gradual eating away of the soil by the operation of currents or tides. Mulry v. Norton, 100 N. Y. 433, 3 N. E. 581, 53 Am. Rep. 206. See RIPARIAN PROPRIETOR; ACCRETION.

EROTIC MANIA, EROTOMANIA. In Medical Jurisprudence. A name given to a morbid activity of the sexual propensity. It is a disease or morbid affection of the mind, which fills it with a crowd of voluptuous images, and hurries its victim to acts of the grossest licentiousness, often in the absence of any lesion of the intellectual powers. It is to be distinguished from Nymphomania and Satyriasis. See Krafft-Ebing, Psychopathia Sexualis, Chaddock's ed.; MANIA.

ERRANT (Lat. errare, to wander). Wandering. Justices in eyre were formerly said to be errant (itinerant). Cowell.

ERRONEOUS. Deviating from the law. Thompson v. Doty, 72 Ind. 338.

ERROR. A mistake in judgment or deviation from the truth in matters of fact, and from the law in matters of judgment.

Error of fact will excuse the party acting illegally but honestly, in many cases, will avoid a contract in some instances, and when mutual will furnish equity with a ground for interference; Norton v. Marden, 15 Me. 45, 32 Am. Dec. 132; Wheaden v. Olds, 20 Wend. (N. Y.) 174; Eagle Bank of New Haven v. Smith, 5 Conn. 71, 13 Am. Dec. 37; Bond v. Hays, 12 Mass. 36. See MISTAKE; IGNORANCE.

Error in law will not, in general, excuse a man for its violation. A contract made under an error in law is, in general, binding; for, were it not so, error would be urged in almost every case; Bisph. Eq. 187. 2 East 469. See Storrs v. Barker, 6 Johns. Ch. (N. Y.) 166, 10 Am. Dec. 316; Waite v. Leggett, 8 Cow. (N. Y.) 195, 18 Am. Dec. 441; 2 J. &

W. 249; 1 Y. & C. 232; 6 B. & C. 671. But a foreign law will for this purpose be considered as a fact; Norton v. Marden, 15 Me. 45, 32 Am. Dec. 132; Haven v. Foster, 9 Pick. (Mass.) 112, 19 Am. Dec. 353; 2 Pothier, Obl. 369, etc.

ERROR, CONFESSION OF. See APPEAL AND ERROR.

ERROR, WRIT OF. See APPEAL AND ERROR.

ESCAMBIO. A writ granting power to an English merchant to draw a bill of exchange on another who is in a foreign country. Reg. Orig. 194. Abolished by Stats. 59 Geo. III. c. 49, and 26 & 27 Vict. c. 125.

ESCAMBIUM. Exchange, which see.

ESCAPE. The deliverance of a person who is lawfully imprisoned, out of prison, before such a person is entitled to such deliverance by law. Colby v. Sampson, 5 Mass. 310.

The voluntarily or negligently allowing any person lawfully in confinement to leave the place. 2 Bish. Cr. L. § 917.

Departure of a prisoner from custody before he is discharged by due process of law.

Escape takes place without force; prison-breach, with violence; rescue, through the intervention of third parties.

Actual escapes are those which take place when the prisoner in fact gets out of prison and unlawfully regains his liberty.

Constructive escapes take place when the prisoner obtains more liberty than the law allows, although he still remains in confinement. Bac. Abr. Escape (B); Plowd. 17; Colby v. Sampson, 5 Mass. 310; Steere v. Field, 2 Mas. 486, Fed. Cas. No. 13,350.

Negligent escape takes place when the prisoner goes at large, unlawfully, either because the building or prison in which he is confined is too weak to hold him, or because the keeper by carelessness lets him go out of prison.

Voluntary escape takes place when the prisoner has given to him voluntarily any liberty not authorized by law. Colby v. Sampson, 5 Mass. 310; Lowry v. Barney, 2 D. Chip. (Vt.) 11.

When a man is imprisoned in a proper place under the process of a court having jurisdiction in the case, he is lawfully imprisoned, notwithstanding the proceedings may be irregular; 1 Crawf. & D. 203; see Com. v. Barker, 133 Mass. 399; but if the court has not jurisdiction the imprisonment is unlawful, whether the process be regular or otherwise. Bacon, Abr. Escape in Civil Cases (A 1); Scott v. Shaw, 13 Johns. (N. Y.) 378; Ontario Bank v. Hallett, 8 Cow. (N. Y.) 192; Austin v. Fitch, 1 Root (Conn.) 288. See State v. Leach, 7 Conn. 452, 18 Am. Dec. 113.

Letting a prisoner, confined under final process, out of prison for any, even the shortest, time, is an escape, although he afterwards return; 2 W. Bla. 1048; Browning's Ex'r v. Rittenhouse, 40 N. J. L. 230; Servis v. Marsh, 38 Fed. 794; De Grand v. Hunnewell, 11 Mass. 160; and this may be (as in the case of imprisonment under a ca. sa.) although an officer may accompany him; 3 Co. 44 a; 1 B. & P. 24. Where an insolvent debtor whose discharge has been refused by the court, surrenders himself to the keeper of a prison, who will not receive him because he has no writ or record showing that he is an insolvent debtor and is not in charge of an officer, the surrender is not sufficient to make the keeper liable for the debt in case of the debtor's escape; Saunders v. Perkins, 140 Pa. 102, 21 Atl. 257.

In criminal cases, the prisoner is indictable for a misdemeanor, whether the escape be negligent or voluntary; 2 Hawk. Pl. C. 189; Cro. Car. 209; State v. Doud, 7 Conn. 384; State v. Brown, 82 N. C. 585; and the officer is also indictable; Martin v. State, 32 Ark. 124; State v. Ritchie, 107 N. C. 857, 12 S. E. 251. If the offence of the prisoner was a felony, a voluntary escape is a felony on the part of the officer; 2 Hawk. Pl. C. c. 19, § 25; if negligent, it is a misdemeanor only in any case; 2 Bish. Cr. L. § 925. See State v. Sparks, 78 Ind. 166. It is the duty of the officer to rearrest after an escape; Clark v. Cleveland, 6 Hill (N. Y.) 344; People v. Hanchett, 111 Ill. 90; 1 Russ. Cr. 572.

In civil cases, a prisoner may be arrested who escapes from custody on mesne process, and the officer will not be liable if he rearrest him; Cro. Jac. 419; but if the escape be voluntary from imprisonment on mesne process, and in any case if the escape be from final process, the officer is liable in damages to the plaintiff, and is not excused by retaking the prisoner; 2 B. & A. 56; Doane v. Baker, 6 Allen (Mass.) 260. Nothing but an act of God or the enemies of the country will excuse an escape. Fairchild v. Case, 24 Wend. (N. Y.) 381; Rainey's Ex'rs v. Dunning, 6 N. C. 386; Shattuck v. State, 51 Miss. 575. See Lash v. Ziglar, 27 N. C. 702; Shuler v. Garrison, 5 W. & S. (Pa.) 453.

Attempts to escape by one accused of crime are presumptive of guilt, and the conduct of a defendant in arrest, either before or after being accused of the crime, may be competent evidence against him, as indicating a guilty mind; Bowles v. State, 58 Ala. 325; People v. Stanley, 47 Cal. 113, 17 Am. Rep. 401. Where a prisoner being in the corridor of a jail unlocks a door between the corridor and a cell, and thence escapes, he commits prison breach; Randall v. State, 53 N. J. L. 488, 22 Atl. 46. An unsuccessful attempt at prison breach is indictable; People v. Rose, 12 Johns. (N. Y.) 339.

On an escape and recapture, the party has a day in court to deny his identity as the person sentenced; Com. v. Hill, 185 Pa. 397, 39 Atl. 1055.

See Whart. Cr. L. § 1667; 26 Am. L. Reg. 345; FLIGHT; PRISONER.

ESCAPE WARRANT. A warrant addressed to all sheriffs throughout England, to retake an escaped prisoner for debt, and commit him to gaol till the debt is satisfied.

ESCHEAT (Fr. escheoir, to happen). An accidental reverting of lands to the original lord.

Coke says the word "signifieth properly when by accident the lands fall to the lord of whom they are holden, in which case we say the fee is escheated." And he enumerates the instances of failure of blood on the one hand and per delictum tenentis, i. e., for felony, on the other. Co. Litt. 13a.

An obstruction of the course of descent, and a consequent determination of the tenure, by some unforeseen contingency; in which case the land naturally results back, by a kind of reversion, to the original grantor or lord of the fee; 2 Bla. Com. 244 et seq.

Care must be taken to distinguish between forfeiture of lands to the king and this species of escheat to the lord; which by reason of their similitude in some circumstances, and because the crown is very frequently the immediate lord of the fee, and therefore entitled to both, have been often confounded together. Forfeiture of lands, and of whatever else the offender possessed, was the doctrine of the old Saxon law, as a part of punishment for an offence, and does not at all relate to the feudal system, nor is the consequence of any seigniorial or lordship paramount; but, being a prerogative vested in the crown, was neither superseded nor diminished by the introduction of the Norman tenures, a fruit and consequence of which, escheat must undoubtedly be reckoned. Escheat therefore operates in subordination to this more ancient and superior law of forfeiture.

The doctrine of escheat upon attainder, taken singly, is this: That the blood of the tenant, by the commission of any felony (under which denomination all treasons were formerly comprised), is corrupted and stained and the original donation of the feud is thereby determined, it being always granted to the vassal on the implied condition of dum bene se gesserit. Upon the thorough demonstration of which guilt, by legal attainder, the feudal covenant and mutual bond of fealty are held to be broken, the estate instantly falls back from the offender to the lord of the fee, and the inheritable quality of his blood is extinguished and blotted out forever. In this situation the law of feudal escheat was brought into England at the Conquest; and in general superadded to the ancient law of forfeiture. In consequence of which corruption and extinction of hereditary blood, the land of all felons would immediately revert in the lord, but that the superior law of forfeiture intervenes, and intercepts it in its passage: In case of treason, forever; in case of other felony, for only a year and a day; after which time it goes to the lord in the regular course of escheat, as it would have done to the heir of the felon in case the feudal tenures had never been introduced. 2 Bla. Com. 251.

See YEAR, DAY AND WASTE.

The estate itself which so reverted was called an escheat. Spelman. The term included also other property which fell to the lord; as, trees which fell down, etc. Cowell.

All escheats under the English laws are declared to be strictly feudal and to import the extinction of tenure. Wr. Ten. 115; 1 W. Bla. 123.

It was not until after the statute of quia emptores that the title of the reversioner became distinct from that of the lord who took by escheat. Before that statute "revert" and "escheat" were used indiscriminately to express the fact that the land went back to the lord who gave it; 3 Holdsw. Hist. E. L. 115.

That if the ownership of a property become vacant, the right must necessarily subside into the whole community in which, when society first assumed the elements of order and subordination, it was originally vested, is a principle which lies at the foundation of property; 4 Kent 425; and this seems to be the universal rule of civilized society. Domat, Droit Pub. lib. 1, t. 6, s. 3, n. 1. See 10 Vinet, Abr. 139; 1 Bro. Civ. Law 250; Lock v. Lloyd's Estate, 5 Binn. (Pa.) 375; McCaughal v. Ryan, 27 Barb. (N. Y.) 376; People v. Folsom, 5 Cal. 373; Armstrong v. Bittinger, 47 Md. 103; Appeal of Olmsted, 86 Pa. 234. It was recognized by Justinian, and by the civil law an officer was appointed, called the escheator, whose duty it was to assert the right of the emperor to the hereditas jacens or caduca when the owner left no heirs or legatee to take it. Code 10, 10, 1. By the earlier English usages the estate of the vassal escheated to his lord when there were no representatives in the seventh degree, and this custom was later extended to include male descendants ad infinitum; Lib. Feud. I. 1, s. 4.

In case of escheat by failure of heirs, by corruption of blood, or by conviction of certain crimes, the feud fell back into the lord's hands by a termination of the tenure. 1 Washb. R. P. 24. At the present day, in England, escheat can only arise from the failure of heirs. By the Felony Act, 33 and 34 Vict. c. 23, no confession, verdict, inquest, conviction, or judgment of or for any treason or felony, or felo de se, shall cause any forfeiture or escheat; 3 Steph. Com. 660. An action of ejectment, commenced by writ of summons, has taken the place of an ancient writ of escheat, against the person in possession on the death of the tenant without heirs.

The early English law is thus stated: "By the law of England, before the Declaration of Independence, the lands of a man dying intestate and without lawful heirs reverted by escheat to the king as the sovereign lord; but the king's title was not complete without an actual entry upon the land, or judicial proceedings to ascertain the want of heirs and devisees; 8 App. Cas. 767, 772; 2 Bla. Com. 245. The usual form of proceeding for this purpose was by an inquisition or inquest of office before a jury, which was had upon a commission out of the court of chancery, but was really a proceeding at common law; and, if it resulted in favor of the king, then, by virtue of ancient statutes, any one claiming title in the lands might, by leave of that court, file a traverse in the nature of a plea or defense to the king's claim, and not in the nature of an original suit; Lord Somers in 14 How. St. Tr. 1, 83; 6 Ves. 809; 4 Madd. 281; L. R. 2 Eq. 95; People v. Cutting, 3 Johns. (N. Y.) 1; Briggs v. Light-Boat Upper Cedar Point, 11 Allen (Mass.) 157, 172. The inquest of office was a proceeding in rem; when there was proper office found for the king, that was notice to all persons who had claims to come in and assert them; and, until so traversed, it was conclusive in the king's favor; Bayley, J., in 12 East 96, 103; 16 Vin. Abr. 86, pl. 1." Hamilton v. Brown, 161 U. S. 256, 16 Sup. Ct. 585, 40 L. Ed. 691.

In mediæval law there was an escheat to the lord propter defectum sanguinis, if the tenant died without heirs; and propter delictum tenentis, if the tenant committed any gross breach of the feudal bond. The right to escheat depended on tenure alone.

In this country, however, the state steps in, in the place of the feudal lord, by virtue of its sovereignty, as the original and ultimate proprietor of all the lands within its jurisdiction; 4 Kent 424. See Matthews v. Ward, 10 Gill & J. (Md.) 450; 3 Dane, Abr. 140. And it escheats to the state as part of its common ownership, either by mere operation of law, or upon an inquest of office according to the law of the particular state; Hamilton v. Brown, 161 U. S. 256, 16 Sup. Ct. 585, 40 L. Ed. 691; Smith v. Doe, 111 N. Y. Supp. 525. See 21 Harv. L. Rev. 452. It is, perhaps, questionable how far this incident exists at common law in the United States generally. In Maryland the lord proprietor was originally the owner of the land, as the crown was in England. In most of the states the right to an escheat is secured by statute; 4 Kent 424; 1 Washb. R. P. 24, 27; 2 id. 443.

Such a statute is "not unconstitutional, but only asserts an indisputable, but long-neglected and dormant right in the commonwealth;" Com. v. Blanton's Ex'rs, 2 B. Mon. (Ky.) 393; Crane v. Reeder, 21 Mich. 24, 4 Am. Rep. 430; and the state, in a just and proper exercise of its police power, may declare new causes of escheat of lands within its territory; Com. v. R. Co., 124 Ky. 497, 99 S. W. 596.

In Indiana and Missouri it was held that at common law, if a bastard died intestate, his property escheated; Doe v. Bates, 6 Blackf. (Ind.) 533; Bent's Adm'r v. St. Vrain, 30 Mo. 268; but this is now otherwise by statute in those states and in most of the others. See BASTARD. So at common law there was an escheat if the purchaser or heirs of the decedent were aliens; Montgomery v. Dorion, 7 N. H. 475; Co. Litt. 2 b; but it is usually otherwise by the statutes of the several states. See ALIEN.

Hereditaments which, although they may be held in fee-simple, are not strictly subjects of tenure, such as fairs, markets, commons in gross, rents charge, rents seck, and the like, do not escheat, but become extinct upon a failure of heirs of the tenant; Challis, R. P. 30.

The method of proceeding, and subject-matter. To determine the question of escheat a proceeding must be brought in the nature of an inquest of office or office found; Jackson v. Adams, 7 Wend. (N. Y.) 367; People v. Folsom, 5 Cal. 373; Gresham v. Rickenbacher, 28 Ga. 227; State v. Tilghman, 14 Ia. 474; Louisville School Board v. King, 127 Ky. 824, 107 S. W. 247, 15 L. R. A. (N. S.) 379; In re Miner's Estate, 143 Cal. 194, 76 Pac. 968; and to give the inquisition the effect of a lien the same must be filed, as the record of it is the only competent evidence by which title by escheat can be established; Crane v. Reeder, 21 Mich. 24, 4 Am. Rep. 430; People v. Cutting, 3 Johns. (N. Y.) 1; and such action must also be taken to recover escheated lands held in adverse possession; after which an entry must be made to give the state a right of possession; Jackson v. Adams, 7 Wend. (N. Y.) 367; Com. v. Hite, 6 Leigh (Va.) 588, 20 Am. Dec. 226; Reid v. State, 74 Ind. 252; and the facts which support the escheat must be stated; Catham v. State, 2 Head (Tenn.) 553; Appeal of Ramsey, 2 Watts (Pa.) 228, 27 Am. Dec. 301; a bill of information must be filed and a scire facias issued against all alleged to have, hold, claim, or possess such estate; Wallahan v. Ingersoll, 117 Ill. 123, 7 N. E. 519; and the names of all persons in possession of the premises, and all who were known to claim an interest therein, must be set forth and the scire facias served on them personally; to all other persons constructive notice is sufficient; id. In Texas, no proceedings can be had, except under and according to an act of the legislature; Wiederanders v. State, 64 Tex. 133; Hamilton v. Brown, 161 U. S. 256, 16 Sup. Ct. 585, 40 L. Ed. 691.

In many of the states, however, the doctrine in force is, that land cannot remain without an owner; it must vest somewhere, and on the death of an intestate without heirs it becomes eo instante the property of the state; Mooers v. White, 6 Johns. Ch. (N. Y.) 360; Hall v. Gittings' Lessee, 2 Harr. & J. (Md.) 112; State v. Reeder, 5 Neb. 203; Montgomery v. Dorion, 7 N. H. 475; Rubeck v. Gardner, 7 Watts (Pa.) 455; Haigh v. Haigh, 9 R. I. 26; Colgan v. McKeon, 24 N. J. L. 566. In Wallahan v. Ingersoll, 117 Ill. 123, 7 N. E. 519, it was held that on the death of an intestate without heirs, the title to his estate devolves immediately upon the state, but, in order to make that title available, it must be established in the manner prescribed by law by proceedings in the proper court, in the name of the people, for the purpose of establishing by judicial determination the title of the state. After a long lapse of time an inquest will be presumed; Doe v. Roe, 26 Ga. 582. A right of action for the recovery of lands is vested in the state at the death of the owner whose property escheats; Johnston v. Spicer, 107 N. Y. 185, 13 N. E. 753. Persons claiming as heirs may come in under the statute and obtain leave to make up an issue at law to have their rights determined; Ex parte Williams, 13 Rich. (S. C.) 77; In re Alton's Estate, 220 Pa. 258, 69 Atl. 902; State v. Knott, 54 Fla. 138, 44 South. 744. The legislature is under no constitutional obligation to leave the title to such property in abeyance, and a judicial proceeding for ascertaining an escheat on due notice, actual to known, and constructive to all possible unknown, claimants, is due process of law; and a statute, providing for such proceeding does not impair the obligation of any contract, contained in the grant under which the former owner held whether from the state or a private person; Hamilton v. Brown, 161 U. S. 256, 275, 16 Sup. Ct. 585, 40 L. Ed. 691.

Not only do estates in possession escheat, but also those in remainder, if vested; People v. Conklin, 2 Hill (N. Y.) 67; and equitable as well as legal estates; Cross v. De Valle, 1 Wall. (U. S.) 5, 17 L. Ed. 515; Atkins v. Krou, 40 N. C. 207; 3 Washb. R. P. 446; Matthews v. Ward, 10 Gill & J. (Md.) 443; 4 Kent 424; (in many states this provision is statutory, but the rule in England is contrary; 1 Eden 177;) also those held in trust, when the trust expires; In re Linton's Estate, 198 Pa. 438, 48 Atl. 298; and an equity of redemption; Seitz v. Messerschmitt, 117 App. Div. 401, 102 N. Y. Supp. 732; and lands subject to dower, and the right is not waived by the appearance of the attorney-general of the state in an action to admeasure dower; Smith v. Doe, 111 N. Y. Supp. 525; also property devised by a void will, and the state is the proper party to contest the will; State v. Lancaster, 119 Tenn. 638, 105 S. W. 858, 14 L. R. A. (N. S.) 991, 14 Ann. Cas. 953; and duly constituted officials may intervene; Gombault v. Public Adm'r, 4 Bradf. Sur. (N. Y.) 226; contra, Hopf v. State, 72 Tex. 281, 10 S. W. 589.

Proceedings to traverse an inquest. An inquisition is traversable, the traverser being considered as a defendant, and being only required to show failure of title in the state and bare possession in himself; People v. Cutting, 3 Johns. (N. Y.) 1; contra, in Pennsylvania, where such traverser is in the position of plaintiff in ejectment and must show a title superior to the commonwealth; proceedings may be brought by any one claiming an interest and including an administratrix in possession; Com. v. Compton, 137 Pa. 138, 20 Atl. 417; In re Alton's Estate, 220 Pa. 258, 69 Atl. 902; it is a proceeding at law and not in equity; In re Fenstermacher v. State, 19 Or. 504, 25 Pac. 142; and the court of common pleas has jurisdiction over it; Com. v. Compton, 137 Pa. 138, 20 Atl. 417; the traverser being allowed to begin and conclude to the jury; Com. v. Desilver, 2 Ashm. (Pa.) 163. And if only one of those notified appear, he is entitled to a separate trial of his traverse; In re Malone's Estate, 21 S. C. 435; but such traverser has no precedence over others on the dockets of cases; Lance v. Dobson, Riley (S. C.) 301.

When all the members of a partnership have died intestate and without heirs, the property escheats to the state, but the heirs or kindred of any one of the partners may traverse the inquisition; Com. v. Land Co., 57 Pa. 102.

The law favors the presumption of the existence of heirs, and there must be something shown by those claiming by virtue of escheat to rebut that presumption; Appeal of Ramsey, 2 Watts (Pa.) 228, 27 Am. Dec. 301; State v. Teulon's Estate, 41 Tex. 249; but see contra, Brown v. State, 36 Tex. 283; Hammond's Lessee v. Inloes, 4 Md. 138; University of North Carolina v. Harrison, 90 N. C. 385, overruling as to this point University of North Carolina v. Johnston, 2 N. C. 373. Proceedings for an escheat for want of heirs or devisees, like ordinary provisions for the administration of his estate, presuppose that he is dead; if he is still alive, the court is without jurisdiction and its proceedings are null and void, even in a collateral proceeding; Hamilton v. Brown, 161 U. S. 256, 267, 16 Sup. Ct. 585, 40 L. Ed. 691, citing Scott v. McNeal, 154 U. S. 34, 14 Sup. Ct. 1108, 38 L. Ed. 896; Hall v. Claiborne, 27 Tex. 217.

Equity cannot enjoin proceedings to have an escheat declared, where every question presented could be decided on a traverse should such escheat be found; Appeal of Olmsted, 86 Pa. 284; and an amicus curiæ cannot move to quash an inquisition, unless he has an interest himself or represents some one who has; Dunlop v. Com., 2 Call. (Va.) 284.

Disposition of escheated lands by the state. Where the state takes the title of escheated land, it is entitled to the rights of the last owner; therefore, such lands cannot be taken up by location as vacant land; Hughes v. State, 41 Tex. 13; or be regarded as ungranted land; but it must be sold pursuant to the statute; Bodden v. Speigner, 2 Brev. (S. C.) 321; Straub v. Dimm, 27 Pa. 36; and a grant of such lands by the state before office found is valid; Ruback v. Gardner, 7 Watts (Pa.) 456; Colgan v. McKeon, 24 N. J. L. 566; McCaughal v. Ryan, 27 Barb. (N. Y.) 376; as is also a grant of land to escheat in futuro; Nettles v. Cummings, 9 Rich. Eq. (S. C.) 440; but no authority is vested in officers of the land office to issue warrants for the taking up of escheated lands. After seven years from the inquisition they shall be sold at auction; Straub v. Dimm, 27 Pa. 36; and the power to order the sale of the property is vested in the district court; Hughes v. State, 41 Tex. 10. The disposition of funds secured by the sale of such property must be strictly in conformity with the state statute; and the legislature of a state can pass no act diverting the funds to another purpose; State v. Reeder, 5 Neb. 203; where the constitution gives to the legislature the power to provide methods to enforce the forfeiture, there can be no proceedings until the legislature acts; Wiederanders v. State, 64 Tex. 133.

In addition to the escheat for want of heirs of a decedent, there are in some states provisions for forfeiture to the state of lands held by corporations under certain circumstances; in Kentucky, property of a corporation not necessary to its business and held for more than five years is forfeited for the benefit of schools; Com. v. Property Co., 128 Ky. 790, 109 S. W. 1183; in Pennsylvania it is provided that land held by or for corporations, either directly or indirectly, unless specially authorized by statute, shall "escheat" to the state, but land belonging to a mining company, all of whose stock was held by a railroad company, was held not to be within the mischief of such statute; Com. v. R. Co., 132 Pa. 591, 19 Atl. 291, 7 L. R. A. 634. Corporate property so forfeited is taken however subject to the payment of debts of the corporation; War Eagle Consol. Min. Co. v. Dickie, 14 Idaho 534, 94 Pac. 1034. Though in passing or construing such statutes as these, both legislatures and courts have employed the term "escheat," it would appear to be a departure from its precise meaning as used in the common law.

In some states statutes provided that certain unclaimed funds held by corporations shall go to the state; such acts are constitutional; Deaderick v. Washington County Court, 1 Coldw. (Tenn.) 202.

A statute, providing that all moneys remaining in the registry of the United States courts unclaimed for ten years or longer shall be paid over to the government, is unconstitutional; the United States cannot be regarded as a parens patriæ, and the right of escheat belongs only to the states; American Loan & Trust Co. v. Grand Rivers Co., 159 Fed. 775.

See, generally, American Mortgage Co. of Scotland v. Tennille, 87 Ga. 28, 13 S. E. 158, 12 L. R. A. 529; ALIEN; BASTARD; DISSOLUTION; FOREIGN CORPORATION.

ESCHEATOR. The name of an officer whose duties are generally to ascertain what escheats have taken place, and to prosecute the claim of the sovereign for the purpose of recovering the escheated property. 10 Vin. Abr. 158; Co. Litt. 13 b; Toml. L. D. His office was to be retained but one year; and no one person could hold the office more than once in three years.

This office has fallen into desuetude. There was formerly an escheator-general in Pennsylvania but his duties have been transferred to the auditor-general, and in most of the states the duties of this office devolve upon the attorney-general.

ESCRIBANO. In Spanish Law. The public officer who is lawfully authorized to reduce to writing and verify by his signature all judicial acts and proceedings as well as all acts and contracts entered into between private individuals.

ESCROW. A deed delivered to a stranger, to be by him delivered to the grantee upon the happening of certain conditions, upon which last delivery the transmission of title is complete.

The delivery must be to a stranger; Fairbanks v. Metcalf, 8 Mass. 230. See 9 Co. 137 b; Foley v. Cowgill, 5 Blackf. (Ind.) 18, 32 Am. Dec. 49; Gilbert v. Ins. Co., 23 Wend. (N. Y.) 43, 35 Am. Dec. 543; Den v. Partee, 19 N. C. 530; Simonton's Estate, 4 Watts (Pa.) 180; Jackson v. Sheldon, 22 Me. 569; for when delivered directly to the grantee; Campbell v. Jones, 52 Ark. 493, 12 S. W. 1016, 6 L. R. A. 783; Stevenson v. Crapnell, 114 Ill. 19, 28 N. E. 379; East Texas Fire Ins. Co. v. Clarke, 1 Tex. Civ. App. 238, 21 S. W. 277; Hubbard v. Greeley, 84 Me. 340, 24 Atl. 799, 17 L. R. A. 511; or to the agent or attorney of the grantee; Day v. Lacasse, 85 Me. 242, 27 Atl. 124; it cannot be treated as an escrow; but see McLaughlin v. Wheeler, 1 S. D. 497, 47 N. W. 816; Shelby v. Tardy, 84 Ala. 327, 4 South. 276.

In Cincinnati, W. & Z. R. Co. v. Iliff, 13 Ohio St. 235, the court, after giving Kent's definition, says: "The phrase 'a stranger' used in this definition, or the phrase 'a third person' which in many of the books is used interchangeably with it, it seems to me can mean no more than this, a stranger to the deed as not being a party to it; or at most this, a person so free from any personal or legal identity with the parties to the instrument as to leave him free to discharge his duties as a depository to both parties, without involving a breach of duty to either." It was there held that an agent of one party was not incapacitated from becoming the depository of an escrow. An officer of a corporation may receive a deed in escrow though the corporation be a party thereto; Southern Life Ins. & Trust Co. v. Cole, 4 Fla. 359; Bank of Healdsburg v. Bailhache, 65 Cal. 327, 4 Pac. 106. The second delivery must be conditioned, and not merely postponed; O'Kelly v. O'Kelly, 8 Metc. (Mass.) 436; 2 B. & C. 82; Shep. Touch. 58. Care should be taken to express the intent of the first delivery clearly; Clark v. Gifford, 10 Wend. (N. Y.) 310; Fairbanks v. Metcalf, 8 Mass. 230; Jackson v. Sheldon, 22 Me. 569; White v. Bailey, 14 Conn. 271. An escrow has no effect as a deed till the performance of the condition; Hinman v. Booth, 21 Wend. (N. Y.) 267; Gaston v. City of Portland, 16 Or. 255, 19 Pac. 127; Harkreader v. Clayton, 56 Miss. 383, 31 Am. Rep. 369; Patrick v. McCormick, 10 Neb. 1, 4 N. W. 312; and takes effect from the second delivery; Green v. Putnam, 1 Barb. (N. Y.) 500. See Foster v. Mansfield, 3 Metc. (Mass.) 412, 37 Am. Dec. 154; Jackson v. Rowland, 6 Wend. (N. Y.) 666, 22 Am. Dec. 557; Stiles v. Brown, 16 Vt. 563; Rhodes v. School Dist., 30 Me. 110; Blight v. Schenck, 10 Pa. 285, 51 Am. Dec. 478; White Star Line Steamboat Co. v. Moragne, 91 Ala. 610, 8 South. 867. But where the parties announce their intention that the escrow shall, after the performance of the condition, take effect from the date of the deed, such intention will control; Devl. Deeds 329; Price v. R. Co., 34 Ill. 13.

A deed delivered in escrow cannot be revoked; McDonald v. Huff, 77 Cal. 279, 19 Pac. 499.

The term, though usually applied to deeds, is sometimes applied to any written instrument; Andrews v. Thayer, 30 Wis. 228; Foy v. Blackstone, 31 Ill. 538, 83 Am. Dec. 246; Stewart v. Anderson, 59 Ind. 375; Ortmann v. Bank, 49 Mich. 56, 12 N. W. 907; Kenip v. Walker, 16 Ohio, 118; 12 Q. B. 317; Benton v. Martin, 52 N. Y. 570; Sweet v. Stevens, 7 R. I. 375; Clark v. Campbell, 23 Utah, 569, 65 Pac. 496, 54 L. R. A. 508, 90 Am. St. Rep. 716. They are usually cases of incomplete instruments, not strictly escrow. As to negotiable instruments the law aims to secure their free and unrestrained circulation and to protect the rights of persons taking them bona fide without notice. It therefore places the consequences which follow from the negotiation of promissory notes and bills of exchange, through the fraud, deception or mistake of the persons to whom they are intrusted by the maker, on those who enable them to hold themselves out as owners of the paper jure disponendi, and not on innocent holders who have taken it for value without notice; Fearing v. Clark, 16 Gray (Mass.) 74, 77 Am. Dec. 394, followed in Provident Life & Trust Co. v. Mercer County, 170 U. S. 593, 18 Sup. Ct. 788, 42 L. Ed. 1156. To the same effect Burson v. Huntington, 21 Mich. 415, 4 Am. Rep. 497; Vallett v. Parker, 6 Wend. (N. Y.) 615; Long Island Loan & Trust Co. v. Ry. Co., 65 Fed. 455.

It is held a delivery in escrow for one person to sign a note as surety upon the express condition that another person's signature is also to be obtained, and to deliver the note to the maker for that purpose; Perry v. Patterson, 5 Humph. (Tenn.) 133, 42 Am. Dec. 424. But it is held that signing a note and placing it in the hands of one of the signers, with direction to deliver it only on condition that it should be signed by other designated persons, is not a delivery in escrow, but of an incomplete instrument, and there can be no recovery against those executing it when it has not been executed by all; Keener v. Crago, 81 Pa. 166.

It has been held that notes cannot be delivered in escrow to the agent of the payee to hold until the maker could investigate the indebtedness for which they were given; Murray v. W. W. Kimball Co., 10 Ind. App. 184, 37 N. E. 734; id., 10 Ind. App. 141, 37 N. E. 736; contra, Stewart v. Anderson, 59 Ind. 375; or so as to make the signature of another person essential to its validity; Hurt v. Ford, 142 Mo. 283, 44 S. W. 228, 41 L. R. A. 823. But it is held that if the deposit is of such character as to negative its being delivered to the grantee, it may nevertheless operate as a delivery in escrow, although placed in the hands of the grantee's solicitor, if he was intended to hold it as an incomplete instrument; L. R. 20 Eq. 262; Ashford v. Prewitt, 102 Ala. 264, 14 South. 663, 48 Am. St. Rep. 37.

As a general rule, when an instrument is placed in the hands of a third person in escrow, it takes effect from the second delivery; but such a rule does not apply where either justice or necessity requires a resort to a fiction in order to avoid injury (as in case of intervening rights between the first and second delivery, it shall take effect from its first delivery); Shirley's Lessee v. Ayres, 14 Ohio 307, 45 Am. Dec. 546; Bank v. Lumber Co., 32 W. Va. 357, 9 S. E. 243. In such a case, much depends on the intent of the parties to be collected from the nature of the transaction; Calhoun County v. Emigrant Co., 93 U. S. 124, 23 L. Ed. 826. This fiction is adopted to prevent a manifest hardship; Craddock v. Barnes, 142 N. C. 89, 54 S. E. 1003; and there is no reason why it should not be invoked to effectuate the lawful intent of the parties; id.

In Gish v. Brown, 171 Pa. 479, 33 Atl. 60, the fiction of relation back was adopted where the grantor delivered the deed to a third person with absolute instructions to hold it until his death and then deliver it to the grantee. So where one of the parties has come under a disability such as mental incapacity; Wheelwright v. Wheelwright, 2 Mass. 447, 3 Am. Dec. 66; and where a woman, after delivering a bond on condition, marries before the happening of the condition; 1 Ves. Jr. 275; and where the condition was capable of performance within the lifetime of the grantor, though the instrument, delivered to a third person, provided that it should not take effect until the death of the grantor; Nolan v. Otney, 75 Kan. 311, 89 Pac. 690, 9 L. R. A. (N. S.) 317, where the provision was construed to mean that the title was to vest at once, and only the enjoyment to be postponed until the death of the grantor.

It is the performance of the condition and not the second delivery that gives it vitality as a deed; State Bank at Trenton v. Evans, 15 N. J. L. 155, 28 Am. Dec. 400; Clark v. Campbell, 23 Utah 569, 65 Pac. 496, 54 L. R. A. 508, 90 Am. St. Rep. 716; Calhoun County v. Emigrant Co., 93 U. S. 124, 23 L. Ed. 826. No title passes until the condition is performed; Calhoun County v. Emigrant Co., 93 U. S. 124, 23 L. Ed. 826; but the instant the conditions are performed the instrument takes effect, though the depositary has not formally delivered it; Taylor v. Thomas, 13 Kan. 217; Missouri Pac. R. Co. v. Atkison, 17 Mo. App. 484. The depositary then holds possession for the grantee; Cannon v. Handley, 72 Cal. 133, 13 Pac. 315.

Where dividends are declared on stock deposited in escrow, they are the property of the seller; Clark v. Campbell, 23 Utah 569, 65 Pac. 496, 54 L. R. A. 508, 90 Am. St. Rep. 716.

One acting in escrow acts at his peril with either party without the consent of the other; Citizens' Nat. Bank of Roswell, N. M., v. Davisson, 229 U. S. 212, 33 Sup. Ct. 625, 57 L. Ed. —.

See, generally, Shirley's Lessee v. Ayres, 14 Ohio 309, 45 Am. Dec. 546; Ruggles v. Lawson, 13 Johns. (N. Y.) 285, 7 Am. Dec. 375; Carr v. Hoxie, 5 Mas. 60, Fed. Cas. No. 2,438; Evans v. Gibbs, 6 Humph. (Tenn.) 405; Foster v. Mansfield, 3 Metc. (Mass.) 412, 37 Am. Dec. 154; Crane v. Hutchinson, 3 Ill. App. 30; Clements v. Hood, 57 Ala. 459;

Miller v. Sears, 91 Cal. 282, 27 Pac. 589, 25 Am. St. Rep. 176; Minah Consol. Min. Co. v. Briscoe, 47 Fed. 276; 10 L. R. A. 469, n.

As to the validity of a deed to take effect at the death of the grantor, see DELIVERY.

ESCUAGE. In Old English Law. Service of the shield. Tenants who hold their land by escuage hold by knight's service. 1 Thomas, Co. Litt. 272; Littleton § 95, 86 b. Abolished by Stat. 12 Car. II. c. 24. SCUTAGE.

ESKETORES. Robbers or destroyers of other men's lands and fortunes. Cowell.

ESKIPPAMENTUM. Tackle or furniture; outfit. Certain towns in England were bound to furnish certain ships at their own expense and with double skippage or tackle. The modern word outfit would seem to render the passage quite as satisfactorily; though the conjecture of Cowell has the advantage of antiquity.

ESKIPPER, ESKIPPARE. To ship. Kelh. Norm. L. D.; Rast. 409.

ESKIPPESON. Shippage, or passage by sea. Spelled, also, skippeson. Cowell.

ESNECY. Eldership. In the English law, this word signifies the right which the eldest coparcener of lands has to choose first one of the parts of the estate after it has been divided.

ESPERA. The period fixed by a competent judge within which a party is to do certain acts, as, e. g., to effect certain payments, present documents, etc.; and more especially the privilege granted by law to debtors, allowing them certain time for the payment of their indebtedness.

ESPLEES. The products which the land or ground yields; as, the hay of the meadows, the herbage of the pasture, corn or other produce of the arable, rents, and services. See Witherow v. Keller, 11 S. & R. (Pa.) 275; Dane, Abr. Index; Fosgate v. Mfg. & Hydraulic Co., 9 Barb. (N. Y.) 293.

ESPOUSALS. A mutual promise between a man and a woman to marry each other at some other time: it differs from a marriage, because then the contract is completed. Wood, Inst. 57. See BETROTHMENT.

ESQUIRE. A title applied by courtesy to officers of almost every description, to members of the bar, and others. No one is entitled to it by law; and therefore it confers no distinction in law.

In England, it is a title next above that of a gentleman and below that of a knight. Camden reckons up four kinds of esquires particularly regarded by the heralds: the eldest sons of knights, and their eldest sons in perpetual succession; the eldest sons of the younger sons of peers, and their eldest sons in like perpetual succession; esquires created by the king's letters patent, or other investiture, and their eldest sons; esquires by virtue of their office, as justices of the peace, and others who bear any office of trust under the crown. 2 Steph. Com. 673. A miller or a farmer may be an esquire; 1 R. 2 Eq. 235.

ESSART. In Forest Law. The destruction of the forest and the reduction of it to a state of cultivation. 1 Holdsw. Hist. E. L. 342.

ESSE. See IN ESSE.

ESSENDI QUIETAM DE TOLONEO (Lat. of being quit of toll). A writ which lay anciently for the citizens or burgesses of a town which was entitled to exemption from toll, in case toll was demanded of them. Fitzh. N. B. 226, I.

ESSOIN, ESSOIGN. In Old English Law. An excuse for not appearing in court at the return of the process. Presentation of such excuse. Spelman, Gloss.; 1 Sell. Pr. 4; Com. Dig. Eroine, B 1. Essoin is not now allowed at all in personal actions. 2 Term 16; 3 Bla. Com. 278, n.

ESSOIN DAY. Formerly, the first day in the term was essoin day; now practically abolished. Dowl. 418; 3 Bla. Com. 278, n.

ESSOIN ROLL. The roll containing the essoins and the day of adjournment. Rosc. R. Act. 162 et seq.

ESTABLISH. This word occurs frequently in the constitution of the United States, and it is there used in different meanings. 1. To settle firmly, to fix unalterably: as, to establish justice, which is the avowed object of the constitution. 2. To make or form: as, to establish an uniform rule of naturalization, and uniform laws on the subject of bankruptcies,—which evidently does not mean that these laws shall be unalterably established as justice. 3. To found, to create, to regulate: as, Congress shall have power to establish postroads and post-offices. 4. To found, recognize, confirm, or admit: as, Congress shall make no law respecting an establishment of religion. 5. To create, to ratify, or confirm: as, We, the people, etc., do ordain and establish this constitution. 1 Story, Const. § 454.

For decisions upon the scope and meaning of the word, see Ketchum v. City of Buffalo, 14 N. Y. 356; People v. Lowber, 28 Barb. (N. Y.) 65; Wartman v. City of Philadelphia, 33 Pa. 202; Com. v. Simonds, 11 Gray (Mass.) 306; Smith v. Forrest, 49 N. H. 230; Succession of Weigel, 18 La. Ann. 49.

The Established Church in England is the Church of England; so of Wales. The Irish Church has been disestablished.

ESTABLISHMENT, ETABLISSEMENT. An ordinance or statute. Especially used of those ordinances or statutes passed in the reign of Edw. I. Co. 2d Inst. 156; Britt. c. 21. That which is instituted or established for public or private use, as the trading establishments of a government.

Etablissement is also used to denote the settlement of dower by the husband upon his wife. Britt. c. 102.

ESTADAL. In Spanish Law. A measure of land of sixteen square varas, or yards. 2 White, Rec. 139.

ESTADIA. In Spanish Law. Called, also, Sobrestadía. The time for which the party who has chartered a vessel, or is bound to receive the cargo, has to pay demurrage on account of his delay in the execution of the contract.

ESTATE (Lat. status, the condition or circumstances in which the owner stands with reference to his property). The degree, quantity, nature, and extent of interest which a person has in real property.

It signifies the quantity of interest which a person has, from absolute ownership down to naked possession; Jackson v. Parker, 9 Cow. (N. Y.) 81.

This word has several meanings. 1. In its most extensive sense, it is applied to signify every thing of which riches or fortune may consist, and includes personal and real property: hence we say, personal estate, real estate; 8 Ves. 504; Jackson v. Robins, 16 Johns. (N. Y.) 587; Deering v. Tucker, 55 Me. 284; Bates v. Sparrell, 10 Mass. 323; Archer v. Deneale, 1 Pet. (U. S.) 535, 7 L. Ed. 272; Donovan's Lessee v. Donovan, 4 Harr. (Del.) 177; Andrews v. Brumfield, 32 Miss. 107; Blewer v. Brightman, 4 McCord (S. C.) 60; Den v. Snitcher, 14 N. J. L. 53. 2. In its more limited sense, the word estate is applied to lands. It is so applied in two senses. The first describes or points out the land itself, without ascertaining the extent or nature of the interest therein: as, "my estate at A." Godfrey v. Humphrey, 18 Pick. (Mass.) 537, 29 Am. Dec. 621. The second, which is the proper and technical meaning of estate, is the degree, quantity, nature, and extent of interest which one has in real property: as, an estate in fee, whether the same be a free-simple or fee-tail, or, an estate for life or for years, etc. Coke says, Estate signifies such inheritance, freehold, term of years, tenancy by statute merchant, staple, elgitt, or the like, as any man hath in lands or tenements, etc. Co. Litt. §§ 345, 650 a. See Jones, Land Off. Titles in Penna. 165. Estate does not include rights in action; Pippin v. Ellison, 34 N. C. 61, 55 Am. Dec. 403; McIntyre v. Ingraham, 35 Miss. 25; In re Sibbald's Estate, 18 Pa. 249. But as the word is commonly used in the settlement of estates, it does include the debts as well as the assets of a bankrupt or decedent, all his obligations and resources being regarded as one entirety. See Davis's Heirs v. Elkins, 9 La. 135. Also the status or condition in life of a person; State v. Bishop, 15 Me. 122. See ESTATES OF THE REALM.

ESTATE AT WILL. An estate in lands which the tenant has, by entry made thereon under a demise, to hold during the joint wills of the parties to the same. Co. Litt. 55 a; Tud. L. Cas. R. P. 10; 2 Bla. Com. 145; 4 Kent 110. Estates properly at will are of very infrequent occurrence, being generally turned into estates for years or from year to year by decisions of the courts or by statute; 4 Kent 115; Tud. L. Cas. R. P. 14; Lesley v. Randolph, 4 Rawle (Pa.) 123; 1 Term 159.

They may be created by express words or may arise by implication of law. Where created by express contract, the writing necessarily so indicates, and reserves the right of termination to either party, as where the lease provides that the tenant shall occupy the premises so long as agreeable to both parties; 4 Taunt. 128; Say v. Stoddard, 27 Ohio St. 478. They arise by implication of law where no definite time is stated in the contract, or where the tenant enters into possession under an agreement to execute a contract for a specific term and he subsequently refuses to do so, or where one enters under a void lease, or where he holds over pending negotiations for a new lease; Thompson v. Baxter, 107 Minn. 122, 119 N. W. 797, 21 L. R. A. (N. S.) 575. The chief characteristics of this form of tenancy are (1) uncertainty respecting the term and (2) the right of either party to terminate it by proper notice. See TENANCY AT SUFFERANCE.

ESTATE BY ELEGIT. See ELEGIT.

ESTATE BY STATUTE MERCHANT. See STATUTE MERCHANT.

ESTATE BY STATUTE STAPLE. See STATUTE STAPLE.

ESTATE BY THE CURTESY. That estate to which a husband is entitled upon the death of his wife in the lands or tenements of which she was seised in possession, in fee-simple, or in fee-tail during their coverture; provided they have had lawful issue born alive and possibly capable of inheriting her estate. Co. Litt. 30 a; 2 Bla. Com. 126; 4 Kent 29; Leach v. Leach, 21 Hun (N. Y.) 381; Crumley v. Deake, 8 Baxt. (Tenn.) 361; Carter v. Dale, 3 Lea. (Tenn.) 710, 31 Am. Rep. 660; McKee v. Cattle, 6 Mo. App. 416; Tremmel v. Kleiboldt, 6 Mo. App. 549; [1892] 2 Ch. 336. See CURTESY.

ESTATE DUTY. A duty imposed in England (act of 1894) superseding probate duty, taxing not the interest to which some person succeeds on a death, but the interest which ceased by reason of the death. Hansen, Death Duties 63. It is leviable on property which was left untouched by probate duty, such as real estate, yet it is in substance of the same nature as the old probate duty; id. See Tax.

ESTATE FOR LIFE. A freehold estate, not of inheritance, but which is held by the tenant for his own life or the life or lives of one or more other persons, or for an indefinite period, which may endure for the life or lives of persons in being, and not beyond the period of a life. 1 Washb. R. P. 88; Co. Litt. 42 a; Bract. lib. 4, c. 28, § 207; Hurd v. Cushing, 7 Pick. (Mass.) 169; Chal. R. P. 89. When the measure of duration is the tenant's own life, it is called simply an estate "for life;" when the measure of duration is the life of another person, it is called an estate "per (or pur) autre vie;" 2 Bla. Com. 120; Co. Litt. 41 b; 4 Kent 23, 24.

Estates for life may be created by act of law or by act of the parties: in the former case they are called legal, in the latter conventional. The legal life estates are estates-tail after possibility of issue extinct, estates by dower, estates by curtesy, jointures; Mitch. R. P. 118, 133; Eldridge v. Preble, 34 Me. 151; Dejarnatte v. Allen, 5 Gratt. (Va.)

499; Fay v. Fay, 1 Cush. (Mass.) 95; Irwin v. Covode, 24 Pa. 162; 3 E. L. & Eq. R. 345; Miller v. Williamson, 5 Md. 219; Gourley v. Woodbury, 51 Vt. 37; Brooks v. Brooks, 12 S. C. 422; Slemmer v. Crampton, 50 Ia. 302; Rountree v. Talbot, 89 Ill. 246; Noe v. Miller's Ex'rs, 31 N. J. Eq. 234. A life estate may be created by implication; Nicholson v. Drennan, 35 S. C. 333, 14 S. E. 719.

A right given by a will to occupy, at a specified rent, certain premises as long as the devisee "may desire to occupy the same as a drug store," was held to amount to an estate for life; and to the same effect Warner v. Tanner, 38 Ohio St. 118; Jones v. Mason, 5 Rand. (Va.) 584, 16 Am. Dec. 761; as was a grant "so long as the waters of the Delaware shall run"; Foster v. Joice, 3 Wash. C. C. 498, Fed. Cas. No. 4,974; and a lease at a specified monthly rent of certain premises whilst the defendant continued to wish to live in a certain city; Thompson v. Baxter, 107 Minn. 122, 119 N. W. 797, 21 L. R. A. (N. S.) 575. A devise of the use and improvement of the testator's real estate, so long as the devisee should choose personally to occupy and improve any portion of the estate, was held to create a life estate, though terminable by the tenant ceasing to occupy; Wilmarth v. Bridges, 113 Mass. 407.

The chief incidents of life estates are a right to take reasonable estovers, and freedom from injury by a sudden termination or disturbance of the estate; Smith v. Jewett, 40 N. H. 532. A tenant for life may not operate for oil or gas, or make an oil or gas lease, unless operations for oil or gas were commenced before the life estate accrued; Marshall v. Mellon, 179 Pa. 371, 36 Atl. 201, 35 L. R. A. 816, 57 Am. St. Rep. 601; nor can the owner of such an estate maintain an action of partition against the owners of the estate in remainder; Love v. Blauw, 61 Kan. 496, 59 Pac. 1059, 48 L. R. A. 257, 78 Am. St. Rep. 334. Under-tenants have the same privileges as the original tenant; and acts of the original tenant which would destroy his own claim to these privileges will not affect them; see Neel v. Neel, 19 Pa. 323.

Their right, however, does not of course, as against the superior lord, extend beyond the life of the original tenant; 2 Bla. Com. 122; 1 Rolle, Abr. 727; Co. Litt. 41 b.

ESTATE FOR YEARS. An interest in lands by virtue of a contract for the possession of them for a definite and limited period of time. 2 Bla. Com. 140; 2 Crabb, R. P. § 1267; Bac. Abr. Leases; Wms. R. P. 195. Such estates are frequently called terms. See TERM. The length of time for which the estate is to endure is of no importance in ascertaining its character, unless otherwise declared by statute; Chapman v. Gray, 15 Mass. 439; Brewster v. Hill, 1 N. H. 350; Diller v. Roberts, 13 S. & R. (Pa.) 60, 15 Am. Dec. 578; Brown's Adm'rs v. Bragg, 22 Ind. 122; 4 Kent 93.

ESTATE FROM YEAR TO YEAR. It is an example of an estate for years. It is of later origin and is not found in Littleton (see § 381). It exists in cases where the parties stipulate for it, and also where the parties by their conduct have placed themselves in the relation of landlord and tenant without adopting any other term. If a tenant has been allowed to hold over after the expiration of his term in such a way as to preclude the possibility of his becoming a tenant on sufferance, it is a tenancy from year to year. Jenks, Mod. Land Law 88.

A tenancy from year to year exists where both landlord and tenant are entitled to notice before the tenancy can be terminated by either. At common law such notice must be given at least one-half year before the expiration of the current year. The tenant must occupy for a certain number of complete years; Odger, C. L. 869. A tenancy from year to year in England lasts as long only as both parties please; it is terminable by either at the end of any year on a half year's notice; 7 Q. B. 958.

It was originally a development of a tenancy at will, by which the tenancy was terminable only at the time of the year at which it began, and on notice.

ESTATE IN COMMON. An estate held in joint possession by two or more persons at the same time by several and distinct titles. 1 Washb. R. P. 415; 2 Bla. Com. 191; 1 Pres. Est. 139. This estate has the single unity of possession, and may be of real or personal property; Harvey v. Cherry, 76 N. Y. 436; Jones v. Cohen, 82 N. C. 75; Withrow v. Biggerstaff, 82 N. C. 82; Stokey v. Carter, 92 Ill. 129; Kean v. Connelly, 25 Minn. 222, 33 Am. Rep. 458; Goell v. Morse, 126 Mass. 480; Ennis v. Hutchinson, 30 N. J. Eq. 110; Butler v. Roys, 25 Mich. 53, 12 Am. Rep. 218.

Where one dies intestate, the joint ownership of his property by his children is generally that of tenants in common; Fenton v. Miller, 94 Mich. 204, 53 N. W. 957.

ESTATE IN COPARCENARY. An estate which several persons hold as one heir, whether male or female. In the latter case, it arises at common law, when an estate descends to two or more females; in the former, when an estate descends to all the males in equal degree by particular custom. This estate has the three unities of time, title, and possession; but the interests of the coparceners may be unequal. 1 Washb. R. P. 414; 2 Bla. Com. 188; 4 Kent 366; Flynn v. Herye, 4 Mo. App. 360. See COPARCENARY, ESTATES IN.

ESTATE IN DOWER. See DOWER.

ESTATE IN EXPECTANCY. An estate giving a present or vested contingent right of future enjoyment. One in which the right to pernanity of the profits is postponed to some future period. Such are estates in remainder and reversion. Lawrence v. Bayard, 7 Paige, Ch. (N. Y.) 70, 76; Underhill v. R. Co., 20 Barb. 455. See EXPECTANCY.

ESTATE IN FEE-SIMPLE. See FEE-SIMPLE.

ESTATE IN FEE-TAIL. See FEE-TAIL.

ESTATE IN JOINT TENANCY. See JOINT TENANCY.

ESTATE IN POSSESSION. An estate where the tenant is in actual pernanity or receipt of the rents and other advantages arising therefrom. 2 Crabb, R. P. § 2322; 2 Bla. Com. 163. See Campau v. Campau, 19 Mich. 116; Valle v. Clemens, 18 Mo. 486; EXPECTANCY.

ESTATE IN REMAINDER. See REMAINDER.

ESTATE IN REVERSION. See REVERSION.

ESTATE IN SEVERALTY. See SEVERALTY, ESTATE IN.

ESTATE IN VADIO. See MORTGAGE.

ESTATE OF FREEHOLD or FRANK-TENEMENT. Any estate of inheritance, or for life, in either a corporeal or incorporeal hereditament, existing in or arising from real property of free tenure. 2 Bla. Com. 104. It thus includes all estates but copyhold and leasehold, the former of which has never been known in this country. Freehold in deed is the real possession of land or tenements in fee, fee-tail, or for life. Freehold in law is the right to such tenements before entry. The term has also been applied to those offices which a man holds in fee or for life. Mozl. & W. Dict.; 1 Washb. R. P. 71, 637. See Gage v. Scales, 100 Ill. 221; State v. Ragland, 75 N. C. 12, L. R. 11 Eq. 454; LIBERUM TENEMENTUM.

ESTATE OF INHERITANCE. An estate which may descend to heirs. 1 Washb. R. P. 51; 1 Steph. Com. 218.

All freehold estates are estates of inheritance, except estates for life. Crabb, R. P. § 945.

ESTATE PUR AUTRE VIE. An estate for the life of another. It arises most frequently when a tenant for his own life conveys his estate to a third person. He can only convey what he has, and his grantee takes an estate during the life of the grantor. If the tenant died during the life of the grantor (who was called the cestui que vie), at common law the residue of the estate went to the first person who took it, termed a general occupant. If the original gift was to the tenant and his heirs, the heir took it as special occupant. By statute in England, if there is no special occupant, the estate goes to the executors as personalty, if not disposed of by will. This rule has been adopted in most of the United States, except a few, where it still descends as personalty; 1 Washb. R. P. 88; 2 Bla. Com. 120.

Where two estates come to one person, so that if in the same right they would merge, if one of them be in autre droit, there will be no merger. 2 Bla. Com. 177, but see Sharsw. note 17.

ESTATE TAIL. See FEE-TAIL.

ESTATE UPON CONDITION. See CONDITION.

ESTATES OF THE REALM. The lords spiritual, the lords temporal, and the commons of Great Britain. 1 Bla. Com. 153; 3 Hallam, ch. 6, pl. 3. Sometimes called the three estates.

ESTER IN JUDGMENT. To appear before a tribunal either as plaintiff or defendant. Kelh. Norm. L. D.

ESTIMATE. A word used to express the mind or judgment of the speaker or writer on the particular subject under consideration. It implies a computation or calculation. People v. Clark, 37 Hun (N. Y.) 203.

ESTOPPEL. The preclusion of a person from asserting a fact, by previous conduct inconsistent therewith, on his own part or the part of those under whom he claims, or by an adjudication upon his rights which he cannot be allowed to call in question.

A preclusion, in law, which prevents a man from alleging or denying a fact, in consequence of his own previous act, allegation, or denial of a contrary tenor. Steph. Pl. 239.

A plea which neither admits nor denies the facts alleged by the plaintiff, but denies his right to allege them. Gould, Pl. c. 2, § 39.

A special plea in bar, which happens where a man has done some act or executed some deed which precludes him from averring anything to the contrary. 3 Bla. Com. 308.

Where a fact has been admitted or asserted for the purpose of influencing the conduct or deriving a benefit from another so that it cannot be denied without a breach of good faith, the law enforces the rule of good morals as a rule of policy, and precludes the party from repudiating his representations or denying the truth of his admissions; Douglass v. Scott, 5 Ohio 199; Rawle, Cov. 407.

This doctrine of law gives rise to a kind of pleading that is neither by way of traverse, nor confession and avoidance, viz.: a pleading that, waiving any question of fact, relies merely on the estoppel, and, after stating the previous act, allegation, or denial of the opposite party, prays judgment if he shall be received or admitted to aver contrary to what he before did or said. This pleading is called a pleading by way of estoppel. Steph. Pl. 240; Blackington v. Johnson, 126 Mass. 21; Andrews v. Ins. Co., 18 Hun (N. Y.) 163; Cross v. Levy, 57 Miss. 634; Byrne v. Bank, 31 La. Ann. 81; Stephenson v. Walker, 8 Baxt. (Tenn.) 289; Hull v. Johnston, 90 Ill. 604; Walker v. Baxter, 6 Wash. 244, 33 Pac. 426.

Formerly the questions regarding estoppel arose almost entirely in relation to transfers of real property, and the rules in regard to one kind of estoppel were quite fully elaborated. In more modern time the principle has come to be applied to all cases where one by words or conduct wilfully causes another to believe in the existence of a certain state of things, and induces him to act on that belief or to alter his own previous position; 2 Exch. 653; Den v. Baldwin, 21 N. J. L. 403; Titus v. Morse, 40 Me. 348, 63 Am. Dec. 665. See, as to the reason and propriety of the doctrine, Co. Litt. 352 a; Pelletreau v. Jackson, 11 Wend. (N. Y.) 117; Jones v. Sasser, 18 N. C. 464; Blake v. Tucker, 12 Vt. 44.

"The correct view of estoppel is that taken in a recent work (Bigelow, Est.). 'Certain admissions,' it is there said, 'are indisputable, and estoppel is the agency of the law by which evidence to controvert their truth is excluded.' In other words, when an act is done, or a statement made by a party the truth or efficacy of which it would be a fraud on his part to controvert or impair, the character of an estoppel will be given to what would otherwise be a mere matter of evidence. The law of estoppel, therefore, is a branch of the law of evidence, it has become a part of the jurisdiction of chancery, simply because in equity alone, or rather by equitable construction alone, has that full effect been given to this species of evidence which is necessary to the due administration of justice." Bisph. Eq. § 280. See Tiedm. Eq. Jur. 196.

"Estoppel is only a rule of evidence and you cannot found an action upon estoppel. Estoppel is only important as being one step in the progress towards relief on the hypothesis that the defendant is estopped from denying the truth of something he has said." (1891) 3 Ch. 82, 105, per Bowen, L. J. The doctrine of estoppel was applied to a case of the transfer of shares upon a forged order; L. R. 3 Q. B. 584.

Where there is an attempt to apply the doctrine of estoppel, one essential in such a case is that the party in whose favor it is invoked must himself act in good faith; Vaughn v. Hixon, 50 Kan. 773, 32 Pac. 358; and it is of the essence of estoppels that they must be mutual and certain to every intent; Sutton v. Dameron, 100 Mo. 141, 13 S. W. 497; Sullivan v. R. Co., 128 Ala. 97, 30 South. 528; and they cannot rest on argument or inference; id. They arise out of matters of fact, not of law; Snyder v. Studebaker, 19 Ind. 462, 81 Am. Dec. 415.

Estoppels are of three kinds. 1. By deed. 2. By matter of record. 3. By matter in pais, which last are also termed equitable estoppels.

BY DEED. Such as arises from the provisions of a deed. It is a general rule that a party to a deed is estopped to deny any thing stated therein which has operated upon the other party: as, the inducement to accept and act under such deed; Stow v. Wyse, 7 Conn. 214, 18 Am. Dec. 99; Green v. Clark, 13 Vt. 158; Douglass v. Scott, 5 Ohio 199; Bennett v. Conant, 10 Cush. (Mass.) 163; Reinhard v. Min. Co., 107 Mo. 616, 18 S. W. 17, 28 Am. St. Rep. 441; Carson v. Cochran, 52 Minn. 67, 53 N. W. 1130; Craig v. Reeder, 3 McCord (S. C.) 411; including a deed made with covenant of warranty, which estops even as to a subsequently acquired title; Jackson v. Matsdorf, 11 Johns. (N. Y.) 91, 6 Am. Dec. 355; Baxter v. Bradbury, 20 Me. 260, 37 Am. Dec. 49; Blake v. Tucker, 12 Vt. 39; Jenkins v. Collard, 145 U. S. 546, 12 Sup. Ct. 868, 36 L. Ed. 812; Moore v. Crawford, 130 U. S. 122, 9 Sup. Ct. 447, 32 L. Ed. 878; Ayer v. Brick Co., 157 Mass. 57, 31 N. E. 717; Woods v. Bonner, 89 Tenn. 411, 18 S. W. 67; but, while this is the general rule, there is no estoppel where the deed is a release with a covenant of restricted warranty merely of the title granted; Comstock v. Smith, 13 Pick. (Mass.) 116, 23 Am. Dec. 670; nor will a deed of release without covenant of warranty estop the grantor from contesting the seisin of the grantor and showing seisin in himself by an older and better title; Ham v. Ham, 14 Me. 351; so a conveyance of all of the grantor's right, title and interest does not convey more than he has at the time and the covenants apply only to the grant and do not enlarge it; Coe v. Persons Unknown, 43 Me. 432. A grantor who covenants against incumbrances without reservation is estopped to sue for obstruction to a right of way across the granted premises; De Rochemont v. R. R., 64 N. H. 500, 15 Atl. 131. A grantor whose deed recites or affirms his seisin of the estate granted, either expressly or by implication, is estopped to deny that such estate passed, though there is no warranty; Reynolds v. Cook, 83 Va. 817, 3 S. E. 710, 5 Am. St. Rep. 317; but while he may not show that he had no such estate as the deed purported to convey, he is not estopped to show a subsequently acquired, independent title consistent with the deed; Cuthrell v. Hawkins, 98 N. C. 203, 3 S. E. 672; and a conveyance with warranty by one who had no title, but who afterwards acquired title as trustee, did not operate by estoppel so as to make the latter enure to the former grantee, since an estoppel arises only when the new title is taken in the same right; Dewhurst v. Wright, 29 Fla. 229, 10 South. 682. The doctrine of estoppel by deed has been applied to one who, having as agent leased land for a term of years, was not permitted to set up want of authority to make the lease; Lee v. Lee, 83 Ia. 565, 50 N. W. 33; to a vendor who, having only a certificate of purchase at a tax sale, and having given bond to make a quitclaim deed on payment of the purchase money, was precluded from acquiring any title by virtue of the tax sale, as was also one claiming from him by descent or as a purchaser with notice; Jernigan v. Flowers, 94 Ala. 508, 10 South. 437; to a tenant for life who, having recognized the right of the remainderman in a bequest of personal property and executed a deed of trust therefor, could not afterwards deny the right; Welsch v. Bank, 94 Ill. 191; to one who attempts to convey title to the property as executor or administrator; Millican v. McNeill, 102 Tex. 189, 114 S. W. 106, 132 Am. St. Rep. 863, 20 Ann. Cas. 74, 21 L. R. A. (N. S.) 60, and note in which are collected many cases and the conclusion reached that the question is to be determined by the general principles of the law of estoppel and not by any considerations peculiar to this class of cases.

There was held to be no estoppel against the setting up of a subsequently acquired title by one who quitclaimed lands in which at that time he had no interest; Jackson v. Peek, 4 Wend. (N. Y.) 300; where, after the purchase of a mortgage, the premises were conveyed subject to it, and the deed had contained a covenant to pay it, the grantee was permitted to insist, as against the purchaser of the mortgage, that he was not liable; Real Estate Trust Co. v. Balch, 45 N. Y. Super. Ct. 528, in which the court held that the case presented no one of the necessary elements of an estoppel, and critically examined the New York cases on the question of liability under such covenants. A partition deed between tenants in common and assignment thereunder does not estop one of the parties from setting up an after-acquired title to land so assigned; Doane v. Willcutt, 5 Gray (Mass.) 328, 66 Am. Dec. 369.

"Where under the law there is an entire lack of power to do the act in question, it cannot be made good by estoppel. But if the power to do the act existed, and there was a way in which it could be lawfully exercised, and it purports to have been done in a lawful way, a person who has induced another to act upon the assumption that it was in fact done, may be estopped from questioning its validity." Mut. Life Ins. Co. v. Corey, 135 N. Y. 326, 334, 31 N. E. 1095.

A corporation accepting conveyance of a water works plant by deed describing certain mortgages thereon, and expressly declaring that the conveyance was made subject thereto, is thereby estopped from questioning the validity of the mortgages; American Waterworks Co. of Illinois v. Loan & Trust Co., 73 Fed. 956, 20 C. C. A. 133. So also a city taking property by eminent domain subject to liens is estopped to deny their validity; City Safe Deposit & Agency Co. v. City of Omaha, 79 Neb. 446, 112 N. W. 598, 23 L. R. A. (N. S.) 72. And a corporation may be estopped to deny the execution of a mortgage when the directors assented, but, by reason of the absence of some, there was no formal action of the board directing the signing and sealing by the officers; Nevada Nickel Syndicate v. Nickel Co., 96 Fed. 133.

To create an estoppel, the deed must be good and valid in its form and execution; 2 Washb. R. P. 41; Alt v. Banholzer, 39 Minn. 511, 40 N. W. 830, 12 Am. St. Rep. 681; and must convey no title upon which the warranty can operate in case of a covenant; Jackson v. Hoffman, 9 Cow. (N. Y.) 271; 2 Pres. Abs. 216.

Estoppels affect only parties and privies in blood, law, or estate; 6 Bing. N. C. 79; Corbett v. Norcross, 35 N. H. 99; Patterson's Lessee v. Pease, 5 Ohio 190; Phelps v. Blount, 13 N. C. 177; Wark v. Willard, 13 N. H. 389; Calhoun v. Pierson, 44 La. Ann. 584, 10 South. 880; Campbell v. Carruth, 32 Fla. 264, 13 South. 432. See Knight v. Thayer, 125 Mass. 25; Stockstill v. Bart, 47 Fed. 231. Estoppels, it is said, must be reciprocal; Co. Litt. 352 a; Furgeson v. Jones, 17 Or. 204, 20 Pac. 842, 3 L. R. A. 620, 11 Am. St. Rep. 808. But see Winlock v. Hardy, 4 Litt. (Ky.) 272; Small v. Procter, 15 Mass. 499; Crittenden v. Woodruff, 11 Ark. 82; 2 Sm. L. C. 664. And see 2 Washb. R. P. 458.

The rule requiring mutuality is subject to exceptions which are discussed at large by Van Devanter, J., in Portland Gold Mining Co. v. Stratton's Independence, 158 Fed. 63, 85 C. C. A. 393, 16 L. R. A. (N. S.) 677, and note. Persons claiming under a common source of title are mutually estopped to deny its validity; Gilliam v. Bird, 30 N. C. 280, 49 Am. Dec. 379, and note in which the cases are collected.

An estoppel relating to an interest in land passes with the land, and an estoppel by deed creates what in law is termed a title by estoppel; Mutual Life Ins. Co. v. Corey, 135 N. Y. 326, 335, 31 N. E. 1095.

A grantor is not estopped by recitals in his deed of payment of consideration, from suing for the unpaid purchase money; Smith v. Arthur, 110 N. C. 400, 15 S. E. 197; nor are recitals an estoppel when the deed containing them is not operative; Wallace's Lessee v. Miner, 6 Ohio 366. But one who defended his possession on the sole ground that one of the grantors in the series of deeds had no title was bound by the recitals of the deed to the same extent as if he were privy to the grantor; Kinsman's Lessee v. Loomis, 11 Ohio 475; and a ward after coming of age was held bound by the recitals of a deed made by her guardian; Esterbrook v. Savage, 21 Hun (N. Y.) 145. A recital in a bond that it was under seal estops the obligor from denying that it was so executed; Metropolitan Life Ins. Co. v. Bender, 124 N. Y. 47, 26 N. E. 345, 11 L. R. A. 708. A grantee cannot enter and hold under a deed and at the same time repudiate the title thereby conveyed; Kelso v. Stigar, 75 Md. 376, 24 Atl. 18. See White v. R. Co., 156 Mass. 181, 30 N. E. 612; Raby v. Reeves, 112 N. C. 688, 16 S. E. 760; Oglesby v. Foley, 46 Ill. App. 119; Coward v. Clanton, 79 Cal. 23, 21 Pac. 359.

The doctrine of estoppel by deed did not at common law apply to a married woman, except as to her equitable separate estate; Big. Est. 371, citing the cases; Bank of America v. Banks, 101 U. S. 240, 25 L. Ed. 850; Jones v. Reese, 65 Ala. 134; but under the statutes enabling married women to deal with their own property, her liability to be estopped is doubtless coterminous with her capacity to contract; Neal v. Bleckley, 36 S. C. 468, 478, 15 S. E. 733; Appeal of Powell, 98 Pa. 403, 413; Knight v. Thayer, 125 Mass. 25. Nor is an infant estopped by his deed unless ratified after majority; Cook v. Toumbs, 36 Miss. 685; Houston v. Turk, 7 Yerg. (Tenn.) 13.

It has been held that a state may be estopped by deed; Com. v. Andre's Heirs, 3

Pick. (Mass.) 224; Bartlett Land & Lumber Co. v. Saunders, 103 U. S. 316, 26 L. Ed. 546; State v. Ober, 34 La. Ann. 359; Penrose v. Griffith, 4 Binn. (Pa.) 231; and this is said to be "perhaps the better opinion"; Big. Est. 371; but there are expressions to the contrary, though generally qualified so as not to conflict with the doctrine that the state may be estopped by legislative action; State v. Williams, 94 N. C. 891; Alexander v. State, 56 Ga. 478; People v. Brown, 67 Ill. 435; but not by official laches or error; State v. Brewer, 64 Ala. 287; U. S. v. Kirkpatrick, 9 Wheat. (U. S.) 735, 6 L. Ed. 199; The Floyd Acceptances, 7 Wall. (U. S.) 676, 19 L. Ed. 169.

BY MATTER OF RECORD. Such as arises from the adjudication of a competent court. Judgments of courts of record, and decrees and other final determinations of ecclesiastical, maritime, and military courts, work estoppels; 2 B. & Ald. 362; Buck v. Collins, 69 Me. 445; Bradner v. Howard, 75 N. Y. 417; Adams v. Adams, 25 Minn. 72; Butterfield v. Smith, 101 U. S. 570, 25 L. Ed. 868; Henning v. Warner, 109 N. C. 406, 14 S. E. 317; Denver City Irr. & Water Co. v. Middaugh, 12 Colo. 434, 21 Pac. 565, 13 Am. St. Rep. 234. Admissions in pleadings, either express or implied, cannot afterwards be controverted in a suit between the same parties; Com. Dig. Estoppel A 1. It is of the essence of estoppel by judgment that it is certain that the precise fact was determined by the former judgment; De Sollar v. Hanscome, 158 U. S. 216, 15 Sup. Ct. 816, 39 L. Ed. 956; Nashua & L. R. Corp. v. R., 164 Mass. 226, 41 N. E. 268, 49 Am. St. Rep. 454; Empire State Nail Co. v. Button Co., 74 Fed. 868, 21 C. C. A. 152. See RES JUDICATA, where the subject of estoppel by matter of record is treated.

Estoppels by deed and by record are common-law doctrines.

BY MATTER IN PARS. Such as arises from the acts and declarations of a person by which he designedly induces another to alter his position injuriously to himself; Brown v. Wheeler, 17 Conn. 345, 44 Am. Dec. 550; Kinney v. Farnsworth, 17 Conn. 355; Frost v. Ins. Co., 5 Denio (N. Y.) 154, 49 Am. Dec. 234; Ensel v. Levy, 46 Ohio St. 255, 19 N. E. 597; Tousley v. Board of Education, 39 Minn. 419, 40 N. W. 509; Pennypacker v. Latimer, 10 Idaho 618, 81 Pac. 55; Harrison National Bank of Cadiz, Ohio, v. Austin, 65 Neb. 632, 91 N. W. 540, 59 L. R. A. 294, 101 Am. St. Rep. 639. See Humphreys v. Finch, 97 N. C. 303, 1 S. E. 870, 2 Am. St. Rep. 293; Joyce v. Ry. Co., 43 Ill. App. 157; Vaile v. City of Independence, 116 Mo. 333, 22 S. W. 695; Westbrook v. Guderian, 3 Tex. Civ. App. 406, 22 S. W. 59. Equitable estoppel, or estoppel by conduct, is said to have its foundation in fraud, considered in its most general sense; Bisph. Eq. § 282. It is said (Bigelow, Estop. 437) that the following elements must be present in order to constitute an estoppel by conduct: 1. There must have been a representation or concealment of material facts. 2. The representation must have been made with knowledge of the facts. 3. The party to whom it was made must have been ignorant of the truth of the matter. 4. It must have been made with the intention that the other party would act upon it. 5. The other party must have been induced to act upon it. Ergenbright v. Henderson, 72 Kan. 29, 82 Pac. 524; Blodgett v. Perry, 97 Mo. 263, 10 S. W. 891, 10 Am. St. Rep. 307. See Rynn v. Preston, 69 Tex. 287, 6 S. W. 428, 5 Am. St. Rep. 49; Tiedm. Eq. Jur. 107. The rule of equitable estoppel is, that where one by his acts, declarations, or silence where it is his duty to speak, has induced another, in reliance on such acts, declarations, or silence, to enter into a transaction, he shall not, to the prejudice of the person misled, impeach the transaction: per Bates, Ch., in Marvel v. Ortlip, 3 Del. Ch. 9; Woodruff v. Morristown Instit. for Savings, 34 N. J. Eq. 174; Miles v. Lefé, 60 Ia. 168, 14 N. W. 233; Stowe v. U. S., 19 Wall. (U. S.) 13, 22 L. Ed. 144; Davis v. Williams, 49 Ia. 83; Griffin v. City of Lawrence, 135 Mass. 365; Given v. Printing Co., 114 Fed. 92, 52 C. C. A. 40; Linton v. Ins. Co., 104 Fed. 584, 44 C. C. A. 54; Greer v. Mitchell, 42 W. Va. 494, 26 S. E. 302. "He who by his language or conduct leads another to do what he would not otherwise have done shall not subject such person to loss or injury by disappointing the expectations upon which he acted." Dickerson v. Colgrove, 100 U. S. 578, 25 L. Ed. 618, where an estoppel in pais in regard to real estate was held to have been created by a letter disavowing intention to claim the same.

Representations, in order to constitute an estoppel must be made to induce the other party to act, and he must have been induced so to act; Booth v. Lenox, 45 Fla. 191, 34 South. 566; Welty v. Vulgamore, 24 Ohio C. C. 572; to his injury; Appeal of Columbus, S. & H. R. Co., 109 Fed. 177, 48 C. C. A. 275. They must amount to misrepresentation or concealment of material facts; Brian v. Bonvillain, 111 La. 441, 35 South. 632; Mining Co. v. Juab County, 22 Utah 395, 62 Pac. 1024; Atkinson v. Plum, 50 W. Va. 104, 40 S. E. 587, 58 L. R. A. 788; of which the other party is actually and permissively ignorant; City of Ft. Scott v. Brokerage Co., 117 Fed. 51, 54 C. C. A. 437; or such negligence as amounts to fraud in law; Dye v. Crary, 13 N. Mex. 439, 85 Pac. 1038; 9 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1136, affirmed, 208 U. S. 515, 28 Sup. Ct. 360, 52 L. Ed. 595. In some cases it is held that there need not be intent to deceive; Maxon v. Lane, 124 Ind. 592, 24 N. E. 683; Rogers v. St. Ry., 100 Me. 86, 60 Atl. 713, 70 L. R. A. 574; Vanneter v. Crossman, 42 Mich. 465, 4 N. W. 216; Lydick v. Gill, 68 Neb. 273, 94 N. W. 109; Globe Nav. Co. v. Casualty Co., 39 Wash. 299, 81 Pac. 826; contra, see Stiff v.

Ashton, 155 Mass. 130, 29 N. E. 203; Beacon Trust Co. v. Souther, 183 Mass. 413, 67 N. E. 345; Pearson v. Hardin, 95 Mich. 360, 54 N. W. 904; Centennial Eureka Min. Co. v. Juab County, 22 Utah 395, 62 Pac. 1024. There is no estoppel by acts in pais done under a misapprehension of facts induced by the party setting up the estoppel; Mason v. St. Albans Furniture Co., 149 Fed. 898.

In some cases representations as to future conduct may be the basis of estoppel, if their purpose and effect involves the abandonment of an existing right and affects the conduct of another; Union Mut. Life Ins. Co. v. Mowry, 96 U. S. 544, 24 L. Ed. 674; Edison Electric Light Co. v. Electric Co., 59 Fed. 691, 699; Shields v. Smith, 37 Ark. 47; Stayton v. Graham, 139 Pa. 1, 21 Atl. 2; but in England it is otherwise; 5 H. L. Cas. 185, 214; 8 App. Cas. 467; [1902] A. C. 117, 130.

In the leading case on this subject (Pickard v. Sears, 6 Ad. & El. 469) a mortgagee of personality was held to be estopped from asserting his title under the mortgage because he had passively acquiesced in a purchase of the same by the defendant under an execution against the mortgagor. The rule of that case was that an estoppel arose from wilfully causing another to believe in a certain state of facts, and to act on that belief; in Gregg v. Wells, 9 A. & E. 97, Lord Denman stated the rule more broadly as subjecting to an estoppel one who negligently and culpably stands by and allows another to contract on the faith of a fact which he can contradict; and in Freeman v. Cooke, 2 Exch. 654, it was said by Parke, B., that the rule of Pickard v. Sears must be considered as established, but that by the term "wilfully" it must be understood, "if not that the party represents that to be true which he knows to be untrue, at least, that he means his representations to be acted upon, and that it is acted upon accordingly." The establishment of the rule as thus limited was followed by Folger, J., in Continental Nat. Bank v. Bank, 50 N. Y. 575, where the principle was recognized that doing an act and the omission to act are the same; Howard v. Hudson, 2 Bl. & Bl. 1; Knights v. Wiffen, L. R. 5 Q. B. 660; Casco Bank v. Keene, 53 Me. 103. Cases of estoppel by silence are numerous; Appeal of Thompson, 126 Pa. 367, 17 Atl. 643; Silloyway v. Ins. Co., 12 Gray (Mass.) 73; Blake v. Ins. Co., 12 Gray (Mass.) 265; 35 Can. Sup. Ct. 133 (criticised at length; 19 Harv. L. Rev. 113); but silence does not always amount to fraud; Lawrence v. Luhr, 65 Pa. 241; and there is no estoppel by silence where a party has had no opportunity to speak; National Newark Banking Co. v. Bank, 63 Pa. 417. See Carroll v. Tucker, 2 Misc. Rep. 397, 21 N. Y. Supp. 952.

The estoppel will be limited to the acts which were based upon the representations out of which the estoppel arose; thus, where a sheriff had a writ against A, but took B into custody, upon B's representations that she was A, but detained her after he was informed that she was not A, B was estopped to recover damages for the false arrest but not for the subsequent detention; 2 C. B. N. S. 495. See Burney v. Collins, 50 Ga. 90; Tilton v. Nelson, 27 Barb. (N. Y.) 595; Bisph. Eq. § 292.

The acts alleged as an estoppel must be executed and not merely executory; Rorer Iron Co. v. Trout, 83 Va. 397, 2 S. E. 713, 5 Am. St. Rep. 285; as when a statement is not accepted and acted upon, it does not constitute an estoppel; Nosler v. R. Co., 73 Ia. 268, 34 N. E. 850; Gilbert v. Vail, 60 Vt. 261, 14 Atl. 542.

The doctrine of estoppel in pais is applied at law as well as in equity; Dickerson v. Colgrove, 100 U. S. 578, 25 L. Ed. 618 (where the early cases are cited); Drexel v. Berney, 122 U. S. 241, 253, 7 Sup. Ct. 1200, 30 L. Ed. 1219; Wehrman v. Conklin, 155 U. S. 327, 15 Sup. Ct. 129, 39 L. Ed. 167; Tracy v. Roberts, 88 Me. 317, 34 Atl. 68, 51 Am. St. Rep. 394; Hagan v. Ellis, 39 Fla. 472, 22 South. 727, 63 Am. St. Rep. 167; Duke v. Griffith, 9 Utah 476, 35 Pac. 512; Marine Iron Works v. Wiess, 148 Fed. 145, 78 C. C. A. 279; Campbell v. Min. Co., 141 Fed. 610, 73 C. C. A. 260; and therefore it is neither necessary nor permissible to resort to equity to obtain the benefit of it; Barnard v. German American Seminary, 49 Mich. 444, 13 N. W. 811; Vermont Copper Min. Co. v. Ormsby, 47 Vt. 709, 713; Anglo-American Land, Mortgage & Agency Co. v. Lombard, 132 Fed. 721, 68 C. C. A. 89; to be available it must be specifically pleaded; id. A title by estoppel has been held sufficient to maintain ejectment or defend against it; George v. Tate, 102 U. S. 570, 26 L. Ed. 232; where the subject of acquiring title to land by estoppel is fully considered. See ADVERSE POSSESSION.

Whether "title by estoppel," so called, may be acquired to personal property is the subject of interesting discussion in the English courts in cases of registration of a forged transfer of stock. Such a transfer was held to work an estoppel in favor of subsequent transferees; L. R. 3 Q. B. 584; but not in favor of the holder under the forged transfer; 49 L. J. Q. B. N. S. 392, where Brett, L. J., said that "an estoppel gives no title to that which is the subject-matter of it." He considered that the meaning of the phrase "legal title by estoppel," as used in the older cases, is simply an expression of the recognition of the doctrine of estoppel by the courts of law as much as in those of equity, and while "the estoppel assumes that the reality is contrary to that which the person is estopped from denying, it has no effect whatever upon the reality of the circumstances."

It is said that the contract of a person under disability cannot be made good by estoppel; Bisph. Eq. § 293. See Lowell v. Dan- iels, 2 Gray (Mass.) 161, 61 Am. Dec. 448; Merriam v. R. Co., 117 Mass. 241; Glidden v. Strupler, 52 Pa. 400. It makes no difference that the person, if a married woman, falsely represented herself to be sole; 9 Ex. 422; Weathersbee v. Farrar, 97 N. C. 107, 1 S. E. 616. But estoppel may operate to prevent such a person from enforcing a right. For instance, if a married woman were to induce A to buy property from B, knowing that the title was not in B, but in herself, she would be estopped from asserting her title against A; Connolly v. Branstler, 3 Bush (Ky.) 702, 96 Am. Dec. 278; Brinkerhoff v. Brinkerhoff, 23 N. J. Eq. 477; Drake v. Glover, 30 Ala. 382. The same principle would extend to similar acts on the part of an infant; 3 Hare 503; Whittington v. Doe, 9 Ga. 23; but not unless the conduct was intentional and fraudulent; Harmon v. Smith, 38 Fed. 482; but infancy, being in law a shield and not a sword, cannot be pleaded to avoid liability for frauds, trespasses or torts; 1 Lev. 169; International Land Co. v. Marshall, 22 Okl. 693, 98 Pac. 951, 19 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1056, where the cases are discussed by Williams, C. J. See notes in 57 L. R. A. 684; 9 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1117; 16 L. R. A. 672.

"Equitable estoppel is not applied in favor of a volunteer;" [1898] 1 Ch. 82. An unexecuted contract void as against public policy cannot be validated by invoking the doctrine of estoppel; Robinson v. Patterson, 71 Mich. 141, 39 N. W. 21; McKinney v. Development Co., 167 Fed. 770, 93 C. C. A. 258.

The doctrine that estoppels bind not only parties, but privies of blood, law, and estate, is said to apply equally to this class of estoppels; Bigelow, Estop. 554, 629; but a ward cannot be estopped by an act of his guardian which the other party to the agreement knew to be unauthorized; Heisen v. Heisen, 145 Ill. 658, 34 N. E. 597, 21 L. R. A. 434.

An agent or attorney having received money for his principal is in general estopped to deny his liability to pay it over to him, but it is a good defence that he was divested of the property or required to pay over the money by one having a paramount title; Moss Mercantile Co. v. Bank, 47 Or. 361, 82 Pac. 8, 2 L. R. A. (N. S.) 657, and note, 8 Ann. Cas. 569.

One who accepts a benefit under a will is thereby estopped to deny its validity; Drake v. Wild, 70 Vt. 52, 39 Atl. 248; Branson v. Watkins, 96 Ga. 55, 23 S. E. 204; Fry v. Morrison, 159 Ill. 244, 42 N. E. 774; Utermehle v. Norment, 197 U. S. 40, 25 Sup. Ct. 291, 49 L. Ed. 655, 3 Ann. Cas. 520; though ignorant of the rule of law on the subject; id.

At common law there was no estoppel against the sovereign; 10 Mod. 199, and the doctrine is applied in some states; State v. Williams, 94 N. C. 591; but, as appears supra, the state has been held estopped by matter of record and by deed. The weight of authority is against the estoppel of the government by matter in pais, though it has been questioned whether there should not be; 19 Harv. L. Rev. 126; and where the sovereign asserts a pecuniary demand in court, it has been applied, though with hesitation; Walker v. U. S., 139 Fed. 409, where it was held that acts of officers of the United States, authorized to shape its conduct as to the transaction, may work an estoppel against the government. As to estoppels against the state or the United States, see note to State of Michigan v. Jackson, L. & S. R. Co., 16 C. C. A. 353.

Estoppel has been sustained as against a municipal corporation; Beadles v. Smyser, 209 U. S. 393, 28 Sup. Ct. 522, 52 L. Ed. 849; and it has been held that an estoppel in pais (by reason of a mistake of an officer which misled a person searching records) cannot be set up against a municipal government; Philadelphia Mortgage & Trust Co. v. Omaha, 63 Neb. 250, 88 N. W. 523, 93 Am. St. Rep. 442; but in a note on this case it is contended that the doctrine of estoppel is available as against the sovereign; 15 Harv. L. Rev. 737. It is sometimes said, though usually denied, that there can be no estoppel against alleging unconstitutionality, and for an examination of cases on this point, see 21 Harv. L. Rev. 133. It is also held that parties cannot estop themselves by a contract "in the face of an act of parliament"; 14 Ch. D. 432.

An estoppel against one of two joint plaintiffs, whose right is to a joint recovery, will defeat the action; McIntosh v. Dierken, 222 Pa. 612, 72 Atl. 232; one who applies for company shares in a fictitious name will not be permitted to deny liability as a shareholder; 5 Manson 336.

Where the facts are undisputed, the question whether they amount to an estoppel is one of law for the court; Keating v. Orne, 77 Pa. 89; Cox v. Rogers, 77 Pa. 160; Lewis v. Carstairs, 5 W. & S. (Pa.) 205. Otherwise the facts are of course to be submitted to the jury under proper instructions as to what will constitute an estoppel.

The maxim vigilantibus non dormientibus leges adjuvant specially applies to a claim of equitable estoppel, since in such cases the interposition of equity is extraordinary and restrictive of what but for the estoppel would be a clear legal right; Marvel v. Ortlip, 3 Del. Ch. 9. The representations must be such as to lead a reasonably prudent man to act on them and he must have done this in ignorance of the truth and in good faith; Davis v. Pryor, 112 Fed. 274, 50 C. C. A. 579.

This principle has been applied to cases of dedication of land to the public use; Cincinnati v. White, 6 Pet. (U. S.) 438, 8 L. Ed. 452; Hobbs v. Inhabitants of Lowell, 19 Pick. (Mass.) 405, 31 Am. Dec. 145; of the owner's standing by and seeing land improved; Favill v. Roberts, 50 N. Y. 222; Smith v. McNeal, 68 Pa. 164; Truesdail v. Ward, 24 Mich. 134; Forbes v. McCoy, 24 Neb. 702, 40

N. W. 132; Alabama G. S. R. Co. v. R. Co., 84 Ala. 570, 3 South. 286, 5 Am. St. Rep. 401; Robertson v. Winchester, 85 Tenn. 171, 1 S. W. 781; Stone v. Tyree, 30 W. Va. 687, 5 S. E. 878; Marines v. Goblet, 31 S. C. 153, 9 S. E. 803, 17 Am. St. Rep. 22; or sold; Epley v. Witherow, 7 Watts (Pa.) 168; Thompson v. Sanborn, 11 N. H. 201, 35 Am. Dec. 490; Morrison v. Morrison's Widow, 2 Dana (Ky.) 13; Snodgrass v. Ricketts, 13 Cal. 359; Shapley v. Rangeley, 1 Woodb. & M. 213, Fed. Cas. No. 12,707; Titus v. Morse, 40 Me. 348, 63 Am. Dec. 665; Planet Property & Financial Co. v. Ry. Co., 115 Mo. 613, 22 S. W. 616; without making any claim; Planet Property & Financial Co. v. Ry. Co., 115 Mo. 613, 22 S. W. 616; Winters v. Armstrong, 37 Fed. 508; Griffeth v. Brown, 76 Cal. 260, 18 Pac. 372; Weinstein v. Bank, 69 Tex. 38, 6 S. W. 171, 5 Am. St. Rep. 23; Bynum v. Preston, 69 Tex. 287, 6 S. W. 428, 5 Am. St. Rep. 49; McMartin v. Ins. Co., 41 Minn. 198, 42 N. W. 934; Irvine v. Scott, 85 Ky. 260, 3 S. W. 163. But the owner is not estopped by the unlawful occupation of a trespasser for less than the legal period of limitation; Woll v. Voight, 105 Minn. 371, 117 N. W. 608, 23 L. R. A. (N. S.) 270, and note.

What is termed an estoppel by negligence occurs when one who is under a legal duty, either to the person injured or to the public, to act with due care, fails to do so, and such failure is the natural and proximate cause of misleading that person to alter his position; but to create the estoppel all these elements must concur; Bradford v. Ins. Co., 102 Fed. 48, 43 C. C. A. 310, 49 L. R. A. 530; Andrus v. Bradley, 102 Fed. 54; Central R. R. Co. of New Jersey v. McCartney, 68 N. J. L. 165, 52 Atl. 575; Brown & Co. v. Ins. Co., 42 Md. 384, 20 Am. Rep. 90; Nye v. Denny, 18 Ohio St. 246, 98 Am. Dec. 118; Tisher v. Beckwith, 30 Wis. 55, 11 Am. Rep. 546; 1 C. P. D. 578; [1905] 1 K. B. 677 (where, however, payment of a stolen cheque with a forged indorsement was held good under the law of Austria where the transaction occurred though it would not have been good in England).

But this doctrine does not apply between original parties, or where the defence is that, by reason of fraud, the writing, on which the estoppel is claimed, does not embrace the contract as originally made; Ward v. Spelts, 39 Neb. 809, 58 N. W. 426; Spelts v. Ward, 2 Neb. (Unof.) 177, 96 N. W. 56.

The phrase "estoppel by negligence" has been characterized as "an expression usual but not accurate, since negligence prevents a right of action accruing, estoppel a right that has accrued from being set up"; 2 Beven, Negl. 1332, where, however, a chapter is devoted to the subject. So also Bigelow treats the doctrine as above stated as a recognized branch of estoppel; Big. Est. (6th ed.) 711; and while considering it quite clear that "cases of estoppel arising out of negligence without a representation must be uncommon," thinks it well settled that "negligence when naturally and directly tending to indicate intention" is equivalent to it in creating an estoppel.

See an interesting discussion of the doctrine, with critical examination of the English cases, by John S. Ewart in 15 L. Q. R. 384.

As to whether the doctrine of estoppel has any place in criminal law, see 12 Harv. L. Rev. 56; 2 Bish. Cr. L. § 364; State v. Spaulding, 24 Kan. 1; Moore v. State, 53 Neb. 831, 74 N. W. 319.

QUASI-ESTOPPEL. A term used by Bigelow to cover a group of cases in which a party is precluded from occupying inconsistent positions, either in litigations or in ordinary dealings; Big. Est. (6th ed.) 732. The principle covers a variety of cases under wills where a party who elects to take a benefit is required to give effect to an otherwise void devise; 31 Ch. D. 466; or appointment; 2 Atk. 88; or one taking a benefit under it cannot dispute the validity of a deed; Pickett v. Bank, 32 Ark. 346; Robinson v. Peabworth, 71 Ala. 240; Jacobs v. Miller, 50 Mich. 119, 15 N. W. 42; Wood v. Seely, 32 N. Y. 105; or of a contract of affreightment; The Water Witch, 1 Black (U. S.) 494, 17 L. Ed. 155. So also a person who has procured the enactment of a statute and received benefits under it, is precluded from alleging its unconstitutionality; Vose v. Cockcroft, 44 N. Y. 415; Sherman v. McKeon, 38 N. Y. 266; Cloud v. Coleman, 1 Bush (Ky.) 548; one who has petitioned for opening a street or acquiesced in it cannot dispute the validity of the assessment for it; City of Burlington v. Gilbert, 31 Ia. 356, 7 Am. Rep. 143; Appeal of Ferson, 96 Pa. 140.

It has been held that a party, who in a cause applies for affirmative relief, is estopped from setting up an original lack of jurisdiction; Thompson v. Greer, 62 Kan. 522, 64 Pac. 48; Chandler v. Bank, 149 Ind. 601, 49 N. E. 579; Lower v. Wilson, 9 S. D. 252, 68 N. W. 545, 62 Am. St. Rep. 865; F. C. Austin Mfg. Co. v. Hunter, 16 Okl. 86, 86 Pac. 293; Champion v. R. Co., 145 Mich. 676, 108 N. W. 1078; Montague v. Marunda, 71 Neb. 805, 99 N. W. 653; contra, Freer v. Davis, 52 W. Va. 1, 43 S. E. 164, 59 L. R. A. 556, 94 Am. St. Rep. 895; State v. Dist. Court of Second Judicial Dist., 34 Mont. 226, 85 Pac. 1022; and it is suggested that the latter view should prevail upon the principle that consent can never give jurisdiction; 20 Harv. L. Rev. 150, 237.

It is to be noted that in the cases grouped under this title the courts have generally used the simple term "estoppel" which, it has been suggested, is a questionable use of terms, since many of the cases are mere instances of ratification or acquiescence; Big. Est. 755.

Estoppel in pais need not be pleaded, but this rule is altered in many states; Big. Est. 763.

The doctrine of estoppel is said to be the basis of another equitable doctrine, that of election; Bishp. Eq. § 294. See ELECTION.

ESTOVERS (estouviers, necessities; from estoffer, to furnish). The right or privilege which a tenant has to furnish himself with so much wood from the demised premises as may be sufficient or necessary for his fuel, fences, and other agricultural operations. 2 Bla. Com. 35; Van Rensselaer v. Radcliff, 10 Wend. (N. Y.) 639, 25 Am. Dec. 582.

Any tenant may claim this right, whether he be a tenant for life, for years, or at will; and that without waiting for any special leave or assignment of the lessor, unless he is restrained by some provision contained in his lease; Shepp. Touchst. 3, n. 1; Chal. R. P. 311. Nor does it appear to be necessary that the wood should all be consumed upon the premises, provided it is taken in good faith for the use of the tenant, and in reasonable quantities, with the further qualification, also, that no substantial injury be done to the inheritance; Gardner v. Dering, 1 Paige, Ch. (N. Y.) 573.

Where several tenants are granted the right of estovers from the same estate, it becomes a common of estovers; but no one of such tenants can, by underletting his land to two or more persons, apportion this right among them; for in this way he might surcharge the land, and the rights of his co-tenants, as well as those of the landlord, would be thereby invaded. In case, therefore, of the division of a farm among several tenants, neither of the under-tenants can have estovers, and the right, consequently, becomes extinguished; Van Rensselaer v. Radcliff, 10 Wend. (N. Y.) 650, 25 Am. Dec. 582; 4 Co. 36; 8 id. 78. There is much learning in the old books relative to the creation, apportionment, suspension, and extinguishment of these rights, very little of which, however, is applicable to the condition of things in this country, except perhaps in New York, where the grants of the manor-lands have led to some litigation on the subject. Tayl. Landl. & T. § 220. See 4 Washb. R. P. 99; 7 Bing. 640; Padelford v. Padelford, 7 Pick. (Mass.) 152; Richardson v. York, 14 Me. 221; Dalton v. Dalton, 42 N. C. 197; Owen v. Hyde, 6 Yerg. (Tenn.) 334, 27 Am. Dec. 467; Loomis v. Wilbur, 5 Mas. 13, Fed. Cas. No. 8,498.

The alimony allowed to a wife was called at common law, estovers. See DE ESTOVERIIS HABENDIS; COMMON.

ESTRAY. Cattle whose owner is unknown. Spelman, Gloss.; Walters v. Glats, 29 Ia. 437; Roberts v. Barnes, 27 Wis. 422; Shepherd v. Hawley, 4 Or. 206; Lyman v. Gipson, 18 Pick. (Mass.) 426; but see Worthington v. Brent, 69 Mo. 205; State v. Apel, 14 Tex. 431. Any beast, not wild, found within any lordship, and not owned by any man. Cowell; 1 Bla. Com. 297; 2 id. 14. These belonged to the lord of the soil. Britt. c. 17.

An animal turned on a range by its owner is not an estray, although its immediate whereabouts is unknown to the owner, unless it wanders from the range and becomes lost; Stewart v. Hunter, 16 Or. 62, 16 Pac. 876, 8 Am. St. Rep. 267.

It is used of flotsam at sea. 15 L. Q. R. 357.

See ANIMAL; RUNNING AT LARGE.

ESTREAT. A true copy or note of some original writing or record, and especially of fines and amercements imposed by a court, extracted from the record, and certified to a proper officer or officers authorized and required to collect them. Fitzh. N. B. 57, 76. A forfeited recognizance taken out from among the other records for the purpose of being sent up to the exchequer, that the parties might be sued thereon, was said to be estreated. 4 Bla. Com. 253.

ESTREPEMENT. A common-law writ for the prevention of waste.

The same object being attainable by a motion for an injunction in chancery, the writ became obsolete in England, and was abolished by 3 & 4 Will. IV. c. 27.

The writ lay at common law to prevent a party in possession from committing waste on an estate the title to which was disputed, after judgment obtained in any real action and before possession was delivered by the sheriff.

But, as waste might be committed in some cases pending the suit, the statute of Gloucester gave another writ of estrepement pendente placito, commanding the sheriff firmly to inhibit the tenant "ne faciat vastum vel strepementum pendente placito dicto indiscusso." By virtue of either of these writs, the sheriff may resist those who commit waste or offer to do so; and he might use sufficient force for the purpose; 3 Bla. Com. 225, 226.

The writ was sometimes directed to the sheriff and the party in possession of the lands, in order to make him amenable to the court as for a contempt in case of his disobedience to the injunction of the writ. At common law the process proper to bring the tenant into court is a venire facias, and thereon an attachment. Upon the defendant's coming in, the plaintiff declares against him. The defendant usually pleads "that he has done no waste contrary to the prohibition of the writ." The issue on this plea is tried by a jury, and in case they find against the defendant they assess damages which the plaintiff recovers. But, as this verdict convicts the defendant of a contempt, the court proceed against him for that cause as in other cases; Co. 2d Inst. 329; Rast. 317; 1 B. & P. 121; 2 Lilly, Reg. Estrepement; 5 Co. 119; Reg. Brev. 76.

In Pennsylvania, by statute, the remedy by estrepement is extended for the benefit of any owner of lands leased for years or at will, at any time during the continuance or after the expiration of such demise, and due notice given to the tenant to leave the same, agreeably to law; or for any purchaser at sheriff or coroner's sale of lands, etc., after he has been declared the highest bidder by the sheriff or coroner; or for any mortgagee or judgment-creditor, after the lands bound by such judgment or mortgage shall have been condemned by inquisition, or which may be subject to be sold by a writ of venditioni exponas or levari facias. See 10 Viner, Abr. 497; Woodf. Landl. & T. 447; Arch. Civ. Pl. 17; 7 Com. Dig. 659; Irwin v. Covode, 24 Pa. 162; Byrne v. Boyle, 37 Pa. 260.

ET ADJOURNATUR (Lat.). And it is adjourned. A phrase used in the old reports, where the argument of a cause was adjourned to another day, or where a second argument was had. 1 Keb. 692, 754.

ET ALIUS (Lat.). And another. The abbreviation et al., sometimes in the plural written et als., is affixed to the name of the first plaintiff or defendant, in entitling a cause, where there are several joined as plaintiffs or defendants.

On an appeal from a judgment in favor of two or more parties, a bond payable to one of the appellees et al. will be good; Conery v. Webb, 12 La. Ann. 282. But where a summons should state the parties to the action, the name of one followed by the words et al. is not sufficient; Lyman v. Milton, 44 Cal. 630.

ET CÆTERA (Lat.). And others; and other things. See Lathers v. Keogh, 39 Hun (N. Y.) 576; Agate v. Lowenbein, 4 Daly (N. Y.) 62.

The addition of the abbreviation etc. to some minor provisions of an agreement for a lease does not introduce such uncertainty as to prevent a decree for specific performance where the material points are clear; 2 De G. & J. 559; but such an agreement "for letting and taking coals, etc.," was too indefinite a statement of the subject-matter of the agreement to admit of such a decree; 1 De G. M. & G. 80; an agreement "to do all the painting, papering, repairing, decorating, etc., during the term of the lease" was not so uncertain as to prevent a specific performance; 21 L. J. R. 185.

Under a bequest of "all her household furniture and effects, plate, linen, china, glass, books, wearing apparel, etc.," it was claimed that the testatrix had disposed of the general residue of her estate, but she was held by Romilly, M. R., to be intestate "except as to the articles specified in the will and those which are ejusdem generis;" 26 Beav. 220; and the same judge held the words good-will, etc., in a contract, to include "such other things as are necessarily connected with and belong to the good-will, . . . for instance, the use of trade-marks," and a covenant not to engage in similar business in Great Britain for a reasonable time to be limited in the conveyance having regard to the nature of such undertakings.

"All these things would be included in the words et cætera," 28 L. J. Ch. 212; "all my furniture, etc.," passed only property ejusdem generis and not shares of a waterworks company; L. R. 11 Eq. 363; a bequest to his widow of "all my money, cattle, farming implements, etc., she paying" certain sums named to testator's two brothers, was sufficient to make the widow residuary legatee of real and personal estate, the latter being insufficient to pay debts; Jessel, M. R., L. R. 4 Ch. Div. 800.

The abbreviation etc. was formerly much used in pleading to avoid the inconveniences attendant upon making full and half defence. See DEFENCE. It is not generally to be used in solemn instruments; see Com. v. Ross, 6 S. & R. (Pa.) 427; when used in pleadings to avoid repetition, it usually refers to things unnecessary to be stated; Dano v. R. Co., 27 Ark. 564.

Where the sense of the abbreviation may be gathered from the preceding words there is sufficient certainty; but where the abbreviation cannot be understood and affects a vital part of the contract or instrument the uncertainty will be fatal.

See Hayes v. Wilson, 105 Mass. 21; Gray v. R. Co., 11 Hun (N. Y.) 70; EJUSDEM GENERIS.

ET DE HOC PONIT SE SUPER PATRIAM (Lat.). And of this he puts himself upon the country. The Latin form of concluding a traverse. See 3 Bla. Com. 313.

ET HOC PARATUS EST VERIFICARE (Lat.). And this he is prepared to verify. The form of concluding a plea in confession and avoidance; that is, where the defendant has confessed all that the plaintiff has set forth, and has pleaded new matter in avoidance. 1 Salk. 2.

ET HOC PETIT QUOD INQUIRATUR PER PATRIAM (Lat.). And this he prays may be inquired of by the country. The conclusion of a plea tendering an issue to the country. 1 Salk. 3.

ET INDE PRODUCIT SECTAM (Lat.). And thereupon he brings suit. The Latin conclusion of a declaration, except against attorneys and other officers of the court. 3 Bla. Com. 295.

ET MODO AD HUNC DIEM (Lat.). And now at this day. The Latin form of the commencement of the record on appearance of the parties.

ET NON (Lat.). And not. These words are sometimes employed in pleading to convey a pointed denial. They have the same effect as "without this," absque hoc. 2 Bouvier, Inst., 2d ed. n. 2985, note.

ET SIC AD PATRIAM (Lat.). And so to the country. A phrase used in the Year Books, to record an issue to the country.

ET UXOR (Lat. and wife). Used to show that the wife of the grantor is a party to the deed. The abbreviation is et ux.

ETHICS, LEGAL. That branch of moral science which treats of the duties which a member of the legal profession owes to the public, to the court, to his professional brethren, and to his client.

Perhaps the most comprehensive and satisfactory treatment of the subject is the essay of Judge Sharswood, originally embodied in a series of lectures to the law school of the University of Pennsylvania, in 1854. The republication of the fifth edition, forty-two years after the issue of the first, attests the interest of the profession in the work. It was republished by the American Bar Association in 1907. From it the following is mainly extracted:

The relation of the profession to the public is so intimate and far-reaching, that it "can hardly be over-estimated." This arises from its influence both on legislation and jurisprudence; the latter of which it controls entirely and "the former almost entirely." Accordingly there is involved the study of the true ends of society and government and the conservation of life, liberty, and property, and as means to these ends it is the office of the Bar to diffuse sound principles among the people, to aid in forming correct public opinion, "to maintain the ancient landmarks, to respect authority, and to guard the integrity of the law as a science."

The responsibilities, legal and moral, of the lawyer, arising from his relations to the court, to his professional brethren, and to his client, are thus treated: "Fidelity to the court, fidelity to the client, fidelity to the claims of truth and honor: these are the matters comprised in the oath of office."

"Fidelity to the court requires outward respect in words and actions. The oath, as it has been said, undoubtedly looks to nothing like allegiance to the person of the judge; unless in those cases where his person is so inseparable from his office, that an insult to the one is an indignity to the other. In matters collateral to official duty, the judge is on a level with the members of the Bar, as he is with his fellow-citizens; his title to distinction and respect resting on no other foundation than his virtues and qualities as a man." Per Gibson, C. J., in In re Austin, 5 Rawle (Pa.) 204, 28 Am. Dec. 657.

"There are occasions, no doubt, when duty to the interests confided to the charge of the advocate demands firm and decided opposition to the views expressed or the course pursued by the court, nay, even manly and open remonstrance; but this duty may be faithfully performed, and yet that outward respect be preserved, which is here inculcated. Counsel should ever remember how necessary it is for the dignified and honorable administration of justice, upon which the dignity and honor of their profession entirely depend, that the courts and the members of the courts should be regarded with respect by the suitors and people; that on all occasions of difficulty or danger to that department of government, they should have the good opinion and confidence of the public on their side."

"Indeed it is highly important that the temper of an advocate should be always equal. He should most carefully aim to repress everything like excitability or irritability. When passion is allowed to prevail, the judgment is dethroned. Words are spoken, or things done, which the parties afterwards wish could be unsaid or undone. Equanimity and self-possession are qualities of unspeakable value."

"Another plain duty of counsel is to present everything in the cause to the court openly in the course of the public discharge of its duties. It is not often, indeed, that gentlemen of the Bar so far forget themselves as to attempt to exert privately an influence upon the judge, to seek private interviews, or take occasional opportunities of accidental or social meetings to make ex parte statements, or to endeavor to impress their views. . . . They know that such conduct is wrong in itself, and has a tendency to impair confidence in the administration of justice, which ought not only to be pure but unsuspected. A judge will do right to avoid social intercourse with those who obtrude such unwelcome matters upon his moments of relaxation."

"There is one thing, however, of which gentlemen of the Bar are not sufficiently careful,—to discourage and prohibit their clients from pursuing a similar course. The position of the judge in relation to a cause, under such circumstances, is very embarrassing, especially, as is often the case, if he hears a good deal about the matter before he discovers the nature of the business and object of the call upon him."

"Counsel should set their faces against all undue influences of the sort; they are unfaithful to the court if they allow any improper means of the kind to be resorted to. Judicem nec de obtinendo jure orari oportet nec de injuria exorari. It may be in place to remark here that the counsel in a cause ought to avoid all unnecessary communication with the jurors before or during any trial in which he may be concerned. He should enforce the same duty upon his client."

"There is another duty to the court, and that is, to support and maintain it in its proper province wherever it comes in conflict with the co-ordinate tribunal—the jury."

"It need hardly be added that a practitioner ought to be particularly cautious, in all his dealings with the court, to use no deceit, imposition, or evasion—to make no statements of facts which he does not know or believe to be true—to distinguish carefully what lies in his own knowledge from what he has merely derived from his instructions—to present no paper-books intentionally garbled. 'Sir Matthew Hale abhorred,' says his biographer, 'those too common faults of misreciting witnesses, quoting precedents or books falsely, or asserting anything confidently; by which ignorant juries and weak judges are too often wrought upon.'"

"The topic of fidelity to the client involves the most difficult questions in the consideration of the duty of a lawyer."

"He is legally responsible to his client only for the want of ordinary care and ordinary skill. That constitutes gross negligence. It is extremely difficult to fix upon any rule which shall define what is negligence in a given case. The habits and practice of men are widely different in this regard. It has been laid down that if the ordinary and average degree of diligence and skill could be determined, it would furnish the true rule. Though such be the extent of legal liability, that of moral responsibility is wider. Entire devotion to the interest of the client, warm zeal in the maintenance and defence of his rights, and the exertion of his utmost learning and ability,—these are the higher points which can only satisfy the truly conscientious practitioner."

"But what are the limits of his duty when the legal demands or interests of his client conflict with his own sense of what is just and right? This is a problem by no means of easy solution. That lawyers are as often the ministers of injustice as of justice, is the common accusation in the mouth of gain-sayers against the profession. It is said there must be a right and a wrong side to every lawsuit. In the majority of cases it must be apparent to the advocate on which side is the justice of the cause; yet he will maintain, and often with the appearance of warmth and earnestness, that side which he must know to be unjust, and the success of which will be a wrong to the opposite party. Is he not then a participator in the injustice? It may be answered in general: Every case is to be decided, by the tribunal before which it is brought for adjudication, upon the evidence, and upon the principles of law applicable to the facts as they appear upon the evidence."

"Now the lawyer is not merely the agent of the party; he is an officer of the court. The party has a right to have his case decided upon the law and the evidence, and to have every view presented to the minds of the judges which can legitimately bear upon the question. This is the office which the advocate performs. He is not morally responsible for the act of the party in maintaining an unjust cause, nor for the error of the court, if they fall into error, in deciding it in his favor. The court or jury ought certainly to hear and weigh both sides; and the office of the counsel is to assist them by doing that which the client in person, from want of learning, experience, and address, is unable to do in a proper manner. The lawyer who refuses his professional assistance because in his judgment the case is unjust and indefensible, usurps the functions of both judge and jury."

"As an answer to any sweeping objection made to the profession in general, the view thus presented may be quite satisfactory. It by no means follows, however, as a principle of private action for the advocate, that all causes are to be taken by him indiscriminately, and conducted with a view to one single end, success. It is much to be feared, however, that the prevailing tone of professional ethics leads practically to this result. He has an undoubted right to refuse a retainer, and decline to be concerned in any cause, at his discretion. It is a discretion to be wisely and justly exercised. When he has once embarked in a case, he cannot retire from it without the consent of his client or the approbation of the court."

"Lord Brougham, in his justly celebrated defence of the Queen, went to very extravagant lengths upon this subject; no doubt he was led by the excitement of so great an occasion to say what cool reflection and sober reason certainly never can approve. 'An advocate,' said he, 'in the discharge of his duty knows but one person in all the world, and that person is his client. To save that client by all means and expedients, and at all hazards and costs to other persons, and among them to himself, is his first and only duty; and in performing this duty he must not regard the alarm, the torments, the destruction he may bring upon others. Separating the duty of a patriot from that of an advocate, he must go on, reckless of consequences; though it should be his unhappy lot to involve his country in confusion.'"

"On the other hand, and as illustrative of the practical difficulty which this question presented to a man with as nice a perception of moral duty as perhaps ever lived, it is said by Bishop Burnet of Sir Matthew Hale: 'If he saw a cause was unjust, he for a great while would not meddle further in it, but to give his advice that it was so; if the parties after that would go on, they were to seek another counsellor, for he would assist none in acts of injustice; if he found the cause doubtful or weak in point of law, he always advised his clients to agree their business. Yet afterwards he abated much of the scrupulosity he had about causes that appeared at first unjust, upon this occasion: there were two causes brought him which, by the ignorance of the party or their attorney, were so ill-represented to him that they seemed to be very bad; but he inquiring more narrowly into them, found they were really very good and just; so after this he slackened much of his former strictness of refusing to meddle in causes upon the ill circumstances that appeared in them at first.'"

"There is a distinction to be made between the case of prosecution and defence for crimes; between appearing for a plaintiff in pursuit of an unjust claim, and for a defendant in resisting what appears to be a just one. Every man, accused of an offence, has a constitutional right to a trial according to law; even if guilty, he ought not to be convicted and undergo punishment unless upon legal evidence; and with all the forms which have been devised for the security of life and liberty. These are the panoply of innocence, when unjustly arraigned; and guilt cannot be deprived of it, without removing it from innocence. He is entitled, therefore, to the benefit of counsel to conduct his defence, to cross-examine the witnesses for the State, to scan, with legal knowledge, the forms of the proceeding against him, to present his defence in an intelligible shape, to suggest all those reasonable doubts which may arise from the evidence as to his guilt, and to see that if he is convicted, it is according to law."

As to contingent fees Judge Sharswood says:

"Regard should be had to the general usage of the profession, especially as to the rates of commission to be charged for the collection of undefended claims. Except in this class of cases, agreements between counsel and client that the compensation of the former shall depend upon final success in the lawsuit—in other words, contingent fees—however common such agreements may be, are of a very dangerous tendency, and to be declined in all ordinary cases. In making his charge, after the business committed to him has been completed, as an attorney may well take into consideration the general ability of his client to pay, so he may also consider the pecuniary benefit which may have been derived from his services. For a poor man, who is unable to pay at all, there may be a general understanding that the attorney is to be liberally compensated in case of success. What is objected to is an agreement to receive a certain part or proportion of the sum or subject-matter, in the event of a recovery, and nothing otherwise."

He considers that the practice should be discouraged not necessarily on the consideration of unlawfulness but of morality and its effect on the lawyer.

"It is to be observed, then, that such a contract changes entirely the relation of counsel to the cause. It reduces him from his high position of an officer of the court and a minister of justice, to that of a party litigating his own claim. Having now a deep personal interest in the event of the controversy, he will cease to consider himself subject to the ordinary rules of professional conduct. He is tempted to make success, at all hazards and by all means, the sole end of his exertions. He becomes blind to the merits of the case, and would find it difficult to persuade himself no matter what state of facts might be developed in the progress of the proceedings, as to the true character of the transaction, that it was his duty to retire from it."

"He has now an interest, which gives him a right to speak as principal, not merely to advise as to the law, and abide by instructions. It is either unfair to him or unfair to the client. If he thinks the result doubtful, he throws all his time, learning, and skill away upon what, in his estimation, is an uncertain chance. He cannot work with the proper spirit in such a case. If he believes that the result will be success, he secures in this way a higher compensation than he is justly entitled to receive."

"It is an undue encouragement to litigation. Men, who would not think of entering on a lawsuit, if they knew that they must compensate their lawyers whether they win or lose, are ready upon such a contingent agreement to try their chances with any kind of a claim. It makes the law more of a lottery than it is."

"The worst consequence is yet to be told,—its effect upon professional character. It turns lawyers into higglers with their clients. Of course it is not meant that these are always its actual results; but they are its inevitable tendencies, in many instances its practical working. To drive a favorable bargain with the suitor in the first place, the difficulties of the case are magnified and multiplied, and advantage taken of that very confidence which led him to intrust his interests to the protection of the advocate. The parties are necessarily not on an equal footing in making such a bargain. A high sense of honor may prevent counsel from abusing his position and knowledge; but all have not such high and nice sense of honor. If our example goes towards making the practice of agreements for contingent fees general, we assist in placing such temptations in the way of our professional brethren of all degrees—the young, the inexperienced, and the unwary, as well as those whose age and experience have taught them that a lawyer's honor is his brightest jewel, and to be guarded from being sullied, even by the breath of suspicion, with the most sedulous care."

ion: "And further permit me to advise and earnestly to admonish you, for the preservation of professional honor and integrity, to avoid the temptation for bargaining for fees or shares of any estate or other claim, contingent upon a successful recovery. The practice directly leads to a disturbance of the peace of society, and to an infidelity to the professional obligation promised to the court, in which is implied an absence of desire or effort of one in the ministry of the temple of justice, to obtain a success that is not just as well as lawful. It is true, as a just equivalent for many cases honorably advocated and incompetently paid by the poor, a compensation may and will be received, the more liberal because of the ability produced by success; but let it be the result of no bargain, exacted as a price before the service is rendered, but rather the grateful return for benefits already conferred. If rigid in your terms, in protection of the right of the profession to a just and honorable compensation, let it rather be in the amount of the required retainer, when it will have its proper influence in the discouragement of litigation." See CHAMPERTY.

"The boundaries of professional privilege and professional obligation are clearly defined and in no way doubtful. Counsel represents the prisoner to defend his rights. In so doing he is bound to exercise competent learning, and to be faithful, vigilant, resolute. But he is at the same time an officer of the court, part of the system which the law provides for the preservation of individual rights in the administration of justice, and bound by his official oath to fidelity as well to the court as to the client. It was well said by the Chief Justice in Com. v. Jongrass, 181 Pa. 172, 37 Atl. 207: 'There is no code of professional ethics which is peculiar to the criminal courts. There are no methods of practice to be tolerated there that are not equally entitled to recognition in the civil courts.' The duty of the counsel is to see that his client is tried with proper observance of his legal rights, and not convicted except in strict accordance with law. His duty to his client requires him to do this much, his duty to the court forbids him to do more. An independent and fearless bar is a necessary part of the heritage of a people free by the standards of Anglo-Saxon freedom, and courts must allow a large latitude to the individual judgment of counsel in determining his action, but it must never be lost sight of that there is a corresponding obligation to the court, which is violated by excessive zeal or perverted ingenuity that seeks to delay or evade the due course of legal justice." Com. v. Hill, 185 Pa. 387, 39 Atl. 1055, per Mitchell, J.

In an address of Joseph B. Warner before the American Bar Association (1896) on "The Responsibilities of the Lawyer," will be found a discussion of this subject. It is said upon the much-discussed question of how an honorable man can advocate what he knows to be a bad cause, that it is important to look at the profession from the non-professional standpoint, and that the familiar argument that every man has the right to have the law fairly applied to his case is a solution, less satisfactory in theory than in practice, of the problem as it confronts the individual lawyer. This assumes the presentation of a cause by an official spokesman before a competent and impartial tribunal. The theory might fit a mere intermediary in the public function of the administration of justice, but does not answer when, as in modern practice, it concerns the intimate and confidential adviser of the client who is thoroughly identified with the client at the inception and during the preparation for the progress of the trial at every stage. "Such being the lawyer's immersion in his client's cause, it is out of the question to consider him merely as a perfunctory representative. His responsibility for litigation in its inception, its progress, and its results, must be, to some extent at least, commensurate with his identification with the cause. If he wholly adopts the client he must acknowledge the relationship. This leaves the lawyer's responsibility where he chooses to put it. He may limit it by limiting his relations to those external services which are guardedly professional; he may, on the other hand, enter so far into the case as to become as answerable for it as the client is, or even more. This is, I think, the position which the lawyer must accept. He cannot make a case his own, and push it as if he were a party, and yet disclaim responsibility for it on the ground that his connection with it is wholly official. He must openly accept the consequences of whatever he does, and expect no shelter from any theory of the professional relation which does not squarely recognize all the facts."

Nor does Mr. Warner consider that the unavoidable influence of powerful counsel on courts is to be disregarded as a disturbing factor in the cause of justice. While the danger may be slight as to courts, with juries it is by no means so, and "in proportion as the lawyer purposely carries a jury against the facts, or beyond the facts, so far the verdict is his act. To that responsibility he must be held." The shadowy impression of an obligation to undertake any cause is dismissed as untenable and inconsistent with present conditions. The counsel is in a measure responsible for the cause he has chosen to take. It is true he is not required to settle all doubts against his client, and due regard is to be had for the uncertainty of the law and the unquestioned fact that the lawyer must administer it as it is, and not in each case sit in judgment upon its wisdom or policy. The law, therefore, he does not control, but as to facts there is grave responsibility. No special rule can be formulated to distinguish between true and false advocacy, and allowance is to be made for the avowedly partisan attitude of the counsel, but "from a piece of false evidence, or a false statement in argument, every decent lawyer starts back. . . . Certainly nothing could be worse than to give any sanction whatever to a theory which, though never avowed, may sometimes be tacitly assumed, that the practice of the law is a game, or a species of warfare, in which there may be a few rules agreed on, but in the main there is but one thing to consider, and that is victory. As in the strange, unethical ethics of war you may not use poisoned bullets, but may use explosive shells, and may not poison the well in the besieged city, but may destroy the provision train on its way thither, so in a court of law, on this monstrous theory, though you may not actually suborn witnesses, you may take advantage of every piece of falsehood which in any other way can pass in, undetected, in evidence or argument. But if law is a game, it is a game in which the stakes are human happiness and character; if it is war, it is not a war for plunder, but one for principles, which cannot be set up with glory in the end if they have been first defiled and trampled under foot by the victors." The subject is thus fairly summed up: "At last the moralities of the practice of the law must rest on the individual lawyer, and perhaps little more can be said by way of particular rules for professional conduct than that the lawyer is under all the obligations which the highest standard, rightly understood, imposes on any man. From these he neither gets, nor claims, an exemption by reason of any convention which would permit falsehood, nor by reason of working within a system which, to some extent, settles conduct by general rules of law without regard to the moral aspect of particular cases."

Our system is not devised primarily to discover truth, nor is the lawyer chiefly a searcher after truth. If he were, his methods would seem strange, indeed. Our administration of law is made, or rather has grown, by forces which are virtually the great forces of nature, to meet human needs, to control the elemental passions of men, to regulate the affairs of life. . . . It has the imperfections and the contradictions of all human things. It does not always conform to rules, however unquestionable and right. It touches all of life and takes on both good and evil by the contact. In its critical moments, when it is centred in a trial in court, it is the modern phase of all ancient strife, the visible struggle, old as the world, of all the passions of anger, hate, greed, and avarice, less wild than of old, but still full of their inherited spirit, and now forced into an arena which, excepting war itself, is left as the only battlefield for the irrepressible fighting instincts of the race.

That these contests should not always proceed in irreproachable methods and infallibly end in right results, is not to be wondered at; that the men who engage in them as trained contestants sometimes fight with indefensible tactics must be laid to traits which yet survive in the human animal. The vigorous participation in affairs, with a purpose to do right, is the most wholesome moral tonic that our nature can have. This way lies open in the practice of the law. It cannot be said to be free from perplexities. The practitioner will not find himself in a plain way in which the fool cannot err. But he will find himself in the midst of abundant opportunities for service to mankind, will see before him ideals among the highest which our minds can reach, and will have the encouragement of examples which are not behind the farthest mark that human nature has touched in its approach to justice.

Canons of legal ethics have been published by several State Bar Associations. As to the civil law, see ADVOCATE.

EUGENICS. Acts forbidding marriage except upon proof of the good health of one or both of the parties have recently been passed in a few states. The Wisconsin act has been declared invalid in an unreported case.

EUNDO, MORANDO ET REDEUNDO (Lat.). This Latin phrase signifies going, remaining, and returning. It is employed in cases where a person is privileged from arrest, in order to give him the freedom necessary to the performance of his respective obligations, to signify that he is protected from arrest eundo, morando et redeundo.

EUNOMY. Equal laws and a well-adjusted constitution of government.

EVASION (Lat. evadere, to avoid). A subtle device to set aside the truth or escape the punishment of the law: as, if a man should tempt another to strike him first, in order that he might have an opportunity of returning the blow with impunity. He is, nevertheless, punishable, because he becomes himself the aggressor in such a case. Hawk. Pl. Cr. c. 31, §§ 24, 25; Bac. Abr. Fraud, A.

EVENT. The consequences of anything, the issue, conclusion, end; that in which an action, operation, or series of operations, terminates. Fitch v. Bates, 11 Barb. (N. Y.) 473.

EVERY. All the separate individuals who constitute the whole regarded one by one. State v. Penny, 19 S. C. 221. See ALL.

EVICTION. Deprivation of the possession of lands or tenements.

Originally and technically, the dispossession must be by judgment of law; if otherwise, it was an ouster; Lansing v. Van Alstyne, 2 Wend. (N. Y.) 563, note; Webb v. Alexander, 7 Wend. (N. Y.) 285; but the necessity of legal process was long ago abandoned in England; 4 Term 617; and in this country also it is settled that there need not be legal process; Greenvault v. Davis, 4 Hill (N. Y.) 645; Grist v. Hodges, 14 N. C. 200; Green v. Irving, 54 Miss. 450, 28 Am. Rep. 360. The word is difficult to define with technical accuracy; 17 C. B. 30; but it may be fairly stated that any actual entry and dispossession, adversely and lawfully made under paramount title, will be an eviction; Rawle, Cov. § 133.

Total eviction takes place when the possessor is wholly deprived of his rights in the premises. Partial eviction takes place when the possessor is deprived of only a portion of them; as, if a third person comes in and ejects him from the possession of half his land, or establishes a right to some easement over it, by a title which is prior to that under which he holds.

With respect to the demised premises, an eviction consists in taking from a tenant some part of the premises of which he was in possession, not in refusing to put him in possession of something which by the agreement with his landlord he should have enjoyed; Etheridge v. Osborn, 12 Wend. (N. Y.) 529. And in order to effect a suspension of rent there must be something equivalent to an expulsion from the premises, and not a mere trespass, or disturbance in the enjoyment of them; Allen v. Pell, 4 Wend. (N. Y.) 505; City of New York v. Price, 5 Sandf. (N. Y.) 542; T. Jones 148; Nelson v. Allen, 1 Yerg. (Tenn.) 379; Bartlett v. Farrington, 120 Mass. 284. The entry of a landlord upon demised premises for the purpose of rebuilding does not operate as an eviction, where it was with the tenant's assent and not to his entire seclusion; Heller v. Ins. Co., 151 Pa. 101, 25 Atl. 83.

It is not necessary, however, in order to produce the eviction of a tenant, that there should be an actual physical expulsion; for a landlord may do many acts tending to diminish the enjoyment of the premises, short of an expulsion, which will amount to an eviction in law: as if he intentionally disturb the tenant's enjoyment to such an extent as to injure his business or destroy the comfort of himself and family, or render the premises unfit for the purposes for which they were leased, it will amount to an eviction; Dyett v. Pendleton, 8 Cow. (N. Y.) 727; Edmison v. Lowry, 3 S. D. 77, 52 N. W.

583, 17 L. R. A. 275, 44 Am. St. Rep. 774; Duff v. Hart, 16 N. Y. Supp. 163; O'Neill v. Manget, 44 Mo. App. 279; Hoever v. Fleming, 91 Pa. 322; Royce v. Guggenheim, 106 Mass. 201, 8 Am. Rep. 322; Alger v. Kennedy, 49 Vt. 109, 24 Am. Rep. 117; Wade v. Herndl, 127 Wis. 544, 107 N. W. 4, 5 L. R. A. (N. S.) 855, 7 Ann. Cas. 591.

Constructive eviction may arise from any wrongful act of the lessor which deprives the tenant of the full enjoyment of the leased premises: as, by forbidding an under-tenant to pay rent to the tenant; Leadbeater v. Roth, 25 Ill. 587; building a fence in front of the premises to cut off the tenant's access thereto; see Boston & W. R. Co. v. Ripley, 13 Allen (Mass.) 421; erecting a permanent structure which renders unfit for use two rooms; Royce v. Guggenheim, 106 Mass. 201, 8 Am. Rep. 322; refusal to do an act indispensably necessary to enable the tenant to carry on the business for which the premises were leased: as, when premises were let for a grog-shop, the landlord refused to sign the necessary documents required by statute to enable the tenant to obtain a license; Grabenhorst v. Nicodemus, 42 Md. 236; contra, Kellogg v. Lowe, 38 Wash. 293, 80 Pac. 458, 70 L. R. A. 510; also where lessor tears down an adjoining building, making it evident that lessee's building would fall; Snow v. Pulitzer, 142 N. Y. 263, 36 N. E. 1059. And when a landlord, who owned another building adjoining that occupied by a tenant, the two being constructed together, tore the former down, rendering the latter unsafe for occupancy, and then procured its condemnation and destruction by the city authorities, these acts constituted an eviction; Silber v. Larkin, 94 Wis. 9, 68 N. W. 406. So also failure to furnish elevator service to an office building; McCall v. Ins. Co., 201 Mass. 223, 87 N. E. 582, 21 L. R. A. (N. S.) 38; Lawrence v. Marble Co., 1 Misc. 105, 20 N. Y. Supp. 698; Ess-Eff Realty Co. v. Buttenheim, 125 N. Y. Supp. 401; and such failure together with a failure to heat the premises; Minneapolis Co-Operative Co. v. Williamson, 51 Minn. 53, 52 N. W. 986, 38 Am. St. Rep. 473; leasing part of a building to an automobile company whose work caused vibrations, to the disturbance of an artist; Wade v. Herndl, 127 Wis. 544, 107 N. W. 4, 5 L. R. A. (N. S.) 855, 7 Ann. Cas. 591; renting a floor to lewd and disorderly persons; Lay v. Bennett, 4 Colo. App. 252, 35 Pac. 748; renting a lower floor for a laundry, as against a florist on an upper floor; Duff v. Hart, 16 N. Y. Supp. 163; or for a noisy and disorderly saloon; Halligan v. Wade, 21 Ill. 470, 74 Am. Dec. 108; permitting rats and offensive odors in a part of a building; Barnard Realty Co. v. Bonwit, 155 App. Div. 182, 139 N. Y. Supp. 1050.

But a mere failure of the landlord to make repairs, although such act may cause the place to be untenable, will not amount to an eviction; Coddington v. Dunham, 35 N. Y. Super. Ct. 412; Bussman v. Ganster, 72 Pa. 285. See Alger v. Kennedy, 49 Vt. 109, 24 Am. Rep. 117. Nor the presence of vermin; Jacobs v. Morand, 59 Misc. 200, 110 N. Y. Supp. 208. If the objectionable acts are done on an adjoining property it is not eviction; Solomon v. Fantozzi, 43 Misc. 61, 86 N. Y. Supp. 754; Kellogg v. Lowe, 38 Wash. 293, 80 Pac. 458, 70 L. R. A. 510; Gray v. Gaff, 8 Mo. App. 329.

The doctrine of constructive eviction amounts only to a right to abandon the premises; it is not a defence against an action for rent when the tenant waives the eviction and remains in possession; Edgerton v. Page, 20 N. Y. 281.

The ownership of adjacent premises, and the doing of an act, solely as owner of such premises, which injures a tenant's use of his land, do not infringe a right of the tenant and will not amount to a constructive eviction; Palmer v. Wetmore, 2 Sandf. (N. Y.) 316; Solomon v. Fantozzi, 43 Misc. 61, 86 N. Y. Supp. 754; Kellogg v. Lowe, 38 Wash. 293, 80 Pac. 458, 70 L. R. A. 510; Gray v. Gaff, 8 Mo. App. 329.

The remedy for an eviction depends chiefly upon the covenants in the deed under which the party held. When the grantee suffers a total eviction, if he has a covenant of seisin or for quiet enjoyment, he recovers from the grantor the consideration-money which he paid for the land, with interest, and not the enhanced value of the premises, whether such value has been created by the expenditure of money in improvements thereon, or by any other more general cause; Kinney v. Watts, 14 Wend. (N. Y.) 38; Marston v. Hobbs, 2 Mass. 433, 3 Am. Dec. 61. And this seems to be the general rule; Bennet v. Jenkins, 13 Johns. (N. Y.) 50; Bender v. Fromberger, 4 Dall. (U. S.) 441, 1 L. Ed. 898; Talbot v. Bedford's Heirs, Cooke (Tenn.) 447; Lowther v. Com., 1 Hen. & M. (Va.) 202; Stewart v. Drake, 9 N. J. L. 139; Cox's Heirs v. Strode, 2 Bibb (Ky.) 273, 5 Am. Dec. 603.

With respect to a lessee, however, who pays no purchase-money, the rule of damages upon an eviction is different; for he recovers nothing, except such expenses as he has been put to in defending his possession; and as to any improvements he may have made upon the premises, he stands upon the same general footing with a purchaser. The rents reserved in a lease, where no other consideration is paid, are regarded as a just equivalent for the use of the demised premises. Upon an eviction the rent ceases, and the lessee is thereby relieved from a burden which must be deemed equal to the benefit he would have derived from the continued enjoyment of the property; Kelly v. Dutch Church, 2 Hill (N. Y.) 105; The Richmond v. Cake, 1 App. D. C. 447; Holmes v.

Gulon, 44 Mo. 164; Alger v. Kennedy, 49 Vt. 109, 24 Am. Rep. 117; McClurg v. Price, 59 Pa. 420, 98 Am. Dec. 356; Leudbeater v. Roth, 25 Ill. 587. It is no defence, however, to an action for rent which was due at the time of the eviction; Johnson v. Barg, 8 Misc. 307, 28 N. Y. Supp. 728.

When the eviction is only partial, the damages to be recovered under the covenant of seisin are a ratable part of the original price, and they are to bear the same ratio to the whole consideration that the value of the land to which the title has failed bears to the value of the whole tract. The contract is not rescinded, so as to entitle the vendee to the whole consideration-money, but only to the amount of the relative value of the part lost; Guthrie v. Pugsley, 12 Johns. (N. Y.) 126; 4 Kent 462. See 6 Bac. Abr. 44; 1 Saund. 204, 322 a; Colburn v. Morrill, 117 Mass. 262, 19 Am. Rep. 415; Tunis v. Grandy, 22 Gratt. (Va.) 109; Hunter v. Reiley, 43 N. J. L. 480; Home Life Ins. Co. v. Sherman, 46 N. Y. 370. See MEASURE OF DAMAGES.

EVIDENCE. That which tends to prove or disprove any matter in question, or to influence the belief respecting it. Belief is produced by the consideration of something presented to the mind. The matter thus presented, in whatever shape it may come, and through whatever material organ it is derived, is evidence. Prof. Parker, Lectures on Medical Jurisprudence, in Dartmouth College.

The word evidence, in legal acceptation, includes all the means by which any alleged matter of fact, the truth of which is submitted to investigation, is established or disproved. 1 Greenl. Ev. c. I. § 1; Will, Cir. Ev. 1. Testimony is not synonymous with evidence; Harvey v. Smith, 17 Ind. 272; the latter is the more comprehensive term; Whart. Cr. L. § 783; and includes all that may be submitted to the jury whether it be the statement of witnesses, or the contents of papers, documents, or records, or the inspection of whatever the jury may be permitted to examine and consider during the trial; Will, Cir. Ev. 2; Jones v. Gregory, 48 Ill. App. 230.

The means sanctioned by law of ascertaining in a judicial proceeding the truth respecting a question of fact. Cal. Code Civ. Proc. § 1823. And the law of evidence is declared to be a collection of general rules established by law:

1. For declaring what is to be taken as true without proof.
2. For declaring the presumptions of law, both disputable and conclusive.
3. For the production of legal evidence.
4. For the exclusion of what is not legal.
5. For determining in certain cases the value and effect of evidence. Id. § 1825.

"The rules of evidence," says a discriminating writer, "are the maxims which the sagacity and experience of ages have established, as the best means of discriminating truth from error, and of contracting as far as possible the dangerous power of judicial discretion." Will, Cir. Ev. 2.

That which is legally submitted to a jury, to enable them to decide upon the questions in dispute, or issue, as pointed out by the pleadings, and distinguished from all comment and argument, is termed evidence. 1 Stark. Ev. pt. 1, § 3.

Evidence may be considered with reference to its instruments, its nature, its legal character, its effect, its object, and the modes of its introduction.

The instruments of evidence, in the legal acceptance of the term, are:

1. Judicial notice or recognition. There are divers things of which courts take judicial notice, without the introduction of proof by the parties: such as the territorial extent of their jurisdiction, local divisions of their own countries, seats of courts, all public matters directly concerning the general government, the ordinary course of nature, divisions of time, the meanings of words, and, generally, of whatever ought to be generally known in the jurisdiction. If the judge needs information on subjects, he will seek it from such sources as he deems authentic. See JUDICIAL NOTICE.

2. Public records; the registers of official transactions made by officers appointed for the purpose; as, the public statutes, the judgments and proceedings of courts, etc.

3. Judicial writings: such as inquisitions, depositions, etc.

4. Public documents having a semi-official character: as, the statute-books published under the authority of the government, documents printed by the authority of congress, etc.

5. Private writings: as, deeds, contracts, wills.

6. Testimony of witnesses.

7. Personal inspection, by the jury or tribunal whose duty it is to determine the matter in controversy: as, a view of the locality by the jury, to enable them to determine the disputed fact, or the better to understand the testimony, or inspection of any machine or weapon which is produced in the cause.

Real evidence is evidence of the thing or object which is produced in court. When, for instance, the condition or appearance of any thing or object is material to the issue, and the thing or object itself is produced in court for the inspection of the tribunal, with proper testimony as to its identity, and, if necessary, to show that it has existed since the time at which the issue in question arose, this object or thing becomes itself "real evidence" of its condition or appearance at the time in question. 1 Greenl. Ev. § 13 a, note. For a full discussion of this species of evidence, see Gaunt v. State, 50 N. J. L. 491, 14 Atl. 600.

There are rules prescribing the limits and regulating the use of these different instruments of evidence, appropriate to each class.

In its nature, evidence is direct, or presumptive, or circumstantial.

Direct evidence is that means of proof which tends to show the existence of a fact in question, without the intervention of the proof of any other fact.

It is that evidence which, if believed, establishes the truth of a fact in issue, and does not arise from any presumption. Evidence is direct and positive when the very facts in dispute are sworn to by those who have the actual knowledge of them by means of their senses. 1 Stark. Ev. 19; Tayl. Ev. 84. In one sense, there is but little direct or positive proof, or such proof as is acquired by means of one's own sense; all other evidence is presumptive; but, in common acceptance, direct and positive evidence is that which is communicated by one who has actual knowledge of the fact.

Extrinsic evidence is external evidence, or that which is not contained in the body of an agreement, contract, and the like.

It is a general rule that extrinsic evidence cannot be admitted to contradict, explain, vary, or change the terms of a contract or of a will, except in a latent ambiguity, or to rebut a resulting trust; Mann v. Mann, 14 Johns. (N. Y.) 1, 7 Am. Dec. 416; Spalding v. Huntington, 1 Day (Conn.) 8. Excepting where evidence is admissible to vary a written contract on the ground that it does not represent the actual contract between the parties. See Wigram, Extrinsic Evidence; 14 L. R. A. 459, note.

Presumptive evidence is that which shows the existence of one fact, by proof of the existence of another or others, from which the first may be inferred; because the fact or facts shown have a legitimate tendency to lead the mind to the conclusion that the fact exists which is sought to be proved.

Presumptive evidence has been divided into presumptions of law and presumptions of fact.

Presumptions of law, adopted from motives of public policy, are those which arise in certain cases by force of the rules of law, directing an inference to be drawn from proof of the existence of a particular fact or facts. They may be conclusive or inconclusive.

Conclusive presumptions are those which admit of no averment or proof to the contrary. Thus, the records of a court, except in some proceeding to amend them, are conclusive evidence of the matter there recorded, being presumed to be rightly made up.

Inconclusive or disputable presumptions of law are those where a fact is presumed to exist, either from the general experience of mankind, or from policy, or from proof of the existence of certain other facts, until something is offered to show the contrary. Thus, the law presumes a man to be sane until the contrary appears, and to be innocent of the commission of a crime until he is proved to be guilty. So, the existence of a person, or of a particular state of things, being shown, the law presumes the person or state of things to continue until something is offered to conflict with the presumption. See Best, Presumption, ch. II.

But the presumption of life may be rebutted by another presumption. Where a party has been absent from his place of residence for the term of seven years, without having been heard of, this raises a presumption of his death, until it is encountered by some evidence showing that he is actually alive, or was so within that period.

Presumptions of fact are not the subject of fixed rules, but are merely natural presumptions, such, as appear, from common experience, to arise from the particular circumstances of any case. Some of these are "founded upon a knowledge of the human character, and of the motives, passions, and feelings by which the mind is usually influenced." 1 Stark. Ev. 27.

They may be said to be the conclusions drawn by the mind from the natural connection of the circumstances disclosed in each case, or, in other words, from circumstantial evidence.

Circumstantial evidence is the proof of facts which usually attend other facts sought to be proved; that which is not direct evidence. For example, when a witness testifies that a man was stabbed with a knife, and that a piece of the blade was found in the wound, and it is found to fit exactly with another part of the blade found in the possession of the prisoner, the facts are directly attested, but they only prove circumstances; and hence this is called circumstantial evidence.

Circumstantial evidence is of two kinds, namely, certain and uncertain. It is certain when the conclusion in question necessarily follows: as, where a man had received a mortal wound, and it was found that the impression of a bloody left hand had been made on the left arm of the deceased, it was certain some other person than the deceased must have made such mark; 14 How. St. Tr. 1334. But it is uncertain whether the death was caused by suicide or by murder, and whether the mark of the bloody hand was made by the assassin, or by a friendly hand that came too late to the relief of the deceased.

Circumstantial evidence warrants a conviction in a criminal case, provided it is such as to exclude every reasonable hypothesis but that of guilt of the offence charged to the defendant, but it must always rise to that degree of convincing power which satisfies the mind beyond reasonable doubt of guilt. This can never be the case when the evidence, as produced, is entirely consistent with innocence in a given transaction; Hayes v. U. S., 169 Fed. 101, 94 C. C. A. 449. When the evidence can be reconciled either with the theory of innocence or of guilt, the law requires that the defendant be given the benefit of the doubt and that the theory of innocence be adopted; Vernon v. U. S., 146 Fed. 121, 76 C. C. A. 547, citing People v. Ward, 105 Cal. 335, 38 Pac. 945; Asbach v. Ry. Co., 74 la. 248, 37 N. W. 182; Smith v. Bank, 99 Mass. 605, 97 Am. Dec. 59. It is not a question of the weakest link of a chain, but the weakest strand of a rope cable; Ex parte Hayes, 6 Okl. Cr. 321, 118 Pac. 609.

While it has thus been contended that, in order to justify the inference of legal guilt from circumstantial evidence, the existence of the inculpatory facts must be absolutely incompatible with the innocence of the accused; Wills, Cir. Ev. 300; Stark. Ev. 160; 1 Crim. L. Mag. 234; State v. Miller, 9 Houst. (Del.) 564, 32 Atl. 137; other writers have held that the distinction between this species of evidence and that which is direct is merely one of logic, and of no practical significance; that all evidence is more or less circumstantial; all statements of witnesses, all conclusions of juries, are the results of inference; or as it was expressed by Gibson, C. J., "the difference being only in degree;" Com. v. Harman, 4 Pa. 269. See U. S. v. Gibert, 2 Sumn. 27, Fed. Cas. No. 15,204; Com. v. Harman, 4 Pa. 269; Whart. Cr. Ev. § 10. Even in its strictest sense, circumstantial evidence is legal evidence, and when it is satisfactory beyond reasonable doubt, a jury is bound to act upon it as if it were the most direct; 1 Greenl. Ev. § 13; 3 Rice, Ev. 544. See CIRCUMSTANCES; EVIDENCE.

Circumstantial evidence is sometimes used as synonymous with presumptive evidence, but not with strict accuracy; for presumptive evidence is not necessarily and in all cases what is usually understood by circumstantial evidence. The latter is that evidence which tends to prove a disputed fact by proof of other facts which have a legitimate tendency, from the laws of nature, the usual connection of things, and the ordinary transactions of business, etc., to lead the mind to a conclusion that the fact exists which is sought to be established. See 1 Stark. Ev. 478; Whart. Ev. 1, 2, 15.

A writer on this subject, already quoted, thus states the distinction: the word presumption, ex vi termini, imports an inference from facts known, based upon previous experience of the ordinary connection between the two, and, the word itself implies a certain relation between fact and inference. Circumstances, however, generally but not necessarily lead to particular inferences; for the facts may be indisputable, and yet their relation to the principal fact may be only apparent, not real; and even where the connection is real, the deduction may be erroneous. Circumstantial and presumptive evidence differ therefore as genus and species. Will, Cir. Ev. 17.

Presumptive evidence may sometimes be the result, to some extent, of any arbitrary rule—as in the case of the presumption of death after an absence of seven years without being heard of—derived by analogy from certain statutes.

The judge and the jury draw conclusions from circumstantial evidence, and find one fact from the existence of other facts shown to them,—some of the presumptions being so clear and certain that they have become fixed as rules of law, and others having greater or less weight according to the circumstances of the case, leaving the matter of fact inquired about in doubt until the proper tribunal to determine the question draws the conclusion.

In its legal character, evidence is primary or secondary, and prima facie or conclusive.

Primary evidence is the best evidence, or that proof which most certainly exhibits the true state of facts to which it relates. The law requires this, and rejects secondary or inferior evidence when it is attempted to be substituted for evidence of a higher or superior nature. For example, when a written contract has been entered into, and the object is to prove what it was, it is requisite to produce the original writing, if it is to be attained; and in that case no copy or other inferior evidence will be received.

This is a rule of policy, grounded upon a reasonable suspicion that the substitution of inferior for better evidence arises from sinister motives, and an apprehension that the best evidence, if produced would alter the case to the prejudice of the party. This rule relates not to the measure and quantity of evidence, but to its quality when compared with some other evidence of superior degree.

To this general rule there are several exceptions. 1. As it refers to the quality rather than to the quantity of evidence, it is evident that the fullest proof that every case admits of is not requisite: if, therefore, there are several eye-witnesses to a fact, it may be sufficiently proved by one only. 2. It is not always requisite, when the matter to be proved has been reduced to writing, that the writing should be produced: as, if the narrative of a fact to be proved has been committed to writing, it may yet be proved by parol evidence. A receipt for the payment of money, for example, will not exclude parol evidence of payment; 4 Esp. 213. And see 3 B. & Ald. 566; Meade v. Keane, 3 Cra. C. C. 51, Fed. Cas. No. 9,373; Bonesteel v. Gardner, 1 Dak. 372, 46 N. W. 590; Chapin v. Dobson, 78 N. Y. 82, 34 Am. Rep. 512. The evidence of a father and mother, cognizant of their child's birth, is primary evidence of its date or the age of the child, although there is a written record thereof in the family Bible; State v. Woods, 49 Kan. 237, 30 Pac. 520; Hawkins v. Taylor, 1 McCord (S. C.) 164; Hermann v. State, 73 Wis. 248, 41 N. W. 171, 9 Am. St. Rep. 789. A stenographer's notes of the testimony of a witness are not the best evidence of such testimony, so as to prevent any other person who was present from testifying in relation thereto; Brice v. Miller, 35 S. C. 537, 15 S. E. 272; Nasanowitz v. Hanf, 17 Misc. 157, 39 N. Y. Supp. 327. Documentary evidence is not the best evidence of marriage; People v. Perriman, 72 Mich. 184, 40 N. W. 425. Oral admissions of a party against himself as to the contents of a writing are primary evidence; Morey v. Hoyt, 62 Conn. 542, 26 Atl. 127, 19 L. R. A. 611.

Secondary evidence is that species of proof which is admissible when the primary evidence cannot be produced, and which becomes by that event the best evidence that can be adduced. Armstrong's Lessee v. Morgan, 3 Yeates (Pa.) 530.

But before such evidence can be allowed it must be clearly made to appear that the superior evidence is not to be had; Phillips v. O'Neal, 87 Ga. 727, 13 S. E. 819; Curtis v. Wilcox, 91 Mich. 229, 51 N. W. 992. The person who possesses it must be applied to, whether he be a stranger or the opposite party: in the case of a stranger, a subpoena and attachment, when proper, must be taken out and served; and in the case of a party, notice to produce such primary evidence must be proved before the secondary evidence will be admitted; Patton's Adm'rs v. Ash, 7 S. & R. (Pa.) 116; 3 B. & Ald. 296; Susquehanna & W. V. R. & Coal Co. v. Quick, 61 Pa. 328; Gallagher v. Assur. Corp., 149 Pa. 25, 24 Atl. 115; King Optical Co. v. Treat, 72 Mich. 599, 40 N. W. 912; 7 Exch. 639; Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Orr, 94 Ala. 602, 10 South. 167; De Barie v. Pardo, 6 Sadler (Pa.) 148, 8 Atl. 876, where this rule is discussed at large by Arnold, J., whose views were affirmed without an opinion. "If there are several sources of information of the same fact, it is not ordinarily necessary to show that all have been exhausted before secondary evidence can be resorted to." Smith v. Brown, 151 Mass. 338, 24 N. E. 31. See Kleimann v. Geiselmann, 45 Mo. App. 497; McCormick v. Anderson, 83 Ala. 401, 3 South. 796; McClure v. Campbell, 25 Neb. 57, 40 N. W. 595. Secondary evidence of the contents of a written contract is inadmissible in the absence of proper diligence to secure the original; Low v. Tandy, 70 Tex. 745, 8 S. W. 620; Whaun & Co. v. Atkinson, 84 Ala. 592, 4 South. 681. After proof of the due execution of the original, the contents should be proved by a counterpart, if there be one, for this is the next best evidence; and it seems that no evidence of a copy is admissible until proof has been given that the counterpart cannot be produced; 6 Term

236. If there be no counterpart, a copy may be proved in evidence by any witness who knows that it is a copy, from having compared it with the original; Meyer v. Barker, 6 Minn. (Pa.) 234; Buttrick v. Allen, 8 Mass. 273, 5 Am. Dec. 105. If regularly recorded, an office copy may be given in evidence. If there be no copy, the party may produce an abstract, or even give parol evidence of the contents of a deed; 6 Term 556. A transcribed telegraphic message which is actually delivered is primary evidence, and if lost or destroyed its contents may be proved by parol; Magie v. Herman, 50 Minn. 424, 52 N. W. 909, 36 Am. St. Rep. 660. See Terre Haute & I. R. Co. v. Stockwell, 118 Ind. 98, 20 N. E. 650; Anheuser-Busch Brewing Co. v. Hutmacher, 127 Ill. 632, 21 N. E. 626, 4 L. R. A. 575. Letterpress copies of writings are secondary evidence; Thompson-Houston Electric Co. v. Berg, 10 Tex. Civ. App. 200, 30 S. W. 454; and where there were such, next to the originals, they were the best evidence and oral evidence should have been rejected; Ford v. Cunningham, 87 Cal. 209, 25 Pac. 403; and as to copies of documents made by mechanical means, as originals, see 12 L. R. A. (N. S.) 343, note.

If books or papers necessary as evidence in the courts of one state be in the possession of a person living in another state, secondary evidence without further showing may be given to prove the contents of such papers, and notice to produce them is unnecessary; Burton v. Driggs, 20 Wall. (U. S.) 125, 22 L. Ed. 290. See Thomson-Houston Electric Co. v. Palmer, 52 Minn. 174, 53 N. W. 1137, 38 Am. St. Rep. 536. Where the attesting witness to a deed lives out of the state, secondary evidence of its execution is admissible; Trustees of Smith Charities v. Connolly, 157 Mass. 272, 31 N. E. 1058.

It has been decided in England that there are no degrees in secondary evidence; and when a party has laid the foundation for such evidence, he may prove the contents of a deed by parol, although it appear that an attested copy is in existence; 6 C. & P. 206; 8 id. 389; 7 M. & W. 102. It is urged on the one hand that the rule requiring the best evidence has reference to its nature, not to its strength, and the argument ab inconvenienti is invoked against the extension of the rule recognizing degrees. On the other hand it is contended that such an extension is an equitable one and rests on the same principle which forbids the introduction of any secondary evidence while the primary is available. English cases cited in favor of the recognition of degrees are said to be not so much decisions of the point as dicta, as they refer to it as a rule existing but not involved in the case; 2 Atk. 71; 1 Nev. & Per. 8. But in the latter case the rule is doubted, and in 6 C. & P. 359 impliedly denied by Pattenon, J., as it is also by Parke, J.; 6 C. & P. 81; id. 206. See 8 Dowl. 389;

3 Scott, N. R. 577. The question is not settled in the United States; Greenl. Ev. § 84, note; and the United States Supreme Court, declining to adopt the English rule without qualification, observe that the secondary evidence "must be the best the party has in his power to produce" and also that the rule of exclusion or admission must be so applied as to promote the ends of justice, and guard against fraud, surprise, and imposition; Cornett v. Williams, 20 Wall. (U. S.) 226, 22 L. Ed. 254. This doctrine was followed in Johnson v. Arnwine, 42 N. J. L. 453, 36 Am. Rep. 532; Jaques v. Horton, 76 Ala. 246. See Kentzler v. Kentzler, 3 Wash. 166, 28 Pac. 370, 28 Am. St. Rep. 21; Florida Cent. & P. R. Co. v. Bucki, 68 Fed. 864, 16 C. C. A. 42. The American doctrine seems to be "that if from the nature of the case itself it is manifest that a more satisfactory kind of secondary evidence exists, the party will be required to produce it; but that when the nature of the case does not of itself disclose the existence of such better evidence, the objector must not only prove its existence, but also must prove that it was known to the other party in time to have been produced at the trial;" 1 Gr. Ev. § 84, note; Lewis v. San Antonio, 7 Tex. 315; Lane v. Jones, 2 Cold. (Tenn.) 321; Harvey v. Thorpe, 28 Ala. 250, 65 Am. Dec. 344; Graham v. Campbell, 56 Ga. 258; Illinois Land & Loan Co. v. Bonner, 75 Ill. 315; Nason v. Jordan, 62 Me. 480; Winn v. Patterson, 9 Pet. (U. S.) 663, 9 L. Ed. 266.

Cases holding that there are no degrees in secondary evidence are Goodrich v. Weston, 102 Mass. 362, 3 Am. Rep. 469; Smith v. Brown, 151 Mass. 338, 24 N. E. 31; Dra. K. B. U. C. 357; at least unless it appears that there is better evidence than is offered; Eslow v. Mitchell, 26 Mich. 500. Cases holding that there are such degrees are Coman v. State, 4 Blackf. (Ind.) 241; Cornett v. Williams, 20 Wall. (U. S.) 226, 22 L. Ed. 254; Williams v. Waters, 36 Ga. 454, where it was said that the same rule applies as in the case of primary evidence; Dillon v. Howe, 98 Mich. 168, 57 N. W. 102.

Prima facie evidence is that which appears to be sufficient proof respecting the matter in question, until something appears to controvert it, but which may be contradicted or controlled.

Conclusive evidence is that which, while uncontradicted, establishes the fact: as in the instance of conclusive presumptions; it is also that which cannot be contradicted.

The record of a court of common law jurisdiction is conclusive as to the facts therein stated; Shelton v. Barbour, 2 Wash. (Va.) 64; Dennison v. Hyde, 6 Conn. 508. But the judgment and record of a prize-court is not conclusive evidence in the state courts, unless it had jurisdiction of the subject-matter; and whether it had or not, the state courts may decide; Slocum v. Wheeler, 1

Conn. 429. See, as to the conclusiveness of the judgments of foreign courts of admiralty; Maley v. Shattuck, 3 Cra. (U. S.) 458, 2 L. Ed. 498; Pollard v. Dwight, 4 Cra. (U. S.) 421, 2 L. Ed. 666; Croudson v. Leonard, 4 Cra. (U. S.) 434, 2 L. Ed. 670; Bourke v. Granberry, Gilm. (Va.) 16, 9 Am. Dec. 589; Groning v. Ins. Co., 1 Nott & McC. (S. C.) 537.

Evidence may be conclusive for some purposes but not for others.

Admissibility of evidence. In considering the legal character of evidence, we are naturally led to the rules which regulate its competency and admissibility, although it is not precisely accurate to say that evidence is in its legal character competent or incompetent; because what is incompetent for the consideration of the tribunal which is to pronounce the decision is not, strictly speaking, evidence.

But the terms incompetent evidence and inadmissible evidence are often used to designate what is not to be heard as evidence: as, witnesses are spoken of as competent or incompetent.

The admissibility of evidence is not affected by the fact that it was obtained by unfair means; Williams v. State, 100 Ga. 511, 28 S. E. 624, 39 L. R. A. 269; 14 East 302; Com. v. Dana, 2 Metc. (Mass.) 329; 1 Gr. Ev. § 254a; as when illegally seized by a public official; Starchman v. State, 62 Ark. 538, 36 S. W. 940; State v. Flynn, 36 N. H. 64; Com. v. Henderson, 140 Mass. 303, 5 N. E. 832; or a private detective; Gindrat v. People, 138 Ill. 103, 27 N. E. 1085; or surreptitiously taken by a person unknown; Firth Sterling Steel Co. v. Steel Co., 199 Fed. 353. But evidence was held to be inadmissible because obtained in violation of rights secured by the IVth and Vth Amendments of the Constitution either by production under order of the court; Boyd v. U. S., 116 U. S. 616, 6 Sup. Ct. 524, 29 L. Ed. 746; or by means of an illegal search by a custom officer; U. S. v. Wong Quong Wong, 94 Fed. 832. In criminal cases personal property is sometimes introduced in evidence as burglar's tools, appliances used in counterfeiting, gaming and the like. See SEARCH.

Evidence of experiments to throw light upon any question at issue is admissible or not, largely in the discretion of the trial court. Evidence of experiments made eight years after as to what sound could be heard through a wall, to show that a certain conversation could not have been heard through it, was rejected; Dow v. Bulfinch, 192 Mass. 281, 78 N. E. 416.

It is competent on a second trial of a civil case in a federal court, under the general rule, to prove the testimony given on the former trial by a witness who has since died, there being no federal statute on the subject; Nome Beach Lighterage & Transp. Co. v. Ins. Co., 156 Fed. 484; Mattox v. U. S., 156

U. S. 237, 15 Sup. Ct. 337, 39 L. Ed. 409; it is not necessary to prove the precise language of the deceased witness, but only to express clearly the substance; Ruch v. Rock Island, 97 U. S. 693, 24 L. Ed. 1101; and in a criminal case where the witness was dead and had been cross-examined, his evidence was held admissible; U. S. v. Macomb, 5 McLean 286, Fed. Cas. No. 15,702; Brown v. Com., 73 Pa. 326, 13 Am. Rep. 740; State v. Able, 65 Mo. 371; but where the proof was insufficient to connect the present respondent with the defense in the prior suit, the deposition of a deceased witness was held inadmissible; Rumford Chemical Works v. Chemical Co., 154 Fed. 65, 83 C. C. A. 177. The notes of testimony on a former trial by deceased and absent witnesses are admissible when the accuracy of the copy is agreed to; Emerson v. Burnett, 11 Colo. App. 86, 52 Pac. 752; or admitted; Chicago, St. P. M. & O. R. Co. v. Myers, 80 Fed. 365, 25 C. C. A. 486; but not when there is no proof of accuracy other than the certificate of the stenographer; Williams v. Min. Co., 37 Colo. 62, 86 Pac. 337, 7 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1170, 11 Ann. Cas. 111.

As the common law excludes certain classes of persons from giving testimony in particular cases, because it deems their exclusion conducive, in general, to the discovery of the truth, so it excludes certain materials and statements from being introduced as testimony in a cause, for a similar reason. Thus, as a general rule, it requires witnesses to speak to facts within their own knowledge, and excludes hearsay evidence.

Hearsay is the evidence, not of what the witness knows himself, but of what he has heard from others.

It is the general rule that hearsay is inadmissible; Central Pac. R. Co. v. Feldman, 152 Cal. 303, 92 Pac. 849; and evidence which appears to be hearsay should be excluded; Moore v. Maxwell & Delhomme, 155 Ala. 299, 46 South. 755; so also facts which the witness could know only by hearsay are inadmissible. See HEARSAY.

Such mere recitals or assertions cannot be received in evidence for many reasons, but principally for the following: First, that the party making such declarations is not on oath; and, secondly, because the party against whom it operates has no opportunity of cross-examination; 1 Phil. Ev. 185. See, for other reasons, 1 Stark. Ev. pt. 1, p. 44; Tayl. Ev. 508. The general rule excluding hearsay evidence does not apply to those declarations to which the party is privy, or to admissions which he himself has made.

Many facts, from their very nature, either absolutely or usually exclude direct evidence to prove them, being such as are either necessarily or usually imperceptible by the senses, and therefore incapable of the ordinary means of proof. These are questions of pedigree or relationship, character, prescription, custom, boundary, and the like; as also questions which depend upon the exercise of particular skill and judgment. Such facts, some from their nature, and others from their antiquity, do not admit of the ordinary and direct means of proof by living witnesses: and, consequently, resort must be had to the best means of proof which the nature of the case affords. The rule permitting a resort to hearsay evidence, however, in cases of pedigree extends only to the admission of declarations by deceased persons who were related by blood or marriage to the person in question, and not to declarations by servants, friends, or neighbors; Flora v. Anderson, 75 Fed. 217. And "general reputation in the family," which is admissible in matters of pedigree, or to establish the facts of birth, marriage, or death, is confined to declarations of deceased members of the family, and family history and traditions handed down by declarations of deceased members, in either case made ante litem motam, and originating with persons presumed to have competent knowledge of the facts stated; and evidence of the opinion or belief of living members of a family as to the death of another member, or of general reputation among a person's living friends and acquaintances as to his death, is not within the rule, and is inadmissible; In re Hurlburt's Estate, 68 Vt. 366, 35 Atl. 77, 35 L. R. A. 794. See BOUNDARY; CUSTOM; PEDIGREE; PRESCRIPTION.

Admissions are the declarations which a party by himself, or those who act under his authority, make of the existence of certain facts. But where an admission is made the foundation of a claim, the whole statement must be taken together; Perkins v. Lane, 82 Va. 59. See Bryan v. Kelly, 85 Ala. 569, 5 South. 346; ADMISSIONS.

A statement of all the distinctions between what is to be regarded as hearsay and what is to be deemed original evidence would extend this article too far. The general principle is that the mere declaration, oral or written, of a third person, as to a fact, standing alone, is inadmissible.

Res gestæ. But where evidence of an act done by a party is admissible, his declarations made at the time, having a tendency to elucidate or give a character to the act, and which may derive a degree of credit from the act itself, are also admissible, as part of the res gestæ; Sessions v. Little, 9 N. H. 271; Steph. Dig. Ev. §§ 2, 7. See RES GESTÆ.

So, declarations of third persons, in the presence and hearing of a person, which tend to affect his interest, may be shown in order to introduce his answer or to show an admission by his silence, but this species of evidence must be received with great caution; 1 Greenl. Ev. 236.

Confessions of guilt in criminal cases come within the class of admissions, provided they have been voluntarily made and have not been obtained by the hope of favor or by the fear of punishment. And if made under such inducements as to exclude them, a subsequent declaration to the same effect, made after the inducement has ceased to operate, and having no connection with the hopes or fears which have existed, is admissible as evidence; State v. Howard, 17 N. H. 171. Actions as well as verbal declarations may constitute a confession, and the same rule as to admissibility applies to both; State v. Crowson, 98 N. C. 595, 4 S. E. 143. There is, however, a growing unwillingness to rest convictions on confessions unless supported by corroborating circumstances, and in all cases there must be at least proof of the corpus delicti, independently of the confession; 1 Whart. Cr. Law, § 683; Cooley, Const. Lim. 385; Tayl. Ev. 744. See ADMISSIONS; CONFESSION; RES GESTÆ.

Dying declarations are an exception to the rule excluding hearsay evidence, and are admitted, under certain limitations in cases of homicide, so far as the circumstances attending the death and its cause are the subject of them. See DECLARATION; DYING DECLARATIONS.

Opinions of persons of skill and experience, called experts, are also admissible in certain cases, when, in order to the better understanding of the evidence or to the solution of the question, a certain skill and experience are required which are not ordinarily possessed by jurors. A non-expert witness on the question of the sanity of one accused of crime "after stating such particulars as he can remember,—generally only the more striking facts,— . . . is permitted to sum up the total remembered and unremembered impressions of the senses by stating the opinion which they produced;" Queenan v. Oklahoma, 190 U. S. 548, 23 Sup. Ct. 762, 47 L. Ed. 1175. See EXPERT; OPINION.

In several instances proof of facts is excluded from public policy; as professional communications between lawyer and client, and physician and patient; secrets of state, proceedings of grand juror, and communications between husband and wife. See CONFIDENTIAL COMMUNICATIONS; PRIVILEGED COMMUNICATIONS.

The effect of evidence. As a general rule, a judgment rendered by a court of competent jurisdiction directly upon a point in issue is a bar between the same parties; 1 Phill. Ev. 242; and privies in blood, as an heir; 3 Mod. 141; or privies in estate; 1 Ld. Raym. 730; Bull. N. P. 232, stand in the same situation as those they represent: the verdict and judgment may be used for or against them, and is conclusive. See RES JUDICATA; JUDGMENT.

The constitution of the United States, art. 4, s. 1, declares that "full faith and credit shall be given in each state to the public acts, records, and judicial proceedings of every other state. And congress may, by general laws, prescribe the manner in which such acts, records, and proceedings shall be proved, and the effect thereof." See Hamp-ton v. McConnel, 3 Wheat. (U. S.) 234, 4 L. Ed. 378; Com. v. Green, 17 Mass. 546; Stephenson v. Bannister, 3 Bibb (Ky.) 369; Manwaring v. Griffing, 5 Day (Conn.) 563; Hilton v. Guyot, 159 U. S. 113, 16 Sup. Ct. 139, 40 L. Ed. 95; Ritchie v. McMullen, 159 U. S. 235, 16 Sup. Ct. 171, 40 L. Ed. 133; 2 Black, Judg. § 857; FOREIGN JUDGMENT.

Statutes defining what shall be held conclusive are, in general, unconstitutional, as a deprivation of due process of law, and as depriving the courts of their function of determining the weight and sufficiency of evidence; Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co. v. Minnesota, 134 U. S. 418, 10 Sup. Ct. 462, 702, 33 L. Ed. 970; Missouri, K. & T. R. Co. v. Simmonson, 64 Kan. 802, 68 Pac. 653, 57 L. R. A. 765, 91 Am. St. Rep. 248; Cairo & F. R. Co. v. Parks, 32 Ark. 131; Wantlan v. White, 19 Ind. 470; Meyer v. Berlandi, 39 Minn. 438, 40 N. W. 513, 1 L. R. A. 777, 12 Am. St. Rep. 663; Cooley Const. Lim. (5th ed.) 453; but the legislature may make the deliberate statement of a party conclusive evidence against him; Orient Ins. Co. v. Daggs, 172 U. S. 557, 19 Sup. Ct. 281, 43 L. Ed. 552.

Foreign laws must be proved as facts in the courts of this country, and mere citations to English statutes and authorities cannot be accepted as showing the English law; Dickerson v. Matheson, 50 Fed. 73. See FOREIGN LAW. For the force and effect of foreign judgments, see FOREIGN JUDGMENT.

The object of evidence is next to be considered. It is to ascertain the truth between the parties. It has been discovered by experience that this is done most certainly by the adoption of the following rules, which are now binding as law: 1. The evidence must be confined to the point in issue. 2. The substance of the issue must be proved; but only the substance is required to be proved. 3. The affirmative of the issue must be proved.

It is a general rule, both in civil and criminal cases, that the evidence shall be confined to the point in issue. Justice and convenience require the observance of this rule, particularly in criminal cases; for when a prisoner is charged with an offence it is of the utmost importance to him that the facts laid before the jury should consist exclusively of the transaction which forms the subject of the indictment, and which alone he has come prepared to answer; 2 Russ. Cr. 694; 1 Phill. Ev. 166.

To this general rule there are several exceptions, and a variety of cases which do not fall within the rule. In general, evidence of collateral facts is not admissible; but when such a fact is material to the issue joined between the parties, it may be given in evidence: as, for example, in order to prove that the acceptor of a bill knew the payee to be a fictitious person, or that the drawer had general authority from him to fill up bills with the name of a fictitious payee, evidence may be given to show that he had accepted similar bills before they could, from their date, have arrived from the place of date; 2 H. Bla. 288.

When special damage sustained by the plaintiff is not stated in the declaration, it is not one of the points in issue, and, therefore, evidence of it cannot be received; yet a damage which is a necessary result of the defendant's breach of contract may be proved notwithstanding it is not in the declaration; 11 Price 19.

In general, evidence of the character of either party to a suit is inadmissible; yet in some cases such evidence may be given. See CHARACTER.

When evidence incidentally applies to another person or thing not included in the transaction in question, and with regard to whom or to which it is inadmissible, yet if it bear upon the point in issue it will be received; 8 Bing. 376. And see 4 B. & P. 92; State v. Watkins, 9 Conn. 47, 21 Am. Dec. 712; 1 Whart. Cr. Law § 649.

The acts of others, as in the case of conspirators, may be given in evidence against the prisoner, when referable to the issue; but confessions made by one of several conspirators after the offence has been completed, and when the conspirators no longer act in concert, cannot be received. See Livermore v. Herschell, 3 Pick. (Mass.) 33; Mackaboy v. Com., 2 Va. Cas. 269; Reitenbach v. Reitenbach, 1 Rawle (Pa.) 362, 18 Am. Dec. 638; Wilbur v. Strickland, 1 Rawle (Pa.) 458; Martin v. Com., 2 Leigh (Va.) 745; Gardner v. Preston, 2 Day (Conn.) 205, 2 Am. Dec. 91; 2 B. & Ald. 573, 574; Perigo v. State, 25 Tex. App. 533, 8 S. W. 660; CONSPIRACY; CONFESSION.

In criminal cases, when the offence is a cumulative one, consisting itself in the commission of a number of acts, evidence of those acts is not only admissible, but essential to support the charge. On an indictment against a defendant for a conspiracy to cause himself to be believed a man of large property, for the purpose of defrauding tradesmen after proof of a representation to one tradesman, evidence may thereupon be given of a representation to another tradesman at a different time; 1 Campb. 390; Gardner v. Preston, 2 Day (Conn.) 205, 2 Am. Dec. 91; Snell v. Moses, 1 Johns. (N. Y.) 99.

Evidence of similar occurrences is admissible, to show the quality of the act, in many cases, as the value of land, the dangerous character of a drug, or the reasonableness of the act; 17 Harv. L. Rev. 349, where the principles regulating the subject are discussed, and the decisions are said to be chaotic and arbitrary, as a result of the rule that the admissibility is made to depend on the opinion of the judge as to whether it raises a multiplicity of issues or occasions undue surprise. In civil cases such evidence seems to be admitted in very few instances. It is inadmissible to prove negligence; Missouri, K. & T. Ry. Co. v. Johnson, 92 Tex. 380, 48 S. W. 568; but, to prove due care, evidence of a general custom of switchmen to ride on the side of a freight car was admitted; Boyce v. Lumber Co., 119 Wis. 642, 97 N. W. 563. So it has been admitted to prove similarity of conditions, as the effect of the passing of trains over a certain curve; Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Saudlin, 125 Ala. 585, 28 South. 40; or the supply of gas to other houses, where the appliances were such as to furnish as much or more gas than those in dispute; Indiana Natural & Illuminating Gas Co. v. Anthony, 26 Ind. App. 307, 58 N. E. 868; or the relative quantity of water obtained under similar conditions in other pastures, where the action was for an insufficient supply in the case of a contract to pasture cattle; Tuttle v. Robert Moody & Son (Tex.) 94 S. W. 134. In criminal cases such evidence is admissible to show mental condition; [1899] 1 Q. B. D. 77; 12 Cox, C. C. 612; Com. v. Coe, 115 Mass. 481, 501. In prosecutions for crime, evidence of similar offences is not admissible except for the purpose of showing the intent; Topolewski v. State, 130 Wis. 244, 109 N. W. 1037, 7 L. R. A. (N. S.) 756, 118 Am. St. Rep. 1019, 10 Ann. Cas. 627; Lightfoot v. People, 16 Mich. 507; Olson v. U. S., 133 Fed. 849, 67 C. C. A. 21; U. S. v. Flemming, 18 Fed. 907; Dillard v. U. S., 141 Fed. 303, 72 C. C. A. 451; Com. v. Russell, 156 Mass. 196, 30 N. E. 763; Packer v. U. S., 106 Fed. 906, 46 C. C. A. 35; Brown v. U. S., 142 Fed. 1, 73 C. C. A. 187; or some element of the present charge; Paulson v. State, 118 Wis. 89, 94 N. W. 771; but evidence of previous offences is not admissible to raise the presumption of present guilt; Lightfoot v. People, 16 Mich. 507; 2 Can. L. Rev. 689; 20 Harv. L. Rev. 151; but evidence otherwise admissible is not rendered inadmissible merely because likely to raise a prejudice; [1894] A. C. 57; and when a guilty knowledge or intent is an essential part of the offence, commission of similar acts may be proved to raise an inference of such knowledge or intent; 2 Can. L. Rev. 690; where a prisoner had passed a counterfeit dollar, evidence that he had other counterfeit dollars in his possession is evidence to prove the guilty knowledge; State v. Odel, 2 Const. (S. C.) 758; State v. Antonio, id. 776; State v. Houston, 1 Bail. (S. C.) 300; Martin v. Com., 2 Leigh (Va.) 745; People v. Lagrille, 1 Wheel. Cr. Cas. (N. Y.) 415; Russ. & R. 132; Finn v. Com., 5 Rand. (Va.) 701; and when a wife was tried for poisoning her husband by arsenic, evidence was admitted of the death of two sons and similar illness of the third from same cause, to show that the husband died of arsenical poisoning, and not accidentally; 18 L. J. M. C. 215; 15 Cox, Cr. C. 403; and see People v. Molineaux, 168 N. Y. 264, 61 N. E. 286, 62 L. R. A. 193, where both in the opinions and in an extended note the subject is discussed from every point of view, and the cases are collected.

Where the crime charged is part of a plan or system of criminal action, evidence of other crimes near to it in time, and of similar character, is relevant and admissible to show the knowledge and intent of the accused, and that the act charged was not the result of accident or inadvertence; Griggs v. U. S., 158 Fed. 572, 85 C. C. A. 596; or where the other and independent criminal acts of themselves form the motive for committing the crime alleged in the case on trial; Thompson v. U. S., 144 Fed. 14, 75 C. C. A. 172, 7 Ann. Cas. 62; or is an incident to, or part of, or leads up to the latter; People v. McLaughlin, 150 N. Y. 365, 44 N. E. 1017; but as such evidence, if wrongfully admitted, would greatly prejudice the prisoner, its relevancy should be carefully scrutinized; Com. v. Shepard, 1 Allen (Mass.) 575, 581; hence its admission upon an issue as to which it is not relevant will be prejudicial and therefore reversible error; People v. Collins, 144 Mich. 121, 107 N. W. 1114.

The substance of the issue joined between the parties must be proved; 1 Phill. Ev. 190; Tayl. Ev. 233. Under this rule will be considered the quantity of evidence required to support particular averments in the declaration or indictment.

And, first, of civil cases. 1. It is a fatal variance in a contract if it appear that a party who ought to have been joined as plaintiff has been omitted; 1 Saund. 291 h, n.; 2 Term 282; and so where a bill for specific performance alleges the execution of a contract in a certain year, and the proof shows that it was made in another; Johnston v. Jones, 85 Ala. 286, 4 South. 748. But it is no variance to omit a person who might have been joined as defendant; because the non-joinder ought to have been pleaded in abatement; 1 Saund. 291 d, n. 2. The consideration of the contract must be proved; but it is not necessary for the plaintiff to set out in his declaration, or prove on the trial, the several parts of a contract consisting of distinct and collateral provisions: it is sufficient to state so much of the contract as contains the entire consideration of the act, and the entire act to be done in virtue of such consideration, including the time, manner, and other circumstances of its performance; 6 East 568; 4 B. & Ald. 387.

Second. In criminal cases, it may be laid down that it is, in general, sufficient to prove what constitutes the offence. 1. It is enough to prove so much of the indictment as shows that the defendant has committed a substantive crime therein specified; 2 Campb. 585; U. S. v. Vickery, 1 H. & J. (Md.) 427, Fed. Cas. No. 16,619. See Daniels v. State, 78 Ga. 98, 6 Am. St. Rep. 238; People v. Wakeley, 62 Mich. 297, 28 N. W. 871. If a man be indicted for robbery, he may be found guilty of larceny and not guilty of the robbery; 2 Hale, Pl. Cr. 302. The offence of which the party is convicted must, however, be of the same class with that of which he is charged; 1 Leach 14; 2 Stra. 1133.

2. When the intent of the prisoner furnishes one of the ingredients in the offence, and several intents are laid in the indictment, each of which, together with the act done, constitutes an offence, it is sufficient to prove one intent only; 3 Stark. 35.

3. When a person or thing necessary to be mentioned in an indictment is described with circumstances of greater particularity than is requisite, yet those circumstances must be proved; U. S. v. Porter, 3 Day (Conn.) 283, Fed. Cas. No. 16,074; Clark v. State, 26 Tex. App. 486, 9 S. W. 767. For example, if a party be charged with stealing a black horse, the evidence must correspond with the averment, although it was unnecessary to make it; Hooker v. State, 4 Ohio 350; Berrien v. State, 83 Ga. 381, 9 S. E. 609; but see People v. Monteith, 73 Cal. 7, 14 Pac. 373, where an indictment charging a murder with a "bludgeon" is supported by proof that death was produced by a blow with a bolt or club; Long v. State, 23 Neb. 33, 36 N. W. 310. See State v. Weddington, 103 N. C. 364, 9 S. E. 577; Douglass v. State, 26 Tex. App. 109, 9 S. W. 489, 8 Am. St. Rep. 459.

4. The name of the prosecutor or party injured must be proved as laid; and the rule is the same with reference to the name of a third person introduced into the indictment, as descriptive of some person or thing. See Robinson v. Com., 88 Ky. 386, 11 S. W. 210, 10 Ky. L. Rep. 972; State v. Quinlan, 40 Minn. 55, 41 N. W. 299.

The affirmative of the issue must be proved. The general rule with regard to the burden of proving the issue requires that the party who asserts the affirmative should prove it. But this rule ceases to operate the moment the presumption of law is thrown into the other scale. When the issue is on the legitimacy of a child, therefore, it is incumbent on the party asserting the illegitimacy to prove it; 2 Selw. N. P. 709. Or where an answer admits all the averments of the complaint, and sets up a counter-claim as a defence, the affirmative of all the issues raised by the pleadings is on the defendant; Hamilton Coal Co. v. Bernhard, 61 Hun 624, 16 N. Y. Supp. 55. See ONUS PROBANDI; PRESUMPTION; U. S. v. Hayward, 2 Gall. 485, Fed. Cas. No. 15,336; State v. Geuing, 1 McCord (S. C.) 573; 2 So. L. Rev. (N. S.) 126; Delachaise v. Maginnis, 44 La. Ann. 1043, 11 South. 715.

Modes of proof. Records are to be proved by an exemplification, duly authenticated according to law, in all cases where the issue is nul tiel record. In other cases, an examined copy, duly proved, will, in general, be evidence; Leathers v. Wrecking, etc., Co., 2 Woods 680, Fed. Cas. No. 8,164. Foreign laws are proved in the mode pointed out under the article FOREIGN LAW. See supra.

Incompetent and irrelevant evidence cannot be rendered competent and relevant by being contained in an official document; U. S. v. Corwin, 129 U. S. 381, 9 Sup. Ct. 318, 32 L. Ed. 710.

Private writings are proved by producing the attesting witness; or in case of his death, absence, or other legal inability to testify, as if after attesting the paper he becomes infamous, his handwriting may be proved. When there is no witness to the instrument, it may be proved by the evidence of the handwriting of the party, by a person who has seen him write, or who in a course of correspondence or business relations has become acquainted with his hand. See Muuns v. De Nemours, 3 Wash. C. C. 31, Fed. Cas. No. 9,926; Arnold v. Gorr, 1 Rawle (Pa.) 223; 4 Am. L. Rev. 625; Berg v. Peterson, 49 Minn. 420, 52 N. W. 37. As to the question whether the genuineness of a signature may be proved or disproved by comparison, or the signature to documents not a part of the case be proven for the purpose of using them as standards of comparison with the signature to the instrument sued on, see HANDWRITING.

Books of original entry, when duly proved, are prima facie evidence of goods sold and delivered, and of work and labor done. See ORIGINAL ENTRY.

A full opinion laid down some general rules in relation to the use of the ballots as evidence in an election contest, which present the law in that regard in a very terse and lucid form. It holds (1) that one who has received a certificate of election to office is not estopped in case of contest from going behind the returns from ballot boxes which were counted without objection by either party, and which formed the basis of the certificate; (2) that in an election contest, the ballots of a certain box, which had been opened before a legislative committee after the election, are admissible when it appears that the opportunity for the ballots to have been tampered with was a mere possibility; and (3) that the fact that a discrepancy exists between the returns of the votes counted from that ballot box and a recount made by the court in an election contest does not indicate that there was any alteration in the ballots after being voted, nor tend to cast suspicion thereon, when the evidence shows that, when the count was concluded by the election officers, there were discrepancies between the tally sheets of the different clerks of the election, which it was attempted to reconcile by guessing at the result, and making changes accordingly; Henderson v. Albright, 12 Tex. Civ. App. 368, 34 S. W. 992. See ELECTION.

Proof by witnesses. The testimony of witnesses is called oral evidence, or that which is given viva voce, as contradistinguished from that which is written or documentary. Testimony is oral evidence as distinguished from documentary or written. Proof is the effect of evidence and evidence is the means or medium of proof; Elliot, Ev. § 9, and cases cited. It is a general rule that oral evidence shall in no case be received as equivalent to, or as a substitute for, a written instrument, where the latter is required by law; or to give effect to a written instrument which is defective in any particular which by law is essential to its validity; or to contradict, alter, or vary a written instrument, either appointed by law, or by the contract of the parties, to be the appropriate and authentic memorial of the particular facts it recites; for by doing so, oral testimony would be admitted to usurp the place of evidence decidedly superior in degree; Christ v. Diefenbach, 1 S. & R. (Pa.) 464, 7 Am. Dec. 624; Querry v. White, 1 Bibb (Ky.) 271; Stackpole v. Arnold, 11 Mass. 30, 6 Am. Dec. 150; Barber v. Brace, 3 Conn. 9, 8 Am. Dec. 149; Chemical Electric Light & Power Co. v. Howard, 150 Mass. 496, 23 N. E. 317; Butler v. Trust Co., 122 Ga. 371, 50 S. E. 132; Colton v. Vandervolgen, 87 Ind. 361; Charlton Ice Co. v. Ice Co., 129 Ia. 523, 105 N. W. 1014; O'Connor v. Green, 60 App. Div. 553, 60 N. Y. Supp. 1097; Town of Kane v. Farrelly, 192 Ill. 521, 61 N. E. 648; Milwaukee Carnival Ass'n v. King Co., 112 Wis. 647, 88 N. W. 598; Northern Assur. Co. v. Building Ass'n, 183 U. S. 308, 22 Sup. Ct. 133, 46 L. Ed. 213 (where many cases are considered), criticised, 15 Harv. L. Rev. 575; but this rule does not apply in suits between persons not parties to the writing; Williams v. Fisher, 8 Misc. 314, 28 N. Y. Supp. 739; Clapp v. Banking Co., 50 Ohio St. 528, 35 N. E. 308; Brown v. Thurber, 77 N. Y. 613; Kellogg v. Tompson, 142 Mass. 76, 6 N. E. 860.

But parol evidence is admissible to defeat a written instrument, on the ground of fraud, mistake, etc., or to apply it to its proper subject-matter, or, in some instances, as ancillary to such application, to explain the meaning of doubtful terms, or to rebut presumptions arising extrinsically. Such evidence is admissible if the contract was obtained by fraud; Cass v. Brown, 68 N. H. 85, 44 Atl. 86; Cushwa v. Imp. Loan & Bldg. Ass'n, 45 W. Va. 490, 32 S. E. 259; McCrary v. Pritchard, 119 Ga. 876, 47 S. E. 341; Moore v. Harmon, 142 Ind. 555, 41 N. E. 599; or false representations; Machin v. Trust Co., 210 Pa. 253, 59 Atl. 1073; Davis v. Driscoll, 22 Tex. Civ. App. 14, 54 S. W. 43; or if the written contract is ambiguous or obscure so that the intent of the parties cannot be ascertained; Jacobs v. Parodi, 50 Fla. 541, 39

South. 833; Leverett v. Bullard, 121 Ga. 531, 49 S. E. 591; Stone v. Mulvaine, 217 Ill. 40, 75 N. E. 421; Gregory v. Lake Linden, 130 Mich. 368, 90 N. W. 29; but the ambiguity must be a latent one; Okie v. Person, 23 App. D. C. 170; Hogan v. Wallace, 166 Ill. 328, 46 N. E. 1136; Camden & T. R. Co. v. Adams, 62 N. J. Eq. 656, 51 Atl. 24; Armstrong v. Ferguson, 54 N. Y. 659; if patent on the face of the deed, parol evidence is not admissible; Storer v. Freeman, 6 Mass. 435, 4 Am. Dec. 155; Holman v. Whitaker, 119 N. C. 113, 25 S. E. 793; Gatewood v. Burrus, 3 Call (Va.) 194. Where the contract is obscurely expressed, so that a knowledge of the subject-matter and relation of the parties becomes necessary, parol evidence, as to that, may be admitted; Black River Lumber Co. v. Warner, 93 Mo. 374, 6 S. W. 210; so also it may be admitted to show the meaning of words used, where they have some other than the ordinary sense; Richmond Union Pass. R. Co. v. R. Co., 95 Va. 386, 28 S. E. 573; McIntosh v. Miner, 53 App. Div. 240, 65 N. Y. Supp. 735; Wilcox v. Baer, 85 Mo. App. 587; or the identification of parties, where that does not appear certain by the instrument, as that the grantees in a deed were husband and wife; McLaughlin v. Rice, 185 Mass. 212, 70 N. E. 52, 102 Am. St. Rep. 339; Aplin v. Fisher, 84 Mich. 128, 47 N. W. 574; or that the words "bodily heirs" meant children; Edins v. Murphree, 142 Ala. 617, 38 South. 639; or that one of the contractors was a partnership and not a corporation; Hubbard v. Chappel, 14 Ind. 601; or where the identity of the parties is not clear; Haskell v. Tukesbury, 92 Me. 551, 43 Atl. 500, 60 Am. St. Rep. 529; or where a signature is made with initials only; Sanborn v. Flagler, 9 Allen (Mass.) 474; or to establish the liability of an undisclosed principal; City Trust, Safe-Deposit & Surety Co. of Philadelphia v. Brewing Co., 174 N. Y. 486, 67 N. E. 62; Smith v. Felter, 63 N. J. L. 30, 42 Atl. 1053; Heywood Bros. & Wakefield Co. v. Andrews, 89 Ill. App. 195; Belt v. Power Co., 24 Wash. 387, 64 Pac. 525; contra, Vail v. Life Ins. Co., 192 Ill. 567, 61 N. E. 651; Finan v. Babcock, 58 Mich. 301, 25 N. W. 294; David Belasco Co. v. Klaw, 48 Misc. 597, 97 N. Y. Supp. 712; or whether the notes were made by individuals or a firm; In re L. B. Weisenberg & Co., 131 Fed. 517; Huguenot Mills v. George F. Jempson & Co., 68 S. C. 363, 47 S. E. 687, 102 Am. St. Rep. 673; Markham v. Cover, 99 Mo. App. 83, 72 S. W. 474; Daugherty v. Heckard, 189 Ill. 239, 59 N. E. 569; or where two persons have the same name; Simpson v. Dix, 131 Mass. 179; or there is a mistake or variance in the name; Hicks v. Ivey, 99 Ga. 648, 26 S. E. 68; or where evidence is necessary to identify the subject-matter; Ætna Ins. Co. v. Strout, 16 Ind. App. 160, 44 N. E. 934; Axford v. Meeks, 59 N. J. L. 502, 36 Atl. 1036; and, in some cases, evidence of conversations between the parties during negotiations is competent to show the construction of the contract; Hart v. Thompson, 10 App. Div. 183, 41 N. Y. Supp. 909; or to explain an ambiguity; Sabin v. Kendrick, 58 App. Div. 108, 68 N. Y. Supp. 546; Wright v. Gas Co., 2 Pa. Super. Ct. 219; Wussow v. Hase, 108 Wis. 382, 84 N. W. 433; but not to change the terms of the contract; Hart v. Hart, 117 Wis. 639, 94 N. W. 890.

But parol evidence is not admissible to contradict the terms of the agreement or show the intent of the parties; Delaware Indians v. Cherokee Nation, 193 U. S. 127, 24 Sup. Ct. 342, 48 L. Ed. 646; Packer v. Roberts, 140 Ill. 671, 29 N. E. 668; Willis v. Weeks, 129 Ia. 525, 105 N. W. 1012; or to construe a term which may be done without extrinsic evidence; Sullivan v. R. Co., 138 Ala. 650, 35 South. 694; or to explain away or destroy the effect of the agreement; King v. Ins. Co., 45 Ind. 43.

Extrinsic evidence is inadmissible to contradict or control court records; Bent v. Stone, 184 Mass. 92, 68 N. E. 46; Marrow v. Brinkley, 85 Va. 55, 6 S. E. 605, in which an appeal was dismissed; Marrow v. Brinkley, 129 U. S. 178, 9 Sup. Ct. 267, 32 L. Ed. 654; Cook v. Penrod, 111 Mo. App. 128, 85 S. W. 676; or to supply, extend or modify the record of judicial action by a municipal board; Kidson v. City of Bangor, 99 Me. 139, 58 Atl. 900; and this rule extends to official records generally; Ferguson v. Brown, 75 Miss. 214, 21 South. 603; Austin v. Rodman, 8 N. C. 71; legislative journals and records; Auditor General v. Board, 89 Mich. 552, 51 N. W. 483; Wilson v. Markley, 133 N. C. 616, 45 S. E. 1023; municipal records; Chippewa Bridge Co. v. Durand, 122 Wis. 85, 99 N. W. 603, 106 Am. St. Rep. 931; corporation records; State v. Hancock, 2 Pennewill (Del.) 252, 45 Atl. 851 (at least in the absence of fraud or mistake); Snyder v. Lindsey, 157 N. Y. 616, 52 N. E. 592; contra, Rose v. Independent Chevra Kadisho, 215 Pa. 69, 64 Atl. 401; Hequem-bourg v. Edwards, 155 Mo. 514, 56 S. W. 490. If there be no fraud, accident, or mistake, a deed cannot be contradicted or varied by parol evidence; Kruse v. Koelzer, 124 Wis. 536, 102 N. W. 1072; Wishart v. Gerhart, 105 Mo. App. 112, 78 S. W. 1094; nor can an official deed; Bower v. Chess & Wymand Co., 83 Miss. 218, 35 South. 444; Wells v. Savannah, 181 U. S. 531, 21 Sup. Ct. 697, 45 L. Ed. 986; or a sealed instrument generally; Finck v. Bauer, 40 Misc. 218, 81 N. Y. Supp. 625.

See a "Brief History of the Parol Evidence Rule," by Wigmore; 4 Colum. L. Rev. 338; 20 L. Q. R. 245; 9 L. R. A. (N. S.) 967, note; [1898] 2 Q. B. 487; also as to contracts against public policy and good in part; 16 Y. L. J. 531; and where the writing was delivered conditionally; 18 L. R. A. (N. S.) 434, note.

In these cases, the parol evidence does not usurp the place, or arrogate the authority of written evidence, but either shows that the instrument ought not to be allowed to operate at all, or is essential in order to give to the instrument its legal effect; Smith v. Williams, 5 N. C. 426, 4 Am. Dec. 564; White v. Eagan, 1 Bay (S. C.) 247; Querry v. White, 1 Bibb (Ky.) 271; Stackpole v. Arnold, 11 Mass. 30, 6 Am. Dec. 150. See Gilpins v. Consequa, Pet. C. C. 85, Fed. Cas. No. 5,452; Barnet v. Gilson, 3 S. & R. (Pa.) 340; Otis v. Von Storch, 15 R. I. 41, 23 Atl. 39; Olds v. Conger, 1 Okl. 232, 32 Pac. 337; Bradley Fertilizer Co. v. Caswell, 65 Vt. 231, 26 Atl. 956; Bulkeley v. House, 62 Conn. 450, 26 Atl. 352, 21 L. R. A. 247; O'Leary v. McDonough, 2 Misc. 219, 23 N. Y. Supp. 665; Louergan v. Buford, 148 U. S. 581, 13 Sup. Ct. 684, 37 L. Ed. 569; Shepherd v. Busch, 154 Pa. 149, 26 Atl. 363, 35 Am. St. Rep. 815. Where the facts do not appear on the face of the judgment, oral evidence is admissible to show how credits thereon come to be allowed, and what they were allowed for; Humphreys v. Bank, 75 Fed. 852, 21 C. C. A. 538. And parol evidence has been admitted to establish a contemporaneous oral agreement which induced the execution of the written contract though the effect be to alter or reform the latter; Cullmans v. Lindsay, 114 Pa. 170, 6 Atl. 332; Cake v. Bank, 116 Pa. 270, 9 Atl. 302, 2 Am. St. Rep. 600; so when the contract was a letter "confirming our verbal contract," proof of the latter was permitted although inconsistent with the letter; Holt v. Pie, 120 Pa. 439, 14 Atl. 389. As a general rule the withdrawal of evidence from the consideration of the jury, by direction of the court, cures any error caused by its admission; Pennsylvania Co. v. Roy, 102 U. S. 452, 26 L. Ed. 141; Hopt v. Utah, 120 U. S. 430, 7 Sup. Ct. 614, 30 L. Ed. 708; but there are exceptions, as where too strong an impression has been made to be cured by the withdrawal; id.; or where the language of the withdrawal is insufficient to identify clearly what is withdrawn; Throckmorton v. Holt, 180 U. S. 552, 21 Sup. Ct. 474, 45 L. Ed. 663.

It was held to be no cause of action to give false evidence negligently but not wilfully or corruptly, whereby the plaintiff was convicted of a criminal offence, the conviction still standing; [1902] 1 K. B. 467; which was based on a long line of authorities ending with Basely v. Mathews, L. R. 2 C. P. 684, which is said to be a novel case, and that there would probably be no cause of action even if the conviction were reversed; 18 L. Q. R. 107. See PERJURY.

As to the distinction between evidence, which corresponds with probatio, and preuve, see PREUVE.

See, generally, the treatises on Evidence, of Gilbert, Philipps, Starkie, Roscoe, Swift, Bentham, Macnally, Peake, Greenleaf, Wharton, Stephen, Rice; Wigmore; Chamberlayne; McKelvey; Jones; Best on Presumption; Browne, Parol Ev.; Will, Circ. Ev.; TELEGRAPH AND TELEPHONE.

EVIDENCE, CIRCUMSTANTIAL. See EVIDENCE.

EVIDENCE, CONCLUSIVE. See EVIDENCE.

EVIDENCE, DIRECT. See EVIDENCE.

EVIDENCE, EXTRINSIC. See EVIDENCE.

EVIDENTIA. See PREUVE.

EVOCATION. In French Law. The act by which a judge is deprived of the cognizance of a suit over which he had jurisdiction, for the purpose of conferring on other judges the power of deciding it. It is like the process by writ of certiorari.

EWAGE. A toll paid for water-passage. Cowell. The same as aquagium.

EWBRICE. Adultery; spouse-breach; marriage-breach. Cowell; Tomlin, Law Dict.

EX ÆQUO ET BONO (Lat.). In justice and good dealing. 1 Story, Eq. Jur. § 965.

EX CONTRACTU (Lat.). From contract. A division of actions is made in the common and civil law into those arising ex contractu (from contract) and ex delicto (from wrong or tort). 3 Bla. Com. 117; 1 Chit. Pl. 2; 1 Mac- kelvey, Civ. Law § 195.

EX DEBITO JUSTITIÆ (Lat.). As a debt of justice. As a matter of legal right. 3 Bla. Com. 48.

EX DELICTO (Lat.). Actions which arise in consequence of a crime, misdemeanor, or tort are said to arise ex delicto: such are actions of case, replevin, trespass, trover. 1 Chit. Pl. 2; See EX CONTRACTU; ACTIONS.

EX DOLO MALO (Lat.). Out of fraud or deceit. When a cause of action arises from fraud or deceit, it cannot be supported; ex dolo malo non oritur actio. See MAXIMS.

EX EMPTO. Out of purchase; founded on purchase. A term of the civil law, adopted by Bracton. Inst. 4, 6, 28; Brac. fol. 102; Black, L. Dict.

EX GRATIA (Lat.). Of favor. Of grace. Words used formerly at the beginning of royal grants, to indicate that they were not made in consequence of any claim of legal right.

EX INDUSTRIA (Lat.). Intentionally. From fixed purpose.

EX MALEFICIO (Lat.). On account of misconduct. By virtue of or out of an illegal act. Used in the civil law generally, and sometimes in the common law. Browne, Stat. Frauds 110, n.; Broom, Leg. Max. 351.

EX MERO MOTU (Lat.). Of mere motion. The term is derived from the king's letters patent and charters, where it signifies that he grants them of his own mere motion, without petition. To prevent injustice, the courts will, ex mero motu, make rules and orders which the parties would not strictly be entitled to ask for. See EX GRATIA; EX PROPRIO MOTU.

EX MORA (Lat.). From the delay; from the default.

EX MORE (Lat.). According to custom.

EX NECESSITATE LEGIS (Lat.). From the necessity of law.

EX NECESSITATE REI (Lat.). From the necessity of the thing. Many acts may be done ex necessitate rei which would not be justifiable without it; and sometimes property is protected ex necessitate rei which under other circumstances would not be so, or a way of necessity will be allowed; Bass v. Edwards, 126 Mass. 445. Property put upon the land of another from necessity cannot be distrained for rent. See DISTRESS.

EX OFFICIO (Lat.). By virtue of his office.

Many powers are granted and exercised by public officers which are not expressly delegated. A judge, for example, may be ex officio a conservator of the peace and a justice of the peace.

EX OFFICIO INFORMATION. A criminal information filed by the attorney-general ex officio on behalf of the crown, in the court of queen's bench, for offences more immediately affecting the government, and to be distinguished from informations in which the crown is the nominal prosecutor. 4 Steph. Com. 372.

EX OFFICIO OATH. An oath used in the Ecclesiastical Courts, by which the person who took it swore to make true answer to all such questions as should be demanded of him. Stephen, Cr. Proc.

EX PARTE (Lat.). Of the one part. Many things may be done ex parte, when the opposite party has had notice. An affidavit or deposition is said to be taken ex parte when only one of the parties attends to taking the same. An injunction is granted ex parte when but one side has had a hearing. The term ex parte implies an examination in the presence of one of the parties and the absence of the other. Lincoln v. Cook, 2 Scam. (Ill.) 62.

"Ex parte," in the title of a reported case, signifies that the name following is that of the party upon whose application the case is heard.

EX PARTE MATERNA (Lat.). On the mother's side. The words ex parte materna and ex parte paterna have a well-known signification in the law. They are found used in the books to denote the line, or blood of the mother or father, and have no such restricted or limited sense, as from the mother or father, exclusively; Banta v. Demarest, 24 N. J. L. 433; 2 Bla. Com. 224.

EX PARTE PATERNA (Lat.). On the father's side. See EX PARTE MATERNA; DESCENT AND DISTRIBUTION.

EX POST FACTO (Lat.). From or by an after act; by subsequent matter. The correlative term is ab initio. An estate granted may be made good or avoided by matter ex post facto, when an election is given to the party to accept or not to accept; 1 Coke 146. A remainderman or reversioner may confirm ex post facto a lease granted by a life-tenant to last beyond his own life.

EX POST FACTO LAW. A statute which would render an act punishable in a manner in which it was not punishable when it was committed. Fletcher v. Peck, 6 Cra. (U. S.) 138, 3 L. Ed. 162; 1 Kent 408.

A law made to punish acts committed before the existence of such law, which had not been declared crimes by preceding laws. Mass. Declar. of Rights, pt. 1, s. 24; Md. Decl. of Rights, art. 15.

A law passed after the commission of the offence charged, which inflicts a greater punishment than was annexed to the crime at the time of commission, or which alters the situation of the accused to his disadvantage. In re Wright, 3 Wyo. 478, 27 Pac. 565, 13 L. R. A. 748, 31 Am. St. Rep. 94.

A law which, in its operation, makes that criminal which was not so at the time the action was performed; or which increases the punishment, or, in short, which, in relation to the offence or its consequences, alters the situation of a party to his disadvantage. U. S. v. Hall, 2 Wash. C. C. 366, Fed. Cas. No. 15,285; see Lindzey v. State, 65 Miss. 542, 5 South. 99, 7 Am. St. Rep. 674; Fletcher v. Peck, 6 Cra. (U. S.) 87, 3 L. Ed. 162; Moore v. State, 43 N. J. L. 203, 39 Am. Rep. 558; Ratzky v. People, 29 N. Y. 124; Thompson v. Utah, 170 U. S. 343, 18 Sup. Ct. 620, 42 L. Ed. 1061; In re Medley, 134 U. S. 160, 10 Sup. Ct. 384, 33 L. Ed. 835.

Parliament, in virtue of its supreme power, may pass such laws, being sustained by discretion alone; 1 Bla. Com. 46, 160.

By the constitution of the United States, congress is forbidden to pass ex post facto laws. U. S. Const. art. 1, § 9. And by § 10 of the same instrument, as well as by the constitutions of most, if not all, of the states, a similar restriction is imposed upon the state legislatures. Such an act is void as to those cases in which, if given effect, it would be ex post facto; but so far only. In cases arising after it, it may have effect; for as a rule for the future, it is not ex post facto.

There is a distinction between ex post facto laws and retrospective or retroactive laws: every ex post facto law must necessarily be retrospective, but not every retrospective law is an ex post facto law; in general, ex post facto laws only are prohibited.

Ex post facto laws differ from retroactive laws. The latter, when imposing taxes or providing for their assessment and collection, are not forbidden by the constitution; the former, in that constitution, has reference to criminal punishment only; Kentucky Union Co. v. Kentucky, 219 U. S. 140, 31 Sup. Ct. 171, 55 L. Ed. 137. Retrospective laws are prohibited by the constitutions of the states of New Hampshire and Ohio. See Rairden v. Holden, 15 Ohio St. 207; John v. Bridgman, 27 Ohio St. 22; Blackburn v. State, 50 Ohio 428, 36 N. E. 18; Kring v. Missouri, 107 U. S. 221, 2 Sup. Ct. 443, 27 L. Ed. 506; White v. Wayne, T. U. P. Charlt. 94.

It is fully settled that the term ex post facto, as used in the constitution, is to be taken in a limited sense as referring to criminal or penal statutes alone, and that the policy, the reason, and the humanity of the prohibition against passing ex post facto laws do not extend to civil cases, to cases that merely affect the private property of citizens. But the prohibition cannot be evaded by giving a civil form to what is, in substance, criminal; Cummings v. Missouri, 4 Wall. (U. S.) 277, 18 L. Ed. 356; In re Garland, 4 Wall. (U. S.) 333, 18 L. Ed. 366; Burgess v. Salmon, 97 U. S. 385, 24 L. Ed. 1104; Green v. Shumway, 39 N. Y. 418; Hare, Am. Const. L. 547. Divorce not being a punishment may be authorized for causes happening previous to the passage of the divorce act; Carson v. Carson, 40 Miss. 349.

The constitution does not prohibit the states from passing retrospective laws generally. Some of the most necessary acts of legislation are, on the contrary, founded upon the principles that private rights must yield to public exigencies; Carpenter v. Pennsylvania, 17 How. (U. S.) 463, 15 L. Ed. 127; Watson v. Mercer, 8 Pet. (U. S.) 88, 8 L. Ed. 876; Charles River Bridge v. Warren Bridge, 11 Pet. (U. S.) 421, 9 L. Ed. 773; Satterlee v. Matthewson, 2 Pet. (U. S.) 380, 7 L. Ed. 458; Bank of Hamilton v. Dudley, 2 Pet. (U. S.) 523, 7 L. Ed. 496; Dash v. Van Kleeck, 7 Johns. (N. Y.) 488, 5 Am. Dec. 291; Com. v. Lewis, 6 Binn. (Pa.) 271; Wellshear v. Kelley, 69 Mo. 343; United States Mortg. Co. v. Gross, 93 Ill. 483; Cooley, Const. Lim. 265; Callahan v. Callahan, 36 S. C. 454, 15 S. E. 727. See Drake v. Jordan, 73 Ia. 707, 36 N. W. 653; Campbell v. Manderscheid, 74 Ia. 708, 39 N. W. 92.

Test oaths of past loyalty to the government have been held void as ex post facto; In re Garland, 4 Wall. (U. S.) 333, 18 L. Ed. 366; except as pre-requisites to the exercise of the elective franchise; Green v. Shumway, 39 N. Y. 418. A law prohibiting the sale of intoxicating liquors is not ex post facto, State v. Paul, 5 R. I. 185; or a law imposing a retrospective tax; Bonny v. Reed, 31 N. J. L. 133; Stockdale v. Ins. Co., 20 Wall. (U. S.) 323, 22 L. Ed. 348; see, Carpenter v. Pennsylvania, 17 How. (U. S.) 456, 15 L. Ed. 127; Pullen v. Com'rs of Wake.

County, 66 N. C. 361; or a law providing for the infliction of the death penalty by means of electricity which did not apply to crimes committed before it took effect; People v. Nolan, 115 N. Y. 660, 21 N. E. 1060; or a law authorizing a divorce for past offences; Carson v. Carson, 40 Miss. 349; Clark v. Clark, 10 N. H. 380, 34 Am. Dec. 165; compare Dickinson v. Dickenson, 7 N. C. 327, 9 Am. Dec. 608; or a law providing that the punishment of future crimes shall be increased by reason of past offences; State v. Woods, 68 Me. 409.

Statutes providing for the revocation of licenses of physicians of bad moral character by state boards have been questioned as being ex post facto, but the case of People v. Hawker, 152 N. Y. 234, 46 N. E. 607, affirmed Hawker v. New York, 170 U. S. 189, 18 Sup. Ct. 573, 42 L. Ed. 1002, is said to have settled that they are not; People v. Reetz, 127 Mich. 87, 86 N. W. 396, affirmed Reetz v. Michigan, 188 U. S. 505, 23 Sup. Ct. 390, 47 L. Ed. 563; Meffert v. Board of Medical Registration, 66 Kan. 710, 72 Pac. 247, 1 L. R. A. (N. S.) 811, affirmed Meffert v. Packer, 195 U. S. 625, 25 Sup. Ct. 790, 49 L. Ed. 350. See POLICE POWER.

Where an act provided that one who has been convicted of crime shall no longer engage in the practice of medicine, it was held not to be an additional punishment for past offences or ex post facto, but that it simply prescribed the qualifications for the position and the appropriate evidence of such qualification; Hawker v. New York, 170 U. S. 189, 18 Sup. Ct. 573, 42 L. Ed. 1002.

Corporations cannot pass ex post facto by-laws; People v. Fire Dept., 31 Mich. 458.

Laws under the following circumstances are to be considered ex post facto laws within the words and intent of the prohibition: 1. Every law that makes an action done before the passing of the law, and which was innocent when done, criminal, and punishes such action. 2. Every law that aggravates a crime, or makes it greater than it was when committed. 3. Every law that changes the punishment and inflicts a greater punishment than the law annexed to the crime when committed (though it would be otherwise of a law mitigating the punishment; 3 Story, Const. 212). 4. Every law that alters the legal rules of evidence, and receives less, or different, testimony than the law required at the time of the commission of the offence, in order to convict the offender; Calder v. Bull, 3 Dall. (U. S.) 390, 1 L. Ed. 648. This construction, it is said, "has been accepted and followed as correct by the courts ever since"; Cooley, Const. Lim. 325; its substance remains unchanged; Com. v. Kalcik, 239 Pa. 533, 87 Atl. 61. See People v. McNulty, 93 Cal. 427, 26 Pac. 597, 29 Pac. 61; Com. v. Graves, 155 Mass. 163, 29 N. E. 579, 16 L. R. A. 256.

This classification has been generally adopted as accurate and complete, but is not entirely so. Thus a law has been decided to be ex post facto which was intended to punish a criminal act, prosecution as to which was already barred by a statute of limitations; Moore v. State, 43 N. J. L. 203, 39 Am. Rep. 558; but an act which reduces a punishment is not ex post facto as to crimes committed prior to its enactment; People v. Hayes, 140 N. Y. 484, 35 N. E. 951, 23 L. R. A. 830, 37 Am. St. Rep. 572; State v. Kent, 65 N. C. 311; Dolan v. Thomas, 12 Allen (Mass.) 421; McInturf v. State, 20 Tex. App. 335. The statement under the fourth head also requires modification. Convictions under changes in the rules of evidence have been held not unconstitutional; Stokes v. People, 53 N. Y. 164, 13 Am. Rep. 492; Jacquins v. Com., 9 Cush. (Mass.) 279; State v. Williams, 14 Rich. (S. C.) 281; Mrous v. State, 31 Tex. Cr. R. 597, 21 S. W. 764, 37 Am. St. Rep. 834; Maguiar v. Henry, 84 Ky. 1, 4 Am. St. Rep. 182; Robinson v. State, 84 Ind. 452; Thompson v. Missouri, 171 U. S. 380, 18 Sup. Ct. 922, 43 L. Ed. 204; though it seems to be settled that a law requiring a less degree of evidence cannot be applied to a previous offence. But changes in the forms, in the manner of passing sentence, or the qualifications of jurors, do not fall within the prohibition; Com. v. Phillips, 11 Pick. (Mass.) 28; Lybarger v. State, 2 Wash. 552, 27 Pac. 449, 1029; In re Wright, 3 Wyo. 478, 27 Pac. 565, 13 L. R. A. 748, 31 Am. St. Rep. 94; City Council of Anderson v. O'Donnell, 29 S. C. 355, 7 S. E. 523, 1 L. R. A. 632, 13 Am. St. Rep. 728; nor will a provision reducing the number of peremptory challenges on a prosecution for a capital offence, though applied to cases where the offence was committed before the change was made; Mathis v. State, 31 Fla. 291, 12 South. 681; South v. State, 86 Ala. 617, 6 South. 52; nor an amendment which confers jurisdiction in a criminal cause upon a division of the supreme court less in numbers and different in personnel from the court as organized when the crime was committed; Duncan v. Missouri, 152 U. S. 377, 14 Sup. Ct. 570, 38 L. Ed. 485. A change of criminal procedure applied to the trial of crimes committed before it took effect is not ex post facto, unless it affects some substantial right to which the accused was entitled when the alleged offence was committed; State v. Carter, 33 La. Ann. 1214; Kring v. Missouri, 107 U. S. 221, 2 Sup. Ct. 443, 27 L. Ed. 506.

Statutes regulating procedure, if they leave untouched all the substantial protections with which existing law surrounds the person accused of crime, are not within the constitutional inhibition; Duncan v. Missouri, 152 U. S. 378, 14 Sup. Ct. 570, 38 L. Ed. 485; Thompson v. Missouri, 171 U. S. 380, 18 Sup. Ct. 922, 43 L. Ed. 204. A statute admitting evidence of a particular kind in a criminal case upon an issue of fact, which was not admissible under the rules of evidence at the time the offence was committed, is not ex post facto; Thompson v. Missouri, 171 U. S. 380, 18 Sup. Ct. 922, 43 L. Ed. 204; though in his classification of ex post facto laws Mr. Justice Chase, in Calder v. Bull, 3 Dall. (U. S.) 386, 1 L. Ed. 648, includes every law that alters the legal rules of evidence, and requires less or different testimony than the law required at the time of the commission of the offence in order to convict the offender.

In Missouri, after conviction of a capital offence and verdict set aside because of the admission of papers for comparison of handwriting merely, the legislature changed the law so as to admit such papers; on a new trial, it was held merely a change of a rule of evidence, which could be applied in the trial of an offence committed before its enactment; Thompson v. Missouri, 171 U. S. 380, 18 Sup. Ct. 922, 43 L. Ed. 204.

The supreme court of the United States has decided that a constitutional provision, requiring all grand and petit jurors to be qualified electors, able to read and write, and enjoining on the legislature to provide by law for listing and drawing persons so qualified, but declaring that, until otherwise provided by law, all crimes should be tried as though no change had been made (Const. Miss. 1890), went into effect immediately on its adoption, so far as the qualifications of jurors were concerned; that one who committed a crime after the adoption of the constitution, but before the legislature passed a new jury law, could be tried, after the passage of such a law, by a jury selected under its provisions; and that, as the new law did not aggravate the crime previously committed, or inflict a greater punishment, or alter the rules of evidence, its application to the trial of the accused did not make it an ex post facto law; Gibson v. Mississippi, 162 U. S. 565, 16 Sup. Ct. 904, 40 L. Ed. 1075. But where the constitution of Utah provided for the trial in courts of general jurisdiction of criminal cases not capital by a jury of eight, it was held ex post facto in its application to felonies committed before the territory became a state, because the constitution of the United States, gave the accused, at the time of the commission of the offence, the right to be tried by a jury of twelve persons, and made it unlawful to deprive him of his liberty except by the unanimous verdict of such a jury; Thompson v. Utah, 170 U. S. 343, 18 Sup. Ct. 620, 42 L. Ed. 1061.

For a review of the history of the ex post facto clause of the constitution in connection with its adoption, and with its subsequent construction by the federal and state courts, see Kring v. Missouri, 107 U. S. 221, 2 Sup. Ct. 443, 27 L. Ed. 506.

EX PROPRIO MOTU (Lat.). Of his own accord.

EX PROPRIO VIGORE (Lat.). By its own force. 2 Kent 457.

EX REL. See EX RELATIONE.

EX RELATIONE (Lat.). At the information of; by the relation. A bill in equity, for example, may in many cases be brought for an injunction to restrain a public nuisance ex relatione (by information of) the parties immediately interested in or affected by the nuisance; 18 Ves. 217; Van Bergen v. Van Bergen, 2 Johns. Ch. (N. Y.) 382; Corning v. Lowerre, 6 Johns. Ch. (N. Y.) 439; Pennsylvania v. Bridge Co., 13 How. (U. S.) 518, 14 L. Ed. 249; Georgetown v. Canal Co., 12 Pet. (U. S.) 91, 9 L. Ed. 1012.

It is frequently abbreviated ex rel. See RELATOR.

EX TEMPORE (Lat.). From the time; without premeditation.

EX VI TERMINI (Lat.). By force of the term.

EX VISCERIBUS (Lat. from the bowels). From the vital part, the very essence of the thing. 10 Co. 24 b; Homer v. Shelton, 2 Metc. (Mass.) 213. Ex visceribus verborum (from the mere words and nothing else); 1 Story, Eq. § 980.

EX VISITATIONE DEI (Lat.). By or from the visitation of God. In the ancient law, upon a prisoner arraigned for treason or felony standing mute, a jury was impanelled to inquire whether he stood obstinately mute, or was dumb ex visitatione Dei; 4 Steph. Com. 391. This phrase is frequently employed in inquisitions by the coroner, where it signifies that the death of the deceased is a natural one.

EXACTION. A wilful wrong done by an officer, or by one who, under color of his office, takes more fee or pay for his services than the law allows.

Between extortion and exaction there is this difference: that in the former case the officer extorts more than his due, when something is due to him; in the latter, he exacts what is not his due, when there is nothing due to him. Co. Litt. 368.

EXACTOR. In Old English and Civil Law. A collector. Exactor regis (collector for the king). A collector of taxes or revenue. Vicat, Voc. Jur.; Spelman, Gloss. The term exaction early came to mean the wrong done by an officer, or one pretending to have authority, in demanding or taking any reward or fee for that matter, cause, or thing which the law allows not. Termes de la Ley.

EXAMINATION. In Criminal Law. The investigation by an authorized magistrate of the circumstances which constitute the grounds for an accusation against a person arrested on a criminal charge, with a view to discharging the person so arrested, or to securing his appearance for trial by the proper court, and to preserving the evidence relating to the matter.

Practically, it is accomplished by bringing the person accused, together with witnesses, before a magistrate (generally a justice of the peace), who thereupon takes down in writing the evidence of the witnesses, and any statements which the prisoner may see fit to make. If no cause for detention appears, the party is discharged from arrest. If sufficient cause of suspicion appears to warrant putting him on trial, he is committed, or required to give bail or enter into a recognizance to appear at the proper time for trial. The witnesses are also frequently required to recognize for their appearance; though in ordinary cases only their own recognizance is required. The magistrate signs or certifies the minutes of the evidence which he has taken, and it is delivered to the court before whom the trial is to be had. The object of an examination is to enable the judge and jury to see whether the witnesses are consistent, and to ascertain whether the offence is bailable. 2 Leach 552. And see 4 Sharsw. Bla. Com. 296.

At common law, the prisoner could not be interrogated by the magistrate; but under the statutes 1 & 2 Phil. & M. c. 13, 2 & 3 Phil. & M. c. 10, the provisions of which have been substantially adopted in most of the states, the magistrate is to examine the prisoner as well as the witnesses. 1 Greenl. Ev. § 224; 4 Bla. Com. 296; Rosc. Cr. Ev. 44; Ry. & M. 432.

The examination should be taken and completed as soon as the nature of the case will admit; Cro. Eliz. S29; 1 Hale, Pl. Cr. 585; 2 id. 120. The prisoner must not be put upon oath, but the witnesses must; 1 Phil. Ev. 106; Archb. Cr. Pr. & Pl. 386. The prisoner formerly had no right to the assistance of an attorney; but the privilege was granted at the discretion of the magistrate; 2 Dowl. & R. 86; 1 B. & C. 37. Now, however, a prisoner is permitted to have counsel as a matter of course. The magistrate's return and certificate are conclusive evidence, and exclude parol evidence, of what the prisoner said on that occasion with reference to the charge; 2 C. & K. 223; 5 C. & P. 162; 1 Mood. & M. 403. See CONFESSION; RECOGNIZANCE.

In Practice. The interrogation of a witness, in order to ascertain his knowledge as to the facts in dispute between parties.

The examination in chief is that made by the party calling the witness; the cross-examination is that made by the other party. In the examination in chief the counsel cannot ask leading questions, except in particular cases. See CROSS-EXAMINATION; LEADING QUESTIONS.

The examination is to be made in open court, when practicable; but when, on account of age, sickness, absence from the jurisdiction, or other cause, the witness cannot be so examined, then in civil causes it may be made before authorized commissioners.

The interrogation of a person who is desirous of performing some act, or availing himself of some privilege of the law, in order to ascertain if all the requirements of the law have been complied with, conducted by and before an officer having authority for the purpose.

There are many acts which can be of validity and binding force only upon an examination. Thus, in many states, a married woman must be privately examined as to whether she has given her consent freely and without restraint to a deed which she appears to have executed; see ACKNOWLEDGMENT; an insolvent who wishes to take the benefit of the insolvent laws, one who is about to become bound for another in legal proceedings, a bankrupt, etc., must submit to an examination.

EXAMINED COPY. A phrase applied to designate a paper which is a copy of a record, public book, or register, and which has been compared with the original. 1 Campb. 469.

Such examined copy is admitted in evidence, because of the public inconvenience which would arise if such record, public book, or register were removed from place to place, and because any fraud or mistake made in the examined copy would be so easily detected; 1 Greenl. Ev. § 91; 1 Stark. Ev. 189. But in an answer in chancery on which the defendant was indicted for perjury, or where the original must be produced in order to identify the party by proof of handwriting, an examined copy would not be evidence; 1 Mood. & R. 189. See COPY.

EXAMINERS. See EXAMINATION; SPECIAL EXAMINER.

EXAMINERS IN CHANCERY. Officers who examine, upon oath, witnesses produced on either side upon such interrogatories as the parties to any suit exhibit for that purpose. Cowell.

The examiner is to administer an oath to the party, and then repeat the interrogatories one at a time, writing down the answer himself; 2 Dan. Ch. Pr. 1062. Anciently, the examiner was one of the judges of the court: hence an examination before the examiner is said to be an examination in court; 1 Dan. Ch. Pr. 1053.

EXAMNIAL ROLL. A roll containing the illeivable fines and desperate debts, which was read yearly to the sheriff (in the ancient way of delivering the sheriff's accounts), to see what might be gotten. Hale, Sheriffs 67; Cowell.

EXCAMB. In Scotch Law. To exchange. Excambion, exchange. The words are evidently derived from the Latin excambium. Bell, Dict. See EXCHANGE.

EXCAMBIATOR. An exchanger of lands; a broker. Obsolete.

EXCAMBIUM (Lat.). In English Law. Exchange; a recompense. 1 Reeve, Hist. Eng. Law 442.

EXCELLENCY. A title given by courtesy to the governors of the states, to the President of the United States, and to ambassadors.

EXCEPTIO REI JUDICATÆ. A Roman law term equivalent to a plea of former judgment. Bigelow, Estoppel 41.

EXCEPTION (Lat. excipere: ex, out of, capere, to take). A clause in a deed by which the lessor excepts something out of that which he before granted by the deed.

The exclusion of something from the effect or operation of the deed or contract which would otherwise be included.

An exception differs from a reservation (q. v.),—the former being always of part of the thing granted, the latter of a thing not in esse, but newly created or reserved; the exception is of the whole of the part excepted; the reservation may be of a right or interest in the particular part affected by the reservation. See Ballou v. Harris, 5 R. I. 419; Hammond v. Woodman, 41 Me. 177, 66 Am. Dec. 219; State v. Wilson, 42 Me. 9; Adams v. Morse, 51 Me. 498; Gould v. Glass, 19 Barb. (N. Y.) 192; 2 B. & C. 197. The two words, however, are often used indiscriminately; Stockwell v. Couillard, 129 Mass. 231; Barnes v. Burt, 38 Conn. 541. An exception differs, also, from an explanation, which, by the use of a videlicet, provisio, etc., is allowed only to explain doubtful clauses precedent, or to separate and distribute generals into particulars; Cutler v. Tufts, 3 Pick. (Mass.) 272. See RESERVATION.

To make a valid exception, these things must concur: first, the exception must be by apt words, as, "saving and excepting," etc.; see Keeler v. Wood, 30 Vt. 242; Ballou v. Harris, 5 R. I. 419; Hammond v. Woodman, 41 Me. 177, 66 Am. Dec. 219; Midgett v. Wharton, 102 N. C. 14, 8 S. E. 778; second, it must be of part of the thing previously described, and not of some other thing; third, it must be of part of the thing only, and not of all, the greater part, or the effect of the thing granted; Richardson v. Milburn, 11 Md. 339; Adams v. Warner, 23 Vt. 395; an exception, therefore, in a lease which extends to the whole thing demised is void; fourth, it must be of such thing as is severable from the demised premises, and not of an inseparable incident; Backenstoss v. Stahler's Adm'rs, 33 Pa. 251, 75 Am. Dec. 592; Goodrich v. R. R., 37 N. H. 167; fifth, it must be of such a thing as he that excepts may have, and which properly belongs to him; sixth, it must be of a particular thing out of a general, and not of a particular thing out of a particular thing; seventh, it must be particularly described and set forth; a lease of a tract of land except one acre would be void, because that acre was not particularly described; Co. Litt. 47 a; Hay v. Storrs, Wright (Ohio) 711; Jackson v. Hudson, 3 Johns. (N. Y.) 375, 3 Am. Dec. 500; Darling v. Crowell, 6 N. H. 421; Altman v. McBride, 4 Strobb. (S. C.) 208; see Painter v. Water Co., 91 Cal. 74, 27 Pac. 539. Exceptions against common right and general rules are construed as strictly as possible; Hays v. Askew, 50 N. C. 63. When a grantor makes a valid exception, the thing excepted remains the property of himself or his heirs; but if he has no valid title to it, neither he nor his heirs can recover; Fisher v. Min. Co., 97 N. C. 95, 4 S. E. 772.

In Equity Practice. The allegation of a party, in writing, that some pleading or proceeding in a cause is insufficient.

In Civil Law. A plea. Merlin, Répert.

Declinatory exceptions are such dilatory exceptions as merely decline the jurisdiction of the judge before whom the action is brought. La. Code Proc.

Dilatory exceptions are such as do not tend to defeat the action, but only to retard its progress.

Declinatory exceptions have this effect, as well as the exception of discussion offered by a third possessor or by a surety in an hypothecary action, or the exception taken in order to call in the warrantor. Noble v. Martin, 7 Mart. N. S. (La.) 282; Howard v. The Columbia, 1 La. 420.

Peremptory exceptions are those which tend to the dismissal of the action.

Some relate to forms, others arise from the law. Those which relate to forms tend to have the cause dismissed, owing to some nullities in the proceedings. These must be pleaded in limine litis. Peremptory exceptions founded on law are those which, without going into the merits of the cause, show that the plaintiff cannot maintain his action, either because it is prescribed, or because the cause of action has been destroyed or extinguished. These may be pleaded at any time previous to definitive judgment; Pothier. Proc. Civ. pt. 1, c. 2, ss. 1, 2, 3. These, in the French law, are called Fins de non recevoir.

In Practice. Objections made to the decisions of the court in the course of a trial. See BILL OF EXCEPTION.

EXCEPTION TO BAIL. An objection to the special bail put in by the defendant to an action at law made by the plaintiff on grounds of the insufficiency of the bail. 1 Tidd, Pr. 255.

EXCESS. When a defendant pleaded to an action of assault that the plaintiff trespassed on his land, and he would not depart when ordered, whereupon he molliter manus imposuit, gently laid hands on him, the replication of excess was to the effect that the defendant used more force than necessary. Wharton.

EXCESSIVE BAIL. Bail which is per se unreasonably great and clearly disproportionate to the offence involved, or which under the peculiar circumstances appearing is shown to be so in the particular case. Ex parte Ryan, 44 Cal. 558; Ex parte Duncan, 53 Cal. 410.

EXCHANGE. In Commercial Law. A negotiation by which one person transfers to another funds which he has in a certain place, either at a price agreed upon or which is fixed by commercial usage.

This transfer is made by means of an instrument which represents such funds and is well known by the name of a bill of exchange (q. v.). The price above the par value of the funds so transferred is called the premium of exchange, and if under that value the difference is called the discount,—either being called the rate of exchange.

The par of exchange is the value of the money of one country in that of another, and is either real or nominal. The nominal par is that which has been fixed by law or usage, and, for the sake of uniformity, is not altered, the rate of exchange alone fluctuating. The real par is that based on the weight and fineness of the coins of the two countries, and fluctuates with changes in the coinage. The nominal par of exchange in this country on England, settled in 1799 by act of congress, was four dollars and forty-four cents for the pound sterling; but by successive changes in the coinage this value has been increased; the real mint par at present being $4.866½. The course of exchange means the quotations for any given time.

The transfer of goods and chattels for other goods and chattels of equal value. This is more commonly called barter. Where a party deposits wheat with a mill company, expecting to receive a proportionate amount of flour, it constitutes an exchange and not a sale; Martin v. Mill Co., 49 Mo. App. 23. One cannot, as having been defrauded thereby, rescind an exchange of property, without tendering a return of his property to the other, unless it is absolutely worthless; Johnson v. Flynn, 97 Mich. 581, 56 N. W. 939.

The distinction between a sale and exchange of property is rather one of shadow than of substance. In both cases the title to property is absolutely transferred, and the same rules of law are applicable to the transaction, whether the consideration of the contract is money or by way of barter. It can make no essential difference in the rights and obligations of parties that goods and merchandise are transferred and paid for by other goods and merchandise instead of by money, which is but the representative of value or property; Com. v. Clark, 14 Gray (Mass.) 372.

The profit which arises from a maritime loan, when such profit is a percentage on the money lent, considering it in the light of money lent in one place to be returned in another, with a difference in amount in the sum borrowed and that paid, arising from the difference of time and place. The term is commonly used in this sense by French writers. Hall, Mar. Loans 56, n.

The place where merchants, captains of vessels, exchange-agents, brokers, etc., assemble to transact their business. Code de Comm. art. 71. See STOCK EXCHANGE.

In Conveyancing. A mutual grant of equal interests in land, the one in consideration of the other. 2 Bla. Com. 323; Littleton 62; Shep. Touchst. 289; Digby, R. P. 368. It is said that exchange in the United States does not differ from bargain and sale. 1 Bouvier, Inst. n. 2059.

There are five circumstances necessary to an exchange. That the estates given be equal. That the word excambium, or exchange, be used,—which cannot be supplied by any other word, or described by circumlocution. That there be an execution by entry or claim in the life of the parties. That if it be of things which lie in grant, it be by deed. That if the lands lie in several counties, or if the thing lie in grant, though they be in one county, it be by deed indented. In practice this mode of conveyancing is nearly obsolete.

See Cruise, Dig. tit. 32; Com. Dig.; Co. Litt. 51; 1 Washb. R. P. 159; Cass v. Thompson, 1 N. H. 65, 8 Am. Dec. 36; Maydwell v. Carroll, 3 Harr. & J. (Md.) 361; Stroff v. Swafford Bros., 79 Ia. 135, 44 N. W. 293; Close v. Crossland, 47 Minn. 500, 50 N. W. 694; Williamson v. Woten, 132 Ind. 202, 31 N. E. 791; Gunter v. Leckey, 30 Ala. 591; REAL ESTATE BROKER.

EXCHANGE, BILLS OF. See BILLS OF EXCHANGE.

EXCHEQUER (Law Lat. scaccarium; Nor. Fr. eschequier). In English Law. A department of the government which has the management of the collection of the king's revenue.

The name is said to be derived from the chequered cloth which covered the table on which some of the king's accounts were made up and the amounts indicated by counters.

It consisted of two divisions, one for the receipt of revenue, the other for administering justice. Co. 4th Inst. 103; 3 Bla. Com. 44, 45. See COURT OF EXCHEQUER; COURT OF EXCHEQUER CHAMBER.

EXCHEQUER BILLS. Bills of credit issued by authority of parliament.

They constitute the medium of transaction of business between the bank of England and the government. The exchequer bills contain a guarantee from government which secures the holders against loss by fluctuation. Wharton; McCulloch, Comm. Dict.

EXCISE. An inland imposition, paid sometimes upon the consumption of the commodity, and frequently upon the retail sale. 1 Bla. Com. 318; Story, Const. § 950; Cooley, Tax. 4. See Oliver v. Washington Mills, 11 Allen (Mass.) 268.

Excises are a species of taxes, consisting generally of duties laid upon the manufacture, sale, or consumption of commodities within the country, or upon certain callings or occupations, often taking the form of exactions for licenses to pursue them. Follock v. Trust Co., 157 U. S. 429, 15 Sup. Ct. 673, 39 L. Ed. 759.

In Art. I, sec. 8, of the constitution congress has power to lay and collect taxes, duties, imposts, and excises to pay the debts and provide for the common defense and general welfare of the United States, but all duties, imposts and excises shall be uniform throughout the United States. The power of congress under this clause is co-extensive with the territory of the United States and extends to the territories; Loughborough v. Blake, 5 Wheat. (U. S.) 317, 5 L. Ed. 98; The Cherokee Tobacco, 11 Wall. (U. S.) 616, 20 L. Ed. 227.

Duties, imposts, and excises were used comprehensively to cover customs and excise duties imposed on importation, consumption, manufacture and sale of certain commodities, privileges, particular business transactions, vocations, occupations and the like; Thomas v. U. S., 192 U. S. 363, 24 Sup. Ct. 305, 48 L. Ed. 481. "Excises usually look to a particular subject, and levy burdens with reference to the act of manufacturing them, selling them, etc. They are or may be as varied in form as the acts or dealings with which the taxes are concerned. Impost duties take every conceivable form, as may by the legislative authority be deemed best for the general welfare. They have been at all times often specific. They have sometimes been discriminatory, particularly when deemed necessary by reason of the tariff legislation of other countries;" Knowlton v. Moore, 178 U. S. 41, 88, 20 Sup. Ct. 747, 44 L. Ed. 969.

Taxes held to be excises, and to be distinguished from direct taxes, are: Upon the business of an insurance company; Pacific Ins. Co. v. Soule, 7 Wall. (U. S.) 433, 19 L. Ed. 95; on the circulation of state banks; Veazie Bank v. Fenno, 8 Wall. (U. S.) 533, 19 L. Ed. 482; or notes of any town, city, or municipal corporation paid out by any bank or banker; Merchants' Nat. Bank v. U. S., 101 U. S. 1, 25 L. Ed. 979; a succession tax; Knowlton v. Moore, 178 U. S. 41, 20 Sup. Ct. 747, 44 L. Ed. 969; on the interest paid by a corporation on its bonds; Michigan C. R. Co. v. Collector, 100 U. S. 595, 25 L. Ed. 647; on carriages; Hylton v. U. S., 3 Dall. (U. S.) 171, 1 L. Ed. 556; on passing title to real estate; Scholey v. Rew, 23 Wall. 331, 23 L. Ed. 99; internal revenue tax; U. S. v. Vassar, 5 Wall. (U. S.) 462, 18 L. Ed. 497; Springer v. U. S., 102 U. S. 586, 26 L. Ed. 253; stamp duties; Treat v. White, 181 U. S. 264, 21 Sup. Ct. 611, 45 L. Ed. 853; Patton v. Brady, 184 U. S. 608, 22 Sup. Ct. 493, 46 L. Ed. 713; on oleomargarine or artificial butter; McCray v. U. S., 195 U. S. 27, 24 Sup. Ct. 769, 49 L. Ed. 78, 1 Ann. Cas. 561; on sales of property at an exchange; Nicol v. Ames, 173 U. tured for consumption; Patton v. Brady, 184 U. S. 608, 22 Sup. Ct. 493, 46 L. Ed. 713.

Taxes held not valid as excises are: On the occupation of an importer the same as on the imports; Brown v. Maryland, 12 Wheat. (U. S.) 419, 6 L. Ed. 678; on the income of United States securities the same as a tax on the securities; Weston v. Charleston, 2 Pet. (U. S.) 449, 7 L. Ed. 481; income from an office the same as a tax on the office; Minis v. U. S., 16 Pet. (U. S.) 435, 10 L. Ed. 791; on a bill of lading the same as a duty on the article represented by it; Almy v. California, 24 How. (U. S.) 169, 16 L. Ed. 644; a tax upon interest on bonds as upon the security; Northern C. R. Co. v. Jackson, 7 Wall. (U. S.) 262, 19 L. Ed. 88; on auction sales of goods as a tax on the goods sold; Cook v. Pennsylvania, 97 U. S. 566, 24 L. Ed. 1015; tax on income from interstate commerce as a tax on the commerce; Philadelphia & S. Mail S. S. Co. v. Pennsylvania, 122 U. S. 326, 7 Sup. Ct. 1118, 30 L. Ed. 1200; Leloup v. Port of Mobile, 127 U. S. 640, 8 Sup. Ct. 1383, 32 L. Ed. 759; tax upon income from municipal bonds; id.; license fees on certain lines of business in a single territory; Binnis v. U. S., 194 U. S. 486, 24 Sup. Ct. 816, 48 L. Ed. 1087.

It is within the power of congress to increase an excise as well as a property tax, and such an increase may be made at least while the property is held for sale and before it has passed into the hands of the consumer; and it is no part of the function of the court to inquire into the reasonableness of the excise, either as respects the amount or the property upon which it is imposed; Patton v. Brady, 184 U. S. 608, 22 Sup. Ct. 493, 46 L. Ed. 713. See TAX.

Though an excise tax be so onerous that it amounts to a destruction of the business, or even if intended to do so, it is within the power of congress and the courts have no power to revise its judgment; McCray v. U. S., 195 U. S. 27, 24 Sup. Ct. 769, 49 L. Ed. 78; Patton v. Brady, 184 U. S. 608, 22 Sup. Ct. 493, 46 L. Ed. 713, where it was said "that it is no part of the function of a court to inquire into the reasonableness of the excise, either as respects the amount, or the property upon which it is imposed."

Territory acquired as a result of the Spanish War became territory appurtenant to the United States, but not a part of it within the revenue clause of the constitution; Downes v. Bidwell, 182 U. S. 244, 21 Sup. Ct. 770, 45 L. Ed. 1088; Dooley v. U. S., 183 U. S. 153, 22 Sup. Ct. 62, 43 L. Ed. 128.

EXCLUSIVE (Lat. ex, out, claudere, to shut). Not including; debarring from participation. Shut out; not included.

An exclusive right or privilege, as a copyright or patent, is one which may be ex-exercised and enjoyed only by the person authorized, while all others are forbidden to interfere.

EXCOMMUNICATION. An ecclesiastical sentence pronounced by a spiritual judge against a Christian man, by which he is excluded from the body of the church, and disabled to bring any action or sue any person in the common-law courts. Bac. Abr.; Co. Litt. 133, 134; Nance v. Busby, 91 Tenn. 303, 18 S. W. 874, 15 L. R. A. 801.

In early times it was the most frequent and the most severe method of executing ecclesiastical censure, although proper to be used, said Justinian (Nov. 123), only upon grave occasions. The effect of it was to remove the excommunicated person not only from the sacred rites, but from the society of men. In a certain sense it interdicted the use of fire and water, like the punishment spoken of by Cæsar (lib. 6, de Bell. Gall.) as inflicted by the Druids. Innocent IV. called it the nerve of ecclesiastical discipline. On repentance, the excommunicated person was absolved and received again to communion. These are said to be the powers of binding and loosing,—the keys of the kingdom of heaven. This kind of punishment seems to have been adopted from the Roman usage of interdicting the use of fire and water. Fr. Duaren, De Sacris Eccles. Ministeriis, lib. 1, cap. 3. See Ridley, View of the Civil and Ecclesiastical Law 245.

It was the process by which the English ecclesiastical courts enforced their process. If the excommunicate did not submit within 40 days, the court signified the fact to the crown and thereon a writ excommunicato capiendo issued to the sheriff, who took and imprisoned the offender till he submitted. When he submitted, the bishop signified this fact, and a writ de excommunicato deliberando (to release an excommunicate) issued. An excommunicate could not serve upon juries, be a witness in any court, or bring an action, real or personal. In 1513 the writ de contumace capiendo was substituted to enforce appearance and punish contempt, the rules applicable being the same as before. Excommunication is still a punishment by the earlier writ for offences of ecclesiastical cognizance, but the only penalty is imprisonment not exceeding six months; 1 Holdsw. Hist. E. L. 400. For the form of the writ see id. 433.

EXCOMMUNICATO CAPIENDO (Lat. for taking an excommunicated person). In Ecclesiastical Law. A writ issuing out of chancery, founded on a bishop's certificate that the defendant had been excommunicated, returnable to the king's bench. 4 Bla. Com. 415; Bac. Abr. Excommunication, E. See Cro. Eliz. 224, 680; Cro. Car. 421; Cro. Jac. 367; 1 Salk. 293.

EXCULPATION. See LETTERS OF EXCULPATION.

EXCUSABLE HOMICIDE. The killing of a human being, when the party killing is not altogether free from blame, but the necessity which renders it excusable may be said to have been partly induced by his own act. 1 East, Pl. Cr. 220. See HOMICIDE.

EXCUSATIO (Lat.). In Civil Law. Excuse. A cause from exemption from a duty, such as absence, insufficient age, etc. Vicat, Voc. Jur., and reference there given.

EXCUSE. A reason alleged for the doing or not doing a thing.

This word presents two ideas, differing essentially from each other. In one case an excuse may be made in order to show that the party accused is not guilty; in another, by showing that though guilty he is less so than he appears to be. Take, for example, the case of a sheriff who has an execution against an individual, and who, in performance of his duty, arrests him: in an action by the defendant against the sheriff, the latter may prove the facts, and this shall be a sufficient excuse for him; this is an excuse of the first kind, or a complete justification; the sheriff was guilty of no offence. But suppose, secondly, that the sheriff has an execution against Paul, and by mistake, and without any malicious design, he arrests Peter instead of Paul: the fact of his having the execution against Paul and the mistake being made will not justify the sheriff, but it will extenuate and excuse his conduct, and this will be an excuse of the second kind.

Persons are sometimes excused for the commission of acts which ordinarily are crimes, either because they had no intention of doing wrong, or because they had no power of judging, and therefore had no criminal will, or, having power of judging, they had no choice, and were compelled by necessity. Among the first class may be placed infants under the age of discretion, lunatics, and married women committing certain offences in the presence of their husbands. Among acts of the second kind may be classed the beating or killing another in self-defence, the destruction of property in order to prevent a more serious calamity, as the tearing down of a house on fire to prevent its spreading to the neighboring property, and the like. See Dalloz, Dict.

EXCUSSIO (Lat.). In Civil Law. Exhausting the principal debtor before proceeding against the surety. Discussion is used in the same sense in Scotch law. Vicat, Excussionis Beneficium.

EXECUTE. To complete; to make; to perform; to do; to follow out.

The term is frequently used in law; as, to execute a deed, which means to make a deed, including especially signing, sealing, and delivery. To execute a contract is to perform the contract. To execute a use is to merge or unite the equitable estate of the cestui que use in the legal estate, under the statute of uses. To execute a writ is to do the act commanded in the writ. To execute a criminal is to put him to death according to law, in pursuance of his sentence.

EXECUTED CONSIDERATION. See CONSIDERATION.

EXECUTED CONTRACT. One which has been fully performed. The statute of frauds does not apply to such contracts; Anderson School Tp. v. Milroy Lodge F. & A. M., 130 Ind. 108, 29 N. E. 411, 30 Am. St. Rep. 206; Harris v. Harper, 48 Kan. 418, 29 Pac. 697; Brown v. Bailey, 159 Pa. 121, 28 Atl. 245; Lagerfelt v. McKie, 100 Ala. 430, 14 South. 281; Doherty v. Doe, 456, 33 Pac. 165; Showalter v. McDonnell, 83 Tex. 158, 18 S. W. 491. See CONTRACTS.

EXECUTED ESTATE. An estate whereby a present interest passes to and resides in the tenant, not dependent upon any subsequent circumstance or contingency. They are more commonly called estates in possession. 2 Bla. Com. 162.

An estate where there is vested in the grantee a present and immediate right of present or future enjoyment. An estate which confers a present right of present enjoyment.

When the right of enjoyment in possession is to arise at a future period, only the estate is executed; that is, it is merely vested in point of interest: where the right of immediate enjoyment is annexed to the estate, then only is the estate vested in possession. 1 Prest. Est. 62; Fearn, Cont. Rem. 392.

Executed is synonymous with vested. 1 Washb. R. P. 11.

EXECUTED REMAINDER. One giving a present interest, though the enjoyment may be future. Fearn, Cont. Rem. 31; 2 Bla. Com. 168. See REMAINDER.

EXECUTED TRUST. A trust of which the scheme has in the outset been completely declared. Ad. Eq. 151. One in which the devise or trust is directly and wholly declared by the testator or settler, so as to attach on the lands immediately under the deed or will itself. 1 Greenl. Cruise, Dig. 385; 1 Jac. & W. 570. "A trust in which the estates and interest in the subject-matter of the trust are completely limited and defined by the instrument creating the trust, and require no further instruments to complete them." Bisph. Eq. 31. See TRUST; EXECUTORY TRUST.

Also used when, by the statute of uses, the property passes directly to the beneficiary, being executed by the statute. See EXECUTED USE.

EXECUTED USE. A use with which the possession and legal title have been united by the statute of uses. 1 Steph. Com. 339; 2 Sharsw. Bla. Com. 335, note; 7 Term 342; 12 Ves. Ch. 89; 4 Mod. 380.

EXECUTED WRIT. A writ the command in which has been obeyed by the person to whom it was directed.

EXECUTION. The accomplishment of a thing; the completion of an act or instrument; the fulfilment of an undertaking. Thus, a contract is executed when the act to be done is performed; a deed is executed when it is signed, sealed, and delivered. See Gaskill v. King, 34 N. C. 221. Where the party is present and directs another to sign for him, no written authority is necessary; Mut. Ben. Life Ins. Co. v. Brown, 30 N. J. Eq. 193; McMurtry v. Brown, 6 Neb. 363; Jansen v. McCabill, 22 Cal. 563, 83 Am. Dec. 84; Fitzpatrick v. Engard, 175 Pa. 393, 34 Atl. 803; Reed, St. of Fr. § 1063.

In Criminal Law. Putting a convict to death, agreeably to law, in pursuance of his sentence. This is to be performed by the sheriff or his deputy; (see 4 Bla. Com. 403;) or under the laws of the United States, by the marshal. Under the Pennsylvania practice, the governor issues a mandate to execute the sentence of death. The origin of the custom and the forms of mandate and return thereto are found in Com. v. Hill, 185 Pa. 385, 39 Atl. 1055, per Mitchell, J. He points out that the superior courts at Westminster issued warrants of death, and the Court of King's Bench, being held before the king himself, had further power to issue execution of judgments on attainder in parliament or in other courts. The practice of mandates prevails in other states. See Com. v. Costley, 118 Mass. 35; Lowenberg v. People, 27 N. Y. 336; In re Dyer, 56 Kan. 489, 43 Pac. 783; Holden v. Minnesota, 137 U. S. 483, 11 Sup. Ct. 143, 34 L. Ed. 734; State v. Oscar, 13 La. Ann. 297.

Where a day of execution is fixed by the court and is an integral part of the sentence, and the day has passed, the court should fix a new day; Com. v. Hill, 185 Pa. 397, 39 Atl. 1055; Ex parte Howard, 17 N. H. 545; Nicholas v. Com., 91 Va. 813, 22 S. E. 507; State v. Cardwell, 95 N. C. 643; In re Cross, 146 U. S. 271, 13 Sup. Ct. 109, 36 L. Ed. 969 (apparently on a statutory direction). See CRIMES; ELECTROCUTION; GARROTE; GUILLOTINE; HANGING.

In Practice. Putting the sentence of the law in force. 3 Bla. Com. 412. The act of carrying into effect the final judgment or decree of a court.

The writ which directs and authorizes the officer to carry into effect such judgment.

Final execution is one which authorizes the money due on a judgment to be made out of the property of the defendant.

Execution quousque is such as tends to an end, but is not absolutely final: as, for example, a capias ad satisfaciendum, by virtue of which the body of the defendant is taken, to the intent that the plaintiff shall be satisfied of his debt, etc., the imprisonment not being absolute, but until he shall satisfy the same. 6 Co. 87.

Execution, in civil actions, is the mode of obtaining the debt or damages or other thing recovered by the judgment; and it is either for the plaintiff or defendant. For the plaintiff upon a judgment in debt, the execution is for the debt and damages; or in assumpsit, covenant, case, replevin, or trespass, for the damages and costs; or in detinue, for the goods, or their value, with damages and costs. For the defendant upon a judgment in replevin, the execution at common law is for a return of the goods, to which damages are superadded by the statutes 7 Hen. VIII. c. 4, § 3, and 21 Hen. VIII. c. 19, § 3; and in other actions upon a judgment of non pros., non suit, or verdict, the execution is for the costs only; Tidd, Pr. 993.

After final judgment signed, and even before it is entered of record, the plaintiff may, in general, at any time within a year and a day, and whilst the parties to the judgment continue the same, take out execution; provided there be no writ of error depending or agreement to the contrary, or, where this is allowed, security entered for stay of execution. But after a year and a day from the time of signing judgment the plaintiff cannot regularly take out execution without reviving the judgment by scire facias, unless a feri facias, or capias ad satisfaciendum, etc., was previously sued out, returned, and filed, or he was hindered from suing it out by a writ of error; and if a writ of error be brought, it is, generally speaking, a supersedeas of execution from the time of its allowance; provided bail, when necessary, be put in and perfected, in due time. See Tidd, Pr. 994; Elliott v. Mayfield, 3 Ala. 223.

Writs of execution are judicial writs issuing out of the court where the record is upon which they are grounded. Hence, when the record has been removed to a higher court by writ of error or certiorari, or on appeal, either the execution must issue out of that court, or else the record must be returned to the inferior court by a remittitur (q. v.) for the purpose of taking out execution in the court below. The former is the practice in England; the latter, in some of the United States.

The object of execution in personal actions is effected in one or more of the three following ways. 1. By the seizure and sale of personal property of the defendant. 2. By the seizure of his real property, and either selling it or detaining it until the issues and profits are sufficient to satisfy the judgment. 3. By seizing his person and holding him in custody until he pays the judgment or is judicially declared insolvent.

These proceedings, though taken at the instance and under the direction of the party for whom judgment is given, are considered the act of the law itself, and are in all cases performed by the authorized minister of the law. The party or his attorney obtains, from the office of the court where the record is, a writ, based upon and reciting the judgment, and directed to the sheriff (or, where he is interested or otherwise disqualified, to the coroner) of the county, commanding him, in the name of the sovereign or of the state, that of the goods and chattels or of the lands and tenements of the defendant in his bailiwick he cause to be made or levied the sum recovered, or that he seize the person of the defendant, as the case may be, and have the same before the court at the return day of the writ. This writ is delivered by the party to the officer to whom it is directed, who thenceforth becomes responsible for his performance of its mandate, and in case of omission, mistake, or misconduct is liable in damages to the person injured, whether he be the plaintiff, the defendant, or a stranger to the writ.

When property is sold under execution, the proceeds are applied to the satisfaction of the judgment and the costs and charges of the proceedings; and the surplus, if there be any, is paid to the defendant in execution.

Execution against personal property. When the property consists of goods and chattels, in which are included terms for years, the writ used is the feri facias (q. v.). If, after levying on the goods, etc., under a feri facias, they remain unsold for want of buyers, etc., a supplemental writ may issue, which is called the venditioni exponas. At common law, goods and chattels might also be taken in execution under a levari facias; though now perhaps the most frequent use of this writ is in executions against real property.

Where it is sought to reach an equitable interest a bill in equity is sometimes filed in aid of an execution; Lant v. Manley, 75 Fed. 627, 21 C. C. A. 457.

When the property consisted of choses in action, whether debts due the defendant or any other sort of credit or interest belonging to him, it could not be taken in execution at common law; but now, under statutory provisions in many of the states, such property may be reached by a process in the nature of an attachment, called an attachment execution or execution attachment. See ATTACHMENT; CREDITORS' BILL.

Execution against real estate. Where lands are absolutely liable for the payment of debts, and can be sold in execution, the process is by feri facias and venditioni exponas. In Pennsylvania the land cannot be sold in execution unless the sheriff's jury, under the feri facias, find that the profits will not pay the debt in seven years. But, practically, lands are almost never extended. And, in general, under common-law practice, lands are not subject to sale under execution, until after a levy has been made under the feri facias, and they are appraised under an inquisition. They are then liable to be sold under a venditioni exponas.

There are in England writs of execution against land which are not in general use here. The extent (q. v.), or extendi facias, is the usual process for the king's debt. The levari facias (q. v.) is also used for the king's debt, and for the subject on a recognition or statute staple or merchant (q. v.), and on a judgment in scire facias, in which latter case it is also generally employed in this country.

Execution against the person. This is effected by the writ of capias ad satisfaciendum, under which the sheriff arrests the defendant and imprisons him till he satisfies the judgment or is discharged by process of law; Freem. Ex. 451. See INSOLVENCY. This execution is not final, the imprisonment not being absolute; whence it has been called an execution quousque; 6 Co. 87.

Besides the ordinary judgment for the payment of a sum certain, there are specific judgments, to do some particular thing. To this the execution must correspond: on a judgment for plaintiff in a real action, the writ is a habere facias seisinam; in ejectment it is a habere facias possessionem; for the defendant in replevin, as has already been mentioned, the writ is de retorno habendo.

Still another sort of judgment is that in rem, confined to a particular thing: such are judgments upon mechanics' liens and municipal claims, and, in the peculiar practice of Pennsylvania, on scire facias upon a mortgage. In such cases the execution is a writ of levari facias. A confession of judgment upon warrant of attorney, with a restriction of the lien to a particular tract, is an analogous instance; but in such case there is no peculiar form of execution; though if the plaintiff should, in violation of his agreement, attempt to levy on other land than that to which his judgment is confined, the court on motion would set aside the execution.

An execution issued in direct violation of an express agreement not to do so, except in a certain contingency which has not happened, will be set aside; Feagley v. Norbeck, 127 Pa. 238, 17 Atl. 900.

The lien of an execution from the judgment or decree of a court of record relates to its teste, and attaches to all personalty owned by the debtor between the teste and the levy so as to defeat the title of all intermediate purchasers; Edwards v. Thompson, 85 Tenn. 720, 4 S. W. 913, 4 Am. St. Rep. 807; not only in the county in which judgment was rendered, but everywhere in the state; Cecil v. Carson, 86 Tenn. 139, 5 S. W. 532. A sale under execution transmits only the debtor's estate, in the same plight and subject to all the equities under which he held it; Threadgill v. Redwine, 97 N. C. 241, 2 S. E. 526.

In Connecticut, Massachusetts, and Maine by common law and immemorial usage, under a judgment against a town, the property of any inhabitant may be taken in execution; Bloomfield v. Bank, 121 U. S. 121, 7 Sup. Ct. 865, 30 L. Ed. 923.

See EXEMPTION; FIERI FACIAS; HOME-STEAD; SHERIFF.

EXECUTION PAREE. In French Law. A right founded on an act passed before a notary, by which the creditor may immediately, without citation or summons, seize and cause to be sold the property of his debtor, out of the proceeds of which to receive his payment. It imports a confession of judgment, and is not unlike a warrant of attorney. La. Code of Proc. art. 732; 6 Toullier, n. 208; 7 id. 99.

EXECUTIONER. The name given to him who puts criminals to death, according to their sentence; a hangman.

In the United States there are no executioners by profession. It is the duty of the sheriff or marshal to perform this office, or to procure a deputy to do it for him.

EXECUTIVE. That power in the government which causes the laws to be executed and obeyed.

It is usually confided to the hands of the chief magistrate; the president of the United States is invested with this authority under the national government; and the governor of each state has the executive power of the state in his hands.

The officer in whom the executive power is vested.

EXECUTIVE COMMITTEE. See DIRECTORS.

EXECUTIVE POWER. Authority exercised by that department of government which is charged with the administration or execution of the laws as distinguished from the legislative and judicial functions.

"Executive power," which the constitution declares shall be 'vested' in the president, includes power to carry into execution the national laws—and including such other powers, not legislative or judicial in their nature, as might from time to time be delegated to the president by congress—as the prosecution of war when declared—and to take care that the law be faithfully executed." 1 Curtis, Const. Hist. 578.

The separation of the three primary governmental powers as found in the constitution of the United States and of the separate states is the culmination of a revolution which had long been in progress in Europe. As is pointed out by a recent writer all governmental power was formerly united in the monarch of the middle ages. As the result of experience there was a separation of the state from the government, the former being termed the constitution-making power and the latter the instrumentalities by which administration was from time to time set in motion and carried on. Further advances in experience indicated the necessity of the distribution of powers by which there should be a deliberative body for the formulation of the rules and regulations under which the state should exist and its affairs be administered; another which should be the medium by which these rules and regulations forming the body of municipal law should be carried into effect; and a third to which should be committed the functions known in the science of government as judicial. The latter, under the government of the United States, has reached its highest development and exercises an authority in some instances over the other two departments of the government elsewhere unknown, even going so far as to define the limits of their authority and to declare void legislative acts. See CONSTITUTIONAL. This theory of the distribution of the powers of government among three distinct authorities, independent of each other, was first formulated by Montesquieu, Esprit des Lois, b. xi. c. vi. The absolute independence of the three branches of government which was advocated by Montesquieu has not been found entirely practicable in practice, and, although the threefold division of powers is the basis of the American constitution, there are many cases in which the duties of one department are to a certain extent devolved upon and shared by another. This is illustrated in the United States and in many of the states by the veto power which vests in the executive a part of the legislative authority, and on the other hand by the requirement of the confirmation by one branch of the legislature of executive appointments. The practical difficulty in the way of an exact division of powers is thus well expressed: "Although the executive, legislative, and supreme judicial powers of the government ought to be forever separate and distinct, it is also true that the science of government is a practical one; therefore, while each should firmly maintain the essential powers belonging to it, it cannot be forgotten that the three co-ordinate parts constitute one brotherhood whose common trust requires a mutual toleration of the occupancy of what seems to be a common because of vicinage bordering on the domains of each;" Brown v. Turner, 70 N. C. 83, 102. In England, there is in parliament a practical union of all the governmental powers, that body having absolute power of selecting the agents through whom, in fact, is exercised the executive power theoretically vested in the crown, and the final judicial authority on appeal remaining in the House of Lords. There is, notwithstanding, a complete recognition of the threefold nature of governmental power which is not lost nor destroyed by the unity of the final depository of it all.

While the science of government in modern times may be said to accept the general theory of the separation of powers, subject to limitations and exceptions suggested, the application of the theory has not been uniform. Great difficulty has been found in practice in determining the depository of executive power and whether it should be vested in one man or a board of control, the latter being supposed to insure deliberation and possibly to prevent tyranny, and the other being more conducive to efficient administration. See 2 Sto. Const. §§ 1419-23; Montesq. Espr. de L. b. xi. ch. vi.; De Lolme, Const. Eng. b. 2, ch. 2; Federalist No. 70; 1 Kent 271. The necessity for the latter has led to the almost universal adoption of the plan of having a single executive head, and the principal remaining difficulty has been the extent and character of the power to be entrusted to it. This is in part the result of the effort to apply too rigidly the theory of the absolute separation of powers already shown to be impracticable. Another difficulty has been said to arise from the failure to recognize that executive power really comprises two functions, the political or governmental and the administrative. The former concerns the relations of the chief executive authority with the great powers of government, the latter relates to the practical management of the public service. It has been said that the executive authority, as understood in the American states, is mainly a political chief, that in France and to a less extent in England its position as an administrator is more important, while in the federal government in this country it is both, as it is also in Germany; 1 Goodnow, Comp. Adm. L. 51.

The proper treatment of this subject involves the consideration of the systems of executive administration developed in the principal countries of the world which have adopted the principle of the distribution of powers. Only the briefest summary, however, is here practicable.

The general theory of the distribution of powers in Great Britain is very much like that in the princely governments of Germany. The residuum of governmental powers is in the crown, and the crown may exercise all authority not expressly otherwise delegated, but it rests with parliament to decide ultimately what powers shall be exercised by the crown and how it shall exercise them; herein it differs from the German system. From the comprehensive Norman idea of royalty which combined all the sovereign powers of the Saxon and Dane with those of the feudal theory of monarchy exemplified at the time in France, there developed at first hereditary and despotic power which was gradually limited by the necessity of the concurrent action of parliament for the imposition of taxes and the enactment of laws affecting the ordinary relations of individuals. Later it was considered that a law once enacted could not be changed without the consent of parliament, and finally the latter body assumed the right to initiate as well as approve laws, and the crown lost its original power of veto which has certainly become obsolete, though it has been said to be merely dormant and susceptible of being revived; 2 Todd, Parl. Govt. in Eng. 390. See 1 Stubbs, Const. Hist. of Eng. 338. The result of this development is that parliament has assumed most of the legislative power, though many matters not regulated by it are controlled by the crown which exercises a large ordinance power both independent and supplementary. The crown has lost both the taxing power and the judicial power, but retains in large part its old executive powers, and its action is controlled very largely by a body whose power has gradually developed, viz., the privy council. The crown may do anything which it is not forbidden to do and possesses the administrative as well as the political power. It may create offices as well as fill them, and both remove and direct the incumbents. The crown is, therefore, the chief both of the administrative and political departments of the executive power, its position being modified by the principle that its advisers, without whom it cannot act, must possess the confidence of the majority in the house of commons. The principle of parliamentary responsibility puts the crown in the position of reigning but not governing; but so long as it possesses the confidence of the house of commons it has very extensive executive powers, and in council may declare war and make treaties, which in other countries can be done only with the consent of the legislature. The crown is in theory irresponsible, but when its ministers are in a minority in the house of commons it chooses new ministers who will have the confidence of parliament, or dissolves parliament in the hope that the new body will have confidence in the existing ministers, but the theory is that in all cases the crown and not parliament administers. See Pom. Const. Law § 176; 1 Goodn. Comp. Adm. L. ch. vi.

In France the executive power is vested in a president elected by the legislature. His position is said by a recent writer, probably on account of the monarchical traditions in France, to be more important from the administrative point of view and less from a political point of view than that of the President of the United States, he having no veto power. He has quite an unlimited power of appointment and also a very extensive power of removal, not only of officers appointed by himself, but of local administrative officers; as mayors of communes; Law, Apr. 5, 1884; and he may dissolve local and municipal legislative bodies in the departments and communes; LL. Aug. 10, 1871, and Apr. 5, 1884. In addition to his power of executing laws, he has in many cases authority to supplement the law without any delegation of legislative power by what are known as decrees. This supplemental power is accorded to him under a constitutional provision that he shall watch over and secure the execution of the laws, and the difference between the interpretation put upon this and the similar provision in the United States constitution is accredited to the monarchical traditions of the country, and the resulting idea that the residuary governmental power is vested in the executive and not, as in this country, in congress. The president is also held to a greater responsibility for his action than in the American system. 1 Goodnow, Comp. Adm. L. ch. iv.

In Germany the conception of executive power is much broader than in the United States, and it is more important from the administrative point of view. There are important constitutional limitations on the action of the Prince, or executive head of the subdivisions of the empire; but in the absence of such limitations he is recognized as having the governmental power, being as in France the possessor of the residuum of the governmental power. The limitations upon his action by the constitution are found in the requirement of legislative consent for the validity of legislative acts affecting freedom of person and property and the financial affairs of the government, judicial power administered by courts independent of the control of the executive, and the necessity that each of his official acts must be countersigned by a minister who is responsible for it either to the legislature or to the criminal courts. The administrative powers are very extensive, including that of appointment and removal, and a very wide power of direction, together with the authority to make decrees or ordinances as to all matters not regulated in detail by legislation.

In the imperial government, the Emperor occupies, from the administrative point of view, about the same position as the President of the United States. He has a general power of appointment and of administrative direction, which latter is, however, exercised under the responsibility of the chancellor, who must countersign all acts by which it is exercised; but just what the responsibility of the latter officer is seems to be undefined other than that he may be called upon to defend his policy before the federal council. The Emperor does not have any ordinance power except such as is expressly mentioned in the constitution or delegated by the legislature, and in the exercise of it he often requires the consent of the federal council. He is entirely irresponsible. id. ch. v. A leading German commentator regards the governmental form of the empire as a republic; 1 Zorn, Das Reichsstaatsrecht, 162.

In the United States, the federal executive power is vested in the president. In all the states the chief executive is the governor. With respect to the power of the latter the differences in the state constitutions make it necessary, for brief statements of the executive officers and their duties, to refer for more detailed information to the constitutions of the states, while comparative views of the provisions on particular points may be found in Stimson, Am. Stat. Law. Many features are common to most of the states and, making due allowance for differences of detail, the character of the officer is substantially the same. In general, it may be noted that he is commander of the state militia, subject to the paramount federal constitutional control when it is in the actual service of the United States: he has in most cases a pardoning power (except in some states for treason), as to which, however, there is a growing tendency to limit it by requiring the recommendation of a board of pardons, either such in name or effect, usually composed of several executive officers, virtute officii; he has usually a veto power which compels the reconsideration of legislation by a two-thirds vote in most cases, but in some, three-fifths, and in others a mere majority; in most of the states he has power to summon the legislature in extra session, and to adjourn its sessions when the two houses disagree as to the time. As a rule, the governor's power of appointment is confined to minor state officials, and he has no power of removal except for cause and after a hearing. He is usually charged with the duty of sending messages to the legislature containing his views and recommendations upon public questions. The constitutional powers vested in the governor alone are addressed to and regulated by his own uncontrolled discretion; for example, where an officer assuming to act as governor, in his absence, had issued a proclamation convening the legislature in extraordinary session, the governor having returned previous to the time named for the meeting, and issued a second proclamation, revoking the first, it was held that, the power of convening the legislature being discretionary, the call might be recalled before the meeting took place; People v. Parker, 3 Neb. 409, 19 Am. Rep. 634.

Under the United States constitution the governor of a state may call upon the president, when necessary, for aid in the enforcement of the laws.

His limited power of removal makes his power of direction and administration very slight. He is in effect a political rather than an administrative officer, his powers of the former class having increased while those of the latter class have been gradually curtailed. In this respect his relative position is quite the reverse of that of the president. For a discriminating review of this subject, see 1 Goodn. Comp. Adm. L. ch. iii.

The right of the executive officers named in the constitution to exercise all the powers properly belonging to the executive department is given indisputably by the constitution; State v. Savage, 64 Neb. 684, 90 N. W. 898, 91 N. W. 557. They may, unless limited by constitution or statute, determine as to the time and place where the exercise of their jurisdiction is necessary, and the people and local officers of that locality have no constitutional or statutory right to be heard on that question; Gilmore v. Penobscot, 107 Me. 345, 78 Atl. 454.

The executive power possessed by the president must be considered historically in order to reach an adequate view, both of its present scope and limitations and its growth since the adoption of the constitution. It is to be observed primarily that in the United States there is the fundamental condition that the executive power, whether of president or governor, is expressly granted, and the residuum of sovereignty is in the legislature, either federal or state as the case may be, and not in the executive, as in France and Germany, actually so, or, as in England, theoretically so. This remark is equally true as to its general results, notwithstanding decisions, that the express grant of executive power carries with it certain implied powers. These were still powers of executing the laws, and not, as in the countries named, of supplementing or adding to them.

Though it is often said that the framers of the United States constitution, in creating the office of president, had in view, as a model, the English king; Pom. Const. Law § 176, a more recent and probably correct view is that the office was rather modelled upon the colonial governor; 1 Goodnow, Comp. Adm. L. 52, and 1 Bryce, Am. Com. 36. An examination of the powers of the executive in each of the three colonies of New York, Massachusetts, and Virginia leads Professor Goodnow to the conclusion that the American constitutional executive power was that which has been called the political or governmental power, and which had usually been exercised by the colonial governor, to which was added the carrying on of foreign relations, which, in the colonial period, were under the control of the mother country, and afterwards of the continental congress. The fact that the constitution, in vesting in the president the executive power, used the term as one whose meaning would be readily understood, undoubtedly leads to the conclusion that the general powers so characterized were such as people of the states were accustomed to have exercised by the governors, first of the colonies and then of the states. But see Stevens, Sources Const. U. S. ch. vi.

The specific powers conferred by the constitution in addition to the general provision vesting the executive power in him, are that he shall be commander-in-chief of the army and navy and the militia of the states when in service; that he may require the opinions of the officers of the executive departments; grant reprieves and pardons, except in cases of impeachment; make treaties with the advice and consent of the senate, two-thirds thereof concurring, and, the senate consenting, appoint ambassadors, judges, and other officers whose appointment is not otherwise provided for by law; give information to congress; convene both houses, or either, and adjourn them, when they disagree with respect to the time of adjournment, to such time as he shall think proper; receive ambassadors and other public ministers; take care that the laws be faithfully executed; and commission all officers; Const. art. ii. §§ 1, 2, 3.

This grant is said to have conferred upon the president the political power of an executive and one administrative power, viz., the power of appointment, beyond which he had no control over the administration; 1 Goodnow, Comp. Adm. L. 63; Pom. Const. L. § 633.

The original powers of the president, under the constitution, have been increased by acts of congress conferring specific powers upon him and by decisions that his power is not limited by the express terms of legislative acts but includes certain "rights, duties, and obligations growing out of the constitution itself, our international relations, and all the protection implied by the nature of the government under the constitution"; In re Neagle, 135 U. S. 1, 64, 10 Sup. Ct. 658, 34 L. Ed. 55. Under this implied power it was held that the president could take measures to protect a United States judge or a mail-carrier in the discharge of his duty without an act of congress authorizing him to do so; In re Neagle, 135 U. S. 67, 10 Sup. Ct. 658, 34 L. Ed. 55; or, in the same manner, to place guards upon the public lands to protect the property of the government. As an illustration of the exercise of this power the supreme court cites the executive action which resulted in the release of Koszta from a foreign prison where he was confined in derogation of his rights as a person who had declared his intention to become an American citizen; In re Neagle, 135 U. S. 64, 10 Sup. Ct. 658, 34 L. Ed. 55. He may remove obstructions to interstate commerce and the transportation of the mails; and enforce the full and free exercise of all national powers and the security of all rights under the constitution; In re Debs, 158 U. S. 568, 15 Sup. Ct. 900, 39 L. Ed. 1092.

Another increase of the administrative power of the president was due to his power of removal, which was not expressed in the constitution, but it was held by a majority vote in the first congress to be a part of the executive power; 1 Lloyd's Debates 351, 366, 450, 480-600; 2 id. 1-12; 5 Marsh. Life of Washington, ch. 3, 196; and this construction of the constitution was judicially approved; U. S. v. Avery, Deady 204, Fed. Cas. No. 14,481; and was undoubtedly the recognized practice of the government until the passage of the Tenure of Office Acts of 1867-9; U. S. R. S. §§ 1767 to 1769; which were repealed in 1887. See 2 Sto. Const. §§ 1537-43; Paper of W. A. Dunning on the Impeachment and Trial of President Johnson; 4 Papers Am. Hist. Assoc. 491; 1 Kent 310; Pom. Const. L. §§ 647-657. To the power of removal thus recognized has been attributed the evolution of "the president's power of direction and supervision over the entire national administration" and "the recognition of the possession by the president of the administrative power"; 1 Goodnow, Comp. Adm. L. 66. Whatever theories may be formed of the conception of the office in the minds of the framers of the constitution, and however the result may have been brought about, it cannot be doubted that the executive head of the federal government is now in fact the depositary of the complete executive power, as it is understood to comprehend both political and administrative power. He is authorized to appoint certain officers in the executive departments, the discharge of whose duties is under his direction; Marbury v. Madison, 1 Cra. (U. S.) 165, 2 L. Ed. 60; Kendall v. U. S., 12 Pet. (U. S.) 524, 9 L. Ed. 1181; U. S. v. Kendall, 5 Cra. C. C. 163, Fed. Cas. No. 15,517. This is considered by the writer last cited to be a great enlargement of the American conception; and this view seems to be well-supported by the considerations already suggested. It is true that at the time of the adoption of the constitution the powers conferred upon the president were considered by many to be so great as to endanger the stability of the Union, and it is considered by one of the ablest authorities on constitutional law that no one of the three great departments "has been more shorn of its just powers, or crippled in the exercise of them, than the presidency;" Miller, Const. U. S. 20, 95. But the context shows that this has reference solely to the encroachments on the appointing power by the extra-legal participation of members of congress therein—an evil much mitigated by the extension of the civil service system to the greater number of offices which were formerly not subject to its operation.

The administrative power of the president includes not only the control of the personnel of the public service but also the vast number of powers brought into action in the course of the administration of the government growing out of powers vested in the president by his duty under the constitution to see that the laws are faithfully executed. These duties, aside from this specific enumeration in the constitution as already stated, are those imposed upon the president by act of congress, and may be either of a special or general character, as the promulgation of regulations for the control of particular branches of the public service, such as consular regulations and the civil service rules; but in most cases such executive regulations proceed from the heads of departments and not from the president directly, although they are in law presumed to proceed from him; Wilcox v. Jackson, 13 Pet. (U. S.) 498, 513, 10 L. Ed. 264; U. S. v. Eliason, 16 Pet. (U. S.) 291, 10 L. Ed. 968; The Confiscation Cases, 20 Wall. (U. S.) 92, 109, 22 L. Ed. 320; U. S. v. Farden, 99 U. S. 10, 19, 25 L. Ed. 267; Wolsey v. Chapman, 101 U. S. 755, 25 L. Ed. 915. Executive acts, as to the manner of doing which there is no provision of law, may be done through the head of the proper department whose acts are the acts of the president in contemplation of law; Jones v. U. S., 137 U. S. 202, 217, 11 Sup. Ct. 80, 34 L. Ed. 691. The president may act in special cases by directions to his subordinate officers, either directly or through the head of a department, or by his decision on appeal from either of them, though, as a rule, he is not considered to be authorized to entertain such appeals except as to the jurisdiction of the officer appealed from; 15 Op. Atty. Gen. 94, 100, reviewing opinions on this question. In other cases the appeal does not go beyond the head of the department; 4 id. 515; 9 id. 462; 10 id. 526.

Nearly if not all the state constitutions contain provisions similar to that of the United States making it the duty of the chief executive to see that the laws are faithfully executed. This provision has been drawn into construction by the supreme court of Mississippi. The governor believed that a contract made by a state board of which the attorney-general was a member was contrary to the constitution, and, having ineffectually endeavored to induce the attorney-general to act in the matter, brought suit himself in the name of the state and the court dismissed the bill, the majority opinion being that no warrant could be found in the constitution or laws of the state for the action of the governor; Henry v. State, 87 Miss. 1, 39 South. 856. See note on this case; 1 The Law 806. In that state the right of the governor to sue in a foreign state is given by statute; Rev. Code (1892) § 2167.

A governor, being under the constitutional injunction to see that the laws are executed, appears to have no right to execute them himself; Shields v. Bennett, 8 W. Va. 74; In re Fire & Excise Com'rs, 19 Colo. 482, 36 Pac. 234; Cahill v. Board, 127 Mich. 487, 86 N. W. 950, 55 L. R. A. 493. As to his right to employ counsel for the state, see 55 L. R. A. 493, n. There are state statutes authorizing the governor to employ other counsel in certain cases, where the attorney-general is under a disability; State v. Dubuclet, 25 La. Ann. 161; Orton v. State, 12 Wis. 509. A governor has also been permitted to bring action on bonds payable to him for the use of the state; Governor v. Allen, 8 Humph. (Tenn.) 176. See note on this subject; 19 Harv. L. Rev. 524.

In most if not all of the states, the governor has a veto power, and in such case an act of the legislature is not valid unless presented to him for approval, the opportunity for his action being essential to the validity of the law; Wartman v. City of Philadelphia, 33 Pa. 202; Burritt v. Com'rs of State Contracts, 120 Ill. 322, 11 N. E. 180; State v. Newark, 25 N. J. L. 399. In some cases not only a bill but an order or resolution must be presented to the executive, but in most cases adjournment is excepted; Trammell v. Bradley, 37 Ark. 374.

Some question has arisen as to whether the veto power of the governor extends to proposals for the amendment of the constitution. In Delaware, the governor's power over such proposals is recognized in the constitution, and in some other states they are exempted, but as a general rule there is no mention of the governor in connection with such proposals. It has been held that the veto power of the executive does not apply to them in Com. v. Griest, 196 Pa. 396, 46 Atl. 505, 50 L. R. A. 568; Nesbit v. People, 19 Colo. 441, 36 Pac. 221; Warfield v. Vandiver, 101 Md. 78, 60 Atl. 538, 4 Ann. Cas. 692; but it has also been held that, while proposing constitutional amendments is not legislation in the ordinary sense, it is such so far as that it must be included in the governor's proposals for legislation in a special session in order to be valid; People v. Curry, 130 Cal. 82, 62 Pac. 516.

The practice of the federal government is that proposals by congress of amendments to the constitution are not submitted to the president for his approval. Of the seventeen amendments thus far adopted, none have been approved by the president except the XIIIth. The resolution proposing that particular amendment is published with the note at the foot, "Approved February 1st, 1865"; 13 Stat. 567; but this does not appear in the resolution as published by the secretary of state in his announcement of its ratification. Prior to the XIIIth, no resolution proposing amendments, as published, has any note at the foot. Subsequent to the XIIIth they appear with "Received at Department of State" or "Deposited in Department of State," noted at the foot of the resolution as published in the Statutes at Large. The only exception to the general practice of having no approval by the president is the XIIIth which seems to have been inadvertence.

In Hollingsworth v. Virginia, 3 Dall. (U. S.) 380, 1 L. Ed. 644, it was argued by W. Tilghman and Rawle, upon the question whether the XIth amendment did, or did not, supersede all pending suits against states, that the amendment was not proposed in due form because never submitted for approval of the president. When Lee, Atty. Gen., answered that the same course had been pursued relative to all the other amendments, Chase, J., interrupted: "There can, surely, be no necessity to answer that argument. The negative of the president applies only to the ordinary cases of legislation. He has nothing to do with the proposition, or adoption, of amendments to the constitution."

The date is no necessary part of executive approval of a bill either by the president; Gardner v. The Collector, 6 Wall. (U. S.) 499, 18 L. Ed. 890 (where it is said that neither the constitution nor any act of congress requires him to affix a date to his signature); nor in the case of a governor; State v. Hitchcock, 1 Kan. 178, 81 Am. Dec. 503; and the signature in any place on the bill is sufficient; National Land & Loan Co. v. Mead, 60 Vt. 257, 14 Atl. 689.

Where the constitution provides that measures submitted for executive approval "shall be presented" to him, it is held that it is unnecessary that they should be presented to him in person; but it is sufficient that they be left at the executive chamber, or other place determined by usage where communications are made to the governor; Opinion of Justices, 45 N. H. 607; otherwise, as was said arguendo, the executive, by simply absenting himself, could defeat any law; Hamilton v. State, 61 Md. 14; on the other hand, it is said that it is not sufficient that the bill is sent to the secretary of state; Opinion of Justices, 99 Mass. 636; or the governor's private secretary, who returned it as not properly signed; Monroe v. Green, 71 Ark. 527, 76 S. W. 199; and see Lyth v. City of Buffalo, 48 Hun (N. Y.) 175, and Harpending v. Haight, 39 Cal. 189, 2 Am. Rep. 432, where it was held that merely exhibiting a measure to the governor was not a proper presentation; which must be such as to notify the executive that it is intended to secure his final action; State v. Newark, 25 N. J. L. 399. The presentation must be of the same bill which was passed; State v. Wendler, 94 Wis. 369, 68 N. W. 759; Padavano v. Fagan, 66 N. J. L. 167, 48 Atl. 998; and if the title has been changed it is material, particularly where the title is required to express the substance of the bill; Simpson v. Stockyards Co., 110 Fed. 799; People v. Onondaga Sup'rs, 16 Mich. 254; the presentation must be within a reasonable time before the expiration of the time limit for approval; State v. Michel, 52 La. Ann. 936, 57 South. 565, 49 L. R. A. 218, 78 Am. St. Rep. 364. In the absence of any express provision for the approval of bills after the adjournment of the legislature, it has been held that the power of the executive is at an end and the legislation void; Fowler v. Peirce, 2 Cal. 165; Hardee v. Gibbs, 50 Miss. 802, overruled in State v. Sup'rs of Coahoma County, 64 Miss. 358, 1 South. 501; but where the constitution provided that a bill should become a law if not returned within ten days, and that within five days after adjournment the governor might sign any act passed within the last five days of the session, his signature within ten days after the passage of the bill, although it was passed more than five days before adjournment, was valid; City of Detroit v. Chapin, 108 Mich. 136, 66 N. W. 587, 37 L. R. A. 391 (where the cases are examined at large in the opinion and a note); but where he is allowed five days and returns it in less time with a notification that he does not sign it, it will become a law, as the five days allowed is a matter of privilege; Hunt v. State, 72 Ark. 241, 79 S. W. 769, 65 L. R. A. 71, 105 Am. St. Rep. 34, 2 Ann. Cas. 33. Of course, this question is settled by a constitutional provision authorizing executive action after the adjournment, and such action has been sustained upon the basis of long-established custom; Solomon v. Com'rs of Cartersville, 41 Ga. 157. On the other hand, custom to the contrary was held to be abrogated by a single departure from it by the president; U. S. v. Weil, 29 Ct. Cl. 523. But when that question arose in a case before the supreme court, that court held that an act was not invalid by reason of its being signed during a recess of Congress, but it declined to decide whether the president could sign after the final adjournment; La Abra Silver Min. Co. v. U. S., 175 U. S. 423, 20 Sup. Ct. 168, 44 L. Ed. 223.

Where there were rival bodies each claiming to be the legislature, it has been held that the recognition of the governor is not effective to determine between them; Ex parte Screws, 49 Ala. 57; In re Gunn, 50 Kan. 155, 32 Pac. 470, 948, 19 L. R. A. 519; but under the United States constitution, the president, by virtue of the guaranty to the states against domestic violence, upon the application of the legislature, and his authority to suppress insurrection, necessarily has the power to determine who constitute the legislature, as it was held in Luther v. Borden, 7 How. (U. S.) 1, 12 L. Ed. 581.

In the absence of constitutional authority to the contrary, the governor must approve or veto a bill as a whole; Porter v. Hughes, 4 Ariz. 1, 32 Pac. 165, where without such authority the governor vetoed part of an appropriation bill, but his signature affixed to it was held to be an approval of the whole bill; but in State v. Holder, 76 Miss. 158, 23 South. 643, the contrary was held and the action of the executive was treated as a nullity; where, however, he is authorized to veto separate items, he may also veto a part of an item; Com. v. Barnett, 199 Pa. 161, 48 Atl. 976, 55 L. R. A. 882; but he may not veto some items before adjournment and others after it; Pickle v. McCall, 86 Tex. 212, 24 S. W. 265. Where the governor inadvertently approved one bill believing it to be another and recalled his action, it was held valid so long as the bill was before him, but would not have been so if returned to the legislature; People v. Hatch, 19 Ill. 283; Alleghany County v. Warfield, 100 Md. 516, 60 Atl. 599, 108 Am. St. Rep. 446. Where he had deposited the bill in the office of the secretary of state with his approval endorsed on it, it had passed beyond his control, and he had no authority afterwards to veto it; People v. McCullough, 210 Ill. 488, 71 N. E. 602. The return of a bill to either house, or notification of its approval, is a matter of courtesy only and not required by law; State v. Whisner, 35 Kan. 271, 10 Pac. 852.

Whether a measure may be recalled by the legislature after having been sent to the executive is in doubt; Wolfe v. McCaull, 76 Va. 876, where its return is said to be "a mere act of courtesy"; and see People v. Devlin, 33 N. Y. 269, 88 Am. Dec. 377. An opinion of the attorney-general of Wisconsin holds the practice of the surrender of bills by the executive as questionable, and doubts whether, if returned, it may be changed by the legislature; Op. Atty. Gen. Wis. Sen. Jour. (1897) 690. See also Smith v. Jennings, 67 S. C. 324, 45 S. E. 821; In re Duffy, 4 Brewst. (Pa.) 533; Sank v. City of Philadelphia, 8 Phila. (Pa.) 117. The return of a bill after veto must put it clearly in the possession of the legislature and out of the control of the executive; Harpending v. Haight, 39 Cal. 189, 2 Am. Rep. 432; but the return must be before final adjournment; Opinion of Justices, 45 N. H. 607.

The approval or veto by the governor is held in some cases to be a legislative act; Trustees of School District No. 1 v. County Com'rs, 1 Nev. 335; Thornburg v. Hermann, 1 Nev. 473; Fowler v. Peirce, 2 Cal. 165; State v. Deal, 24 Fla. 293, 4 South. 899, 12 Am. St. Rep. 204; Opinion on Governor's Communication, 23 Fla. 298, 6 South. 925; Hardee v. Gibbs, 50 Miss. 802; State v. Fagan, 22 La. Ann. 545; Arnold v. McKellar, 9 S. C. 335; Weis v. Ashley, 59 Neb. 494, 81 N. W. 318, 80 Am. St. Rep. 704; contra, People v.

Bowen, 30 Barb. (N. Y.) 24; U. S. v. Weil, 29 Ct. Cl. 523. It is said by way of conclusion, after an examination of the cases, in an article in 41 Am. L. Rev. 396, cited infra: "Usually the controversy has been entirely unnecessary to a decision of a case. Though the legislative character of the executive's action would seem to be obvious enough, insisting on this truth has been very 'unfruitful,' since the same results could generally have been obtained without it, and when pushed to the extreme, unreasonable results are likely to follow."

The power of a governor to summon the legislature in extraordinary sessions, expressed in various terms in the state constitutions, is held to leave the occasion wholly to the discretion of the executive; Whiteman's Ex'x v. R. Co., 2 Harr. (Del.) 514, 33 Am. Dec. 411; In re Governor's Proclamation, 19 Colo. 333, 35 Pac. 530; State v. Fair, 35 Wash. 127, 76 Pac. 731, 102 Am. St. Rep. 897; and in one case it was held that the governor had power to revoke his proclamation; People v. Parker, 3 Neb. 409, 19 Am. Rep. 634. Where the constitution authorized the governor to limit the subject-matters of legislation at the special session, they must be presented in writing and a "parol request" or a mere reference to the subject is insufficient; Manor Casino v. State (Tex.) 34 S. W. 769; Jones v. Theall, 3 Nev. 233; but it has been decided by the United States senate that the election of a senator, which has failed at a regular session, may take place at a special session, though not named by the governor as one of the purposes; Taft, El. Cas. 722. The governor's proclamation need not be specific as to the details of particular legislation, as to which the general subject is recommended; In re Governor's Proclamation, 19 Colo. 333, 35 Pac. 530; Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co. v. Wolfe, 61 Neb. 502, 86 N. W. 441; Parsons v. People, 32 Colo. 221, 76 Pac. 666.

In many states the executive has the power to convene the legislature at a place other than its usual place of meeting, in the case of grave emergency, the existence of which must be determined by him, and in one case, that of Alabama, he has power to remove it after it has convened, but the ordinary provision is held to apply only to the place of assembly and not to a subsequent change; Taylor v. Beckham, 108 Ky. 278, 56 S. W. 177, 49 L. R. A. 258, 94 Am. St. Rep. 357.

The usual provision of state constitutions authorizing the governor to adjourn the legislature in case of disagreement between the two houses is held to vest the decision whether such occasion exists in the executive; In re Legislative Adjournment, 18 R. I. 824, 27 Atl. 324, 22 L. R. A. 716, where it was held that the governor might disregard a certificate of disagreement and examine the records of the two houses to ascertain whether one existed. In another case the power of the governor was not determined, as it was deemed sufficient by the court that the legislature had in fact adjourned; People v. Hatch, 33 Ill. 9. See an interesting discussion of "The Executive Control of the Legislature," by James B. Barnett, 41 Am. L. Rev. 215, 384.

Congress may impose on any executive officer any duty which is not repugnant to any right which is secured and protected by the constitution; Marbury v. Madison, 1 Cra. (U. S.) 137, 2 L. Ed. 60; Kendall v. U. S., 12 Pet. (U. S.) 524, 9 L. Ed. 1181. With respect to certain executive functions which spring from the legislation of congress, after the occasion is created by the passage of a law, the authority of the legislature is ended, and the uncontrolled discretion of the executive attaches and is exercised independently of the other departments of the government. In the exercise of such powers the discretion of the subordinate officer, within his sphere, is the discretion of the president. Of this character are the control of the military resources of the government; the pardoning power and the power of appointment, all of which are dormant until legislation has been enacted for creating an army and navy, or defining crimes and punishments and the creation of offices. As to another class of executive powers which depend entirely upon the legislation of congress both for their existence and their scope, the president merely executes the law. Within this class necessarily fall the greater number of executive functions, and they differ from the other classes in that, with respect to them, the president may be deprived of all discretion.

The power to appoint to an office is an executive function, but may be exercised by the legislature or the courts as an incident of the principal power; that is, where necessary to the exercise of full legislative or judicial power; State v. Hyde, 121 Ind. 20, 22 N. E. 644.

A law providing that the governor, lieutenant governor and attorney-general shall constitute a board to appoint members of a railroad commission is not the appointment of those officers to a new office, but merely imposing new duties upon them and is valid; Southern Pac. Co. v. Bartine, 170 Fed. 725; and the same was held to be the effect of a similar designation of certain executive officers to act as a state board of elections to appoint election officers; Richardson v. Young, 122 Tenn. 471, 125 S. W. 664.

Where the executive has the power and duty of appointing the fish and game commissioner, an act appropriating money for the department and providing that no part of the appropriation shall be available, so long as the present commissioner remains in office, is unconstitutional as an encroachment upon the appointing power of the executive; State v. Gordon, 236 Mo. 142, 139 S. W. 403.

A constitutional provision prohibiting the legislative department from exercising executive powers is violated when the legislature attempts to interfere with an action taken by the executive under existing laws; In re Opinion of the Justices, 208 Mass. 610, 94 N. E. 852.

The authority, vested by the constitution in the legislature, to make laws, may be exercised, leaving, in the particular instance, to an executive officer, or some other agency, the duty of determining questions of fact essential to the application thereof which involves administrative discretion; State v. Chittenden, 127 Wis. 468, 107 N. W. 500. See LEGISLATIVE POWER; and as to powers, duties, acts of executive officers, boards or commissions under legislative authority, see DELEGATION.

In some cases the courts may go behind the execution of statutory power by an executive officer as: Where, a statute authorizing the summary killing of diseased animals, with no provision for compensation to the owner, an adjudication of the cattle commissioners is not conclusive and an order issued by them for killing an animal, not in fact infected, is no defense to those executing the order in a subsequent action by the owner for compensation; Miller v. Horton, 152 Mass. 540, 26 N. E. 100, 10 L. R. A. 116, 23 Am. St. Rep. 850; so in case of the destruction of property when required to secure the public safety, where there is a statute authorizing it, the destruction of the property is conclusive, so far as the res is concerned; Salem v. R. Co., 98 Mass. 431, 96 Am. Dec. 650; but the right is preserved to the owner for a hearing in a subsequent proceeding for compensation; Miller v. Horton, 152 Mass. 540, 26 N. E. 100, 10 L. R. A. 116, 23 Am. St. Rep. 850.

In other cases the courts will not go behind the decision of the officer charged with the execution of a statute as, under the Chinese exclusion and immigration laws, the finding of the designated officer, when approved on appeal by the secretary of commerce and labor, will not be reviewed by the courts, but is treated by them as final and conclusive; U. S. v. Ju Toy, 198 U. S. 253, 25 Sup. Ct. 644, 49 L. Ed. 1040.

The executive powers which are derived directly from the constitution would still remain if all the legislative acts of congress were repealed. As to these the president is clothed with unrestrained discretion, and his acts in pursuance of them are purely political. He cannot be controlled nor can his powers be enlarged or diminished by legislation, though through the medium of proper laws he may be aided in the performance of the duties thus imposed upon him. For example, an attempt to limit the pardoning power or control its effect has been held unconstitutional, where the supreme court having declared that the power of the president dispensed with the necessity of proof of loyalty

In cases authorizing claims for the value of property seized as captured or abandoned during the war; congress subsequently enacted that such proof should be required irrespective of any executive pardon or amnesty. This the court held unconstitutional, saying:—"Now it is clear that the legislature cannot change the effect of such a pardon any more than the executive can change a law. Yet this is attempted by the provision under consideration. The court is required to receive special pardons as evidence of guilt and to treat them as null and void. It is required to disregard pardons granted by proclamation on condition, though the condition has been fulfilled, and to deny them their legal effect. This certainly impairs the executive authority and directs the court to be instrumental to that end." U. S. v. Klein, 13 Wall. (U. S.) 128, 148, 20 L. Ed. 519. But when a claim was made against the government for payment for supplies furnished before the war, it was held that the prohibitory legislation of congress prevented a recovery, because the disability of the claimant to receive a debt from the United States did not arise as a consequence of any offence but out of a state of war, and ended with the close of the war, and not by reason of the pardon, which operated only to relieve him from punishment for his acts and gave him no new rights; Hart v. U. S., 118 U. S. 62, 6 Sup. Ct. 961, 30 L. Ed. 96.

The question has been considered from time to time of the extent of the power of the president over newly acquired territory. After the acquisition of territory it has been generally considered in countries governed by the English law that the temporary powers of government are vested in the executive until it is assumed by the legislative branch of the government; Cowp. 204; Leitensdorfer v. Webb, 20 How. (U. S.) 176, 15 L. Ed. 891; Cross v. Harrison, 16 How. (U. S.) 164, 14 L. Ed. 889, where after the Mexican war the exercise by the president of what were really legislative powers, in relation to customs, was sustained by the supreme court. And after the acquisition of the canal zone on the Isthmus of Panama, in the absence of congressional action with respect to its government, the president exercised all the power of government. See 21 Harv. L. Rev. 547, where this subject is discussed and the conclusion reached that the action of the president was warranted.

As to his express powers the president is equally independent of the courts and can be held for maladministration of them only by impeachment; Marbury v. Madison, 1 Cra. (U. S.) 165, 2 L. Ed. 60; Kendall v. U. S., 12 Pet. 524, 9 L. Ed. 1181; U. S. v. Kendall, 5 Cra. C. 163, Fed. Cas. No. 15,517.

The command of the army and navy is essentially an executive power; 2 Sto. Const. § 149; 2 Kent 282; though it did not pass without criticism; 2 Elliot, Deb. 365; 3 id.

103, 108; the power to call out the militia is discretionary and his judgment of the necessity is final; Martin v. Mott, 12 Wheat. (U. S.) 29, 6 L. Ed. 537; and he may delegate the command of it; Rawle, Const. 193; 2 Sto. Const. (5th ed.) § 1492, n. 2. See Dillingham v. Snow, 5 Mass. 548.

The power to require opinions from the heads of departments has been termed a mere redundancy; Federalist, No. 74; but it is said to be not without its use and frequently acted upon; 2 Sto. Const. § 1493; especially in two notable instances, by President Washington, 1793, relative to the condition of affairs between France and Great Britain, and by President Grant in 1873 in reference to the subject of expatriation; Miller, Const. U. S. 185.

The pardoning power of the president extends to any case in which it might have been exercised under the English law; U. S. v. Wilson, 7 Pet. (U. S.) 150, 8 L. Ed. 640; In re Wells, 18 How. (U. S.) 307, 15 L. Ed. 421; and includes the power to grant a conditional pardon; In re Garland, 4 Wall. (U. S.) 333, 18 L. Ed. 366; to relieve against forfeiture of property under a confiscation act; Armstrong's Foundry, 6 Wall. (U. S.) 766, 18 L. Ed. 882; or release from fines, penalties, and forfeiture which accrue from the offence; Osborn v. U. S., 91 U. S. 474, 23 L. Ed. 388; or contempt of court; State v. Sauvinet, 24 La. Ann. 119, 13 Am. Rep. 115; it includes amnesty; U. S. v. Klein, 13 Wall. (U. S.) 128, 20 L. Ed. 519; and a general amnesty proclamation includes domiciled aliens; Carlisle v. U. S., 16 Wall. (U. S.) 148, 21 L. Ed. 426. The power of the president to issue a proclamation of general amnesty has been much drawn into question, and it was denied in a report of the judiciary committee of the senate made Feb. 17, 1869, that he could do it without the authority or assent of congress. It was the subject of legislation, an express power being granted to the president by section 13 of the act of June 17, 1862, which was repealed by act of Jan. 19, 1867. It was, however, generally considered that the subject was within the power of the executive, and it was exercised by Presidents Washington, Adams, Madison, Lincoln, and Johnson, and independently of congressional action. See an extended discussion of the subject in 8 Am. Law Reg. N. S. 513, 577. The president may act on pardons immediately, or first refer them to the executive departments; 14 Op. Att. Gen. 20.

The president has no power to interfere with a public prosecution, except to put an end to it and discharge the accused. He may not change the proceedings or place of trial; U. S. v. Corrie, Fed. Cas. No. 14,869; 1 Brunner, Col. Cas. 686.

The executive cannot, except as permitted by the constitution, grant a reprieve or fix a day for the execution of a convicted criminal, that being a judicial power; Clifford

v. Heller, 63 N. J. L. 105, 42 Atl. 155, 57 L. R. A. 312. His pardoning power is not affected by a provision in an act giving one-half of the fine imposed to an informer; Meul v. People, 198 Ill. 238, 64 N. E. 1106; nor by a provision authorizing the commutation of sentence for good conduct and defining the credit to be given; Fite v. Snider, 114 Tenn. 646, 88 S. W. 941, 1 L. R. A. (N. S.) 520, 4 Ann. Cas. 1108; or a provision for indeterminate sentences; People v. Cook, 147 Mich. 127, 110 N. W. 514; or release on parole; People v. Madden, 120 App. Div. 338, 105 N. Y. Supp. 554; People v. Nowasky, 254 Ill. 146, 98 N. E. 242; so that in none of these cases was the act considered unconstitutional as an invasion of the pardoning power of the executive. So an act creating a medical council and state boards of medical examiners whereby the appointing power of the governor was limited by restricting the choice to a certain class of applicants was valid; In re Registration of Campbell, 197 Pa. 581, 47 Atl. 860; and, since the power of appointment to office is not exclusively an executive prerogative, so was an act making officers of the board of agriculture elective by general assembly; Cunningham v. Sprinkle, 124 N. C. 638, 33 S. E. 138; but the legislature has no power to authorize a state board of auditors to determine the guilt or innocence of a person convicted of crime, as the result of such action would be to constitute such board a court of appeals without any constitutional warrant therefor; Allen v. Board, 122 Mich. 324, 81 N. W. 113, 47 L. R. A. 117, 80 Am. St. Rep. 573.

The constitutional pardoning power of a governor does not apply to penalties for the violation of municipal ordinances, and consequently a statute authorizing the mayor, with the consent of the aldermen, to remit such penalties, is not invalid as an interference with the pardoning power of the governor; Allen v. McGuire, 100 Miss. 781, 57 South. 217, 38 L. R. A. (N. S.) 196.

The power to make treaties "embraces all sorts of treaties, for peace or war; for commerce or territory; for alliances or succors; for indemnity for injuries or payment of debt; for the recognition and enforcement of principles of public law; and for any other purposes which the policy or interests of independent sovereigns may dictate in their intercourse with each other." 2 Sto. Const. sec. 1508. This power is plenary; Holmes v. Jennison, 14 Pet. (U. S.) 540, 614, 10 L. Ed. 579; U. S. v. Forty-Three Gallons of Whiskey, etc., 93 U. S. 188, 23 L. Ed. 846; it includes removing the disabilities of aliens to inherit; 5 Cal. 381; or enabling them to purchase and hold lands in the United States; Chirac v. Chirac, 2 Wheat. (U. S.) 259, 4 L. Ed. 234.

An important question has frequently arisen as to the effect of this power where legislation was required to give effect to a treaty.

"In regard to this, any serious difficulty has been averted by the wisdom and forbearance of the house of representatives;" Miller, Const. U. S. 168. See also id. 181, and authorities cited; Pom. Const. L. §§ 676-681; 1 Kent 286; TREATIES.

In the La Abra Mining Case, it was held no interference with the constitutional functions of the president, in connection with matters involved in the relations between this country and Mexico, that provision was made by act of congress for a suit in the court of claims to determine whether there had been fraud in obtaining the award, the amount of which had been paid by Mexico to the United States for the claimants; La Abra Silver Min. Co. v. U. S., 175 U. S. 423, 20 Sup. Ct. 168, 44 L. Ed. 223.

The power of appointment includes nomination and appointment, and the power to commission is distinct, but when the commission is signed and sealed, the legal right of the officer is vested and delivery of the commission is not essential; Marbury v. Madison, 1 Cra. (U. S.) 137, 2 L. Ed. 60; U. S. v. Le Baron, 19 How. (U. S.) 74, 15 L. Ed. 575. See CONSTITUTION OF THE UNITED STATES. The nomination is a recommendation in writing; Marbury v. Madison, 1 Cra. (U. S.) 137, 2 L. Ed. 60; 7 Op. Att. Gen. 186; and the senate can only affirm or reject; 3 Op. Att. Gen. 188; congress cannot by law designate the person to fill an office; U. S. v. Ferreira, 13 How. (U. S.) 40, 14 L. Ed. 42.

It was held by Cadwalader, J., in the Case of the District Attorney, 2 Cadw. Cas. 138, 7 Am. L. Reg. (N. S.) 786, Fed. Cas. No. 3,924, that the president cannot make a temporary appointment in a recess, if the senate was in session when or since the vacancy occurred; but Woods, J., held directly contra in a case also involving the right to a similar office; In re Farrow, 4 Woods 491, 3 Fed. 112, where he cited the opinions of ten attorney-generals which are treated as authoritative and declared "to outweigh" the opinion of Judge Cadwalader. The latter, however, disputes the statement of an unbroken practice or an acquiescence of the senate and considers the executive opinions to have been based upon erroneous assumptions of both. The two opinions appear to present fully the arguments on each side of the question and no other case has been found except a decision that an original recess appointment cannot be made to fill an office created at the previous session; Schenck v. Peay, 1 Dill. 268, Fed. Cas. No. 12,451, where the opinion of Cadwalader, J., is said to dispense with further argument.

Judge Woods cited the opinions of at least ten attorney-generals, beginning with Wirt and ending with Evarts. Since that time opinions to the same effect have been given by Attorney-General Williams; 14 Opin. 563 (where he said, "So far as this department is concerned, the question is settled"); Stan- bery, 12 Opin. 32 (where the power of the president to make recess appointments to fill vacancies was said to be "without any limitation as to the time when they first occurred"); Devens, 15 Opin. 207; 16 id. 522 (where alone among these opinions is a reference to Judge Cadwalader's decision as the opinion of a single judge of admitted ability, but of a subordinate court and "not of great authority or weight against the opinions cited"); he also, citing Cushing, holds that "may happen" means may happen to exist; quoted by Hoyt; 26 Opin. 234; following Devens, as conclusive, is Brewster, 17 Opin. 530; 18 id. 29; and Miller, 19 id. 261.

Nor can a governor appoint a senator to fill a vacancy which occurred during a previous recess, a session of the senate having intervened. This was determined in the Cases of Johns, Williams and Phelps (1 Conf. El. Cas. 874; 2 id. 612 and 613), all of which were cited by Judge Cadwalader as pertinent by reason of the use in both sections of the constitution of the words "may happen" which he interprets as meaning occur and not exist; and no vacancy can occur in an office until it has once been filled; Ex parte Dodd, 11 Ark. 152; contra, State v. Irwin, 5 Nev. 111, where it was held that when a new office is created and no person appointed to fill it, there is a vacancy, and this was the view taken by Attorney-General Miller, who said that a vacancy means that an office exists of which there is no incumbent; 19 Opin. 261.

With respect to state offices it has also been held that a governor cannot make a recess appointment unless the vacancy occurred since the adjournment of the general assembly; People v. Forquer, 1 Breese (Ill.) 104; but where the sittings of the senate are terminated by a long adjournment, it is not "in session," and an appointment by the governor during such adjournment is valid; People v. Fancher, 50 N. Y. 288. Atty. Gen. Knox, however, decided that the president cannot make a recess appointment in a holiday adjournment, and that a recess means the period after the final adjournment of congress; 23 Opin. 599.

Whether a newly created office, not before filled, is a vacancy, within the constitutional power of the president to make temporary appointments, is a question upon which courts and attorneys-general have differed. The most reasonable conclusion and that best supported by authority seems to be that it is not; Cooley, Const. Law 104, n. 5; Ordronaux, Const. Leg. 107; and it is said that if the senate is in session when offices are created by law and no appointment is made, no vacancy exists in such sense that the president can appoint during the recess; id.; 2 Sto. Const. § 1559; Case of District Attorney of United States, 7 Am. L. Reg. (N. S.) 786, Fed. Cas. No. 3,924; In re Farrow, 3 Fed. 112.

Strictly speaking, an appointment to office is an executive act; Taylor v. Com., 3 J. Marsh. (Ky.) 404; 2 Goodn. Comp. Adm. L. 22; but in many cases it has been held that it may be exercised by the legislative power, and this in the absence of negative constitutional limitation is held valid; id.; Cooley, Const. Lim. 115, n.; Mayor, etc., of Baltimore v. State, 15 Md. 376, 74 Am. Dec. 572; People v. Mahaney, 13 Mich. 481; People v. Hurlbut, 24 Mich. 44, 9 Am. Rep. 103; Bridges v. Shallcross, 6 W. Va. 562; contra, State v. Denny, 118 Ind. 449, 21 N. E. 274, 4 L. R. A. 65; City of Evansville v. State, 118 Ind. 426, 21 N. E. 267, 4 L. R. A. 93; State v. Kennon, 7 Ohio St. 546; State v. Covington, 29 Ohio St. 102.

See, generally, as to the president's power of appointment and removal, 2 Sto. Const. §§ 1545-1553; Rawle, Const. 166; Sergeant, Const. ch. 29; Miller, Const. U. S. 156; Pom. Const. L. §§ 642-651.

Among the executive powers of first importance vested in the president is the management of foreign affairs, including the treaty power, to be exercised with the consent of the senate, and the power to appoint and receive foreign ministers, both of which are expressed in the constitution.

A question much discussed prior to the war with Spain is whether the recognition of a foreign revolutionary government is a matter entrusted, under the constitution, to the discretion of the president acting alone, or whether it is vested in congress, or requires the joint action of both of the political departments of the government. It has been contended on the one hand that this power "rests exclusively with the executive," and that, "a resolution on the subject by the senate or by the house, by both bodies or by one, whether concurrent or joint, is inoperative as legislation, and is important only as advice of great weight voluntarily tendered to the executive regarding the manner in which he shall exercise his constitutional functions."

Such is the view said to have been expressed by Secretary Olney in a public statement, which, although not an official document, was generally accepted as a fit expression of the opinion of those who take the extreme view of the prerogative of the executive on this subject. The occasion of this utterance was a unanimous report of the Committee on Foreign Affairs of the Senate, recommending the passage of a joint resolution, "That the independence of the Republic of Cuba be, and the same is, hereby acknowledged by the United States of America."

This precise view was maintained by Secretary Seward in an instruction to Minister Dayton, infra.

The opposite opinion is based upon the idea that, because the constitution vests in congress the power to declare war (which is liable to be a consequence of the recognition of a new government) not only is the action of that body necessary, but it is the proper department of the government to act in such case. At least it is contended that congress has the power to act even if its power is not exclusive.

The argument in favor of the absolute and exclusive control of the subject by congress is substantially this: The recognition of the independence of a people is from its very nature the creation of obligations arising from international law, and therefore must belong to the law-making power; it is also a supreme act of sovereignty and must be done by that department of the government in which the national sovereignty resides. Under the constitution, congress is invested with almost all the prerogatives of sovereignty, the only one granted to the president being the pardoning power, and even that is denied in cases of impeachment. The power in question is not directly granted to the president; therefore, is not one of his functions unless necessary to the full and proper exercise of some power directly granted to him or inherent in the office. His general inherent function is to execute the laws, to which this power of recognition has no relation, unless it be exercised in pursuance of law. The only expressed power from which it is sought to imply this far-reaching authority is that of receiving ambassadors and ministers, and that, it is urged, is simply a ceremonial duty, imposed upon him as the medium through which the government communicates with foreign governments. As the power of receiving ambassadors and ministers can be exercised pursuant to the direction of congress in doubtful cases, the power to determine the existence or independence of a nation is not necessarily involved in the constitutional grant of power to receive ambassadors, etc. If this power is vested in the executive, it is unlimited and involves the authority, so far as this government is concerned, to alter the map of the world, change the relation of this government to other governments, and involve the country in war. That such uncontrolled executive power over foreign relations was intended, it is contended, cannot be reconciled with the fact that the president cannot declare war, or make a treaty, or appoint an ambassador or consul without the consent of the senate.

The argument from this point of view is very forcibly stated in a speech by Senator Bacon, Jan. 13, 1897, in the United States senate, made expressly to take issue with the position taken by Secretary Olney, supra.

A third view, as stated in the preliminary statement of the question in the Hale memorandum, is that, under the constitution and according to precedent,

"the recognition of the independence of a new foreign power is an act of the executive (president alone, or president and senate), and not of the legislative branch of the government, although the executive branch may properly first consult the legislative. While the legislative branch of the government cannot directly exercise the power of recognizing a foreign government, because that is a power executive or judicial in nature (and one which the judiciary, by refusing independently to examine the question, cast entirely upon the executive), nevertheless, if a recognition of such independence is liable to become a casus belli with some other foreign power, it is most advisable as well as proper for the executive first to consult the legislative branch as to its wishes and postpone its own action if not assured of legislative approval." Cong. Rec. 54th Cong. 2d Sess. 663.

The basis of the argument in favor of legislative participation in such action is mainly the power to declare war and, as particularly urged by Mr. Clay, as quoted in the Hale memorandum (id. 681), the power to regulate commerce. The argument in favor of exclusive executive power is found in the general control of foreign relations, as to which the only expressed powers are to "make treaties" and to "receive ambassadors and other ministers." The argument of greater force in favor of executive control is, however, not that the power in question is included in the specific powers named but that it is a part of the general grant of executive power; that all duties in connection with foreign relations, not otherwise specified, are placed upon the executive, and that the two powers enumerated are merely illustrative and not exclusive. This third view is thus stated in a memorandum submitted to the United States senate by Senator Hale in connection with resolutions pending for the recognition of Cuba, and printed as Ex. Doc. No. 56, 2d Sess. 54th Cong.

"It is in the light of this conception of the executive character of foreign negotiations and acts concerning foreign relations that our constitution gave the president power to send and receive ministers and agents to or from any country he sees fit, and when he sees fit, and not to send or receive any, as he may think best. Also, the power to make treaties; that is, to negotiate with or without agents, as he may prefer, when he may prefer, or not at all, if he prefer; to draw up such articles as may suit him; and to ratify the acts of his plenipotentiaries, instructed by him, the only qualification of his power being the advice and consent of the states in the senate to the treaty he makes. These grants confirm the executive character of the proceedings, and indicate an intent to give all the power to the president, which the federal government itself was to possess—the general control of foreign relations.

At the time of the presentation to the senate of the Hale memorandum, Senator Hoar, after remarking that it was not the time for full debate, said:

"Therefore, I wish to bring out distinctly, if I can, by a question to the senator from Maine, whether, in his researches into the history of this country for a hundred years, in which we must have recognized foreign governments more than a hundred times, taking all the numbers of the governments of the world and their political changes and revolutions which have established new governments—

"Mr. HALE. Over a hundred.

"Mr. HOAR. There must be over a hundred cases, as the senator says. Is there a single instance where in fact our relations with the foreign country have not been determined by the act of recognition by the president of the United States and without congress? Has there been a single one?

"Mr. HALE. As the result of some considerable, and what I have tried to make faithful, examination of the subject and of what others have done for me, I answer the senator from Massachusetts that I do not find one.

"Mr. ALLEN. As this question is very important and going out to the country to be criticised, I ask the senator from Maine whether he will not state to the senate whether he finds any instance in the history of this country where the question of independency was determined to belong to the executive department exclusively?

"Mr. HALE. In every one of the cases that have been referred to by the senator from Massachusetts (Mr. Hoar) the recognition was made by the executive department, acted upon, submitted to, and not questioned." Cong. Rec. 54th Cong., 2nd Sess. 682.

The extent of executive control of foreign relations was the subject of an extended debate in congress in 1796, upon a resolution calling upon the president for details of the negotiations leading up to the Jay treaty with England, the exact question, however, being the effect of a treaty when negotiated. See TREATY.

With respect to the express power of the executive to make treaties, that is shared with the senate and there is no precedent for the primary act of recognition of a new foreign state, by the joint action of president and senate under the treaty-making power. As to the power to "receive ambassadors and other ministers," though it was much debated as giving the president too much power, the only comments on it in the Federalist are the following:

"This, though it has been a rich theme of declamation, is more a matter of dignity than of authority. It is a circumstance which will be without consequence in the administration of the Government; and it was far more convenient that it should be arranged in this manner, than that there should be necessity for convening the legislature, or one of its branches, upon every arrival of a foreign minister; though it were merely to take the place of a departed predecessor." Federalist, No. 69, p. 326.

"Except some cavils about the power of . . . receiving ambassadors, no objection has been made to this class of authorities; nor could they possibly admit of any. . . . As to the reception of ambassadors, what I have said in a former paper will furnish a sufficient answer." id. No. 77, p. 362.

The executive can alone appoint a diplomatic representative to a new government, but to do this there is required congressional action to provide for the payment of his salary, and it might be an inference from the practice of the government that the creation of an office, either directly or by provision for compensation to its incumbent, is a prerequisite to the appointment of a person to exercise any public functions. It has been argued, on the other hand, that such an officer, appointed by the president and senate, and his position as an officer having been established, might serve gratuitously or be paid out of the contingent fund. It would seem, however, that it might be urged with more force that merely from an appointment authorized by the constitution, there would arise an obligation to provide compensation, of the same character as those created in many cases without the direct action of congress, notably under the power to make a treaty (q. v.).

In 1798 a discussion arose as to this power, in which was considered the possible clashing between the appointing power of the president and the appropriating financial power of congress. In the course of debate Mr. Otis concluded his remarks with some observations not less pertinent to the present question than to that to which they were addressed: "It was owing to the apparent contradictions arising from a theoretical view of constitutions like ours that they were pronounced to be impracticable by some of the best writers of antiquity. And these abstract questions and extreme cases were not calculated to reconcile the minds of our citizens to our excellent form of government. It is a plain and conclusive reply, by which all such objections are obviated, that the constitution is not predicated upon a presumed abuse of power by any department, but on the more reasonable confidence that each will perform its duty within its own sphere with sincerity, that division of sentiment will yield to reason and explanation, and that extreme cases are not likely to happen."

And Attorney-General Cushing objected to an act in which it was provided that the president "shall" appoint a consul at Port au Prince, that it involved the diplomatic recognition of the Haytian empire, which rested entirely within the discretion of the president. 7 Op. Attys. Gen. 242.

Turning to the precedents, the right to recognize a foreign power was first discussed in 1818 with reference to the South American republics. The matter first came up on an appropriation to pay a minister, which was defeated, after a debate, in which Mr. Clay maintained that recognition might be either by the president in receiving or sending a minister, or by congress under the commerce clause; and the relation of the two powers of government to the subject was much considered; Ann. of Cong. (1818), pp. 1468-1603-1655. The subject was at this time much discussed both in congress and between the president and individual members, so much so that Mr. Adams, the secretary of state, in his memoirs, mentions jocular remarks made in the cabinet in that connection about the power of impeachment; 4 Memoirs, J. Q. Adams 204-206. Subsequently the subject was revived in the house and various resolutions were considered, with the result of a request for information from the president, which was responded to by the message of March 8, 1822, in which he said it was his duty to invite the attention of congress to a very important subject, and to communicate the sentiments of the executive on it; that, should congress entertain other sentiments, then there might be such co-operation between the two departments of the government as their respective rights and duties might require. And after stating that in his judgment the time had come to recognize the republics, he said: "Should congress concur in the view herein presented, they will doubtless see the propriety of making the necessary appropriations for carrying it into effect." The house then resolved that it "concur in the opinion expressed by the president in his message of the 8th of March, 1822, that the late American provinces of Spain which have declared their independence and are in the enjoyment of it, ought to be recognized by the United States as independent nations," and directed an appropriation "to enable the President of the United States to give due effect to such recognition." The Hale memorandum concludes a review of this matter with a protest against the conclusion which has been drawn that President Monroe, after all the discussion, had admitted the power of recognition in congress, but concedes that he did acknowledge "the importance of consulting the legislative branch when a step was about to be taken whose expediency might be doubted, and which would necessarily result in a request for appropriations."

made a report in which it was said: "The recognition of Texas as an independent power may be made by the United States in various ways: First, by treaty; second, by the passage of a law regulating commercial intercourse between the two powers; third, by sending a diplomatic agent to Texas with the usual credentials; or, lastly, by the executive receiving and accrediting a diplomatic representative from Texas, which would be a recognition as far as the executive only is competent to make it. . . . The President of the United States, by the constitution, has the charge of their foreign intercourse. Regularly he ought to take the initiative in the acknowledgment of the independence of any new power, but in this case he has not yet done it, for reasons which he, without doubt, deems sufficient. If in any instance the president should be tardy, he may be quickened in the exercise of his power by the expression of the opinion, or by other acts, of one or both branches of congress, as was done in relation to the republics formed out of Spanish America." Quoted in Senate Report, No. 1160, 54th Cong. 2d Sess.

President Jackson, in his message of Dec. 21, 1836, after referring to the resolution, said that there had never been any deliberate inquiry as to where belonged the power of recognizing a new state,—a power in some instances equivalent to a declaration of war, and nowhere expressly given, but only as it is implied from some of the great powers given to congress or in that given to the president to make treaties and receive and appoint ministers. Then he continues: "In the preamble to the resolution of the house of representatives it is distinctly intimated that the expediency of recognizing the independence of Texas should be left to the decision of congress. In this view, on the ground of expediency, I am disposed to concur, and do not, therefore, consider it necessary to express any opinion as to the strict constitutional right of the executive, either apart from or in conjunction with the senate, over the subject. It is to be presumed that on no future occasion will a dispute arise, as none has heretofore occurred, between the executive and the legislature in the exercise of the power of recognition. It will always be considered consistent with the spirit of the constitution and most safe that it should be exercised, when probably leading to war, with a previous understanding with that body by whom war can alone be declared, and by whom all the provisions for sustaining its perils must be furnished. Its submission to congress, which represents in one of its branches the states of this Union, and in the other the people of the United States, where there may be reasonable ground to apprehend so grave a consequence, would certainly afford the fullest satisfaction to our own country and a perfect guaranty to all other nations of the justice and prudence of the measures which might be adopted."

As to this message the Hale memorandum, which, it is to be remembered, is an argument for the absolute and unqualified power of the executive (but modified only by what might be termed a moral duty to consult congress in extreme cases) remarks: "President Jackson plainly was of the opinion that, in a doubtful case, when international complications might be involved, the president should not recognize a revolutionary government without the assent of congress. His language is so carefully guarded that no inference can be made with entire confidence as to the proper course if the executive were strongly of the opinion that facts justifying the recognition of independence did not exist."

With respect to other expressions on this subject from the executive department of the government, Secretary Seward wrote to Minister Dayton, April 7, 1864: "The question of recognition of foreign revolutionary or reactionary governments is one exclusively for the executive, and cannot be determined internationally by congressional action." This had reference to the action of the house of representatives, which had unanimously adopted a resolution protesting against the establishment of an empire in Mexico under Maximilian. The senate did not act on it. The French government asked an explanation, and the secretary of state, using the expression quoted, said that a vote of the house or the senate could neither coerce the executive to modify its policy nor deprive it of its freedom of action. In Dec., 1864, the house by a large majority affirmed their right to advise on questions of foreign policy; but, as was remarked by an intelligent foreign writer, this declaration does not appear to have had any influence on the course of the administration. Chambrun, Exec. Pow. in the U. S. 101.

On the other hand, Secretary Clayton, writing to Mr. Mann, a special agent to investigate the Hungarian insurrection, says: "Should the new government prove to be, in your opinion, firm and stable, the president will cheerfully recommend to congress, at their next session, the recognition of Hungary; and you might intimate, if you should see fit, that the president would in that event be gratified to receive a diplomatic agent from Hungary in the United States by or before the next meeting of congress, and that he entertains no doubt whatever that in case her new government should prove to be firm and stable, her independence would be speedily recognized by that enlightened body." In his Digest of International Law, from which the foregoing is quoted, Dr. Wharton concludes his statement of precedents on this subject as follows: "As to this it is to be remarked that while Mr. Webster, who shortly afterwards, on the death of President Taylor, became secretary of state, sustained the sending of Mr. Mann as an agent of inquiry, he was silent as to this paragraph, and suggests, at the utmost, only a probable congressional recognition in case the new government should prove to be firm and stable. In making congress the arbiter, President Taylor followed the precedent of President Jackson, who, on March 3, 1837, signed a resolution of congress for the recognition of the independence of Texas. The recognition, however, by the United States, of the independence of Belgium, of the powers who threw off Napoleon's yoke, and of the South American states who have from time to time declared themselves independent of prior governments, has been primarily by the executive, and such also has been the case in respect to the recognition of the successive revolutionary governments of France."

The conclusion of the extended discussion of Cuban affairs, which covered the subject of the recognition of a new government in a foreign state and intervention in its affairs, was reached in 1898 when President McKinley sent a special message dated April 11, recommending intervention and stating the grounds on which he did so. And on April 20 congress passed a joint resolution declaring that the people of Cuba were free and independent, and demanding that the government of Spain relinquish its authority and government in the island, and authorizing the president to use the entire land and naval forces of the United States to carry the resolutions into effect. There was also a disclaimer of any purpose to exercise sovereignty or control over the island except for its pacification. The result was that diplomatic relations between this country and Spain were immediately broken off and war followed. 6 Moore Int. L. Dig. Sec. 909.

The action of our government in this case does not bear upon the direct question as to which department of the government is directly charged with the recognition of new states, except that it shows that President McKinley acted in accordance with the views, already cited, of his predecessors, Presidents Monroe and Jackson, in consulting congress and securing its joint action in a case which was likely to result in war.

Since the settlement of the affairs of Cuba, it is believed that the question of executive power with relation to new or insurrectionary governments has not been raised or discussed.

In 1899, a revolutionary government having been established in Venezuela, the United States minister was authorized by the department of state to recognize it, and, when he had done so, his action was approved; 1 Moore, Int. L. Dig. sec. 52. In the same year similar action was taken with respect to a successful insurrection in Bolivia; id. sec. 53.

Early in 1911, a revolution occurred in Portugal which resulted in the abdication of the king and the proclamation of a republic. On the 6th of June, 1911, the American minister in Lisbon was instructed, as soon as the constituent assembly, which was to meet on the 19th of June, should have expressed the voice of the people and settled upon the form of government to be adopted by Portugal, to inform the minister of foreign affairs of its official recognition by the government of the United States. The minister was to do this, if possible, on the day on which the constituent assembly took definite and final action.

On the following day, the American minister was explicitly instructed that the government of the United States desired to recognize the republic of Portugal as soon as it should be officially proclaimed by the constituent assembly, without awaiting the choice of a president or the adoption of a constitution. On June 19, the constituent assembly met and definitely proclaimed the republic. On the same day the diplomatic representative of the United States handed to the minister of foreign affairs a note stating that the government of the Portuguese republic was on that day officially recognized by the government of the United States.

It may be remarked that the republic of Portugal had previously been recognized by Switzerland.

Late in the same year there occurred a revolution in China which resulted in the establishment by the insurgent military leaders in the various Yangtze provinces and in southern China, of a cabinet form of government with headquarters at Nanking, and an assembly convoked in that city, which on December 29, 1911, elected a provisional president of the republic of China, who was inaugurated as such on New Year's day. On February 12, 1912, the throne abdicated in favor of a republic and conferred full power to organize such a government on Yuan Shih-kai, who three days later was elected by the Nanking assembly provisional president. The resignation of the provisional president and his cabinet was accepted to take effect on the inauguration of Yuan, which occurred at Peking March 10, 1912. The provisional government meanwhile had notified the American minister that the Chinese minister in the United States would continue in the discharge of his functions as "provisional diplomatic agent." On March 10, the date of the inauguration, a provisional constitution, previously approved by the Peking authorities, was adopted by the Nanking assembly, under which it was provided that within ten months the provisional president should convene a representative national assembly to adopt a permanent constitution and elect a president.

President Taft in his annual message of December, 1912, announced to congress the course of events in China and stated that the United States was, according to precedent, maintaining full and friendly de facto relations with the provisional government.

On April 6, 1913, the American diplomatic representative at Peking was instructed that upon the convening of the national assembly with a quorum, organized for business by the election of officers, he should communicate to the president of China as coming from the president of the United States a message recognizing the new government and welcoming the new China into the family of nations. This message of the president of the United States was delivered on May 2, and on the same day the new president, Yuan Shih-kai, sent an appreciative message to the president of the United States acknowledging his greeting and thanking him for his sentiments of amity and good will.

Meanwhile none of the European governments had recognized the Chinese republic.

The courts have frequently had occasion to determine whether the independence of a foreign country should be recognized as existing for the purpose of the pending case, but not to pass upon the question of power as between the executive and legislative departments. In an early case Marshall, C. J., said that before a nation

"could be considered independent by the judiciary of foreign nations, it was necessary that its independence should be recognized by the executive authority of those nations. That as our executive had never recognized the independence of Buenos Ayres, it was not competent to the court to pronounce its independence." U. S. v. Hutchings, 2 Wh. Cr. Cas. (N. Y.) 543, Fed. Cas. No. 15,429.

A little later, on certificate of division, the supreme court had before it the direct question of the rights of a revolting colony, or portion of a nation which has declared its independence. The case was the trial for piracy of one of the revolutionary subjects.

Marshall, C. J., speaking for the court, said:

"Those questions which respect the rights of a part of a foreign empire, which asserts and is contending for its independence, and the conduct which must be observed by the courts of the Union towards the subjects of such section of an empire who may be brought before the tribunals of this country, are equally delicate and difficult. . . .

Such questions are generally rather political than legal in their character. They belong more properly to those who can declare what the law shall be; who can place the nation in such a position with respect to foreign powers as to their own judgment shall appear wise; to whom are entrusted all its foreign relations, than to that tribunal whose power as well as duty is confined to the application of the rule which the legislature may prescribe for it." The certificate of opinion was "... The court is further of opinion that when a civil war rages in a foreign nation, a part of which separates itself from the old established government, and erects itself into a distinct government, the courts of the Union must view such newly constituted government as it is viewed by the legislative and executive departments of the government of the United States." U. S. v. Palmer, 3 Wheat. (U. S.) 610, 4 L. Ed. 471.

In a case involving the question of the right of citizens of the United States to the use of the seal fisheries at the Falkland Islands claimed by Buenos Ayres, Williams v. Ins. Co., 3 Sumn. 270, 273, Fed. Cas. No. 17,738, Mr. Justice Story said,• "It is very clear that it belongs exclusively to the executive department of our government to recognize from time to time any new governments which may arise in the political revolutions of the world; and until such new governments are so recognized they cannot be admitted by our courts of justice to have or to exercise the common rights and prerogatives of sovereignty."

He adds that "this doctrine was fully recognized by the supreme court" in Gelston v. Hoyt: which was one of those cases cited infra in which the court had referred to the recognition of independence, by the "government." On appeal from Judge Story's decision the supreme court held that the action, of the executive department of the government, on the question to whom the sovereignty of the islands belonged was binding and conclusive on the courts, and it was enough that in the exercise of his constitutional functions the president had decided that question; Williams v. Ins. Co., 13 Pet. (U. S.) 417, 420, 10 L. Ed. 226. In several cases the court has said that the question of the recognition of belligerency or independence is one for the government of the United States; The Divina Pastora, 4 Wheat. (U. S.) 52, 4 L. Ed. 512; The Nueva Anna, 6 Wheat. (U. S.) 193, 5 L. Ed. 239; Gelston v. Hoyt, 3 Wheat. (U. S.) 324, 4 L. Ed. 381; Rose v. Himely, 4 Cra. (U. S.) 241, 272, 2 L. Ed. 608; and again congress and the president are referred to as "those departments" having the control of such matters; U. S. v. Lynde, 11 Wall. (U. S.) 632, 638, 20 L. Ed. 230. On a bill to enforce an agreement the validity of which turned on the question whether at its date Texas was, or was not, independent, Taney, C. J., said that "was a question for that part of our government which is charged with our foreign relations," and it was held that the court could not inquire whether it had not in fact become an independent sovereign state before its recognition as such by the treaty-making power; Kennett v. Chambers, 14 How. (U. S.) 38, 51, 14 L. Ed. 316.

In the Prize Cases, 2 Black (U. S.) 635, 17 L. Ed. 459, much later than any of those above cited (relating not to foreign but to domestic relations, and therefore not strictly applicable), this language is used:

"As in the case of an insurrection, the President must, in the absence of congressional action, determine what degree of force the crisis demands, and as in political matters the courts must be governed by the decisions and acts of the political department to which this power is entrusted, the proclamation of blockade by the president is of itself conclusive evidence that a state of war existed which demanded and authorized recourse to such a measure."

In this case, the court terms the executive the political department of the government, and in a later case it so designates congress; U. S. v. Yorba, 1 Wall. (U. S.) 412, 17 L. Ed. 635. More recently in a case in which the president was authorized, by act of congress, to declare that a guano island belonged to the United States, the court said:

"Who is the sovereign, de jure or de facto, of a territory is not a judicial, but a political, question, the determination of which by the legislative and executive departments of any government conclusively binds the judges as well as all other officers, citizens, and subjects of that government;" Jones v. U. S., 137 U. S. 202, 11 Sup. Ct. 80, 34 L. Ed. 691.

With reference to the status of the revolutionary party of Chile, the circuit court of appeals said that it was to be regarded by the courts as determined by the executive department of the United States; The Itata, 56 Fed. 505, 5 C. C. A. 608; affirming U. S. v. Trumbull, 48 Fed. 99.

The earliest reference to this subject by a text-writer is by Rawle, who says:

"The power of receiving foreign ambassadors carries with it, among other things, the right of judging in the case of a revolution in a foreign country, whether the new ruler ought to be recognized. The legislature, indeed, possesses a superior power, and may declare its dissent from the executive recognition or refusal, but until their sense is declared, the act of the executive is binding. The judicial power can take no notice of a new government, until one or the other of those two departments has acted on it. Circumstances may render the decision of great importance to the interests and peace of the country. A precipitate acknowledgment of the independence of part of a foreign nation, separating itself from its former head, may provoke the resentment of the latter; a refusal to do so may disgust the former, and prevent the attainment of amity and commerce with them if they succeed. The principle on which the separation takes place must also be taken into consideration, and if they are conformable to those which led to our own independence, and appear likely to be preserved, a strong impulse will arise in favor of recognition. . . . The power of congress on this subject cannot be controlled; they may, if they think proper, acknowledge a small and helpless community, though with a certainty of drawing war upon our country; but greater circumspection is required from the president, who, not having the constitutional power to declare war, ought ever to abstain from a measure likely to produce it." Rawle, Const. 195.

A little later Story wrote:

"The exercise of this prerogative of acknowledging new nations or ministers is, therefore, under such circumstances, an executive function of great delicacy, which requires the utmost caution and deliberation. . . . If such recognition is made, it is conclusive upon the nation, unless indeed, it can be reversed by an act of congress repudiating it. If, on the other hand, such recognition has been refused by the executive, it is said that congress may, notwithstanding, solemnly acknowledge the sovereignty of the nation or party (citing Rawle). These, however, are propositions which have hitherto remained as abstract statements under the constitution, and therefore can be propounded, not as absolutely true, but as still open to discussion if they should ever arise in the course of our foreign diplomacy. The constitution has expressly invested the executive with power to receive ambassadors and other ministers. It has not expressly invested congress with the power either to repudiate or acknowledge them." 2 Sto. Const. § 1566.

In connection with this treatment of the subject is to be considered the judicial utterance of Judge Story, before cited from Williams v. Ins. Co., 3 Sumn. 270, Fed. Cas. No. 17,738. Pomeroy is also cited in Senator Hale's memorandum as an authority in favor of the exclusive executive control, which he does assert strongly with reference to foreign relations, and the treaty-making power in general, but he does not discuss the particular question under consideration; while he enforces with great earnestness the necessity of harmonious action of congress and the executive, and of their co-operation in giving due effect to the powers confided to each; Pom. Const. Law § 675.

Dr. Wharton, in his Digest of International Law, in discussing the subject of the recognition of various revolutionary governments, entitles section vii. of chap. iii., vol. 1, thus: "Such recognition determinable by executive," thus implying the opinion that the right rests with the executive alone. The author states the proposition embodied in his caption more fully thus:

"In political matters the courts follow the department of the government to which those matters may be committed, and will not recognize the existence of a new government until it has been recognized by the executive." Most of the cases, however, which are cited by him under this caption are among the authorities upon the proposition already noted, that it is not a matter for the judicial department of the government, but that the courts will not take cognizance of the existence of a new government until it has been recognized by the political department of the government, without discriminating between the executive and legislative branches of the government.

From an examination of all the decisions touching this question by the judicial department, no precise principle can be deduced unless it be that the references to it rest upon an assumption of entire harmony of action between the executive and legislative departments. And the fact that the direct issue arising from the claim of exclusive control by one of those two departments has not heretofore been made, will readily account for the absence of direct judicial authority or authoritative expression of opinion by text-writers. The duties and powers of what the supreme court frequently terms the political departments are so closely interwoven that it is unlikely that such an issue will be sharply drawn. Every approach to it hitherto has resulted, after discussion, in the recognition by congress of the right of the executive to full control of foreign relations and to the initiative in the practical recognition of a new foreign power, and, on the other hand, by a prudent disposition on the part of the executive not to act in a doubtful case or one likely to create a casus belli without ascertaining the disposition of congress. This has been simply the application to this particular subject of the principle of mutual recognition of the distribution of powers, and at the same time, the interdependence of the executive and congress which, with the prudent reserve of the judiciary in keeping closely within the limits of its own sphere, has enabled the government to avoid the dangers of mere theoretical construction alluded to by Otis in the quotation made from his remarks upon the subject. The undoubted constitutional powers of both departments bearing upon the question make harmony of action as necessary in dealing with this subject as with most, if not all, of the ordinary details of the government. While the president may undoubtedly recognize a foreign government, as has frequently been done, such action, if it involved war, would still require the action of congress to make it effective, and doubtless the precedents established by Presidents Jackson and Monroe, neither of whom was indifferent to the respect due to his office, will always have very great, if not controlling, weight. Again, the question recently raised of the right of congress by independent action and against the views of the president, to recognize the independence of a new nation, is more likely to be met hereafter, as heretofore, in the spirit of co-operation and full recognition of the executive control of foreign relations than to be asserted, to the extent of making a direct issue, as it would need to be by a majority of two-thirds of each house.

The United States government has always held, and, on occasion, exercised, the right in case of disturbances of the peace, either general or local in foreign countries, to land forces and adopt all necessary measures to protect the life and property of our citizens, whenever menaced by lawless acts, which the general or local authority is unwilling or impotent to prevent. This power has always been exercised by the executive department of the government. The power was asserted in a dispatch of Mr. Toucey, secretary of the navy, to Captain Jarvis, U. S. N., March 13, 1860, with reference to the unsettled state of affairs in Mexico; by Mr. Adee, acting secretary of state to the Korean minister, July 8, 1895, with reference to the affairs in Korea; by President McKinley in his annual message of Dec. 5, 1899, with reference to disturbances in China, and the power was also asserted with reference to disturbances in that country, by Mr. Hill, acting secretary of state to the secretary of the navy, Sept. 11, 1900; and by a dispatch from Mr. Merry, United States minister to Nicaragua, Feb. 27, 1839, with reference to disturbances in that country and the landing of American and English forces. See 2 Moore, Int. L. Dig. 400-402.

Executive officers, including the president, are required to execute the laws as enacted by the legislature or congress, and can in no case nullify them by refusing to execute them so long as their unconstitutionality or invalidity has not been judicially established, for, until this is done, the constitutionality is presumed, and in the judicial power alone resides the power to decide as to the validity of a statute; Pom. Const. L. secs. 148, 662-668; Martin v. Hunter, 1 Wheat. (U. S.) 304, 4 L. Ed. 97; Cohens v. Virginia, 6 Wheat. (U. S.) 264, 5 L. Ed. 257; Ableman v. Booth, 21 How. (U. S.) 506, 16 L. Ed. 169.

The question whether an executive officer has, under any circumstances, the right to question the constitutionality of an act of congress, and to make this decision the basis of acting upon claims to be passed upon by him, was the subject of consideration and extended discussion in the sugar bounty case lately pending before the comptroller of the treasury. It was contended on the one hand that every law must be considered valid until declared otherwise by the supreme court, and that although the comptroller is an independent officer, and not a mere subordinate of the secretary of the treasury or the president, such an exercise of jurisdiction would be a dangerous usurpation by an executive officer of judicial authority, which is confided by the constitution exclusively to the courts. On the other hand, it was urged that the constitution is the supreme law, and that an executive officer is responsible for a wrongful act under an unconstitutional statute. It was replied that his responsibility is political. The claim was disallowed by the comptroller upon the ground that the act was unconstitutional and the case sent to the court of claims under the authority of U. S. Rev. Stat. § 1065. The act in question had been held unconstitutional, but not by the court of last resort; U. S. v. Carlisle, 5 App. D. C. 138. Subsequently the act was held to be constitutional by the supreme court, but the question of the power of the comptroller was not determined; U. S. v. Realty Co., 163 U. S. 427, 16 Sup. Ct. 1120, 41 L. Ed. 215. This decision of the comptroller and the questions involved have been elaborately discussed by Mr. Black, the writer on constitutional law, who, after an examination of the authorities, reaches the conclusion that the power of an executive officer to judge of the constitutionality of a statute (in advance of a determination by the courts) is confined to cases in which it is necessary for the regulation of his own conduct, and that where the rights of others are involved he must enforce the law; 29 Am. L. Rev. 801. See also 11 Op. Att. Gen.

The same principle is applied in the state governments. In a recent case in Louisiana it was held that the executive officers of the state government have no authority to decline the performance of purely ministerial duties imposed upon them by a statute, on the ground that it is unconstitutional. An executive officer cannot nullify a law by neglecting or refusing to act under it; State v. Heard, 47 La. Ann. 1679, 18 South. 746, 47 L. R. A. 512.

The so-called war powers of the executive, so much discussed during the Civil War, do not now present a practical subject for discussion, and may be passed, with this quotation from a judicious writer on the subject:

"During our Civil War, many powers were claimed and exercised by the president under a stringency of circumstances for which no provision had been made in the constitution. Secession being the outgrowth of the doctrine of states governed by compact and not by law, it became necessary, in the complication growing out of the war, whether in the form of military occupancy and blockade, legislative reconstruction, or judicial protection of persons and property in the seceded states, to find by implication, in the executive department, certain war powers not hitherto contemplated and never before invoked. While the general results of their exercise doubtless contributed to the restoration of the Union, and the re-establishment of the government of the United States over all its territory, these powers were so far anomalous in their assumption as to afford no justifiable precedents for the government of the executive, in the ordinary circumstances of our federal administration. A formal discussion of their scope and application has accordingly been omitted, because they present exceptions in the body of our constitutional legislation that are never again likely to be repeated." Ordronaux, Const. Leg. 109. See Whiting, War Powers under the Constitution; Campbell, Collection of Pamphlets on Habeas Corpus, Martial Law, etc.

The president is not responsible to the courts, civil or criminal; Durand v. Hollins, 4 Blatchf. 451, Fed. Cas. No. 4,186; nor are his acts reviewable by them to the extent of bringing them into conflict with him; Mississippi v. Johnson, 4 Wall. (U. S.) 475, 18 L. Ed. 437; except that they may declare void an order or regulation in excess of his powers; U. S. v. The Franklin, 1 Gall. 137, Fed. Cas. No. 10,585; 9 Am. Law Reg. 524; but with respect to all of his political functions growing out of the foreign relations, the control of military officers, and his relations with congress, it is settled that the courts have no control whatever; Cherokee Nation v. Georgia, 5 Pet. (U. S.) 1, 20, 8 L. Ed. 25; Luther v. Borden, 7 How. (U. S.) 1, 12 L. Ed. 581; Mississippi v. Johnson, 4 Wall. (U. S.) 475, 18 L. Ed. 437; 1 Goodn. Comp. Adm. L. 34, 73; Pom. Const. L. § 633. See also 1 Ves. 467; 1 Ves. Jr. 375; 2 id. 56.

All the acts of the president by which his political powers are exercised are considered equally political, and are only brought within the scope of judicial examination where the act of some inferior ministerial officer, who is the direct instrument for exercising the executive function, is submitted to the scrutiny of the courts. This usually occurs where the constitutionality of a law is questioned by the judicial examination of the act of some officer who has attempted to carry the law into execution. In such a case there is not a direct judicial examination of the president's acts, or those of his subordinates, but merely the determination of the question whether there is a valid law; id. 419; Marbury v. Madison, 1 Cranch (U. S.) 137, 2 L. Ed. 60; Mississippi v. Johnson, 4 Wall. (U. S.) 475, 18 L. Ed. 437; Pom. Const. Law § 633.

So, as a necessary incident of the power to perform his executive duties, must be included freedom from any obstruction or impediments; accordingly, the president cannot be liable to arrest, imprisonment, or detention, while he is in the discharge of the duties of his office; and for this purpose his person must be deemed, in civil cases at least, to possess an official inviolability; 2 Sto. Const. § 1569.

Whether in any case a court may issue a mandamus to the governor of a state is a question on which the decisions are not uniform. In some states it is held that, although conceding the independence of the executive from the control of the judiciary with respect to political duties and powers, as to ministerial duties imposed upon the executive, which might have been committed to another officer, the writ may be resorted to; Cotten v. Ellis, 52 N. C. 545; State v. Chase, 5 Ohio St. 528; Harpending v. Haight, 39 Cal. 189, 2 Am. Rep. 432; Groome v. Gwinn, 43 Md. 572; Greenwood Cemetery Land Co. v. Routt, 17 Colo. 156, 28 Pac. 1125, 15 L. R. A. 369, 31 Am. St. Rep. 284; Tennessee & C. R. Co. v. Moore, 36 Ala. 371; State v. Thayer, 31 Neb. 82, 47 N. W. 704; Chumasero v. Potts, 2 Mont. 242; Martin v. Ingham, 38 Kan. 641, 17 Pac. 162. But the weight of authority would seem to be in favor of the contrary opinion; In re Dennett, 32 Me. 508, 54 Am. Dec. 602; Mauran v. Smith, 8 R. I. 192, 5 Am. Rep. 564; People v. Cullum, 100 Ill. 472; State v. Stone, 120 Mo. 428, 25 S. W. 376, 23 L. R. A. 194, 41 Am. St. Rep. 705; Hovey v. State, 127 Ind. 588, 27 N. E. 175, 11 L. R. A. 763, 22 Am. St. Rep. 663; State v. Governor, 25 N. J. L. 331; State v. Towns, 8 Ga. 360; State v. Stone, 120 Mo. 428, 25 S. W. 376, 23 L. R. A. 194, 41 Am. St. Rep. 705; Hawkins v. Governor, 1 Ark. 571, 33 Am. Dec. 346; People v. Governor, 29 Mich. 320, 18 Am. Rep. 89; State v. Drew, 17 Fla. 67; State v. Warmoth, 22 La. Ann. 1, 2 Am. Rep. 712; Rice v. Austin, 19 Minn. 103 (Gil 74), 18 Am. Rep. 330; Vicks- burg & M. R. Co. v. Lowry, 61 Miss. 102, 48 Am. Rep. 76.

In some cases it is held that the courts have no power, "in the absence of express constitutional provisions, to control the action of the governor, or to compel him by mandamus to perform any duty either political or municipal, and whether commanded by the constitution or by law"; State v. Stone, 120 Mo. 428, 25 S. W. 376, 23 L. R. A. 194, 41 Am. St. Rep. 705; State v. Huston, 27 Okl. 606, 113 Pac. 190, 34 L. R. A. (N. S.) 380; but the mayor of a city is not such an executive officer as is exempt from judicial control; State v. Noonan, 59 Mo. App. 524.

As to other executive officers, such as secretary of state, treasurer, auditor, and the like, though some conflict exists, the better-considered doctrine, and that supported by the great weight of authority, is properly said to be that courts will apply the general principle of law and issue the writ in the case of purely ministerial acts; High, Ext. Leg. Rem. §§ 124a-126, where the cases are collected.

The same principle is applied to determine how far the courts will interfere in like manner with the heads of executive departments, or bureaus thereof, of the federal government. If the act is purely ministerial the writ will issue; Kendall v. U. S., 12 Pet. (U. S.) 524, 9 L. Ed. 1181; Ballinger v. U. S., 216 U. S. 240, 30 Sup. Ct. 338, 54 L. Ed. 464; Garfield v. U. S., 211 U. S. 249, 29 Sup. Ct. 62, 53 L. Ed. 168; U. S. v. Bayard, 16 D. C. 428; but it must be an act not growing out of the inherent powers of the officer; U. S. v. Guthrie, 17 How. (U. S.) 284, 15 L. Ed. 102; and in no case where the act involves the exercise of discretion will the court interfere; Holloway v. Whiteley, 4 Wall. (U. S.) 522, 18 L. Ed. 335; Secretary v. McGarrahan, 9 Wall. (U. S.) 298, 19 L. Ed. 579; Carrick v. Lamar, 116 U. S. 423, 6 Sup. Ct. 424, 29 L. Ed. 677; U. S. v. Black, 128 U. S. 40, 9 Sup. Ct. 12, 32 L. Ed. 354; U. S. v. Blaine, 139 U. S. 306, 11 Sup. Ct. 607, 35 L. Ed. 183; U. S. v. Lamont, 155 U. S. 303, 15 Sup. Ct. 97, 39 L. Ed. 160; and findings of fact by an executive officer are conclusive in the absence of palpable error; Central Trust Co. v. Trust Co., 216 U. S. 251, 30 Sup. Ct. 341, 54 L. Ed. 469, 17 Ann. Cas. 1066.

EXECUTOR DE SON TORT. One who attempts to act as executor without lawful authority.

A person who, without any authority, intermeddles with the estate of a decedent and does such acts as properly belong to the office of executor or administrator, thereby becoming a sort of quasi executor, though only for the purpose of being sued or made liable for the assets with which he has intermeddled. Grace v. Seibert, 235 Ill. 190, 85 N. E. 308, 22 L. R. A. (N. S.) 301; and such executor, having assumed a representative character, cannot deny it, and therefore suffers all the liabilities of an executor without acquiring the rights or privileges of such office; id.

If a stranger takes upon him to act as executor without any just authority (as, by intermeddling with the goods of the deceased, and many other transactions), he is called in law an executor of his own wrong, de son tort; 2 Bla. Com. 507; Bacon v. Parker, 12 Conn. 213; Wilbourn v. Wilbourn, 48 Miss. 38; 14 E. L. & Eq. 510; Johnston v. Duncan, 3 Litt. (Ky.) 163, 14 Am. Dec. 54; White v. Cooper, 3 Pa. 130; Brown v. Walter, 58 Ala. 310; Barron v. Burney, 38 Ga. 264. If a man kill the cattle of the testator, or take his goods to satisfy a debt, or collect money due him, or pay out such money, or carry on his business, or take possession of his house, etc., he becomes an executor de son tort. Where a person with whom a will had been left filed it, but took out no letters with the will annexed, or any other legal authority to administer on the estate, he became an executor de son tort; Morrow v. Cloud, 77 Ga. 114.

But a stranger may perform many acts in relation to a testator's estate without becoming liable as executor de son tort. Such are locking up his goods for preservation, burying the deceased in a manner suitable to his fortune, paying for the funeral expenses and those of the last sickness, making an inventory of his property to prevent loss or fraud solely, feeding his cattle, milking his cows, repairing his houses, etc. Such acts are held to be offices of kindness and charity; Magner v. Ryan, 19 Mo. 196; Emery v. Berry, 28 N. H. 473, 61 Am. Dec. 622. Nor does paying the debts of the deceased with one's own money make one an executor de son tort; Carter v. Robbins, 8 Rich. (S. C.) 29; Bogue v. Watrous, 59 Conn. 247, 22 Atl. 31. Nor does one become executor de son tort by obtaining payment of a debt from an executor de son tort; 65 L. T. N. S. 709. The fact that a widow has taken possession of community property is not sufficient to authorize suit against her on a note of her deceased husband; Vela v. Guerra, 75 Tex. 595, 12 S. W. 1127. As to what acts will render a person so liable, see Godolphin, Orph. Leg. 91; 1 Wms. Exec. 299; 1 Dane, Abr. 561; Bull. N. P. 48; Com. Dig. Administration (C 3); Rattoon v. Overacker, 8 Johns. (N. Y.) 126; In re Huff's Estate, 15 S. & R. (Pa.) 39; White v. Mann, 26 Me. 361; Chandler v. Davidson, 6 Blackf. (Ind.) 367.

An executor de son tort is liable only for such assets as come into his hands, and is not liable for not reducing assets to possession; Kinard's Adm'r v. Young, 2 Rich. Eq. (S. C.) 247; Roumfort v. McAlarney, 82 Pa. 193. And it has been held that he is only liable to the rightful administrator; Muir v. Trustees of Orphan House, 3 Barb. Ch. (N. Y.) 477; Brown v. Walter, 58 Ala. 310. But see Hansford v. Elliott, 9 Leigh (Va.) 79; Swift v. Martin, 19 Mo. App. 488; which imply that he is also liable to the heir at law. He cannot be sued except for fraud, and he must be sued as executor; Buckminster v. Ingham, Bratt. (Vt.) 116; Francis v. Welch, 33 N. C. 215; Nass v. Van-swearingen, 10 S. & R. (Pa.) 144; Brown's Ex'rs v. Durbin's Adm'r, 5 J. J. Marsh. (Ky.) 170. But in general he is liable to all the trouble of an executorship, with none of its profits. And the law on this head seems to have been borrowed from the civil-law doctrine of pro herede gestio. See Heineccius, Antiq. Syntagma, lib. 2, tit. 17, § 16, p. 468.

An executor de son tort is an executor only for the purpose of being sued, and not for the purpose of suing; Francis v. Welch, 33 N. C. 215. He is sued as if rightful executor. But if he defends as such he becomes thereby also an executor de son tort; Lawes, Pl. 190, note; Davis v. Connelly's Ex'rs, 4 B. Monr. (Ky.) 136; Gregory's Ex'rs v. Forrester, 1 McCord, Ch. (S. C.) 318; Hill v. Henderson, 13 Smedes & M. (Miss.) 688; Norfolk's Ex'r v. Gantt, 2 H. & J. (Md.) 435. When an executor de son tort takes out letters of administration, his acts are legalized, and are to be viewed in the same light as if he had been rightful administrator when the goods came into his hands; Magner v. Ryan, 19 Mo. 196; Shillaber v. Wyman, 15 Mass. 325; Rattoon v. Overacker, 8 Johns. (N. Y.) 126. But see, contra, Clements v. Swain, 2 N. H. 475. A voluntary sale by an executor de son tort confers only the same title on the purchaser that he himself had; 6 Exch. 164; 20 E. L. & Eq. 145; Carpenter v. Going, 20 Ala. 587; Meigan v. McDonough, 10 Watts (Pa.) 287.

It is held that in regard to land no man can be an executor de son tort; Green v. Dewit, 1 Root (Conn.) 183; Nass v. Van-swearingen, 7 S. & R. (Pa.) 192; id., 10 S. & R. (Pa.) 144. In Arkansas it is said that there is no such thing as a technical executor de son tort; Baraslen v. Odum, 17 Ark. 122; Rust v. Witherington, id. 129; and so in Missouri; Rozelle v. Harmon, 103 Mo. 339, 15 S. W. 432, 12 L. R. A. 187. See, on this subject, Smith v. Porter, 35 Me. 287; Leach v. Pillsbury, 15 N. H. 137; Grave's Adm'r v. Poage, 17 Mo. 91; Hardy v. Thomas, 23 Miss. 544, 57 Am. Dec. 152; Josey v. Rogers, 13 Ga. 478; Woolfork's Adm'r v. Sullivan, 23 Ala. 548, 58 Am. Dec. 305; Simonton v. McLane's Adm'r, 25 Ala. 353; Morrison v. Smith, 44 N. C. 399; Walworth v. Ballard, 12 La. Ann. 245; Lee v. Wright, 1 Rawle (Pa.) 149; Schoul. Ex'rs & Adm'rs § 184.

EXECUTORS AND ADMINISTRATORS.

The person or persons to whom is committed the administration of the estates of decedents, the first being that of a person named in a will to execute its provisions, the latter that of the officer designated under the law to administer the estate of one who has died intestate.

An executor is one to whom another man commits by his last will the execution of that will, and testament. 2 Bla. Com. 503.

A person to whom a testator by his will commits the execution, or putting in force, of that instrument and its codicils. Fonbl. Rights and Wrongs 307. See LETTERS TESTAMENTARY; HÆRES.

An administrator is a person authorized to manage and distribute the estate of an intestate, or of a testator who has no executor. In South African law the term is used as equivalent to trustee.

An administrator is merely the agent or trustee of the estate of the decedent, acting under the immediate direction of the law prescribing his duties, regulating his conduct and limiting his powers; Collamore v. Wilder, 19 Kan. 67.

ADMINISTRATION. The management of the estate of an intestate, or of a testator who has no executor. 2 Bla. Com. 494; 1 Williams, Ex. 401. The term is applied broadly to denote the management of an estate by an executor, and also the management of estates of minors, lunatics, etc., in those cases where trustees have been appointed by authority of law to take charge of such estates in place of the legal owners.

No administration is necessary where there are no creditors and the heirs divide the assets in kind or otherwise by mutual agreement; McCracken v. McCaslin, 50 Mo. App. 85; Cadmus v. Jackson, 52 Pa. 307; Brown v. Baxter, 77 Kan. 97, 94 Pac. 155, 574; or where the property of the intestate is exempt; Rivera v. R. Co. (Tex.) 149 S. W. 223; or where the widow is sole legatee and all debts and expenses are paid; Block v. Butt, 41 Ind. App. 487, 84 N. E. 357; or where persons in interest settle their rights outside of the probate court; Prichard v. Mulhall, 140 Ia. 1, 118 N. W. 43; and, in some states, such settlement, without administration, is authorized by statute; Rogan v. Arnold, 233 Ill. 19, 84 N. E. 58.

The controlling place of administration is the domicile of the testator; Higgins v. Eaton, 188 Fed. 938.

The right of administration is a valuable one and not to be taken away, except as provided by statute; Williams v. Williams, 24 App. D. C. 214.

Originally in England the crown claimed the right of administering the personal property of intestates and exercised it by its ministers, or granted it as a franchise to lords of manors or others and afterwards to prelates, who greatly abused the trust, until, under the Statute of Westminster II, the ordinary was bound to pay the debts of the deceased so far as his goods would extend, but still the ecclesiastical persons who were entrusted with the duty, appropriated large portions of them upon the pretext of pious uses, until they were required by Stat. 31 Edw. III. c. 11, § 1, to grant administration to "the next of kin and most lawful friends of the dead person intestate," who were held accountable in the common-law court as executors were. The administration of personal estates then became assimilated to carrying out the provisions of wills, and the function of the ecclesiastical courts was merely the grant of letters and the supervision of their execution. Next, under 21 Hen. VIII., the ordinary could appoint the widow or next of kin, or both, at his discretion. The jurisdiction in England was taken away from the ecclesiastical court by Stat. 20 & 21 Vic. c. 77, and vested in a judge of probate. The court of probate is now part of the Probate, Divorce and Admiralty Division of the High Court of Justice.

In the United States, what is known as probate jurisdiction is exercised generally by courts known as probate courts held by surrogates, judges of probate, registers of wills, etc.

There are various kinds of administration:

Ad colligendum. That which is granted for collecting and preserving goods about to perish (bona peritura). The only power over these goods is under the form prescribed by statute.

Ancillary. That which is subordinate to the principal administration taken out in another state or country where there are assets; Appeal of Barry, 88 Pa. 131; Stevens v. Gaylord, 11 Mass. 256; Rosenthal v. Renick, 44 Ill. 202; Trimble v. Dzieduziki, 57 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 208. In the absence of a statute allowing it (as in some states) an administrator in one state cannot sue as such in another, unless ancillary letters are taken out; Noonan v. Bradley, 9 Wall. (U. S.) 394, 19 L. Ed. 757; and this may be done by amendment after the bill is filed; Black v. Henry G. Allen Co., 42 Fed. 618, 9 L. R. A. 433. One who is both ancillary and domiciliary administratrix of the same estate cannot be called on, in one jurisdiction, to account for assets received in the other; Hamilton v. Carrington, 41 S. C. 385, 19 S. E. 616.

Executors in the state of testator's domicile are not bound, under the full faith and credit clause, by a decree of the court of another state against an administrator c. t. a., in a case submitted to arbitration before the testator's death: Brown v. Fletcher's Estate, 210 U. S. 82, 28 Sup. Ct. 702, 52 L. Ed. 966.

Caterorum. That which is granted as to the residue of an estate, which cannot be administered under the limited power already granted: 4 Hagg. Eccl. 382, 386; 4 M. & G. 398; 1 Curt. Eccl. 286.

It differs from administration de bonis non in this, that in caterorum the full power granted is exercised and exhausted, while in the other the power is, for some cause, not fully exercised.

Cum testamento annexo. That which is granted where no executor is named in the will, or where the one named dies, or is incompetent or unwilling to act. Such an administrator must follow the statute rules of distribution, except when otherwise directed by the will; Ex parte Brown, 2 Bradf. (N. Y.) 22; Farwell v. Jacobs, 4 Mass. 634; Stacy v. Thrasher, 6 How. (U. S.) 59, 12 L. Ed. 337. The residuary legatee is appointed such administrator rather than the next of kin; Estate of Donnelly, 2 Phil. (Pa.) 54; Thornton v. Winston, 4 Leigh (Va.) 152; 2 Add. 352.

De bonis non. That which is granted when the first administrator dies before having fully administered. The person so appointed has in general the powers of a common administrator; Bacon, Abr. Executors, B, 1; Rolle, Abr. 907; Matthews v. Douthitt, 27 Ala. 273, 62 Am. Dec. 765; State v. Porter, 9 Ind. 342; Thomas v. Stanley, 4 Sneed (Tenn.) 411; Watson v. Jacobs, 29 Vt. 170; Johnson v. Bank, 11 Md. 412; Coffin v. Heath, 6 Metc. (Mass.) 78; Wiggin v. Swett, 6 Metc. (Mass.) 198, 39 Am. Dec. 716; Prusa v. Everett, 78 Neb. 250, 110 N. W. 568; Prusa v. Everett, 78 Neb. 251, 113 N. W. 571.

A residuary legatee has sufficient interest in an estate to request the appointment of an administrator d. b. n. to collect debts, whether it will make the estate solvent or not; Mallory's Appeal from Probate, 62 Conn. 218, 25 Atl. 109.

De bonis non cum testamento annexo. That which is granted when an executor dies leaving a part of the estate unadministered. Comyns, Dig. Adm. B, 1; Ellmaker's Estate, 4 Watts (Pa.) 34, 38, 39. It cannot be based on a will made in a foreign country if invalid there because of defective execution; Coleman's Estate, 13 Pa. Co. Ct. 81.

Durante absentia. That which subsists during the absence of the executor and until he has proved the will. In England, by statute, such an administration is raised during the absence of the executor, and is not determined by the executor's dying abroad; 4

Hagg. Eccl. 360; 3 Bos. & P. 26; see Willing v. Perot, 5 Rawle (Pa.) 264.

Durante minori etate. That which is granted when the executor is a minor. It continues until the minor attains his lawful age to act, which at common law is seventeen years; 5 Coke 29. When an infant is sole executor, the statute 38 Geo. III. c. 87, s. 6 provides that probate shall not be granted to him until his full age of twenty-one years, and that adm. cum test. annexo shall be granted in the mean time to his guardian or other suitable person. A similar statute provision exists in most of the United States. This administrator may collect assets, pay debts, sell bona peritura, and perform such other acts as require immediate attention. He may sue and be sued; Bacon, Abr. Executor, B, 1; Cro. Eliz. 718; 2 Bla. Com. 503; 5 Coke 29; Taylor v. Barron, 35 N. H. 484, 493.

Where there are no creditors or heirs of age, the tutor of minor heirs has a right to take possession of succession property and administer their interests in it; Succession of Bourgeois, 43 La. Ann. 247, 9 South. 34.

Foreign administration. That which is exercised by virtue of authority properly conferred by a foreign power.

The general rule in England and the United States is that letters granted in one jurisdiction, give no authority to sue or be sued in another jurisdiction, though they may be ground for new probate authority; 5 Ves. 44; Blackstone v. Miller, 188 U. S. 189, 23 Sup. Ct. 277, 47 L. Ed. 439; Doe v. M'Farland, 9 Cra. (U. S.) 151, 3 L. Ed. 687; Armstrong v. Lear, 12 Wheat. (U. S.) 169, 6 L. Ed. 589; Perkins v. Williams, 2 Root (Conn.) 462; Dangerfield's Ex'x v. Thurston's Heirs, 8 Mart. (N. S.) [La.] 232; M'Cullough v. Young, 1 Binn. (Pa.) 63; Matthews v. Douthitt, 27 Ala. 273, 62 Am. Dec. 765; Flisk v. Norvel, 9 Tex. 13, 58 Am. Dec. 128; State v. Price, 21 Mo. 434; Cocke v. Finley, 29 Miss. 127; Dickinson v. M'Craw, 4 Rand. (Va.) 158; Allsup v. Allsup's Heirs, 10 Yerg. (Tenn.) 283; Stearns v. Burnham, 5 Greenl. (Me.) 261, 17 Am. Dec. 228; Taylor v. Barron, 35 N. H. 484; Wood v. Gold, 4 McLean C. C. 577, Fed. Cas. No. 17,947; Vaughan v. Northup, 15 Pet. (U. S.) 1, 10 L. Ed. 639; Hill v. Tucker, 13 How. (U. S.) 458, 14 L. Ed. 223; Black v. Allen Co., 42 Fed. 618, 9 L. R. A. 433; Farrington v. Trust Co., 9 N. Y. Supp. 433. Hence, when persons are domiciled and die in one country as A, and have personal property in another as B, the authority must be had in B, but exercised according to the laws of A; Story, Conf. Laws 23, 447; Leach v. Pillsbury, 15 N. H. 137; Spradling v. Pipkin, 15 Mo. 118; Williams v. Williams, 5 Md. 467; Ex parte McComb, 4 Bradf. (N. Y.) 151; King v. U. S., 27 Ct. Cl. 529; Rutherford v. U. S., 27 Ct. Cl. 539; and see DOMICIL.

There is no legal privity between administrators in different states; nor between executors of a will in one state and administrators c. t. a. in another; Wilson v. Ins. Co., 164 Fed. 817, 90 C. C. A. 593, 19 L. R. A. (N. S.) 553. The principal administrator is to act in the intestate's domicile, and the ancillary is to collect claims and pay debts in the foreign jurisdiction and pay over the surplus to his principal; Pond v. Makepeace, 2 Metc. (Mass.) 114; 3 Hagg. Eccl. 199; Jones v. Marable, 6 Humph. (Tenn.) 116; Lawrence v. Kitteridge, 21 Conn. 577, 56 Am. Dec. 385; Stokely's Estate, 19 Pa. 476; Riley v. Riley, 3 Day (Conn.) 74, 3 Am. Dec. 260; The Boston, 1 Blatchf. & H. 309, Fed. Cas. No. 1,669; Kilpatrick v. Bush, 23 Miss. 199; 2 Curt. Eccl. 241; Carmichael v. Ray, 1 Rich. (S. C.) 116.

Payment to an ancillary administrator is no bar to a suit by the administrator of the domicile; Maas v. Bank, 36 Misc. 154, 72 N. Y. Supp. 1068; nor is it a defence to a prior action by the domiciliary administrator in another state, of which the defendant had knowledge before payment; Steele v. Ins. Co., 160 N. Y. 703, 57 N. E. 1125. For other cases see 15 Harv. L. Rev. 412. But in Quebec a foreign administrator is recognized; 12 Harv. L. Rev. 287; as well as foreign guardians and receivers, and this rule is said to be satisfactory in operation; id., citing Lafleur, Conf. L.

An administrator appointed in Michigan cannot sue a resident of New York in the United States circuit court in that state when he had not taken out letters of administration in New York; Johnson v. Powers, 139 U. S. 156, 11 Sup. Ct. 525, 35 L. Ed. 112.

But some courts hold that the probate of a will in a foreign state, if duly authenticated, dispenses with the necessity of taking out new letters in their state; Lancaster v. McBryde, 27 N. C. 421; Gray v. Patton, 2 B. Monr. (Ky.) 12; Rice v. Jones, 4 Call (Va.) 89; Vaughan v. Northup, 15 Pet. (U. S.) 1, 10 L. Ed. 639; Ives v. Allyn, 12 Vt. 589; Hayes v. Pratt, 147 U. S. 557, 13 Sup. Ct. 503, 37 L. Ed. 279.

Where a deceased plaintiff was domiciled in another state, an executor appointed in the domicile will be preferred to a temporary administrator appointed in the state of the forum, as the new party; Norman v. Goode, 113 Ga. 121, 38 S. E. 317.

It has been held that possession of property may be taken in a foreign state, but a suit cannot be brought without taking out letters in that state; Watt's Ex'rs v. Shepard, 2 Ala. 429; Trotter v. White, 10 Smedes & M. (Miss.) 607; Suarez v. City of New York, 2 Sandf. Ch. (N. Y.) 173. In Arizona suit may be brought upon a foreign judgment without taking out new letters of administration; Arizona Cattle Co. v. Huber, 4 Ariz. 69, 33 Pac. 555. See CONFLICT OF LAWS.

For the purpose of administration, the situs of a debt is the domicile of the debtor and not the place where the evidence of the debt is located; Michigan Trust Co. v. Probasco, 29 Ind. App. 109, 63 N. E. 255; Murphy v. Crouse, 135 Cal. 14, 66 Pac. 971, 87 Am. St. Rep. 90, where it was said that in this respect certificates of stock do not differ from other choses in action. The situs, as property, of corporate stock owned by a non-resident decedent is within the county where the corporate property is or where the corporation has its principal place of business; In re Arnold, 114 App. Div. 244, 99 N. Y. Supp. 740.

Pendente lite. That which is granted pending the controversy respecting an alleged will or the right of appointment. An officer of the court is appointed to take care of the estate only till the suit terminates; 2 P. Will. 589; 1 Hagg. Eccl. 313; Bergin v. McFarland, 26 N. H. 533; Fisk v. Norvel, 9 Tex. 13, 58 Am. Dec. 128; Barksdale v. Cobb, 16 Ga. 13; Cole v. Wooden, 18 N. J. L. 15. He may maintain suits, but cannot distribute the assets; 1 Ball & B. 192; Cain v. Warford, 7 Md. 282; Appeal of Patton, 31 Pa. 465; Rogers v. Dively, 51 Mo. 193.

Public. That which the public administrator performs. This is in many of the states by statute in those cases where persons die intestate, without leaving any who are entitled to apply for letters of administration; Ferrie v. Public Administrator, 3 Bradf. (N. Y.) 151; Public Adm'rs v. Burdell, 4 id. 252.

In many states there is provision of law for the appointment of a public administrator whose duty it is to administer upon the estate of any person found dead within his jurisdiction. Such officer is competent to administer on the estate within his county of any decedent irrespective of the place of his death; In re Richardson's Estate, 120 Cal. 344, 52 Pac. 832; and such administrator has no authority to refuse to enter upon or to continue the administration of an estate, which by law he should administer. He cannot retain the office and choose for himself which of its duties he will perform; State v. Kennedy, 73 Mo. App. 384.

The authority of a public administrator to take charge of an estate cannot be collaterally questioned; Dunn v. German-American Bank, 109 Mo. 90, 18 S. W. 1139; Weir v. Monahan, 67 Miss. 434, 7 South. 291.

Special. That which is limited either in time or in power. Such administration does not come under the statutes of 31 Edw. III. c. 11, and 21 Hen. VIII. c. 5, on which the modern English and American laws are founded. A judgment against a special administrator binds the estate; 1 Sneed 430; although there is no property but merely a right of action, and if there is delay in granting the administration, a special administrator might be appointed where immediate settlement could be made; Groce v. Helm, 91 Mich. 450, 51 N. W. 1106. In the United States, administration is a subject charged upon courts of civil jurisdiction. A multiplicity of statutes defines the powers of such courts in the various states. The public officer authorized to delegate the trust is called surrogate, judge of probate, register of wills, etc. In some states, these courts are of special jurisdiction, while in others the power is vested in county courts.

Death of the intestate must have taken place, or the court will have no jurisdiction. Probate proceedings on the estate of a person who is not dead are void; Fay v. Costa, 2 Cal. App. 241, 83 Pac. 275; Steele's Unknown Heirs v. Belding (Tex.) 148 S. W. 592. A decree of the court is prima facie evidence of his death, and puts the burden of disproof upon the party pleading in abatement; 3 Term 130; Munro v. Merchant, 26 Barb. (N. Y.) 383; Barkaloo's Adm'r v. Emerick, 18 Ohio 268.

Estates of absentees. Statutes authorizing administration on the estate of an absentee after a fixed period, as if he were dead, have been held void as a deprivation of property without due process of law; Carr v. Brown, 20 R. I. 215, 38 Atl. 9, 38 L. R. A. 294, 78 Am. St. Rep. 855; Lavin v. Bank, 1 Fed. 641, 18 Blatchf. 1; Clapp v. Houg, 12 N. D. 600, 98 N. W. 710, 65 L. R. A. 757, 102 Am. St. Rep. 589; Savings Bank of Baltimore v. Weeks, 103 Md. 601, 64 Atl. 295, 6 L. R. A. (N. S.) 690; Selden v. Kennedy, 104 Va. 826, 52 S. E. 635, 4 L. R. A. (N. S.) 944, 113 Am. St. Rep. 1076, 7 Ann. Cas. 879; in the absence of a statute; Scott v. McNeal, 154 U. S. 49, 14 Sup. Ct. 1108, 38 L. Ed. 896; Springer v. Shavender, 118 N. C. 53, 23 S. E. 976, 54 Am. St. Rep. 708; Devlin v. Com., 101 Pa. 273, 47 Am. Rep. 710; subsequently a statute was passed in Pennsylvania and held constitutional; Cunnius v. School Dist., 206 Pa. 469, 56 Atl. 16, 98 Am. St. Rep. 790; this judgment was affirmed in 198 U. S. 458, 25 Sup. Ct. 721, 49 L. Ed. 1125, 3 Ann. Cas. 1121, where the court distinguished the case from that in 154 U. S., supra, upon the ground that in the former case there was no statute, and that in the present one, a statute having been passed and the period of absence being fixed and not unreasonably brief, it was valid and not open to the objection of want of due process of law; and similar statutes have been held valid; Barton v. Kimmerley, 165 Ind. 609, 76 N. E. 250, 112 Am. St. Rep. 252; Roderigas v. Savings Inst., 63 N. Y. 460, 20 Am. Rep. 555, which appeared for a time to stand alone and was frequently referred to as having been decided by a mere majority of the court. The same statute was held invalid by the federal court in Lavin v. Savings Bank, 18 Blatchf. 1, 1 Fed. 641. So far as the federal constitution is concerned, the Pennsylvania case in Cunnius v. School Dist., 198 U. S. 458, 25 Sup. Ct. 721, 49 L. Ed. 1125, would seem to settle the question, at least so far as to determine that such statutes are not obnoxious to the XIVth Amendment of the federal constitution. So far as the state constitutions are concerned the cases differ, as appears by the above citations. The case in Maryland is put mainly upon the ground that the act contained no provision requiring that before the distribution of the property of the absentee, security should be given for its refund if he should prove to be alive.

APPOINTMENT OF EXECUTORS AND ADMINISTRATORS AND THE LETTERS TESTAMENTARY OR OF ADMINISTRATION. The appointment of executors and administrators is made upon application to the proper officer having jurisdiction, in some states by a petition followed by a citation to the interested parties, to be served upon them or published according to law. Any one of such interested parties may appear and show cause against the appointment. In other states the appointment is made without notice, upon proof to the probate officer of the jurisdictional facts. The evidence of appointment which is delivered to the appointee is termed, in the case of administrators, Letters of Administration, and in the case of executors, Letters Testamentary. In either case the letters certify that there is given to the executor or administrator, as the case may be, full power of administration of the goods, chattels, rights, and credits which were of the deceased, and the person appointed is required to make an inventory and file the same, to pay the debts of the deceased so far as the property will extend, in the legal order of payment, and render a true and just account of his transactions in the administration of the trust. In respect to all matters relating thereto, there is little or no difference in the law relating to letters of administration or letters testamentary. The grant of such letters is a judicial act and recorded as such, and the letters themselves should be duly authenticated under the seal of the court; Schoul. Ex. & Ad. § 118. For the form of letters, see Smith, Prob. Pract. App.; Witzel v. Pierce, 22 Ga. 112.

In most of the states it is provided by law that both executors and administrators shall be required to give bond before receiving their letters from the probate authority. Such requirements have been held to impose on the executors and administrators no new duties, but their effect is merely to give additional remedy to creditors, legatees, and distributees; Eaton v. Benefield, 2 Blackf. (Ind.) 52. In some jurisdictions it is quite usual to find a provision in the will dispensing with the giving of the bond by the executors and such indication of the will of the testator is respected. It has been held, however, that a provision of a will that the executor may act without executing a bond is at all times subject to the control of the courts; Busch v. Rapp, 63 S. W.-479, 23 Ky. L. Rep. 605. One who is not interested in the assets of the estate can raise no question as to the sufficiency or legality of the bond which has been accepted; Jones v. Smith, 120 Ga. 612, 48 S. E. 134. The failure of an administrator to give a bond is ground for removal; Toledo, St. L. & K. C. R. Co. v. Reeves, 8 Ind. App. 667, 35 N. E. 199; but the fact that an executor's bond is invalid, is no ground for his removal; Barricklow v. Stewart, 31 Ind. App. 446, 68 N. E. 316.

Executors and administrators are charged with a trust, and liable for the want of due care such as prudent men exercise in managing their own affairs; State v. Dickson, 213 Mo. 66, 111 S. W. 817; In re Chadbourne, 15 Cal. App. 363, 114 Pac. 1012.

The grant of letters has been held to be prima facie evidence of all the essential jurisdictional facts; Davis v. Swearingen, 56 Ala. 31; but it is generally considered that the probate court, in granting letters of administration does not adjudicate that the person is dead, but that letters shall be granted to the applicant; Carroll v. Carroll, 60 N. Y. 121, 19 Am. Rep. 144; Newman v. Jenkins, 10 Pick. (Mass.) 515; and the letters are not legal evidence of the death; Mutual Ben. Life Ins. Co. v. Tisdale, 91 U. S. 238, 23 L. Ed. 314. Letters of administration upon the estate of a person who is in fact alive have no validity or effect as against him; Scott v. McNeal, 154 U. S. 34, 14 Sup. Ct. 1108, 38 L. Ed. 896.

As to the grant of letters of administration upon the estate of a person presumed to be dead, see supra.

A grant of letters which includes two estates under one administration would be irregular and objectionable, but it has been held not to be void; Grande v. Herrera, 15 Tex. 533; the letters should be signed by the judge or other probate officer; Succession of Carlon, 26 La. Ann. 329; Matthews v. Joyce, 85 N. C. 258; and they are not void though the seal of the court is affixed in the wrong place; Sharp v. Dye, 64 Cal. 9, 27 Pac. 789.

Letters testamentary and of administration are, according to their terms and extent, conclusive as to personal property while they remain unrevoked. They cannot be questioned in a court of law or of equity, and cannot be impeached, even by evidence of fraud or forgery. Proof that the testator was insane, or that the will was forged, is inadmissible; 12 Ves. 298; Broderick's Will, 21 Wall. (U. S.) 503, 22 L. Ed. 599; Hall v. Woodman, 49 N. H. 295; Appeal of Hegarty, 75 Pa. 503; Inhabitants of Dublin v. Chadbourne, 16 Mass. 433; Jackson v. Le Grange; 19 Johns. (N. Y.) 386, 10 Am. Dec. 237; Irwin v. Scriber, 18 Cal. 499; Carroll v. Carroll, 60 N. Y. 123, 19 Am. Rep. 144; Moore's Estate v. Moore, 33 Neb. 509, 50 N. W. 443; O'Connor v. Huggins, 113 N. Y. 511, 21 N. E. 184; Robinson v. Epping, 24 Fla. 237, 4 South. 812. But if the nature of the plea raise the issue, it may be shown that the court granting the supposed letters had no jurisdiction, and that its action is therefore a nullity; 3 Term 130; see Knox v. Nobel, 77 Hun 230, 28 N. Y. Supp. 355; or that the seal attached to the supposed probate has been forged, or that the letters have been revoked, or that the testator is alive; In re Huff's Estate, 15 S. & R. (Pa.) 42; Griffith v. Frazier, 8 Cra. (U. S.) 9, 3 L. Ed. 471; Jochumsen v. Bank, 3 Allen (Mass.) 87; Duncan v. Stewart, 25 Ala. 408, 60 Am. Dec. 527; Harwood v. Wylie, 70 Tex. 538, 7 S. W. 789. Where an executor qualified and acted for many years under his appointment, he will not be allowed to dispute the recitation in his appointment that citation to the heirs was issued and served; In re Moore, 95 Cal. 34, 30 Pac. 106.

Though the probate court has exclusive jurisdiction of the grant of letters, yet where a legacy has been obtained by fraud, or the probate has been procured by fraud on the next of kin, a court of equity would hold the legatee or wrong-doer as bound by a trust for the party injured; Wms. Ex. 552. While a court of equity cannot remove an executor; Mannhardt v. Staats Zeitung Co., 90 Ill. App. 315; it may restrain him from acting, though such restraint will incidentally prevent him from performing his duties as executor; Bentley v. Dixon, 60 N. J. Eq. 353, 46 Atl. 689; and even take the estate out of his hands and place it in the custody of a receiver; Bolles v. Bolles, 44 N. J. Eq. 385, 14 Atl. 593.

Letters may be revoked by the court which made the grant, or on appeal to a higher tribunal, reversing the decision by which they were granted. Special or limited administration will be revoked on the occasion ceasing which called for the grant. An executor or administrator will be removed when the letters were obtained improperly; Wms. Ex. 571.

Of their effect in a state other than that in which legal proceedings were instituted.

In view of the rule of the civil law, that personalia sequuntur personam, certain effect has been given by the comity of nations to a foreign probate granted at the place of the domicile of the deceased, in respect to the personal assets in other states. At common law, the lex loci rei sitæ governs as to real estate, and the foreign probate has no validity; but as to personalty the law of the domicile governs both as to testacy and intestacy. It is customary, therefore, on a due exemplification of the probate granted at the place of domicile, to admit the will to probate, and issue letters testamentary, without requiring original or further proof.

A foreign probate at the place of domicile has in itself no force or effect beyond the jurisdiction in which it was granted, but on its production fresh probate will be granted thereon in all other jurisdictions where assets are found. This is the general rule, but is liable to be varied by statute, and is so varied in some of the states of the United States.

Letters testamentary or of administration confer no power beyond the limits of the state in which they are granted, and do not authorize the person to whom they are issued to maintain any suit in the state or federal courts in any other state; Johnson v. Powers, 139 U. S. 156, 11 Sup. Ct. 525, 35 L. Ed. 112; Wilkins v. Ellett, 108 U. S. 256, 2 Sup. Ct. 641, 27 L. Ed. 718; the executor or administrator has therefore, as such, no right of control over property in another state or country; Mansfield v. Turpin, 32 Ga. 260; Upton v. Adam's Ex'rs, 27 Ind. 432; Wood v. Gold, 4 McLean 577; Fed. Cas. No. 17,947; Lewis v. McMillen, 41 Barb. (N. Y.) 431; Carmichael v. Ray, 40 N. C. 365; he cannot interfere with assets, collect or discharge debts, control lands, sue or be sued; Schoul. Ex. & Ad. § 173. The principle is, that a grant of power to administer the estate of a decedent operates only as of right within the jurisdiction which grants the letters, and in order that a foreign representative may exercise any such function he must be clothed with authority from the jurisdiction into which he comes, and conform to the requirements imposed by local law; Moore v. Fields, 42 Pa. 467; Beckham v. Wittkowski, 64 N. C. 464; Price v. Morris, 5 McLean, 4, Fed. Cas. No. 11,414; Bell's Adm'r v. Nichols, 38 Ala. 678; Graveley v. Graveley, 25 S. C. 1, 60 Am. Rep. 478; Laurence v. Nelson, 143 U. S. 215, 12 Sup. Ct. 440, 36 L. Ed. 130; Duchesse d'Auxy v. Porter, 41 Fed. 68; Reynolds v. McMullen, 55 Mich. 568, 22 N. W. 41, 54 Am. Rep. 386. In most, probably all, of the states there is statutory provision, either for the grant of ancillary letters or for authorizing and regulating suits by foreign executors and administrators. In many of them these officers, properly qualified abroad, are permitted to sue for and recover local assets without other qualification, within the new jurisdiction, than putting on record their authority as conferred by the home jurisdiction, and such authority must be strictly followed. In many of the states there is authority to sue and defend without ancillary administration; Hayes v. Pratt, 147 U. S. 557, 13 Sup. Ct. 503, 37 L. Ed. 279; Banta v. Moore, 15 N. J. Eq. 97; Marrett v. Babb's Ex'r, 91 Ky. 88, 15 S. W. 4; Lewis v. Adams, 70 Cal. 403, 11 Pac. 833, 59 Am. Rep. 423; Tyer v. Melling Co., 32 S. C. 598, 10 S. E. 1067; and this right to sue has been extended to a foreign corporation duly authorized to act in its own jurisdiction; Deringer's Adm'r v. Deringer's Adm'r, 5 Houst. (Del.) 416, 1 Am. St. Rep. 150; in some statutes there is express authority to defend suits; Moss v. Rowland, 3 Bush (Ky.) 505; but it has been held that statutory authority to sue does not imply capacity to be sued; Jones v. Lamar, 77 Ga.

149; nor to sue for intestate lands where they were made by statute assets in the hands of a domestic administrator; Fairchild v. Hagel, 54 Ark. 61, 14 S. W. 1102; but to sue for the grant of local administration; Gibson v. Ponder, 40 Ark. 195; where no suit is necessary a foreign executor or administrator has been permitted to remove personal property and carry it away for the purpose of administration; Petersen v. Bank, 32 N. Y. 21, 88 Am. Dec. 298; Putnam v. Pitney, 45 Minn. 242, 47 N. W. 790, 11 L. R. A. 41; McNamara v. McNamara, 62 Ga. 200; Selleck v. Rusco, 46 Conn. 370; and in the absence of local administration payment to a foreign representative is recognized; Wilkins v. Ellett, 108 U. S. 256, 2 Sup. Ct. 641, 27 L. Ed. 718; Wyman v. Halstead, 109 U. S. 656, 3 Sup. Ct. 417, 27 L. Ed. 1068; Parsons v. Lyman, 20 N. Y. 103.

The latter may assign choses in action belonging to the estate, and the assignee may sue thereon in his own name in another state, unless prevented by its laws respecting assignments from so doing; Wilkins v. Ellett, 108 U. S. 256, 2 Sup. Ct. 641, 27 L. Ed. 718; Campbell v. Brown, 64 Ia. 425, 20 N. W. 745, 52 Am. Rep. 446; Solinsky v. Bank, 82 Tex. 244, 17 S. W. 1050; Petersen v. Bank, 32 N. Y. 21, 88 Am. Dec. 298; he may also sue in another state on a judgment there recovered; Talmage v. Chapel, 16 Mass. 71; Biddle v. Wilkins, 1 Pet. (U. S.) 686, 7 L. Ed. 315; Trecothick v. Austin, 4 Mas. 16, Fed. Cas. No. 14,164; Barton v. Higgins, 41 Md. 539; or he may sue in his individual capacity in another state, on a judgment recovered by him in his official capacity in his own state, Tittman v. Thornton, 107 Mo. 500, 17 S. W. 979, 16 L. R. A. 410; Arizona Cattle Co. v. Huber, 4 Ariz. 69, 33 Pac. 555; and upon a contract made with himself as such a foreign executor or administrator may sue; Barrett v. Barrett, 8 Greenl. (Me.) 346; Du Val v. Marshall, 30 Ark. 230; Sto. Conf. L. §§ 513-516. The term foreign as applied to executors and administrators refers to the jurisdiction from which their authority is derived and not to residence; Fugate v. Moore, 86 Va. 1045, 11 S. E. 1063, 19 Am. St. Rep. 926; Hopper v. Hopper, 125 N. Y. 400, 26 N. E. 457, 12 L. R. A. 237. The estate of a deceased person is substantially one estate, in which those entitled to the residue are interested as a whole, even though situated in various jurisdictions, and although each distinct part of it must be settled in the jurisdiction by which letters were granted whether for the purpose of ancillary or principal administration; Schoul. Ex. & Ad. § 174; ordinarily it is the practice to recognize the person appointed executor or administrator at the domicile of the deceased as the person to whom ancillary letters will be granted; In re Blacian, 4 Redf. (N. Y.) 151; Whart. Conf. L. § 608; but there is no privity between persons appointed in different jurisdictions whether they be different or the same, and the executor or administrator in one state is not concluded in a subsequent suit by the same plaintiff in another state against a person having administration on the estate of the deceased; Johnson v. Powers, 139 U. S. 156, 11 Sup. Ct. 525, 35 L. Ed. 112; Braithwaite v. Harvey, 14 Mont. 208, 36 Pac. 38, 27 L. R. A. 101, 43 Am. St. Rep. 625; Jones v. Jones, 39 S. C. 247, 17 S. E. 587, 802. But a different rule has been applied where different executors are appointed by the will in different states, and they are held to be in privity with each other, and a judgment against those in one state is evidence against those in another; Hill v. Tucker, 13 How. (U. S.) 458, 14 L. Ed. 223; Goodall v. Tucker, 13 How. (U. S.) 469, 14 L. Ed. 227.

When any surplus remains in the hands of a foreign or ancillary appointee after the discharge of all debts in that jurisdiction, it is usually, as a matter of comity, ordered to be paid over to the domiciliary appointee; Wright v. Phillips, 56 Ala. 69; 50 L. J. Ch. 740; and in his hands becomes applicable to debts, legacies, and expenses; Schoul. Ex. & Ad. § 174. It is the policy of the law with respect to these matters to encourage the spirit of comity in subordination to the rights of local creditors who are considered to be entitled to the benefit of assets within their own jurisdiction, rather than to be driven to the assertion of their claims in a foreign state or country; id.; but see LEX FORI.

As a general rule it is the duty of the principal personal representative to collect and make available to the estate all such assets as are available to him consistently with foreign law; 4 M. & W. 171; 1 Cr. & J. 157; even to the extent of seeing that foreign letters are taken out for the collection of foreign assets; or of collecting and realizing upon property and debts so far as it may be done by him, without resort to a foreign jurisdiction; Trecothick v. Austin, 4 Mas. 33, Fed. Cas. No. 14,164; In re Butler, 38 N. Y. 397; Merrill v. Ins. Co., 103 Mass. 245, 4 Am. Rep. 548; but the domestic representative is not to be held in this respect to too onerous a responsibility with respect to foreign property which he cannot realize by virtue of his appointment. See Sto. Conf. L. § 514 a; Schoul. Ex. & Ad. § 175. It is the policy of the courts to sustain, if possible, even irregular acts of executors or administrators done in good faith and without detriment of the estate; Duffy v. McHale (R. I.) 85 Atl. 36.

There is some difference of opinion as to whether a voluntary surrender of assets to the domiciliary representative protects the debtor against claims made by virtue of an administration within his own jurisdiction. The United States supreme court, supported by the current of American authority, maintains that, as between the states such payment or delivery of assets is sufficient to discharge the local debtor in the absence of local administration; U. S. v. Cox, 18 How. (U. S.) 104, 15 L. Ed. 299; Wilkins v. Ellett, 9 Wall. (U. S.) 740, 19 L. Ed. 586; Wilkins v. Ellett, 108 U. S. 256, 2 Sup. Ct. 641, 27 L. Ed. 718; Hatchett v. Berney, 65 Ala. 39; Ramsay v. Ramsay, 97 Ill. App. 270; In re Williams' Estate, 130 Ia. 553, 107 N. W. 608; Maas v. Bank, 176 N. Y. 377, 68 N. E. 658, 98 Am. St. Rep. 689; Dexter v. Berge, 76 Minn. 216, 78 N. W. 1111; Gardiner v. Thorndike, 183 Mass. 82, 66 N. E. 633; Maas v. Bank, 176 N. Y. 377, 68 N. E. 658, 98 Am. St. Rep. 689 (where it was also held that failure to inquire whether a resident administrator had been appointed was negligence sufficient to charge a bank making payment with the knowledge which inquiry would have furnished). But, as a rule, the power of the executor or administrator is confined to the state appointing; In re Crawford's Estate, 68 Ohio St. 58, 67 N. E. 156, 96 Am. St. Rep. 648. The domiciliary administrator will sometimes be recognized ex comitate by courts of another state; State v. Fulton (Tenn.) 49 S. W. 297. The English doctrine is otherwise; Whart. Conf. L. 626; Sto. Conf. L. 515 a. See Dacey, Conf. L. ch. X. (c), ch. XVII. (B), with Moore's American notes. So, by agreement of the parties, he was allowed to become a party in his representative capacity; Ellis v. Ins. Co., 100 Tenn. 177, 43 S. W. 766; though it was held that he should not sue in New York for the wrongful death of his intestate without taking out ancillary letters; Dodge v. North Hudson, 188 Fed. 489.

EXECUTORS. An executor is, as above defined, a person charged with the administration of the estate of one who leaves a will.

Lord Hardwicke, in 3 Atk. 301, says, "The proper term in the civil law, as to goods, is heres testamentarius; and executor is a barbarous term, unknown to that law." And again, "What we call executor and residuary legatee is, in the civil law, universal heir." Id. 300.

The word executor, taken in its broadest sense, has three acceptations. 1. Executor a lege constitutus. He is the ordinary of the diocese. 2. Executor ab episcopo constitutus or executor dativus; and that is he who is called an administrator to an intestate. 3. Executor a testatore constitutus, or executor testamentarius; and that is he who is usually meant when the term executor is used. 1 Wms. Ex. 185. See ORDINARY.

The power of an executor under modern probate law is derived not so much from the will of the testator as from the appointment of the court and the powers conferred upon it by law; Lamb v. Helm, 56 Mo. 420. While he is a trustee in the broadest sense, he is not such in the general acceptance of the term; In re Hibbler, 78 N. J. Eq. 217, 78 Atl. 188, affirmed In re Hibbler's Estate, 79 N. J. Eq. 230, 81 Atl. 1133.

If the executor be legally competent and accepts the trust, it is the duty of the probate court to grant letters testamentary to him; Clark v. Patterson, 214 Ill. 533, 73 N. E. 806, 105 Am. St. Rep. 127, where it was said that legally competent meant of legal age, sound mind and memory and not convicted of crime.

One should not be appointed an executor pending a suit by him on a claim against the estate; Cogswell v. Hall, 183 Mass. 575, 67 N. E. 638. The renunciation of an executor may be by oral statement in open court; In re Baldwin's Will, 27 App. Div. 506, 50 N. Y. Supp. 872. Where one declines the appointment and another person is appointed, the former has no legal right thereafter; Briggs v. Probate Court, 23 R. I. 125, 50 Atl. 335.

A general executor is one who is appointed to administer the whole estate, without any limit of time or place, or of the subject-matter.

A rightful executor is one lawfully appointed by the testator, by his will. Deriving his authority from the will, he may do most acts before he obtains letters testamentary; but he must be possessed of them before he can declare in an action brought by him as such; 1 P. Wms. 768; Wms. Ex. 173.

An instituted executor is one who is appointed by the testator without any condition, and who has the first right of acting when there are substituted executors.

A substituted executor is a person appointed executor if another person who has been appointed refuses to act.

An example will show the difference between an instituted and a substituted executor. Suppose a man makes his son his executor, but if he will not act he appoints his brother, and if neither will act, his cousin: here the son is the instituted executor in the first degree, the brother is said to be substituted in the second degree, the cousin in the third degree, and so on. See Swinb. Wills, pt. 4, s. 19, pl. 1.

An executor de son tort is one who, without lawful authority, undertakes to act as executor of a person deceased. See EXECUTOR DE SON TORT.

A special executor is one who is appointed or constituted to administer either a part of the estate, or the whole for a limited time, or only in a particular place.

An executor to the tenor is a person who is not directly appointed by the will an executor, but who is charged with the duties which appertain to one: as, "I appoint A B to discharge all lawful demands against my will;" 3 Phill. Eccl. 116; 1 Eccl. 374; Swinb. Wills 247; Wentw. Ex. pt. 4, s. 4, p. 230; [1892] Prob. 227, 380; 66 Law T. N. S. 382.

Qualification. Generally speaking, all persons who are capable of making wills, and many others besides, may be executors; 2 Bla. Com. 503. The king may be an executor. So may a corporation sole. So may a corporation aggregate; Toller, Exec. 30; Schoul. Ex. & Ad. 32. So may an alien, if he be not an alien enemy residing abroad or unlawfully continuing in the country. See McGregor v. McGregor, 3 Abb. Dec. (N. Y.) 92. So may married women and infants; and even infants unborn, or en ventre sa mère, may be executors; 1 Dane, Abr. c. 29 a 2, § 3; Swift v. Duffield, 5 S. & R. (Pa.) 40. But in England an infant cannot act solely as executor until his full age of twenty-one years. Meanwhile, his guardian or some other person acts for him as administrator cum test. ann. See Christopher v. Cox, 25 Miss. 162; Schoul. Dom. Rel. § 416; ADMINISTRATION. It was held that a married woman cannot be executrix without her husband's consent; Appeal of Stewart, 56 Me. 300; English's Ex'r v. McNair's Adm'rs, 34 Ala. 40; and that a man by marrying an executrix became executor in her right, and was liable to account as such; 2 Atk. 212; Lindsay v. Lindsay's Adm'rs, 1 Des. (S. C.) 150.

Persons attainted, outlaws, insolvents, and persons of bad moral character may be qualified as executors, because they act en autre droit and it was the choice of the testator to appoint them; 6 Q. B. 57; Berry v. Hamilton, 12 B. Monr. (Ky.) 191, 54 Am. Dec. 515; Sill v. McKnight, 7 W. & S. (Pa.) 244; 3 Salk. 162. It is the duty of the court, when a will has been proven, to grant letters testamentary to the person named in it upon application, if he is not disqualified by statute; Holladay v. Holladay, 16 Or. 147, 19 Pac. 81. Poverty or insolvency is no ground for refusing to qualify an executor; but an insolvent executor may be compelled to give security; Longberger's Estate, 148 Pa. 564, 24 Atl. 120. In some states a bond is required from executors, similar to or identical with that required from administrators. The testator may, by express direction, exempt from the obligation of giving a bond with sureties any trustees whom he appoints or directs to be appointed, but not his executor, unless permitted to do so by state statute; because the creditors of the estate must look to the funds in the executor's hands.

Idiots and lunatics cannot be executors; and an executor who becomes non compos may be removed; 1 Salk. 36. In Massachusetts, when any executor shall become insane, or otherwise incapable of discharging his trust, or evidently unsuitable therefor, the judge of probate may remove him; Thayer v. Homer, 11 Metc. (Mass.) 104. A drunkard may perform the office of executor; Berry v. Hamilton, 12 B. Monr. (Ky.) 191, 54 Am. Dec. 515; Sill v. McKnight, 7 W. & S. (Pa.) 244; but in some states, as Massachusetts and Pennsylvania, there are statutes providing for his removal.

Appointment. Executors can be appointed only by will or codicil; but the word "executor" need not be used. He may be appointed and designated, by committing to his charge those duties which it is the province of an executor to perform; 3 Phill. Eccl. 118; Myers v. Daviess, 10 B. Monr. 394; Ex parte McDonnell, 2 Bradf. Surr. (N. Y.) 32; State v. Watson, 2 Speers (S. C.) 97; Carpenter v. Cameron, 7 Watts (Pa.) 51. Even a direction to keep accounts will, in the absence of any thing to the contrary, constitute the person addressed an executor. A testator may project his power of appointment into the future and exercise it after death through an agent pointed out by name or by his office; Bishop v. Bishop, 56 Conn. 208, 14 Atl. 808.

The appointment of an executor may be absolute, qualified, or conditional. It is absolute when he is constituted certainly, immediately, and without any restriction in regard to the testator's effects or limitation in point of time; Toller, Ex. 36. It may be qualified as to the time or place wherein, or the subject-matters whereon, the office is to be exercised; 1 Will. Ex. 204. Thus, a man may be appointed executor, and his term made to begin or end with the marriage of testator's daughter; or his authority may be limited to the state: or to one class of property, as if A be made executor of goods and chattels in possession, and B of choses in action; Swinb. Wills, pt. 4, s. 17, pl. 4; 3 Phill. Eccl. 424. Still, as to creditors, three limited executors all act as one executor, and may be sued as one; Cro. Car. 293. Finally, an executor may be appointed conditionally, and the condition may be precedent or subsequent. Such is the case when A is appointed in case B shall resign. Godolphin, Orph. Leg. pt. 2, c. 2, § 1. As to appointment, see Manning v. Leighton, 65 Vt. 84, 26 Atl. 258, 24 L. R. A. 684; 39 Sol. J. 228, 244.

Removal. An executor who fails to keep proper accounts or to render any account for a long period, who retains the trust funds mixed with his own and who makes improper investments, should be dismissed; Simon's Estate, 155 Pa. 215, 26 Atl. 424; but failure to account is not compulsory ground of removal; Cosby v. Weaver, 107 Ga. 761, 33 S. E. 656; and the mere delay of an executor to convert real estate into personalty when the same has increased in value, is not such misconduct as to warrant his removal; Wilcox v. Quinby, 65 Hun 621, 20 N. Y. Supp. 5. He may be removed, however, where he has any conflicting personal interest; Putney v. Fletcher, 148 Mass. 247, 19 N. E. 370.

Assignment. An executor cannot assign his office. In England, if he dies having proved the will, his own executor becomes also the original testator's executor. But if he dies intestate, an administrator de bonis non of the first testator succeeds to the executorship. And an administrator de bonis non succeeds to the executorship in both these events, in the United States generally, wherever a trust is annexed to the office of executor; Hendren v. Colgin, 4 Munf. (Va.) 231; Patterson v. High, 43 N. C. 52; Vance v. Vance, 17 Me. 204; In re Van Wyck, 1 Barb. Ch. (N. Y.) 565; Lott v. Meacham, 4 Fla. 144.

Acceptance. The appointee may accept or refuse the office of executor; 3 Phill. Eccl.

577; Stebbins v. Lathrop, 4 Pick. (Mass.) 33; Williams v. Cushing, 34 Me. 370; Leavitt v. Leavitt, 65 N. H. 102, 18 Atl. 920. His acceptance may be implied by acts of authority over the property which evince a purpose of accepting, and by any acts which would make him an executor de son tort, which see. So his refusal may be inferred from his keeping aloof from all management of the estate; Van Horne v. Fonda, 5 Johns. Ch. (N. Y.) 388; Ayres v. Weed, 16 Conn. 291; Marr v. Peay, 6 N. C. 85, 5 Am. Dec. 521; Ralston's Estate, 158 Pa. 645, 28 Atl. 139. But he cannot be compelled to accept and qualify or renounce in some formal manner; Cable v. Cable, 76 Ia. 163, 40 N. W. 700. If one of two or more appointees accepts, and the other declines or dies, or becomes insane, he becomes sole executor; Croft v. Steele, 6 Watts (Pa.) 373. An administrator de bonis non cannot be joined with an executor.

Acts before probate. The will itself is the sole source of an executor's title. Probate is the evidence of that title. See Wolfe v. Underwood, 97 Ala. 375, 12 South. 234; Clapp v. Stoughton, 10 Pick. (Mass.) 463; Shirley v. Healds, 34 N. H. 407. Before probate, an executor may do nearly all the acts which he can do after. He can receive payments, discharge debts, collect and recover assets, sell bank-stock, give or receive notice of dishonor, initiate or maintain proceedings in bankruptcy, sell or give away goods and chattels, and pay legacies. And when he has acted before probate he may be sued before probate; 6 Term 295; Rand v. Hubbard, 4 Metc. (Mass.) 252. He may commence, but he cannot maintain, suits before probate, except such suits as are founded on his actual possession; 3 C. & P. 123; Hutchins v. Adams, 3 Greenl. (Me.) 174; Strong v. Perkins, 3 N. H. 517; 2 Atk. 285. So in some states he cannot sell land without letters testamentary; Kerr v. Moon, 9 Wheat. (U. S.) 565, 6 L. Ed. 161; or transfer a mortgage; Cutter v. Davenport, 1 Pick. (Mass.) 81, 11 Am. Dec. 149; or remain in his own state and sue by attorney elsewhere; Hutchins v. Bank, 12 Metc. (Mass.) 423; or indorse a note so as to be sued, in some states; Stearns v. Burnham, 5 Greenl. (Me.) 261, 17 Am. Dec. 228; Thompson v. Wilson, 2 N. H. 291. And see Harper v. Butler, 2 Pet. (U. S.) 239, 7 L. Ed. 410; Byles, Bills 40; Story, Pr. Notes 304; Story, Bills 250; Horn v. Johnson, 87 Ga. 448, 13 S. E. 633.

Co-executors. Co-executors are regarded in law as one individual; and hence, in general, the acts of one are the acts of all; Com. Dig. Administration (B, 12); Gates v. Whetstone, 8 S. C. 244, 28 Am. Rep. 284; Armstrong v. O'Brien, 83 Tex. 635, 19 S. W. 268; Viele v. Keeler, 129 N. Y. 190, 29 N. E. 78. Hence the assent of one executor to a legacy is sufficient, and the sale or gift of one is the sale or gift of all. So a payment by or to one is a payment by or to all; Herald v. Harper, 8 Blackf. (Ind.) 170; Hoke's Ex'rs v. Fleming, 32 N. C. 263; Adair v. Brimmer, 74 N. Y. 539; a release by one binds all; Devling v. Little, 26 Pa. 502. But each is liable only for the assets which have come into his own hands; Douglass v. Satterlee, 11 Johns. (N. Y.) 21. So he alone who is guilty of tort or negligence is answerable for it, unless his co-executor has connived at the act or helped him commit it; Estate of Sanderson, 74 Cal. 199, 15 Pac. 753. An executor is not liable for a devastavit of his co-executor; Anderson v. Earle, 9 S. C. 460. A power to sell land, conferred by will upon several executors, must be executed by all who proved the will; Wasson v. King, 19 N. C. 262. But if only one executor consents to act, his sale under a power in the will would be good, and such refusal of the others may be in pais; Cro. Eliz. 80; Ross v. Clore, 3 Dana (Ky.) 195; Herrick v. Carpenter, 92 Mich. 440, 52 N. W. 747. If the will gives no direction to the executors to sell, but leaves the sale to the discretion of the executors, all must join. But see less strict rules in Miller v. Meetch, 8 Pa. 417; Meakings v. Cromwell, 2 Sandf. (N. Y.) 512; Taylor v. Morris, 1 N. Y. 341. Where all the executors must unite to make a valid conveyance, no valid contract to convey can be made by a part of them; Crowley v. Hicks, 72 Wis. 539, 40 N. W. 151. One executor cannot bind his co-executors by a confession of judgment without their consent; Karl v. Black's Ex'rs, 2 Pittsb. (Pa.) 19. On the death of one or more of several joint executors, their rights and powers survive to the survivor; Bac. Abr. Executor (D); Shepp. Touchst. 481.

ADMINISTRATOR. The appointment of an administrator is required in the case of one who dies intestate.

The appointment of the administrator must be lawfully made with his consent, and by an officer having jurisdiction. If an improper administrator be appointed, his acts are not void ab initio, but are good, usually, until his power is rescinded by authority. But they are void if a will had been made, and a competent executor appointed under it; Griffith v. Frazier, 8 Cra. (U. S.) 23, 3 L. Ed. 471; 1 Dane, Abr. 556-561; Beers v. Shannon, 73 N. Y. 292. But, in general, anybody may be administrator who can make a contract. An infant cannot; McGooch v. McGooch, 4 Mass. 348; a feme covert may at common law with her husband's permission; 4 Bac. Abr. 67; In re Gyger's Estate, 65 Pa. 311; English's Ex'r v. McNair's Adm'rs, 34 Ala. 40. Improvident persons, drunkards, gamblers, and the like are in some states disqualified by statute; McMahon v. Harrison, 6 N. Y. 443.

Failure to apply for administration within the time prescribed is a waiver by the party entitled to it under the statute; In re Sprague's Estate, 125 Mich. 357, 84 N. W. 293; and the right of a creditor to be appointed administrator as "particular creditor" is waived by his signing a petition for the appointment of another person; In re Sullivan's Estate, 25 Wash. 430, 65 Pac. 793.

The formalities and requisites in regard to valid appointments and rules, as to notice, defective proceedings, etc., are widely various in the different states. If letters appear to have been unduly granted, or to an unfaithful person, they will be revoked; Cole v. Dial, 12 Tex. 100; Jeroms v. Jeroms, 18 Barb. (N. Y.) 24; Marcy v. Marcy, 6 Metc. (Mass.) 370; as they may be where it appears that the estate has been wasted or mismanaged; Taylor v. Taylor, 154 Ill. App. 258.

The personal property of a decedent is appropriated to the payment of his debts, so far as required, and must be first resorted to by creditors. And, by statutes, courts may grant an administrator power to sell, lease, or mortgage land, when the personal estate of the deceased is not sufficient to pay his debts; Ferguson v. Broome, 1 Bradf. (N. Y.) 10; Farrington v. King, 1 Bradf. (N. Y.) 182; Renwick v. Renwick, 1 Bradf. (N. Y.) 234; Matheson's Heirs v. Hearin, 29 Ala. 210; In re Estate of Godfrey, 4 Mich. 308; Weed v. Edmonds, 4 Ind. 468; McCoy v. Morrow, 18 Ill. 519, 68 Am. Dec. 578. The court may direct lands to be sold in order to pay taxes levied against decedent's property; Sales v. Cosgrove (Ky.) 25 S. W. 594.

Persons holding certain relations to the intestate are considered as entitled to an appointment to administer the estate in established order of precedence; Bradley v. Bradley, 3 Redf. (N. Y.) 512.

Order of appointment.—First in order of appointment.—The husband has his wife's personal property, and takes out administration upon her estate. But in some states it is not granted to him unless he is to receive the property eventually. So the widow can ordinarily claim sole administration, though in the discretion of the judge it may be refused her, or she may be joined with another; 2 Bla. Com. 504; Stearns v. Fiske, 18 Pick. (Mass.) 26; Edelen v. Edelen, 10 Md. 52; Jones v. Ritter's Adm'r, 56 Ala. 270; Scanlon's Estate, 2 Pa. Dist. R. 742. The widow is entitled to preference though she was not living with her husband at the time; Ross' Estate, 11 Pa. Co. Ct. R. 601.

Second in order of appointment are the next of kin. Kinship is usually computed by the civil-law rule. The English order, which is adopted in some states, is, first, husband or wife; second, sons or daughters; third, grandsons or granddaughters; fourth, great-grandsons or great-granddaughters; fifth, father or mother; sixth, brothers or sisters; seventh, grandparents; eighth, uncles, aunts, nephews, nieces, etc.; 1 P. Will. 41; 2 Add. Eccl. 352; Succession of Sloane, 12 La. Ann. 610; 2 Kent 514; Davis v. Swearingen, 56 Ala. 539.

In New York the order is, the widow; the children; the father; the brothers; the sisters; the grandchildren; any distributee being next of kin; McCosker v. Golden, 1 Bradf. (N. Y.) 64; Peters v. Public Adm'r, 1 Bradf. (N. Y.) 200; In re Com'rs of Emigration, 1 Bradf. (N. Y.) 259.

When two or three are in the same degree, the probate judge may decide between them; and in England he is usually guided by the wishes of the majority of those interested. This discretion, however, is controlled by certain rules of priority as to persons of equal grades, which custom or statute has made. Males are generally preferred to females, though from no superior right. Elder sons are preferred to younger, usually, and even when no doctrine of primogeniture subsists. So solvent persons to insolvent, though the latter may administer. So business men to others. So unmarried to married women. So relations of the whole blood to those of the half blood. So distributees to all other kinsmen. As between kindred of equal degree a son will be preferred to a daughter; In re Hill's Estate, 55 N. J. Eq. 764, 37 Atl. 952; and although generally men of the same degree are preferred to women, a niece is preferred to a grand-nephew, being one degree nearer; In re Hawley's Estate, 37 Misc. 667, 76 N. Y. Supp. 461. The next of kin having the right of administration and not desiring to exercise it may nominate another in his stead, who shall be nominated if fit and suitable under the same rules which would be applied to the next of kin himself; In re Wooten's Estate, 114 Tenn. 289, 85 S. W. 1105; a non-resident may be an administrator; Fulgham v. Fulgham, 119 Ala. 403, 24 South. 851; Jones v. Smith, 120 Ga. 642, 48 S. E. 134.

The appointment in all cases is voidable when the court did not give a chance to all parties to come in and claim it.

Third in order of appointment.—Creditors (and, ordinarily, first the largest one) have the next right; 67 Law T. (N. S.) 503. A creditor has no right of administration if there are next of kin; In re Barr's Estate, 38 Misc. 355, 77 N. Y. Supp. 935; but if there be no widow and next of kin, a creditor is entitled to administration; Stebbins v. Palmer, 1 Pick. (Mass.) 71, 11 Am. Dec. 146. To prevent fraud, a creditor may be appointed when the appointee of the two preceding classes does not act within a reasonable time. A creditor may make oath of his account to prove his debt, but no rule establishes the size of the debt necessary to be proved before appointment; Arnold v. Sabin, 1 Cush. (Mass.) 525. After creditors, any suitable person may be appointed. Generally, consuls administer for deceased aliens; and this is sometimes provided by treaties, which see.

Where all the persons applying for appointment are equally qualified, and competent, the court must appoint the one having a prior right under the statute, and it has no discretion; In re Nickals, 21 Nev. 462, 34 Pac. 250.

Co-administrators, in general, must be joined in suing and in being sued; but, like executors, the acts of each, in the delivery, gift, sale, payment, possession, or release of the intestate's goods, are the acts of all, for they have joint power; Bac. Abr. Exec. C. 4; Com. Dig. Administration (B, 12); 1 Dane, Abr. 383; Saunders' Heirs v. Saunders' Ex'rs, 2 Litt. (Ky.) 315; Turner's Ex'rs v. Wilkins, 56 Ala. 173. If one is removed by death, or otherwise, the whole authority is vested in the survivor; Lewis' Ex'rs v. Brooks, 6 Yerg. (Tenn.) 167; Treadwell v. Cordis, 5 Gray (Mass.) 341; Shippen's Heirs v. Clapp, 29 Pa. 265. Each is liable only for the assets which have come into his hands, and is not liable for the torts of others except when guilty of negligence or connivance; 2 Ves. 267; Appeal of Jones, 8 Watts & S. (Pa.) 143, 42 Am. Dec. 282; Hall v. Carter, 8 Ga. 388; Smith's Ex'rs v. Chapman's Ex'r, 5 Conn. 19; Appeal of Hengst, 24 Pa. 413; Boudereau v. Montgomery, 4 Wash. C. C. 186, Fed. Cas. No. 1.694; Banks v. Wilkes, 3 Sandf. Ch. (N. Y.) 99; Atcheson v. Robertson, 3 Rich. Eq. (S. C.) 132, 55 Am. Dec. 634.

A note payable to two administrators for a debt due the estate may be transferred by the endorsement of one; Mackay v. St. Mary's Church, 15 R. I. 121, 23 Atl. 108, 2 Am. St. Rep. 881; a surviving administrator has full power to act alone; Saul v. Frame, 3 Tex. Civ. App. 596, 22 S. W. 984.

POWERS AND DUTIES OF AN EXECUTOR OR ADMINISTRATOR. The duty of an administrator is in general to do the things set forth in his bond; and for this he is generally obliged to give security; Baldwin v. Buford, 4 Yerg. (Tenn.) 20; Colwell v. Alger, 5 Gray (Mass.) 67.

The duties of an executor are the same, so far as concerns the collection of the assets and up to the point at which the estate is ready for distribution. It is then to be disposed of, if an administrator, according to law, and if an executor, pursuant to the will. See infra.

An executor or administrator, coming into possession of property by virtue of his position, is estopped, while in possession, from disputing the title of his intestate or testator; Wiseman v. Swain (Tex.) 114 S. W. 145.

Duties. They may be thus summarized. Those of an executor and administrator are alike except so far as those of the former spring from the will.

First. He must be responsible for the burial of the deceased in a manner suitable to the estate; 2 Bla. Com. 508. But no unreasonable expenses will be allowed, nor any unnecessary expenses if there is any danger of the estate proving insolvent; 2 C. & P. 207; Barclay's Estate, 2 W. N. C. (Pa.) 447; Succession of Hearing, 28 La. Ann. 149; Patterson v. Patterson, 59 N. Y. 582, 17 Am. Rep. 384. The estate and not the widow is liable for funeral expenses; Compton v. Lancaster (Ky.) 114 S. W. 260; but she may order the interment on a scale proportionate to the financial condition of the deceased and the estate will be liable; Wagoner Undertaking Co. v. Jones, 134 Mo. App. 101, 114 S. W. 1049. See FUNERAL EXPENSES.

Second. The executor must prove the will, and take out letters testamentary, and an administrator must procure his letters of administration; see supra. In England, there are two ways of proving a will,—in common form, and in form of law, or solemn form. In the former, the executor propounds the will,—i. e. presents it to the registrar, in the absence of all other interested parties. In the latter, all parties interested are summoned to show cause why probate should not be granted.

Third. Ordinarily, he must make an inventory of personal property at least, and, in some states, of real estate also; Griswold v. Chandler, 5 N. H. 492; Freeman v. Anderson, 11 Mass. 190; Bourne v. Stevenson, 58 Me. 490; Pursel v. Pursel, 14 N. J. Eq. 514. This duty rests on executors and not on adult legatees; Mills v. Smith, 65 Hun 619, 19 N. Y. Supp. 854.

Fourth. He must give notice of his appointment in the statute form, and should advertise for debts and credits; Gilbert's Adm'r v. Little's Adm'r, 2 Ohio St. 156; but the giving or not giving it does not affect the statute of limitations, nor does the failure to publish, affect a creditor who did not present his claim; McMillan v. Hayward, 94 Cal. 357, 29 Pac. 774.

Fifth. He must collect the goods and chattels, and the claims inventoried, with reasonable diligence. And he is liable for a loss by the insolvency of a debtor, if it results from his gross delay; Long's Estate, 6 Watts (Pa.) 46; Dean v. Rathbone's Adm'r, 15 Ala. 328.

Sixth. The personal effects he must deal with as the will directs, and the surplus must be turned into money and divided as if there were no will. The safest method of sale is a public auction.

Seventh. He must collect the outstanding claims and convert property into money; 2 Kent 415; Bailey v. Dilworth, 10 Smedes & M. (Miss.) 404, 48 Am. Dec. 760; 1 Mylne & C. 8; Evans v. Iglehart, 6 Gill & J. (Md.) 171; Bogart v. Van Velsor, 4 Edw. Ch. (N. Y.) 718; Moore v. Hamilton, 4 Fla. 112; Smyth v. Burns' Adm'rs, 25 Miss. 422; Weyer v. Bank, 57 Ind. 198; Rounfort v. McAlarney, 82 Pa. 193; but he cannot occupy or lease the lands of the estate, or receive rents or profits therefrom, as these descend to the heir; Estate of Merkel, 131 Pa. 584, 18 Atl. 931.

Eighth. He must keep the money of the estate safely, but not mixed with his own, or he may be charged interest on it. He is also charged when he has misemployed funds or let them lie idle, provided a want of ordinary prudence is proved against him; Hammond v. Hammond, 2 Bland, Ch. (Md.) 306; Sullivan v. Winthrop, 1 Sumn. 14, Fed. Cas. No. 13,600; Hite's Ex'r v. Hite's Legatees, 2 Rand. (Va.) 409; Lake v. Park, 19 N. J. L. 109; Darrell v. Eden, 3 Des. (S. C.) 241, 4 Am. Dec. 613; Appeal of Mayberry, 33 Pa. 258; In re Myers, 131 N. Y. 409, 30 N. E. 135. When a debtor is appointed executor of the creditor's will, equity will presume that the debt has been paid, and will treat it as an asset in the executor's hands; Crow v. Conant, 90 Mich. 247, 51 N. W. 450, 30 Am. St. Rep. 427. And generally, interest is to be charged on all money received by an executor and not applied to the use of the estate; McCaw v. Blewitt, Bailey, Eq. (S. C.) 98; Arnett v. Linney, 16 N. C. 369; Thompson v. Sanders' Heirs, 6 J. J. Marsh. (Ky.) 94; Lloyd's Estate, 82 Pa. 143. See Good's Estate, 150 Pa. 301, 24 Atl. 624. But an executor cannot be charged with interest on money allowed him for commission; Brinton's Estate, 10 Pa. 408; he is not chargeable with compound interest; Appeal of Light, 24 Pa. 180. Where investments have been made contrary to the requirements of the will, on personal security, they are at the executor's risk, and he must answer personally for any loss; Brewster v. Demarest, 48 N. J. Eq. 559, 23 Atl. 271. See INTEREST; INVESTMENTS.

Ninth. He must be at all times ready to account to the proper authorities, and must actually file an account at the end of the year generally prescribed by statute. The burden of proving items of a discharge in an accounting is upon the accountant; Brewster v. Demarest, 48 N. J. Eq. 559, 23 Atl. 271.

Tenth. He must pay the debts and legacies in the order required by law. There is no universal order of payment adopted in the United States; but debts of the last sickness and the funeral are preferred debts everywhere; Bacon, Abr. Ex. L. 2; 2 Kent 416; Lawson's Adm'rs v. Hansborough, 10 B. Monr. (Ky.) 147; Moye v. Albritton, 42 N. C. 62; Burruss v. Fisher, 23 Miss. 228; Johnston v. Morrow, 28 N. J. Eq. 327; Chapman v. Barnes, 29 Ill. App. 184.

Next to these, as a general rule, debts due the state or the United States are privileged. This priority of the United States only extends to the net proceeds of the property of the deceased, and therefore the necessary expenses of the administration are first paid. The act of burial and its accompaniments may be done by third parties, who have a preferred claim therefor, if reasonable; 3 Nev. & M. 512; 8 Ad. & E. 348; U. S. v. Eggleston, 4 Sawy. 199, Fed. Cas. No. 15,027. A claim for costs recovered by a creditor in an action to establish his claim is entitled to priority over the debts of the estate; In re Randell's Estate, 8 N. Y. Supp. 652. If the administrator pays debts of a lower degree first, he will be liable out of his own estate in case of a deficiency of assets; 2 Kent, 419. If he pays decedent's debts from his own funds he is entitled to repayment from the proceeds of lands originally liable for such debt; Doty v. Cox (Ky.) 22 S. W. 321.

A valid claim against an estate cannot be defeated on the ground that the estate had been settled before the claim was filed; Ury v. Bush, 85 Ia. 698, 52 N. W. 666.

Powers. The authority of the executor or administrator dates from the moment of death; Com. Dig. Administration (B, 10); 2 W. Bla. 692; 10 Ad. & El. 212. When once probate is granted, his acts are good until formally reversed by the court; 3 Term 125; Appeal of Peebles, 15 S. & R. (Pa.) 39. In some states he has power over both real and personal estate; Goodwin v. Jones, 3 Mass. 514, 3 Am. Dec. 173; Stearns v. Stearns, 1 Pick. (Mass.) 157. In the majority, he has power over the real estate only when expressly empowered by the will, or when the personal estate is insufficient; see infra.

His power is that of a mere trustee, who must apply the goods for such purposes as are sanctioned by law; 4 Term 645; 9 Co. 88; Co. 2d Inst. 236; Warfield v. Brand's Adm'r, 13 Bush (Ky.) 77; Ferris v. Van Vechten, 9 Hun (N. Y.) 12. The personal representative has the legal title to the choses in action of the deceased, and may transfer, discharge, or compound them as if he were the absolute owner; Curry v. Peebles, 83 Ala. 225, 3 South. 622; Kahl v. Schobler, 35 N. J. Eq. 461; and having at common law absolute power of disposal of the personal effects, he may compromise any claim; Olston v. R. Co., 52 Or. 343, 96 Pac. 1095, 97 Pac. 538, 20 L. R. A. (N. S.) 915. But where an executor pledged goods belonging to an estate, not holding himself out to act as executor, and the pledgee having no notice that he was such, no title passed and the pledgee was required to surrender the goods; [1912] 1 Ch. 451.

In order that he may be enabled to reduce them to possession the executor or administrator acquires a property in the assets of the intestate. As to what constitutes assets, see ASSSETS, and for a definition of "asset," within the administration laws, see Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Herb, 125 Tenn. 408, 143 S. W. 1138.

His right is not a personal one, but an incident to his office; Weeks v. Gibbs, 9 Mass. 74; Dawes v. Boylston, 9 Mass. 352, 6 Am. Dec. 72; Hillman v. Stephens, 16 N. Y. 278. He owns all his intestate's personal property from the day of death, and for any cause of action accruing after that day may sue in his own name; Patchen v. Wilson, 4 Hill (N. Y.) 57; Manwell v. Briggs, 17 Vt. 176; Cullen v. O'Hara, 4 Mich. 132; Bates v. Sabin, 64 Vt. 511, 24 Atl. 1013. This happens by relation to the day of death; Hutchins v. Bank, 12 Metc. (Mass.) 425; 7 Jur. 492; Shirley v. Healds, 34 N. H. 407. An administrator is a trustee, who holds the legal property but not the equitable. If he is a debtor to the estate, and denies the debt, he may be removed; but if he inventories it, it is cancelled by the giving of his bond; Stevens v. Gaylord, 11 Mass. 268.

He may declare, whenever the money when received will be assets; and he may sue on a judgment once obtained, as if the debt were his own. He may summon supposed debtors or holders of his intestate's property to account, and has the right to an investigation in equity. He may bind the estate by arbitration; Kendall v. Bates, 35 Me. 357; Appeal of Peters, 38 Pa. 239. He may assign notes, etc. See Ladd v. Wiggin, 35 N. H. 421, 69 Am. Dec. 551; Griswold v. Clark, 28 Vt. 661; Miller v. Henderson, 10 N. J. Eq. 320; Patterson v. Edwards, 29 Miss. 70; Thomas v. Reister, 3 Ind. 369; Walker v. Craig, 18 Ill. 116; Shoenberger's Ex'rs v. Sav. Inst., 28 Pa. 459; Morris' Ex'r v. Duke's Adm'r, 2 Patt. & H. (Va.) 462. Nearly all debts and actions survive to the administrator. But he has no power over the firm's assets, as to which his intestate was a partner, until the debts are paid; Thomson v. Thomson, 1 Bradf. (N. Y.) 24; he should merely refer in his inventory to the intestate's interest in the partnership without attempting to give the items of property, as he can have no control over it until the affairs of the partnership are settled; Loomis v. Armstrong, 63 Mich. 355, 29 N. W. 867.

At common law the executor or administrator has no power over real estate; Ryder v. Lyon, 85 Conn. 245, 82 Atl. 573; Wilson v. Hamilton, 9 S. & R. (Pa.) 431; Livingston v. Bird, 2 Root (Conn.) 438; Egerton's Adm'r v. Conklin, 25 Wend. (N. Y.) 224; Sorrell v. Ham, 9 Ga. 55; Smith v. Smith's Adm'r, 27 N. J. Eq. 445; Hankins v. Kimball, 57 Ind. 42; nor is the probate even admissible as evidence that the instrument is a will, or is an execution of a power to charge land; Wms. Ex. 562. By statute, in some states, the probate is made prima facie or conclusive evidence as to realty; Brown v. Wood, 17 Mass. 68; Fortune v. Buck, 23 Conn. 1; Darby v. Mayer, 10 Wheat. (U. S.) 470, 6 L. Ed. 367; Jones v. McKee, 3 Pa. 498, 45 Am. Dec. 661; Singleton v. Singleton, 8 B. Monr. (Ky.) 340; Lewis' Heirs v. His Executor, 5 La. 388. In some states the probate is made after the lapse of a certain time conclusive as to realty; Tarver v. Tarver, 9 Pet. (U. S.) 180, 9 L. Ed. 91; Appeal of Hegarty, 75 Pa. 512; Bailey v. Bailey, 8 Ohio, 246; Hardy v. Hardy's Heirs, 26 Ala. 524; Parker's Ex'rs v. Brown's Ex'rs, 6 Gratt. (Va.) 564; Kenyon v. Stewart, 44 Pa. 189. Land in England under the Land Title and Transfer Act of 1897 goes to the executor or administrator.

The administrator has no interest in the decedent's real estate unless the personal property is insufficient to pay debts and expenses; Pratt v. Millard, 154 Mich. 112, 117 N. W. 552; and an executor has, ordinarily, no power to sell land unless it is expressly given or necessarily implied in the will; Hanson v. Hanson, 149 Ia. 82, 127 N. W. 1032; but one to whom all the testator's residuary estate is devised, "in trust to receive, hold, invest and reinvest," has, by implication, power to sell real estate; Powell v. Wood, 149 N. C. 235, 62 S. E. 1071.

The will may direct the executor to sell lands to pay debts, but the money resulting is usually held to be equitable assets only; 9 B. & C. 489; Haskell v. House, 3 Brev. (S. C.) 242; Speed's Ex'r v. Nelson's Ex'r, 8 S. B. Monr. (Ky.) 499; Smith v. Knoebel, 82 Ill. 392; Lindley v. O'Reilly, 50 N. J. L. 636, 15 Atl. 379, 1 L. R. A. 79, 7 Am. St. Rep. 802; but the title and right of possession to the land remain in the heirs until the sale, and they are the proper parties to maintain ejectment; Coha v. Jemison, 68 Miss. 510, 10 South. 46; but see Smathers v. Moody, 112 N. C. 791, 17 S. E. 532; and to collect the rents; Appeal of Pennsylvania Co. for Insurance on Lives & Granting Annuities, 168 Pa. 431, 32 Atl. 25, 47 Am. St. Rep. 893. In equity, the testator's intention will be regarded as to whether the surplus fund, after a sale of the real estate and payment of debts, shall go to the heir; 1 Wms. Ex. 555, Am. note.

Chattels real pass to the executor or administrator, and such is the interest of the tenant of a farm from year to year; In re Ring's Estate, 132 Ia. 216, 109 N. W. 710. But the wife's chattels real, unless taken into possession by her husband during his lifetime, do not pass to his executor; 1 Wms. Ex. 579, n; In re Hind's Estate, 5 Whart. (Pa.) 138, 34 Am. Dec. 542; Pitts v. Curtis, 4 Ala. 350; Wade v. Grimes, 7 How. (Miss.) 425. The husband's act of possession must effect a complete alteration in the nature of the joint interest of husband and wife in her chattels real, or they will survive to her.

Chattels personal go to the executor; Harris v. Meyer, 3 Redf. (N. Y.) 450; Kahl v. Schober, 35 N. J. Eq. 461; Highnote v. White, 67 Ind. 596; Beecher v. Buckingham, 18 Conn. 110, 44 Am. Dec. 580. Such are emblems; Brooke, Abr. Emblements; Bevans v. Briscoe, 4 H. & J. (Md.) 139; Kesler v. Cornelison, 98 N. C. 383, 3 S. E. 839; but see Wright v. Watson, 96 Ala. 536, 11 South. 634. Heirlooms and fixtures go to the heir; and as to what are fixtures, see FIXTURES, and 1 Wms. Ex. 615; 2 Sm. L. Cas., 9th Am. ed. 1450; Crow. Ex. & Ad. 352. The widow's separate property and paraphernalia go to her. For elaborate collections of cases on the effect of nuptial contracts about property upon the executor's right, see 1 Wms. Ex. *660, Am. note 2; 2 id. 636, note 1; 1 Sm. Lead. Cas. 65. Donations mortis causa go to the donee at once, and not to the executor; Murdock v. McDowell, 1 Nott & McC. (S. C.) 237, 9 Am. Dec. 684; Michener v. Dale, 23 Pa. 59; Rockwood v. Wiggin, 16 Gray (Mass.) 403; Hatch v. Atkinson, 56 Me. 327, 96 Am. Dec. 464.

An executor may sell terms for years, and may even make a good title against a specific legatee, unless the sale be fraudulent. So he may underlet a term. He may indorse a promissory note or a bill payable to the testator or his order; Miller v. Helm, 2 Smedes & S. (Miss.) 687. The rule that executors have no power to confess judgment is not applicable to offers of judgments to firm creditors, by a firm composed of a surviving member and the executor of a deceased member, conducting the interests of the deceased therein; Columbus Watch Co. v. Hodenpyl, 61 Hun 557, 16 N. Y. Supp. 337; but they may compromise claims; Bacon v. Crandon, 15 Pick. (Mass.) 79; Chase v. Bradley, 26 Me. 531; or submit matters in dispute to arbitration; Wills v. Rand's Adm'rs, 41 Ala. 198; Wood v. Tunncliffe, 74 N. Y. 38. Without the sanction of the probate court, he has no power to bind the estate by contract, even for the necessities of infant devisees; Roscoe v. McDonald, 91 Mich. 270, 51 N. W. 939. His right to employ counsel depends upon the right to litigate; In re Riviere's Estate, 8 Cal. App. 773, 98 Pac. 46.

Wife's choses. In general, choses in action given to the wife either before or after marriage survive to her, provided her husband have not reduced them to possession before his death. A promissory note given to the wife during coverture comes under this rule in England; 12 M. & W. 355; 7 Q. B. 864; but not so in this country generally; Jones' Adm'r v. Warren's Adm'r, 4 Dana (Ky.) 333; Fourth Ecclesiastical Society in Middletown v. Mather, 15 Conn. 587; Savage v. King, 17 Me. 301. Mere intention to reduce choses into possession is not a reduction, nor is a mere appropriation of the fund; 5 Ves. 515; Petrie v. Clark, 11 S. & R. (Pa.) 377, 14 Am. Dec. 636; In re Hinds' Estate, 5 Whart. (Pa.) 138, 34 Am. Dec. 542; Wardlow v. Tray's Adm'r, 2 Hill, Eq. (S. C.) 644; Pitts v. Curtis, 4 Ala. 350; Curry v. Fulkinson's Ex'rs, 14 Ohio 100.

A statutory right of a husband to sue for a chose in action of his wife without administration is confined to the cases expressly declared by the statute and will not be extended by construction; Ferguson v. R. Co., 6 App. D. C. 525.

When the same persons are both executors and trustees, and as executors have paid the debts and passed their final account, they no longer hold the assets as executors but as trustees; [1913] A. C. 76. But where the same person was appointed executor and testamentary trustee, and he qualified as executor, but gave no undertaking as trustee and secured no order for his discharge as executor, and he had failed to file current accounts until compelled to render a final account, it was held that his relation as executor remained and that the court was empowered to direct the final accounting; In re Roach's Estate, 50 Or. 179, 92 Pac. 118.

SUITS BY OR AGAINST EXECUTORS AND ADMINISTRATORS. 1. By. In general, a right of action founded on a tort or malfeasance dies with the person. But personal actions founded upon any obligation, contract, debt, covenant, or other duty to be performed, survive, and the executor may maintain them; Cowp. 375; 1 Wms. Saund. 216, n. See Brannock v. Stocker, 76 Ind. 573; 5 B. & Ad. 78. By statutes in England and the United States this common-law right is much extended. An executor may now have trespass, trover, etc., for injuries done to the intestate during his lifetime. Except for slander, for libels, and for injuries inflicted on the person, executors may bring personal actions, and are liable in the same manner as the deceased would have been; 2 Brod. & B. 102; Van Rensselaer's Ex'rs v. Platner's Ex'rs, 2 Johns. Cas. (N. Y.) 17; Kennerly v. Wilson, 1 Md. 102; Tait v. Parkman, 15 Ala. 253; Martin v. Baker, 5 Blackf. (Ind.) 232; Rice's Heirs v. Spotswood's Heirs, 6 T. B. Monr. (Ky.) 40, 17 Am. Dec. 115; Backus' Adm'rs v. McCoy, 3 Ohio 211, 17 Am. Dec. 585; Hagarty v. Morris, 2 W. N. C. (Pa.) 154. See Coleman v. Woodworth, 28 Cal. 567; Manwell v. Briggs, 17 Vt. 176; Richardson v. R. Co., 98 Mass. 85. Should his death have been caused by the negligence of any one, they may bring an action for the benefit of the family in some states. Executors may also sue for stocks and annuities, as being personal property. A right of action for the breach of a parol contract for the sale of land survives to the executors; Irwin v. Hamilton, 6 S. & R. (Pa.) 208. So they may sue for an insurance policy.

The courts of New Jersey will enforce the Pennsylvania statute giving a right of action to the widow of one who dies of injuries inflicted by the wrongful act of another, that statute not being repugnant to the policy of the former state; but such an action cannot be brought in New Jersey by the personal representative of the deceased, as required by the laws of that state in similar cases; Lower v. Segal, 59 N. J. L. 66, 34 Atl. 945.

For actions accruing after the testator's death, the executor may sue either in his own name or as executor. This is true of actions for tort, as trespass or trover, actions on contract and on negotiable paper; 3 Nev. & M. 391; Patchen v. Wilson, 4 Hill (N. Y.) 57; Williams v. Moore, 9 Pick. (Mass.) 432; Hailley v. Wheeler, 49 N. C. 159. So he may bring replevin in his own name; Branch v. Branch, 6 Fla. 314; and so, in short, wherever the money, when recovered, will be assets, the executor may sue as executor; Flower's Ex'rs v. Garr, 20 Wend. (N. Y.) 668; Sheets v. Pabody, 6 Blackf. (Ind.) 120, 38 Am. Dec. 132; Biddle v. Wilkins, 1 Pet. (U. S.) 686, 7 L. Ed. 315. See Pope's Heirs v. Boyd's Adm'rs, 22 Ark. 535; Linsensbiger v. Gourley, 56 Pa. 166, 94 Am. Dec. 51. An executor cannot recover in ejectment without producing the will; Mays v. Killen, 56 Ga. 527; Horn v. Johnson, 87 Ga. 448, 13 S. E. 633.

2. Against. An action of trespass quare clausum fregit survives against the executor; McCallion v. Gegan, 9 Phila. (Pa.) 240. So also in causes of action wholly occurring after the testator's death, the executor is liable individually; Kerchner v. McRae, 80 N. C. 219. The actions of trespass and trover do not survive against the executors of deceased defendants. But the action of replevin does. The general rule is that causes of action ex contractu survive, while those ex delicto do not. "Executors and administrators are the representatives of the personal property of the deceased and not of his wrongs except so far as the tortious act complained of was beneficial to his estate;" 2 Kent 416.

As an administrator merely stands in place of the deceased, and does not represent creditors, he cannot file a bill to set aside a conveyance in fraud of creditors, the right to do so being in the creditors defrauded; Hoyt v. Northup, 256 Ill. 604, 100 N. E. 164.

The statute prescribes a fixed time for settling estates within which the executor or administrator cannot be sued, or compelled to file an account, unless he waives the right; Moses v. Jones, 2 Nott & McC. (S. C.) 259; Baggott v. Boulger, 2 Duer (N. Y.) 160. If he makes payments erroneously, supposing the estate to be solvent, he may recover them, it being a mistake of fact; Walker v. Bradley, 3 Pick. (Mass.) 261; Swope v. Chambers, 2 Gratt. (Va.) 319.

As to whether an executor or administrator is bound to plead the statute of limitation, the decisions are not uniform. That he is not bound to do so is held in Hodgdon v. White, 11 N. H. 208; Wiggins v. Lovering's Adm'r, 9 Mo. 262; Semmes v. Magruder, 10 Md. 242; Batson v. Murrell, 10 Humph. (Tenn.) 301, 51 Am. Dec. 707; Conway's Ex'r v. Reyburn's Ex'rs, 22 Ark. 290; Chambers v. Fennemore's Adm'r, 4 Harr. (Del.) 363; Appeal of Ritter, 23 Pa. 95; Barnawell v. Smith, 58 N. C. 168; Woods v. Irwin, 141 Pa. 278, 21 Atl. 603, 23 Am. St. Rep. 282; In re Baumhover's Estate, 151 Ia. 146, 130 N. W. 817; but a different rule applies when the personal estate is insufficient to pay the debts and a resort to the realty is necessary; Pollard v. Scears' Adm'r, 28 Ala. 484, 65 Am. Dec. 364. That it is his duty to plead the statute is held in Patterson v. Cobb, 4 Fla. 481 (and if he does not he is liable for a devastavit); Tunstall v. Pollard's Adm'r, 11

Leigh (Va.) 1; Matter of Milligan's Estate, 112 App. Div. 373, 98 N. Y. Supp. 480. But the executor was held bound by a waiver of the statute contained in the will; Glassell v. Glassell 147 Cal. 510, 82 Pac. 42. If one co-administrator declines to plead it, the other may do so; Scull v. Wallace's Ex'rs, 15 S. & R. (Pa.) 231, and if the administrator does not plead it, the next of kin may do so; In re Clarke's Estate, 1 Phila. (Pa.) 356; or a creditor interested in the estate; Smith v. Pattie, 81 Va. 654. The bar of the statute having attached to a claim against an estate, it cannot be waived by an acknowledgment of the debt by the personal representative; Lee's Adm'r v. Downey, 68 Ala. 98; Vrooman v. Li Po Tai, 113 Cal. 302, 45 Pac. 470; Burnett v. Noble, 5 Redf. Sur. (N. Y.) 69; Seig v. Acord's Ex'r, 21 Gratt. (Va.) 365, 8 Am. Rep. 605. And the executor or administrator cannot waive the statute as against a claim in his own favor; Grinnell v. Baxter, 17 Pick. (Mass.) 383; In re Brown's Estate, 77 Misc. 507, 137 N. Y. Supp. 978; Clayton v. Dinwoodey, 33 Utah 251, 93 Pac. 723, 14 Ann. Cas. 926; or the next of kin may set in up; Wilcox v. Smith, 26 Barb. (N. Y.) 316. He is, in some states, chargeable with interest, first, when he receives it upon assets put out at interest; second, when he uses them himself; third, when he has large sums paid him which he ought to have put out at interest; Griswold v. Chandler, 5 N. H. 497; Wyman v. Hubbard, 13 Mass. 232; but he is not liable where he has funds which he holds pending legal proceedings to determine the rights of the remaindermen; In re Howard's Estate, 3 Misc. 170, 23 N. Y. Supp. 836. In some cases of need, as to relieve an estate from sale by a mortgagee, he may lend the estate money and charge interest thereon; Jennison v. Hapgood, 10 Pick. (Mass.) 77. The widow's support is usually decreed by the judge. But the administrator is not liable for the education of infant children, or for mourning-apparel for relatives and friends of the deceased; Johnson v. Corbett, 11 Paige Ch. (N. Y.) 265; Appeal of Flinham, 11 S. & R. (Pa.) 16.

The liability is in general measured by the amount of assets. On his contracts he may render himself liable personally, or as administrator merely, according to the terms of the contract which he makes; 7 B. & C. 450; Murrell v. Wright, 78 Tex. 519, 15 S. W. 156. But to make him liable personally for contracts about the estate, a valid consideration must be shown; 3 Sim. 543; 2 Brod. & B. 460. And, in general, assets or forbearance will form the only consideration; 5 My. & C. 71; Bank of Troy v. Topping & Holme, 13 Wend. (N. Y.) 557. But a bond of itself imports consideration; and hence a bond given by administrators to submit to arbitration is binding upon them personally; Ten Eyck v. Vanderpoel, 8 Johns. (N. Y.) 120; Robinson v. Lane, 14 Smedes & M. (Miss.)

161. He may compromise a suit brought for the widow and next of kin, for the death of the intestate; Washington v. R. Co., 136 Ill. 49, 26 N. E. 653. In general, he is not liable when he has acted in good faith, and with that degree of caution which prudent men exhibit in the conduct of their own affairs; In re Bosio's Estate, 2 Ashm. (Pa.) 437.

An administrator cannot ratify decedent's void transactions, nor make any contracts for him; Smith v. Brennan, 62 Mich. 349, 28 N. W. 892, 4 Am. St. Rep. 867.

An administrator is liable for torts and for gross negligence in managing his intestate's property. This species of misconduct is called in law a devastavit; Cartwright v. Cartwright, 4 Hayn. (Tenn.) 134; Jeffreys v. Yarborough, 16 N. C. 516; In re Holladay's Estate, 18 Or. 168, 22 Pac. 750. Such is negligence in collecting notes or debts; In re Merkel's Estate, 131 Pa. 584, 18 Atl. 931; an unnecessary sale of property at a discount; Pinckard v. Woods, 8 Gratt. (Va.) 140; paying undue funeral expenses; 1 B. & Ad. 260; and the like mismanagements. So he may be liable for not laying out assets for the benefit of the estate, or for turning the money to his own profit or advantage. In such cases he is answerable for both principal and interest. In England he may be charged with increased interest for money withheld by fraud; 2 Cox, Ch. 113; 4 Ves. 620; and he is sometimes made chargeable with compound interest in this country; Jennison v. Hapgood, 10 Pick. (Mass.) 77. Finally, a refusal to account for funds, or an unreasonable delay in accounting, raises a presumption of a wrongful use of them; Johnson v. Beauchamp, 5 Dana (Ky.) 70; Evans v. Iglehart, 6 Gill & J. (Md.) 186. If he receives rents and profits of land for a long period without accounting, he is liable to the heirs for the reasonable rental value of the land for the entire period; Shuffler v. Turner, 111 N. C. 297, 16 S. E. 417.

Where real estate is sold by executors to a co-executor, the sale is voidable at the instance of those interested in the estate; In re Richard's Estate, 154 Cal. 478, 98 Pac. 528. One executor may sue another where questions arise between the latter and the estate, jeopardizing the rights of parties in interest; Monmouth Inv. Co. v. Means, 151 Fed. 159, 80 C. C. A. 527.

After the debts have been paid and the final account passed, and a legacy ordered paid, an action will lie against the executor to recover it; Anderson v. Patty, 168 Ill. App. 151.

An insolvent bank cannot sue an executor for an assessment on the stock of his decedent, which was levied after a final decree for the distribution of the estate; Union Savings Bank of San Jose v. De Laveaga, 150 Cal. 395, 89 Pac. 84.

DISTRIBUTION. The distribution or disposal of the estate by an executor is as directed by the will. The administrator must distribute the residue among those entitled to it, under direction of the court and according to law; Lamb v. Carroll, 28 N. C. 4; Appeal of Stewart, 86 Pa. 149; Appeal of Kline, 86 Pa. 363; Marshall v. Hitchcock, 3 Redf. (N. Y.) 461. But if he recognizes a claim as proper to be paid, and subsequently finds that there is no legal foundation for it, it is not binding upon the estate; Webster v. Le Compte, 74 Md. 249, 22 Atl. 232. And even after action brought against him by a creditor he may apply the assets in payment of the debt of another creditor; 24 Q. B. Div. 364.

The great rule is, that personal property is regulated by the law of the domicile. The rights of the distributees vest as soon as the intestate dies, but cannot be sued for till the lapse of the statute period of distribution. See 118th Novel of Justinian, Cooper's trans. 393: DISTRIBUTION; CONFLICT OF LAWS.

Compensation. An executor cannot pay himself. His compensation must be ordered by the court; Collins v. Tilton, 58 Ind. 374. Faithful service by an executor is a condition to the right of commissions. Misappropriation of funds may forfeit the right; In re Clauser's Estate, 84 Pa. 51.

Commissions are not allowed on a legacy given in trust to an executor; Westerfield v. Westerfield, 1 Bradf. Surr. (N. Y.) 198; Ames v. Downing, 1 Bradf. Surr. (N. Y.) 321. Reasonable expenses are always allowed an executor; Thacher v. Dunham, 5 Gray (Mass.) 26; Wilson v. Bates, 28 Vt. 765; Ord v. Little, 3 Cal. 287; Noel v. Harvey, 29 Miss. 72. When one of two co-executors has done nothing, he should get no commission; White v. Bullock, 20 Barb. (N. Y.) 91. Where a stranger was appointed administrator, upon his statement that his service would be gratuitous, he should not be allowed commissions; Hilton v. Hilton's Adm'r, 109 S. W. 905, 33 Ky. L. Rep. 276. In England, executors cannot charge for personal trouble or loss of time, and can only be paid for reasonable expenses.

An administrator receives no compensation in England; 3 Mer. 24; but in this country he is paid in proportion to his services, and all reasonable expenses are allowed him; Appeal of Culbertson, 84 Pa. 303. Additional allowance may be made where extraordinary services have been rendered; In re Moore's Estate, 96 Cal. 522, 31 Pac. 584. An administrator cannot pay himself. His compensation must be ordered by the court; Collins v. Tilton, 58 Ind. 374. If too small a compensation be awarded him, he may appeal; Jewett v. Woodward, 1 Edw. Ch. (N. Y.) 195; Edelen v. Edelen, 11 Md. 415; Ord v. Little, 3 Cal. 287; Andrew's Ex'rs v. Andrew's Adm'rs, 7 Ohio St. 143; Fowler v. Lockwood, 3 Redf. (N. Y.) 465. Allowance by a probate court cannot be impeached in a court of equity unless fraud or deception has been practiced; Smith v. Worthington, 53 Fed. 977, 4 C. C. A. 130. He cannot buy the estate, or any part of it, when sold by a common auctioneer to pay debts; but he may when the auctioneer is a state officer, and the sale public and bona fide; Toler's Adm'r v. Toler, 2 Patt. & H. (Va.) 71; Weeks v. Gibbs, 9 Mass. 75; Babbitt v. Doe, 4 Ind. 355; Barrington v. Alexander, 6 Ohio St. 189.

Federal Jurisdiction. Matters of pure probate are not within the jurisdictions of courts of the United States; but where a state law gives citizens of the state, in an action or suit inter partes, the right to question the probate of a will, federal courts, at the suit of citizens of other states or aliens will enforce such remedies; Farrell v. O'Brien, 199 U. S. 89, 25 Sup. Ct. 727, 50 L. Ed. 101.

The possession of a state court which will exclude the exercise of power by the federal court, and vice versa, must be the possession of some thing, corporeal or incorporeal, which has been taken under the dominion of the court. A controversy or inquiry is not such a thing, and the pendency of a suit or proceeding in one court, involving a question, controversy, or inquiry, is no bar to the exercise of jurisdiction in the determination of the same question, etc., in the other; Ball v. Tompkins, 41 Fed. 486; American Baptist Home Mission Society v. Stewart, 192 Fed. 976; Byers v. McAuley, 149 U. S. 608, 13 Sup. Ct. 906, 37 L. Ed. 867.

The right to administer property left by a foreigner within the jurisdiction of a state is primarily committed to state law and the public administrator is entitled to administer the estate of an Italian subject dying and leaving an estate in California, in preference to the Italian Consul General, who claimed the right under treaty; In re Ghio's Estate, 157 Cal. 552, 108 Pac. 516, 37 L. R. A. (N. S.) 549, 137 Am. St. Rep. 145, affirmed in Rocca v. Thompson, 223 U. S. 317, 32 Sup. Ct. 207, 56 L. Ed. 453, where the question whether it is within the treaty-making power to provide for administration upon the estates of foreigners dying within a state, by the consul of their country, was suggested but not discussed or decided. See TREATY.

L. H.* 736 (9 Harv. L. R. 42); Caillemer, The Executor in England and on the Continent, id. 746.

EXECUTORY. Performing official duties; contingent; also, personal estate of a deceased; whatever may be executed,—as, an executory sentence or judgment.

EXECUTORY CONSIDERATION. Something which is to be done after the promise is made, for which it is the legal equivalent. See CONSIDERATION.

EXECUTORY CONTRACT. One in which some future act is to be done: as, where an agreement is made to build a house in six months, or to do any act at a future day. See CONTRACT; PERFORMANCE.

An agreement to sell and convey land, which is not a conveyance, operating as a present transfer of legal estate and seisin, is wholly executory, though it contains the words "grant, bargain and sell;" and produces no effect upon the estates and titles of the parties; and creates no lien or charge on the land itself; Simpson v. Breckenridge, 32 Pa. 257; Stewart's Adm'rs v. Lang, 37 Pa. 201, 78 Am. Dec. 414; Watson v. Coast, 35 W. Va. 463, 14 S. E. 249.

EXECUTORY DEVISE. Such a limitation of a future estate in lands or chattels as the law admits in case of a will, though contrary to the rules of limitation in conveyances at common law.

It is a limitation by will of a future estate or interest in lands or chattels. In re Brown's Estate, 38 Pa. 294.

By the executory devise no estate vests at the death of the deviser or testator, but only on the future contingency. It is only an indulgence to the last will and testament which is supposed to be made by one inops consilii. When the limitation by devise is such that the future interest falls within the rules of contingent remainders, it is a contingent remainder, and not an executory devise. 4 Kent 257; 3 Term 763.

If a particular estate of freehold be first devised, capable in its own nature of supporting a remainder, followed by a limitation which is not immediately connected with, or does not immediately commence from, the expiration of the particular estate of freehold, the latter limitation cannot take effect as a remainder, but may operate as an executory devise: e. g., if land be devised to A for life, and after his decease to B in fee, B takes a (vested) remainder, because his estate is immediately connected with, and commences on, the limitation of A's estate. If land be limited to A for life, and one year after his decease to B in fee, the limitation to B is not such a one as will be a remainder, but may operate as an executory devise. Fearne, Cont. Rem. 399. If land be limited to A for life, and after his decease to B and his heirs, with a proviso that if B survive A and die, without issue of his body living at his decease; then to C and his heirs, the limitation to B, etc., prevents an immediate connection of the estate limited to C with the life estate of A, and prevents its commencement on the death of A. It must operate, if at all, as an executory devise; Butler's note (c) to Fearne, Cont. Rem. 397. If a chattel interest be bequeathed for life, with remainder over, this latter disposition cannot take effect as a remainder, but may as an executory devise, or more properly bequest; id. 407.

An executory devise differs from a remainder in three very material respects:

First. It needs no particular estate to support it. Second. By it a fee-simple or other less estate may be limited on a fee-simple. Third. By it a remainder may be limited of a chattel interest after a particular estate for life created in the same.

The first is a case of freehold commencing in futuro. A makes a devise of a future estate on a certain contingency, and till the contingency happens does not dispose of the fee-simple, but leaves it to descend to his heirs at law. 1 T. Raym. 82; 1 Salk. 226; 1 Lutw. 798.

The second case is a fee upon a fee. A devises to A and his heirs forever, which is a fee-simple, and then, in case A dies, before he is twenty-one years of age, to B and his heirs. Cro. Jac. 590; 10 Mod. 420.

The third case: a limitation in a term of years after a life estate. A grants a term of one thousand years to B for life, remainder to C. The common law regards the term for years as swallowed up in the grant for life, which, being a freehold, is a greater estate, and the grantee of such a term for life could alien the whole. A similar limitation in a will may take effect, however, as an executory bequest; Scott v. Price, 2 S. & R. (Pa.) 69, 7 Am. Dec. 629; Logan v. Ladson's Ex'r, 1 Des. (S. C.) 271; Clifton v. Haig's Ex'rs, 4 Des. (S. C.) 330.

It is not a mere possibility, but a substantial interest, and in respect to its transmissibility stands on the same footing with a contingent remainder; Medley v. Medley, 81 Va. 268.

In order to prevent perpetuities, the rule has been adopted that executory interests must be so limited that from the time of their limitation they will necessarily vest in right (not necessarily in possession) at a period not exceeding that occupied by the life or lives of a person or persons then living, or in ventre matris, and the minority of any person or persons born or in ventre matris prior to the decease of such first named person or persons, or at a period not exceeding that occupied by the life or lives of such first named person or persons, and an absolute term of twenty-one years afterwards, or within, or at the expiration of an absolute term of twenty-one years without reference to any life. For example, lands are devised to such unborn son of a feme covert as shall first reach the age of twenty-one years. The utmost length of time that can happen before the estate can vest is the life of the mother and the subsequent infancy of her son. Such an executory devise is therefore good. If, however, such limitation had been to the first unborn son who shall attain the age of twenty-five years, the rule against perpetuities would be infringed and the limitations bad; Smith, Ex. Int. 391; 2 Bla. Com. 174.

An executory devise limited after an indefinite failure of issue is bad as leading to a perpetuity; 4 Kent 273; and so of an executory bequest, but the courts are in the latter case much less apt to construe limitations as contemplating a definite failure of issue; 4 Kent 281; 1 P. Wms. 663; Gray, Perpet. 212.

An executory devise is generally indestructible by any alteration in the estate out of or after which it is limited. But if it is limited on an estate tail the tenant in tail can bar it, as well as the entail, by common recovery or by deed enrolled, etc., where such deed is by statute given the force and effect of a common recovery; Butler's note to Fearne, Cont. Rem. 562; Wms. R. P. 319.

EXECUTORY ESTATES. Interests which depend for their enjoyment upon some subsequent event or contingency. Such estate may be an executory devise, or an executory remainder, which is the same as a contingent remainder, because no present interest passes.

EXECUTORY PROCESS (Via Executoria). In Louisiana, a process which can be resorted to in two cases, namely: 1. When the right of the creditor arises from an act importing confession of judgment, and which contains a privilege or mortgage in his favor. 2. When the creditor demands the execution of a judgment which has been rendered by a tribunal different from that within whose jurisdiction the execution is sought. Code of Practice, art. 732.

EXECUTORY TRUSTS. A trust is called executory when some further act is requisite to be done by the author of the trust to give it its full effect. See Bisph. Eq. 31; Léwin, Tr. 144.

The distinction between executed and executory trusts is well settled; Dennison v. Goehring, 7 Pa. 177, 47 Am. Dec. 505; though once doubted in England; 1 Ves. 142; but see 2 Ves. 323. The test is said to be: Has the testator been what is called, and very properly called, his own conveyancer? Has he left it to the court to make out from general expressions what his intention is? or has he so defined that intention that you have nothing to do but to take the limitations he has given to you, and to convert them into legal estates? per Lord St. Leonards, Ld. Ch., in 4 H. L. Cas. 210; see Tillingham v. Coggeshall, 7 R. I. 383; Bisph. Eq. 86.

In the case of articles made in contemplation of marriage, and which are, therefore, preparatory to a settlement, so in the case of a will directory of a future conveyance to be made or executed by the trustees named therein, it is evident that something remains to be done. The trusts are said to be executory, because they require an ulterior act to raise and perfect them: i. e. the actual settlement is to be made or the conveyance to be executed. They are instructions, rather than complete instruments, in themselves.

The court of chancery will, in promotion of the supposed views of the parties or the testator and to support their manifest intention, give to the words a more enlarged and liberal construction than in the case of legal limitations or trusts executed; 1 Fonbl. Eq. b. 1; White, Lead. Cas. 18. Where a voluntary trust is executory and not executed, if it could not be enforced at law because it is a defective conveyance, it is not helped in favor of a volunteer in a court of equity; Minturn v. Seymour, 4 Johns. Ch. (N. Y.) 498, 500; Acker v. Phoenix, 4 Paige, Ch. (N. Y.) 305; Dawson v. Dawson, 16 N. C. 93, 18 Am. Dec. 573. But where the trust, though voluntary, has been executed in part, it will be sustained or enforced in equity; Bunn v. Winthrop, 1 Johns. Ch. (N. Y.) 329; Dennison v. Goehring, 7 Pa. 175, 178, 47 Am. Dec. 505. White, Lead. Cas. 176; 6 Ves. 656; 18 id. 140; 1 Ken 551; 3 Beav. 238.

EXECUTORY USES. Springing uses which confer a legal title corresponding to an executory devise.

Thus, when a limitation to the use of A in fee is defeasible by a limitation to the use of B to arise at a future period, contingency, or event, these contingent or springing uses differ herein from an executory devise: there must be a person seized to such uses at the time the contingency happens, else they can never be executed by the statute. Therefore, if the estate of the feoffee to such use be destroyed by alienation or otherwise, before the contingency arises, the use is destroyed forever; 1 Co. 134, 138; Cro. Eliz. 439; whereas by an executory devise the freehold itself is transferred to the future devisee. In both cases, a fee may be limited after a fee; 10 Mod. 423.

EXECUTRIX. A woman who has been appointed by will to execute such will or testament. See EXECUTOR.

EXECUTRY. In Scotch Law. The movable estate of a person dying, which goes to his nearest of kin. So called as falling under the distribution of an executor. Bell, Dict.

EXEMPLARY DAMAGES. See MEASURE OF DAMAGES.

EXEMPLIFICATION. A perfect copy of a record or office-book lawfully kept, so far as relates to the matter in question. See, generally, 1 Stark. Ev. 151; 1 Phill. Ev. 307; Mills v. Duryee, 7 Cra. (U. S.) 481, 3 L. Ed. 411; Drummond v. Magruder, 9 Cra. (U. S.) 122, 3 L. Ed. 677; Hampton v. McConnel, 3 Wheat. (U. S.) 234, 4 L. Ed. 378; Baker v. Field, 2 Yeates (Pa.) 532; Ellmore v. Mills, 2 N. C. 359; Smith v. Blagge, 1 Johns. Cas. (N. Y.) 238; Schaben v. U. S., 6 Ct. Cl. 230; Thomas v. Stewart, 92 Ind. 246; Cox v. Jones, 52 Ga. 438. As to the mode of authenticating records of other states, see FOREIGN JUDGMENTS.

EXEMPLUM (Lat.). In Civil Law. A copy. A written authorized copy. Used also in the modern sense of example: ad exemplum constituti singulares non trahi (exceptional things must not be taken for examples). Calv. Lex. Exempli gratia, for the sake of example. Abb. e. g.

EXEMPTION. The right given by law to a debtor to retain a portion of his property without its being liable to execution at the suit of a creditor, or to a distress for rent.

In general, the sheriff may seize and sell all the property of a defendant which he can find, except such as is exempted by the common law or by statute. The common law was very niggardly of these exceptions: it allowed only the necessary wearing apparel; and it was once holden that if a defendant had two gowns the sheriff might sell one of them; Comb. 356. But in modern times, with perhaps a prodigal liberality, a considerable amount of property, both real and personal, is exempted from execution by the statutes of the several states: 19 Am. L. Reg. 1; 4 So. L. Rev. N. S. 1; In re Radway, 3 Hughes 609, Fed. Cas. No. 11523; Carlton v. Watts, 82 N. C. 212; Mapp v. Long, 62 Ga. 568; Singletary v. Singletary, 31 La. Ann. 374; Rutledge v. Rutledge, 8 Sax. (Tenn.) 33; Creath v. Dale, 69 Mo. 41; Vanderhorst v. Bacon, 38 Mich. 669, 31 Am. Rep. 328; Murphy v. Harries, 77 Cal. 194, 19 Pac. 377; In re Robb, 99 Cal. 202, 33 Pac. 890, 37 Am. St. Rep. 48; Carter v. Davis, 6 Wash. 327, 33 Pac. 833; Bean v. Ins. Co., 54 Minn. 366, 56 N. W. 127; Hamberger v. Marcus, 157 Pa. 133, 27 Atl. 681, 37 Am. St. Rep. 719; and there is now hardly a state or nation which has not by statute made certain exemptions designed as a protection for the family; Woodward v. Murray, 18 Johns. (N. Y.) 403; and such statutes are to be liberally construed; Butner v. Bowser, 104 Ind. 259, 3 N. E. 889; Kuntz v. Kinney, 33 Wis. 510; Good v. Fogg, 61 Ill. 449, 14 Am. Rep. 71; Carty v. Drew, 46 Vt. 346; Allison v. Brookshire, 38 Tex. 199; Seeley v. Gwillim, 40 Conn. 106. Some of the exemptions are the following: household furniture; Towns v. Pratt, 33 N. H. 345, 66 Am. Dec. 726; Tanner v. Billings, 18 Wis. 163, 86 Am. Dec. 755; Dunlap v. Edgerton, 30 Vt. 224; Haswell v. Parsons, 15 Cal. 266, 76 Am. Dec. 480; Heidenheimer v. Blumenkron, 56 Tex. 308; tools of trade; Atwood v. De Forest, 19 Conn. 513; Enscoe v. Dunn, 44 Conn. 93, 26 Am. Rep. 430; Boston Belting Co. v. Ivens & Co., 28 La. Ann. 695; Wicker v. Comstock, 52 Wis. 315, 9 N. W. 25; work horses; Tishomingo Sav. Inst. v. Young, 87 Miss. 473, 40 South. 9, 3 L. R. A. (N. S.) 693, 112 Am. St. Rep. 454, 6 Ann. Cas. 776; Forsyth v. Bower, 54 Cal. 639; Jaquith v. Scott, 63 N. H. 5, 56 Am. Rep. 476; Steele v. Lyford, 59 Vt. 230, 8 Atl. 736 (but this will not include high bred horses used for pleasure and to drive to and from business; Tishomingo Sav. Inst. v. Young, 87 Miss. 473, 40 South. 9, 3 L. R. A. [N. S.] 693, 112 Am. St. Rep. 454, 6 Ann. Cas. 776); the interest of a legatee in lands, until the court has held it to be a charge on such, although the legacy is given with a view that it shall be such a charge; Hiscock v. Fulton, 63 Hun 624, 17 N. Y. Supp. 408; curtesy initiate; Bruce v. Nicholson, 109 N. C. 202, 13 S. E. 790, 26 Am. St. Rep. 562; property held in trust; Mosher v. Neff, 33 Neb. 770, 51 N. W. 138; the bridge of a public corporation; Overton Bridge Co. v. Means, 33 Neb. 857, 51 N. W. 240, 29 Am. St. Rep. 514; blackberries while growing; Sparrow v. Pond, 49 Minn. 412, 52 N. W. 36, 16 L. R. A. 103, 32 Am. St. Rep. 571; trade-mark, apart from the articles it has served to identify; Prince Mfg. Co. v. Paint Co., 20 N. Y. Supp. 462; a vendor's lien reserved for the purchase price of lands conveyed; Willis & Bro. v. Somerville, 3 Tex. Civ. App. 509, 22 S. W. 781; the interest of a cestui que trust under a trust for maintenance and support; Brooks v. Reynolds, 59 Fed. 923, 8 C. C. A. 370; the interest of the grantor in property transferred in fraud of creditors; Stonebridge v. Perkins, 141 N. Y. 1, 35 N. E. 980. State exemption laws are inapplicable to debts due from a citizen to the United States; U. S. v. Howell, 9 Fed. 674. See Fink v. O'Neill, 100 U. S. 280, 1 Sup. Ct. 325, 27 L. Ed. 196.

Exemption laws are not a part of the contract; they are part of the remedy and subject to the law of the forum; Chicago, R. I. & P. Ry. Co. v. Sturm, 174 U. S. 710, 17 Sup. Ct. 797, 43 L. Ed. 1144; Mineral Point R. Co. v. Barron, 83 Ill. 365; Carson v. Ry. Co., 88 Tenn. 646, 13 S. W. 588, 8 L. R. A. 412, 17 Am. St. Rep. 921; Conley v. Chilcote, 25 Ohio St. 320; Albrecht v. Treitschke, 17 Neb. 205, 22 N. W. 418; Moore v. R. Co., 43 Ia. 385; Broadstreet v. Clark, 65 Ia. 670, 22 N. W. 919; Stevens v. Brown, 20 W. Va. 450. That a debt is exempt from judicial process in the state where it was created will not make it exempt in another jurisdiction. The exemption does not follow the debt as an incident thereto; Chicago, R. I. & P. Ry. Co. v. Sturm, 174 U. S. 710, 17 Sup. Ct. 797, 43 L. Ed. 1144.

See, generally, BANKRUPTCY; DISTRESS; EXECUTION; HOMESTEAD; FAMILY; TOOLS; TAX.

EXEMPTS. Persons who are not bound by law, but excused from the performance of duties imposed upon others.

By act of congress Feb. 24, 1864, it was enacted that such persons as were rejected as physically or mentally unfit for the service, all persons actually in the military or naval service of the United States at the time of the draft, and all persons who had served in the military or naval service two years during the then war and been honorably discharged therefrom, and no others, were exempt from enrollment and draft under said act, and act of congress, March 3, 1863.

EXEQUATUR (Lat.). In French Law. A Latin word which was, in the ancient practice, placed at the bottom of a judgment emanating from another tribunal, and was a permission and authority to the officer to execute it within the jurisdiction of the judge who put it below the judgment.

We have something of the same kind in our practice. When a warrant for the arrest of a criminal is issued by a justice of the peace of one county, and he files into another, a justice of the latter county may indorse the warrant, and then the ministerial officer may execute it in such county. This is called backing a warrant.

In International Law. An official recognition of a consul or commercial agent, made by the foreign department of the state to which he is accredited, authorizing him to exercise his power. He cannot act without it, and it may be refused or revoked at the pleasure of the same government. 3 Chit. Com. Law 56; 3 M. & S. 290; 5 Pardessus, n. 1445; Twiss, Law of Nations; 1 Halleck, Int. Law 351.

EXERCITOR MARIS (Lat.). In Civil Law. One who fits out and equips a vessel, whether he be the absolute or qualified owner, or even a mere agent. Emerigon, Mar. Loans, c. 1, s. 1. We call him exercitor to whom all the returns come. Dig. 14. 1. 1. 15; 14. 1. 7; 3 Kent 161; Molloy, de Jur. Mar. 243.

The managing owner, or ship's husband. These are the terms in use in English and American laws, to denote the same as exercitor maris. See SHIP'S HUSBAND.

EXERCITORIA ACTIO (Lat.). In Civil Law. An action against a managing owner (exercitor maris), founded on acts of the master. 3 Kent 161; Vicat, Voc. Jur.

EXFESTUCARE (Lat.). To abdicate; to resign by passing over a staff. Du Cange. To deprive one's self of the possession of lands, honors, or dignities, which was formerly accomplished by the delivery of a staff or rod. Said to be the origin of the custom of surrender as practised in England formerly in courts baron. Spelman, Gloss. See also, Vicat, Voc. Jur.; Calvinus, Lex.

EXHÆREDATIO (Lat.). In Civil Law. A disinheriting. The act by which a forced heir is deprived of his legitimate or legal portion. In common law, a disherison. Occurring in the phrase, in Latin pleadings, ad exhæredationem (to the disherison), in case of abatement.

EXHÆRES (Lat.). In Civil Law. One disinherited. Vicat, Voc. Jur.; Du Cange.

EXHIBERE (Lat.). To present a thing corporeally, so that it may be handled. Vicat, Voc. Jur. To appear personally to conduct the defence of an action at law.

EXHIBIT. To produce a thing publicly, so that it may be taken possession of and seized. Dig. 10. 4. 2.

To file of record. Thus, it is the practice in England in personal actions, when an officer or prisoner of the king's bench is defendant, to proceed against such defendant in the court in which he is an officer, by exhibiting, that is, filings, a bill against him. Steph. Pl. 52, n. (1); 2 Sellon, Pr. 74; Newell v. State, 2 Conn. 38.

A paper or writing proved on motion or other occasion.

A supplemental paper referred to in the principal instrument, identified in some particular manner, as by capital letter, and generally attached to the principal instrument. 1 Stra. 674; 2 P. Wms. 410; Gresl. Eq. Ev. 98.

A paper referred to in, and filed with the bill, answer, or petition in a suit in equity, or with a deposition. Brown v. Redwyne, 16 Ga. 68.

In the absence of a positive statutory provision, exhibits properly identified need not be attached to the deposition in connection with which they are offered in evidence; Toby v. R. Co., 98 Cal. 490, 33 Pac. 550. It has been held that the exhibits filed with a petition form no part thereof, and cannot be considered in determining its sufficiency on demurrer; Pomeroy v. Fullerton, 113 Mo. 440, 21 S. W. 19; and if the exhibit is not the foundation for the cause of action or of the defence, it will not be considered; Barnes v. Mowry, 129 Ind. 568, 28 N. E. 535.

Documents and other things, produced by a witness on cross-examination and marked for identification, are not before the court unless offered and admitted; Byerley v. Sun Co., 181 Fed. 138.

EXHIBITANT. A complainant in articles of the peace. 12 Ad. & E. 599.

EXHIBITION. In Scotch Law. An action for compelling the production of writings. See DISCOVERY.

EXHUMATION. The exhumation of a body should be ordered, if at all, only on a strong showing that, without its examination, a fraud is likely to be accomplished which an insurance company has exhausted every other legal means of exposing; Granger's Life Ins. Co. v. Brown, 57 Miss. 308, 34 Am. Rep. 446. Disinterment may be compelled by public authorities whenever conditions become such as that the public health is threatened, or in the interest of justice; Gray v. State, 55 Tex. Cr. R. 90, 114 S. W. 635, 22 L. R. A. (N. S.) 513; or for the purpose of ascertaining whether a crime has been committed; People v. Fitzgerald, 105 N. Y. 146, 11 N. E. 378, 59 Am. Rep. 483; or where an examination may disclose facts which prove an accused person innocent of crime; Gray v. State, 55 Tex. Cr. R. 90, 114 S. W. 635, 22 L. R. A. (N. S.) 513.

Such an order was refused in Moss v. State, 152 Ala. 30, 44 South. 598, because it appeared that two reputable physicians, available at the trial, had examined the body before burial. There is said to be no law requiring a court, at the prisoner's request, but at the expense of the state, to order the body to be exhumed in order to furnish him with evidence; Salisbury v. Com., 79 Ky. 425. In Com. v. Grether, 204 Pa. 203, 53 Atl. 753, the court refused to set aside a conviction of murder in the first degree because the district attorney and not the coroner had caused the body to be exhumed. In an insurance case, exhumation was ordered, to obtain evidence bearing on the question of suicide; the marshal was directed to exhume the body and the court appointed a pathologist and a chemist to make the examination; it was held, also, that such order could be made only in a case where the widow was a party; Mutual Life Ins. Co. of New York v. Griesa, 156 Fed. 398. The right to make the order, in an insurance case, was recognized in People v. Fitzgerald, 105 N. Y. 146, 11 N.

E. 378, 59 Am. Rep. 483; Grangers Life Ins. Co. v. Brown, 57 Miss. 308, 34 Am. Rep. 446; but in the latter case the order was refused on the ground of delay. See 22 L. R. A. (N. S.) 513, note.

EXIGENDARY. In English Law. An officer who makes out exigents.

EXIGENT, EXIGI FACIAS. See OUT-LAWRY; Conn. v. Hagerman, 2 Va. Cas. 244; Fitzh. N. B. 236; Rawle, Exmoor 55. See Appeal of Coleman, 75 Pa. 456.

EXIGENT LIST. A phrase used to indicate a list of cases set down for hearing upon various incidental and ancillary motions and rules.

EXIGENTER. An officer who made out exigents and proclamations. Cowell. The office is now abolished. Holthouse.

EXIGIBLE. Demandable; that which may be exacted.

EXILIUM (Lat.). In Old English Law. Exile. Setting free or wrongly ejecting bond-tenants. Waste is called exilium when bondmen (servi) are set free or driven wrongfully from their tenements. Co. Litt. 536. Destruction; waste. Du Cange. Any species of waste which drove away the inhabitants, into exile, or had a tendency to do so. Bac. Abr. Waste (a); 1 Reeve, Hist. Eng. Law 386.

EXISTIMATIO (Lat.). The reputation of a Roman citizen. The decision of arbiters. Vicat, Voc. Jur.; 1 Mackeldey, Civ. Law § 123.

EXISTING. The force of this word is not necessarily confined to the present. Thus a law for regulating "all existing railroad corporations" extends to such as are incorporated after as well as before its passage, unless exception is provided in their charters; Indianapolis & St. L. R. Co. v. Blackman, 63 Ill. 117; Lawrie v. State, 5 Ind. 525; Fox v. Edwards, 38 Ia. 215.

EXIT WOUND. The wound made in coming out by a weapon which has passed through the body or any part of it. 2 Beck. Med. Jur. 119.

EXITUS (Lat.). An export duty. Issue, child, or offspring. Rent or profits of land.

In Pleading. The issue or the end, termination or conclusion, of the pleadings; so called because an issue brings the pleadings to a close. 3 Bla. Com. 314.

EXLEX (Lat.). An outlaw. Spelman, Gloss.

EXOINE. In French Law. An act or instrument in writing which contains the reasons why a party in a civil suit, or a person accused, who has been summoned, agreeably to the requisitions of a decree, does not appear. Pothier, Procéd. Crim., a 3, art. 3. See ESSOIN.

EXONERATION. The taking off a burden or duty. The usual use of the word is in the rule in the distribution of an intestate's estate that the debts which he himself contracted and for which he mortgaged his land as security, shall be paid out of the personal estate in exoneration of the real.

But when the real estate is charged with the payment of a mortgage at the time the intestate buys it, and the purchase is made subject to it, the personal estate is not in that case to be applied in exoneration of the real estate; 2 Pow. Mortg. 780; Hurt v. Reeves, 5 Hayw. (Tenn.) 57; Duke of Cumberland v. Codrington, 3 Johns. Ch. (N. Y.) 229, 8 Am. Dec. 492; 1 Lead. Cas. in Eq. n. *646; Appeal of Hirst, 92 Pa. 491.

But the rule for exonerating the real estate out of the personal does not apply against specific or pecuniary legatees, nor the widow's right to paraphernalia, and, with reason, not against the interest of creditors; 2 Ves. 64; 1 P. Wms. 693; 3 id. 367. See 26 Beav. 522; Appeal of Clery, 35 Pa. 54; Canfield v. Bostwick, 21 Conn. 550.

Like the right of contribution between those equally liable for the same debt, the right of exoneration exists between debtors successively liable. A surety who discharges an obligation is entitled to look to the principal for reimbursement, and to invoke the aid of a court of equity for this purpose, and a subsequent surety, who, by the terms of the contract, is responsible only in the case of the default of the principal and a prior surety, may claim exoneration at the hands of either; Bisph. Eq. § 831; 3 Pom. Eq. Jur. § 1416.

As to exoneration of simple contract debts, see 1 Sm. L. Cas., 9th Am. ed. 614.

EXONERATUR (Lat.). In Practice. A short note entered on a bail-piece, that the bail is exonerated or discharged in consequence of having fulfilled the condition of his obligation, made by order of the court or of a judge upon a proper cause being shown. See RECOGNIZANCE.

EXPATRIATION. The voluntary act of abandoning one's country and becoming the citizen or subject of another.

The right of expatriation is the right of a person to transfer his allegiance from the country of which he is a citizen to another country.

This right has been much discussed. The question has been settled in the United States by the act of July 27, 1868, which declares the right of expatriation to be the inherent right of all people, disavows the claim made by foreign states that naturalized American citizens are still the subjects of such states, and extends to such naturalized citizens, while in foreign countries, the same protection accorded to native-born citizens. R. S. §§ 1999, 2000. This declaration comprehends our own citizens as well as those of other countries; 14 Op. Atty. Gen. 295. Since the passage of this act, the United States has entered into treaties with nearly all the nations of Europe by which the contracting powers mutually concede to subjects and citizens the right of expatriation on conditions and under qualifications. And in case of conflict between the above act of congress and any treaty, it would seem the treaty must be held paramount; Morse, Citizenship § 179. See TREATY. To be legal, the expatriation must be for a purpose which is not unlawful nor in fraud of the duties of the emigrant at home.

Most foreign governments permit their citizens to become naturalized in other countries, but generally upon condition of the prior fulfilment of military service. Hershey 243-244. In Switzerland the consent of the canton is required, and a like rule exists in Japan; Meilli, Intern. C. & C. 121.

A citizen may acquire in a foreign country commercial privileges attached to his domicile, and be exempted from the operation of commercial acts embracing only persons resident in the United States or under its protection. See DOMICIL; NATURALIZATION. See also Miller, Const. U. S. 285, 297; Murray v. The Charming Betsy, 2 Cra. (U. S.) 120, 2 L. Ed. 208; 2 Kent 36; Grotius, b. 2, c. 5, s. 24; Puffendorff, b. 8, c. 11, ss. 2, 3; Vattel, b. 1, c. 19, ss. 218, 223, 224, 225; U. S. v. Gillies, 1 Pet. C. C. 161, Fed. Cas. No. 15,206; Ainslie v. Martin, 9 Mass. 461; 21 Am. L. Reg. 77; 11 id. 447; 3 Can. L. T. 463, 511; 25 Law Mag. & Rev. 124; Lawrence's Wheat. Int. L. 891.

By act of March 2, 1907, a citizen who is naturalized in any foreign state is expatriated; also a naturalized citizen who has resided two years in his native state or five years in any other foreign state, except upon presenting satisfactory evidence to a diplomatic or consular agent under the rules of the state department, and no citizen can be expatriated in time of war.

A Pennsylvania court, following her constitution framed by Franklin, first declared the right of expatriation an original and indefeasible right of man. Baldwin's Modern Political Institutions 241, citing Murray v. McCarty, 2 Munf. (Va.) 393; Wharton's State Trials 652.

For the doctrine of the English courts on this subject, see 1 Barton, Conv. 31, note; Vaugh. 227, 281; 7 Co. 16; Dy. 2, 224, 298 b, 300 b; 2 P. Wms. 124; 1 Hale, Pl. Cr. 68; 1 Wood, Conv. 382; Westl. Priv. Int. Law; Story, Conf. Laws; Cockburn, Nationality.

See ALIEN; NATURALIZATION.

EXPECTANCY. Contingency as to possession. That which is expected or hoped for. Frequently used to imply an estate in expectancy.

Estates are said to be in possession when the person having the estate is in actual enjoyment of that in which his estate subsists, or in expectancy, when the enjoyment is postponed, although the estate or interest has a present legal existence.

A bargain in relation to an expectancy is, in general, considered invalid, unless the proof of good faith is strong; 2 Ves. 157; 1 Bro. C. C. 10; Jeremy, Eq. Jur. 397; McCall's Adm'r v. Hampton, 98 Ky. 166, 32 S. W. 406, 33 L. R. A. 266, 56 Am. St. Rep. 335.

But it is well settled in equity that a deed which purports to convey property, which is in expectancy or to be subsequently acquired, or which is not the subject of grant at law, though inoperative as a grant or conveyance, will be upheld as an executory agreement, and enforced according to its intent, if supported by a valid consideration, whenever the grantor is in a condition to give it effect; per Strong, J., in Bayler v. Com., 40 Pa. 37, 43, 80 Am. Dec. 551; Varick v. Edwards, 11 Paige (N. Y.) 290; McWilliams v. Nisly, 2 S. & R. (Pa.) 507, 7 Am. Dec. 654; Bailey v. Hoppin, 12 R. I. 560, 568; 10 H. L. Cas. 189, 211; East Lewisburg Lumber & Mfg. Co. v. Marsh, 91 Pa. 96; Ruple v. Bindley, id. 296; Fritz's Estate, 160 Pa. 156, 28 Atl. 642; Hudson v. Hudson, 222 Ill. 527, 78 N. E. 917; Hale v. Hollon, 90 Tex. 427, 39 S. W. 287, 36 L. R. A. 75, 59 Am. St. Rep. 819; Betts v. Harding, 133 Ia. 7, 109 N. W. 1074; Johnson v. Johnson, 170 Mo. 34, 70 S. W. 241, 59 L. R. A. 748. So it is said that an estate in expectancy, though contingent, is a fair subject of contract, and an agreement by an expectant heir in respect thereto, fairly made upon valuable considerations, will be enforced in equity; Parsons v. Ely, 45 Ill. 232; Varick v. Edwards, 1 Hoffm. Ch. (N. Y.) 382; McDonald v. McDonald, 58 N. C. 211, 75 Am. Dec. 434; a mere agreement to appropriate the money when received from a legacy will not operate as an assignment of it; Appeal of Wylie, 92 Pa. 196. An executory agreement between the husbands of two expectant legatees to divide equally what should be left to either of them has been enforced; 2 P. Wms. 182; 2 Sim. 183. Such assignments are prohibited by statute in California; Cal. Civ. Code 700, 1045; In re Wickersham's Estate, 138 Cal. 355, 70 Pac. 1076, 71 Pac. 437; and in Louisiana; Succession of Jacobs, 104 La. 447, 29 South. 241; and in some states have been held unenforceable; thus an attempted conveyance by heirs-apparent of their interest in the property of an ancestor, even with the latter's consent, has been held void; Wheeler's Ex'rs v. Wheeler, 2 Metc. (Ky.) 474, 74 Am. Dec. 421; McCall's Adm'r v. Hampton, 98 Ky. 166, 32 S. W. 406, 33 L. R. A. 266, 56 Am. St. Rep. 335; on the ground that it is essential to the legal validity of the thing sold that it have an actual or potential existence, and that a mere possibility or contingency, not founded on a right or coupled with an interest, cannot be the subject of a sale or assignment; Spears v. Spaw, 118 S. W. 275, 25 L. R. A. (N. S.) 436; and on the ground that, as no one can be the heir of a living person, a transaction based on the idea of a future right to the succession of a living person is devoid of consideration and can have no effect, notwithstanding the agreement is valid under the law of a foreign state where it was made; Cox v. Von Ahlefeldt, 105 La. 543, 30 South. 175.

An assignment without consideration by a married woman of an expectant interest in her father-in-law's estate, which was contingent upon her surviving her husband, in order to secure her husband's indebtedness, is not valid at law, although, when based upon a sufficient consideration, it might be enforced in equity when the interest became vested in the assignor; In re Baeder's Estate, 224 Pa. 452, 73 Atl. 915; and see, to the same effect, Bayler v. Com., 40 Pa. 37, 80 Am. Dec. 551.

That a grant by an expectant is simply a covenant to convey; 1 P. Wms. 387 (Lord Chancellor Hardwicke); McDonald v. McDonald, 58 N. C. 211, 75 Am. Dec. 434; and that chancery will give effect to the assignment of an expectancy or possibility, not as a grant, but as a contract entitling the assignee to a specific performance as soon as the assignor has the power to perform it; are held too well established to be disregarded; McDonald v. McDonald, 58 N. C. 211, 75 Am. Dec. 434; Philadelphia, W. & B. R. Co. v. Woelpper, 64 Pa. 366, 3 Am. Rep. 596. Such a sale may be enforced as against the heir through the doctrine of estoppel springing from his covenants contained in the deed of assignment; Johnson v. Johnson, 170 Mo. 34, 70 S. W. 241, 59 L. R. A. 748, citing Steele v. Frierson, 85 Tenn. 430, 3 S. W. 649; Bohon v. Bohon, 78 Ky. 408; Somes v. Skinner, 3 Pick. (Mass.) 52; Robertson v. Wilson, 38 N. H. 48; House v. McCormick, 57 N. Y. 310; Habig v. Dodge, 127 Ind. 31, 25 N. E. 182; followed and approved; Jerauld v. Dodge, 127 Ind. 600, 25 N. E. 186; Fairbanks v. Williamson, 7 Greenl. (Me.) 96; Stover v. Eycleshimer, 46 Barb. (N. Y.) 84; Rosenthal v. Mayhugh, 33 Ohio St. 155.

The general doctrine is undoubtedly to treat such an assignment as a contract enforceable in equity, but Pomeroy considers it inadequate; 3 Pom. Eq. Jur. § 1287, n. 2; and prefers the theory that it is an actual transfer of the ownership of an equitable property right which ripens into an absolute title; id. § 1271.

Equity will, in general, relieve a party from unequal contracts for the sale or pledge of expectancies, as they are in fraud of the ancestor. See 2 P. Wms. 182; 2 Sim. 183, 192; 5 id. 524; 1 Sto. Eq. Jur. § 342. But relief will be granted only on equitable terms; for he who seeks equity must do equity; id.

In dealing with such cases, the rule applied by courts of equity is, as laid down in Chesterfield v. Janssen, to scrutinize them carefully according to the circumstances of each; 2 Ves. Sr. 125; and, if upon inadequate consideration, or otherwise fraudulent, they will be relieved against and wholly or partially set aside; id.; 1 L. Cas. in Eq. 773; 2 Pom. Eq. Jur. § 953, and note, where the cases are collected.

In a leading English case the principle is thus stated: "The court will relieve 'expectant heirs' against bargains relating to their reversionary or expectant interest in cases of undervalue, of weakness due to age or poverty, and of the absence of independent advice. But all these circumstances must co-exist in order to entitle them to relief;" L. R. 8 Ch. 484. In that case it was held that the repeal of the usury laws in England has not altered the doctrine by which the court of chancery affords relief against improvident and extravagant bargains. In the opinion Lord Selborne directed attention to the fact that concealment was usually a feature of these cases, but agreed with Lord St. Leonards that it was not an indispensable condition of equitable relief; Sugd. Vend. & Pur., 11th ed. 316; differing, as to this point, with Lord Brougham; 2 Myl. & K. 456. The independent advice of a father seems to rebut the presumption of fraud; 2 App. Cas. 814; but old age or youth increases it; 2 Giff. 157; 4 D. J. & S. 388; or poverty and ignorance; L. R. 10 Ch. 389; 40 Ch. D. 312. In the first of these two cases, Jessel, M. R., thus defined the term "expectant heir": "The phrase is used not in its literal meaning, but as including every one who has either a vested remainder, or a contingent remainder in a family property, including a remainder in a portion, as well as a remainder in an estate, and every one who has the hope of succession to the property of an ancestor, either by reason of his being the heir-apparent or presumptive, or by reason, merely, of the expectation of a devise or bequest on account of the supposed or presumed affection of his ancestor or relation. More than this, the doctrine as to expectant heirs has been extended to all reversioners and remaindermen." So that the doctrine not only included the class mentioned, who in some popular sense might be called 'expectant heirs,' but also all remaindermen and reversioners."

The principle has been held to include younger sons of peers; 15 Ch. D. 679. As to what is a reversionary interest for this purpose, see 11 Eq. 265, 276; L. R. 2 Ch. 542; and as to what is independent advice, see 10 Eq. 641, in which the borrower, though accompanied by a friend who was a solicitor but did not act as such, or know the terms of the contract, was held not to have independent advice.

Undervaluation is not alone a sufficient ground for setting aside a contract, conveyance, or mortgage of a reversion, otherwise fair; Stat. 31 Vict. c. 4; 2 Ch. Cas. 136; 35 Beav. 570; 32 L. J. Ch. 201.

By the civil law, such contracts are held contra bonos mores, and they are forbidden in general terms; Code 2, 3, de pactis 30; and in the French code it is forbidden to sell the succession of a living person, even with his consent; art. 1600; the same is the rule of the Italian code; art. 1460; and of that of Austria; § 879.

As to expectancy of life, see LIFE TABLES.

See, generally, 2 Lead. Cas. in Eq., 4th Am. ed. 1530, 1559, 1605; 3 Pom. Eq. Jur. ch. 8, sec. 3; Brett, L. Cas. Mod. Eq. 3d ed. 69, n.; 9 Harv. L. Rev. 476; CATCHING BARGAIN; POST OBIT.

EXPECTANT. Contingent as to enjoyment.

EXPEDITATION. A cutting off the claws or ball of the fore-feet of mastiffs, to prevent their running after deer; a practice for the preservation of the royal forests. Cart. de For. c. 17; Spelman, Gloss.; Cowell. See COURT OF REGARD.

EXPENDITORS. Paymasters. Those who expend or disburse certain taxes. Especially the sworn officer who supervised the repairs of the banks of the canals in Romney Marsh. Cowell.

EXPENSÆ LITIS (Lat.). Expenses of the suit; the costs, which are generally allowed to the successful party.

EXPERTS (Lat. experti, instructed, proved by experience). Persons selected by the court or parties in a cause, on account of their knowledge or skill, to examine, estimate, and ascertain things and make a report of their opinions. Merlin, Répert.

Witnesses who are admitted to testify from a peculiar knowledge of some art or science, a knowledge of which is requisite or of value in settling the point at issue.

Persons professionally acquainted with the science or practice in question. Strickl. Ev. 408. Persons conversant with the subject-matter on questions of science, skill, trade, and others of like kind. Best, Ev. § 346.

The qualification of a witness as an expert is largely within the discretion of the trial judge; Mutual Fire Ins. Co. of New York v. Alvord, 61 Fed. 752, 9 C. C. A. 623; Ballard v. R. Co., 126 Pa. 141, 19 Atl. 35; Sloco-vich v. Ins. Co., 108 N. Y. 61, 14 N. E. 802; City of Fort Wayne v. Coombs, 107 Ind. 84, 7 N. E. 743. Such a witness may be asked whether the examination made by him was superficial or otherwise; Northern Pac. R. Co. v. Umlin, 158 U. S. 271, 15 Sup. Ct. 840, 59 L. Ed. 977; he need not be engaged in his profession, it is sufficient that he has studied it; Tullis v. Kidd, 12 Ala. 648.

Dealers in precious stones are not competent to testify to the uses of imitation precious stones; Lorsch v. U. S., 119 Fed. 476. One who has been a practicing physician for eight years is competent to testify as an expert whether a death was caused by arsenic, though he never had a case of arsenical poisoning; State v. Kammel, 23 S. D. 465, 122 N. W. 420.

Experts alone can give an opinion based on facts shown by others, assuming them to be true; State v. Potts, 100 N. C. 457, 6 S. E. 657.

"It is not sufficient to warrant the introduction of expert testimony that the witness may know more of the subject of inquiry and may better understand and appreciate it than the jury; but to warrant its introduction, the subject of the inquiry must be one relating to some trade, profession, science, or art in which persons instructed therein by study and experience may be supposed to have more skill and knowledge than jurors of average intelligence may generally be presumed to have;" Ferguson v. Hubbell, 97 N. Y. 511, 49 Am. Rep. 544; and not only may they testify to facts but they may give their opinions on them as experts; Van Wycklen v. City of Brooklyn, 118 N. Y. 429, 24 N. E. 179. The practical result of the rule admitting such testimony is far from satisfactory; its principal defect being that such witnesses are usually called because their known theories are understood to support the fact which the party calling them wishes to prove; Grigsby v. Water Co., 40 Cal. 405. "They come," says Lord Campbell, speaking of scientific witnesses, "with a bias on their minds to support the cause in which they are embarked, and hardly any weight should be given to their evidence;" 10 Cl. & F. 154. It is said to be generally safer to take the judgments of unskilled jurors than the hired and biassed opinions of experts; Ferguson v. Hubbell, 97 N. Y. 511, 49 Am. Rep. 544.

A jury is not bound by the opinions of experts on an issue of insanity; U. S. v. Chisholm, 149 Fed. 284; Mitchell v. State, 6 Ga. App. 554, 65 S. E. 326; but should form their own judgment from all the proof in the case; U. S. v. Chisholm, 153 Fed. 808. It has been said that they "are generally mere arguments in behalf of the side calling them"; Ideal Stopper Co. v. Seal Co., 131 Fed. 249, 65 C. C. A. 436; and such testimony is frequently characterized by the courts as of little value; American Middlings Purifier Co. v. Christian, 3 Bann. & A. 42, Fed. Cas. No. 307; King v. Cement Co., 6 Fish. 336, Fed. Cas. No. 7,798; L. R. 6 Ch. Div. 415, n.

On the other hand, the necessity of such testimony in certain classes of cases, particularly those involving patent law, is thus set forth in 3 Rob. Pat. § 1012:

"Notwithstanding the strictures passed upon expert testimony by many jurists on each side of the Atlantic, and the truth of the assertions by which these censures have been justified, it is still certain that in most patent cases expert evidence is, and must always be, indispensable. That the expert is consulted before he is summoned as a witness; that when his opinion is unfavorable to the party who consults him he is not produced in court, at least on that side of the case; that when called as a witness his testimony is expected to support, and generally does support, the claims of the litigant on whose behalf he is presented,—are no doubt true; but this is only what occurs in every other trial where counsel have properly prepared their case. The error lies with those who ascribe judicial functions to the patent-expert, and demand of him such freedom from partisanship as the exercise of judicial powers requires. That there are experts in other departments of affairs upon whose opinion the court is forced to rely as the foundation of its own judgments, because incapable of forming an opinion for itself, and that such experts consequently fill the places of judges and should be beyond the influence and control of parties, must be conceded. But such is not the case with patent-experts, whose opinion is received in evidence only in connection with the reasons on which it is based, and is to be accepted or rejected by the jury according to their own view of its fallacy or truth. The patent-expert, considered in his real character, is an explorer, gifted with unusual powers of discernment and apprehension; a chronicler, trained to preserve the recollection of the essential attributes of things; an expositor, fitted to embody those essential attributes in accurate and intelligible language; a monitor, able to suggest the conclusions which follow from the premises he has described. His relation to the jury is not unlike that which counsel sustain to the court, as guides to a correct decision of the issues severally confided to their judgments,—the one pointing out facts and applying them in support of the claims advanced by his employer, as the other produces his authorities and applies them to the maintenance of his claims of law.”

Such assistance, it is suggested, it would not be wise in any tribunal to undervalue or reject; 3 Rob. Pat. § 1012.

The fact that the opinions of experts in patent cases are often diametrically opposite does not necessarily discredit their testimony but merely emphasizes the fact that their opinions are to be regarded as opinions, merely, and a decision rendered between them; Conover v. Roach, 4 Fish. 12, Fed. Cas. No. 3,125. A patent expert is in effect an “auxiliary counsel” who argues upon the law and the facts; Steam-Gauge & Lantern Co. v. Mfg. Co., 28 Fed. 618.

The practice of introducing a large number of expert witnesses in patent causes is not to be commended, one competent witness on each side being usually sufficient to insure a full and fair elucidation of what is recondite in the case; American Stove Co. v. Foundry Co., 158 Fed. 978, 86 C. C. A. 182. While expert evidence is not conclusive on the jury; Many v. Sizer, 1 Fish. 17, Fed. Cas. No. 9,056; and is to be judged by the same standards as ordinary evidence; May v. Fond du Lac County, 27 Fed. 691; Carter v. Baker, 4 Fish. 404, Fed. Cas. No. 2,472, 1 Sawyer 512; Page v. Ferry, 1 Fish. 298, Fed. Cas. No. 10,662; and to be accorded by the jury such weight as they see fit; Johnson v. Root, 1 Fish. 351, Fed. Cas. No. 7,411; Allen v. Hunter, 6 McLean 303, Fed. Cas. No. 225; Brooks v. Jenkins, 3 McLean 432, Fed. Cas. No. 1,953; it is nevertheless of great value in patent cases; French v. Rogers, 1 Fish. 133, Fed. Cas. No. 5,103; Carr v. Rice, 1 Fish. 498, Fed. Cas. No. 2,440; Morris v. Barrett, 1 Fish. 461, Fed. Cas. No. 9,827; Parker v.

Stiles, 5 McLean 44, Fed. Cas. No. 10,749; Allen v. Blunt, 3 Sto. 742, Fed. Cas. No. 216; Brooks v. Jenkins, 3 McLean 432, Fed. Cas. No. 1,953.

It has been held that, without explanatory evidence, the defense of anticipation will not be considered in a patent case, where it is supported by prior patents for complicated machinery; Bell v. MacKinnon, 149 Fed. 205, 79 C. C. A. 163.

The value of such testimony depends on the skill, not the number; Brooks v. Bicknell, 4 McLean 70, Fed. Cas. No. 1,946; and is to be measured by their reasons; U. S. Annunciator v. Sanderson, 3 Blatchf. 184, Fed. Cas. No. 16,790; Whipple v. Baldwin Mfg. Co., 4 Fish. 29, Fed. Cas. No. 17,514; Parham v. American Mfg. Co., 4 Fish. 468, Fed. Cas. No. 10,713.

There are said to be two classes of patent experts, scientific and mechanical, each having a distinct sphere. The scientific expert is one familiarized by his studies and experiments with the principles of a science and qualified to understand, distinguish, and explain the subject-matter and application thereto of such science. His services are invoked to determine the character and scope of an invention with reference to the condition of the art at the date of its production. His testimony is directed to the question whether the alleged invention is the result of an inventive act; whether it embraces or excludes a different invention or is substantially the same in principle, function, or effect with any other. The mechanical expert represents the skilled workman in his art, who by practical training in it could comprehend and apply to it various instruments and methods. His evidence will bear upon the defence of want of novelty, prior patent, inutility of the invention, or ambiguity of the description in the specification of the patent. One person may appear in both capacities. 3 Rob. Pat. § 1013. See Curt. Pat. § 479.

Expert testimony is admissible upon questions for the court as well as upon those for the jury, where it can be properly applied to the subject-matter of the question as the construction of the patent and whether a prior patent covers the same invention; 3 Rob. Pat. § 1014. In dealing with such questions the court is at liberty to admit expert evidence, but cannot be compelled to do so, and it is not error to refuse it; id.; Day v. Stellman, 1 Fish. 487, Fed. Cas. No. 3,690; Winans v. R. Co., 21 How. (U. S.) 88, 16 L. Ed. 68.

The opinions of experts are admissible to prove insanity; U. S. v. Chisholm, 153 Fed. 808; to prove indebtedness by the general results shown by books of account; Brown v. U. S., 142 Fed. 1, 73 C. C. A. 187; to show whether a writing is genuine or disguised; Rinker v. U. S., 151 Fed. 755, 81 C. C. A. 379; or whether a child had passed through the full period of gestation based upon the appearance of the child at the age of 13 months; People v. Johnson, 70 Ill. App. 634; or the cause of a death from facts stated by other witnesses and without personal examination; State v. Kammel, 23 S. D. 465, 122 N. W. 420; but such evidence is inadmissible to destroy the plain and obvious meaning of a contract where the words used are plain and unambiguous; Bowers Dredging Co. v. U. S., 211 U. S. 176, 29 Sup. Ct. 77, 53 L. Ed. 136; nor is it admissible upon the question of damages; Lincoln v. R. Co., 23 Wend. (N. Y.) 425; Bain v. Cushman, 60 Vt. 343, 15 Atl. 171; Chandler v. Bush, 84 Ala. 102, 4 South. 207; nor as to whether they were caused by negligence; East Tennessee, V. & G. R. v. Wright, 76 Ga. 532; International & G. N. Ry. Co. v. Kuehn, 2 Tex. Civ. App. 210, 21 S. W. 58; Hankins v. Watkins, 77 Hun 360, 28 N. Y. Supp. 867. See OPINION.

It has been a matter of grave discussion whether an expert is bound to testify on matters of opinion without extra compensation, the weight of decisions being that he is not bound to do so; 1 C. & K. 25; Ex parte Roelker, Sprague 276, Fed. Cas. No. 11,995; Dills v. State, 59 Ind. 15; Clark County v. Kerstan, 60 Ark. 508, 30 S. W. 1046; contra, Ex parte Dement, 6 Cent. L. J. 11; U. S. v. Cooper, 21 D. C. 491; Buchman v. State, 59 Ind. 1, 26 Am. Rep. 75; Dills v. State, 59 Ind. 15; 6 So. Law Rev. 706. In the absence of statutory authority, an expert for the state cannot demand extra compensation, at least when not compelled to make any preliminary examination or preparation, or to attend and listen to the testimony; Flinn v. Prairie County, 60 Ark. 204, 29 S. W. 459, 27 L. R. A. 669, 46 Am. St. Rep. 168; and when no demand is made in advance for special compensation, he can recover only the statutory witness fees; Board of Com'rs of County of Larimer v. Lee, 3 Colo. App. 177, 32 Pac. 841; Tiffany v. Iron Works, 59 Misc. 113, 109 N. Y. Supp. 754. When an expert is required to make a preliminary examination or to prepare specially for his testimony, he is allowed extra compensation in addition to the ordinary witness fees; Keller v. Harrison, 151 Ia. 320, 128 N. W. 851, 131 N. W. 53, Ann. Cas. 1913A, 300; Gordon v. Conley, 107 Me. 286, 78 Atl. 365, 33 L. R. A. (N. S.) 336; Burnett v. Freeman, 125 Mo. App. 683, 103 S. W. 121; Schofield v. Little, 2 Ga. App. 286, 58 S. E. 666; Philler v. Waukesha County, 139 Wis. 211, 120 N. W. 829, 25 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1040, 131 Am. St. Rep. 1055, 17 Ann. Cas. 712; and it has been held that a physician testifying as an expert comes within such rule; People v. Board of Sup'rs, 148 App. Div. 584, 132 N. Y. Supp. 868; but usually a physician is required to give expert testimony without extra compensation; People v. Conte, 17 Cal. App. 771, 122 Pac. 450, 457; State v. Bell, 212 Mo. 111, 111 S. W. 24; North Chicago St. R. Co. v. Zeiger, 78 Ill. App. 463, affirmed in 182 Ill. 9, 54 N. E. 1006, 74 Am. St. Rep. 157; especially when the physician is attending professionally one of the parties; Anderson v. Ry. Co., 103 Minn. 184, 114 N. W. 744; Burnett v. Freeman, 134 Mo. App. 709, 115 S. W. 488. It is held that an expert who testifies on a subject requiring special knowledge and skill is entitled only to the statutory fee; Main v. Sherman County, 74 Neb. 155, 103 N. W. 1038; and so where a witness had knowledge common to persons in a particular neighborhood, not based on study or investigation, and in spite of a special contract for extra compensation; Ramschassel's Estate, 24 Pa. Super. Ct. 262. Expenses of expert witnesses cannot be allowed as between the parties at a rate exceeding the usual fees; [1900] 1 Ir. Rep. 22; Randall v. Journal Ass'n, 22 Misc. 715, 49 N. Y. Supp. 1064; Linforth v. Gas Co., 9 Cal. App. 434, 99 Pac. 716.

Under equity rule 48 (S. C. of U. S., in effect Feb. 1, 1913, 33 Sup. Ct. xxxi), the district court, in a case involving the scope or validity of a patent or trade-mark, may, upon petition, order that the examination in chief of the experts be set forth in affidavits and filed: Those of plaintiff within 40 days after the cause is at issue; those of defendant 20 days after plaintiff's time has expired; and rebutting affidavits 15 days after the time for filing the originals has expired. The court or a judge may direct the cross-examination and any re-examination before the court at the trial. If the expert be not produced, the affidavit shall not be used.

A statute providing for the appointment of expert witnesses by the court without notice to the respondent or prosecuting attorney in cases of homicide was declared unconstitutional in People v. Dickerson, 164 Mich. 148, 129 N. W. 199, 33 L. R. A. (N. S.) 917, Ann. Cas. 1912B, 688.

In Germany expert witnesses are appointed by the court and are regarded as assistants to the trial judge. The judge decides whether they shall be called or not; he may inform himself from other sources upon the questions raised. There are lists of experts made under local laws; they are usually nominated by the various trades and professions. They are sworn in and need not be sworn in the particular case. If the parties have agreed upon an expert, he must be examined together with others designated by the judge if he so desires.

Frequently the experts furnish a written opinion and are not examined. The rules are the same in civil and criminal cases.

In France in civil cases each court selects expert witnesses and publicly announces their names. They are classified under 49 different categories. Usually three are examined; but the parties may agree to examine only one. If the parties cannot agree within three days on their choice of the experts to be called, the court appoint. They report in writing signed by all. If they differ in opinion, the grounds of difference must be stated, but not the name of the dissentient. The report need not be sworn to.

In criminal cases the experts are selected by the procureur (district-attorney) or they may be called by the examining magistrate or the trial judge.

Lists of experts of various professions are published by the official registrars of the courts and are appointed by the minister of justice with the advice of the presidents of the courts and the district attorney. They are entitled to ask for any fee they consider due for their services, there being no fixed schedule. Each profession is considered on its merits. Sometimes an expert not on the list may be selected by the judge. The rule that there must be an uneven number of experts does not apply in the criminal courts.

See OPINION; PATENT; HYPOTHETICAL QUESTION.

EXPILATION. In Civil Law. The crime of abstracting the goods of a succession.

This is said not to be a theft, because the property no longer belongs to the deceased, nor to the heir before he has taken possession. In the common law, the grant of letters testamentary, or letters of administration, relates back to the time of the death of the testator or intestate: so that the property of the estate is vested in the executor or administrator from that period.

EXPIRATION. Cessation; end: as, the expiration of a lease, of a contract or statute.

In general, the expiration of a contract puts an end to all the engagements of the parties, but not to the obligations which arise from the non-fulfilment of obligations created during its existence. See PARTNERSHIP; CONTRACT.

The term is specially used to denote the day upon which the risk of an insurance policy terminates. When before the expiration of policies the companies agreed to "hold" the policies for renewal, and after the expiration the agent of the insured told them to continue to hold them until the form could be arranged, the policies were held to be in force; Baker v. Assur. Co., 162 Mass. 358, 33 N. E. 1124. Temporary insurance from one day "until" a certain other date, includes all of the day of expiration; Thompson v. Ins. Co., 4 Pa. Dist. R. 382. See INSURANCE.

When a statute is limited as to time, it expires by mere lapse of time, and then it has no force whatever; and, if such a statute repealed or supplied a former statute, the first statute is, ipso facto, revived by the expiration of the repealing statute; Collins v. Smith, 6 Whart. (Pa.) 294, 36 Am. Dec. 228; unless it appear that such was not the intention of the legislature; 3 East 212; Bacon. Abr. Statute (D).

EXPIRY OF THE LEGAL. In Scotch Law. The expiration of the term within which the subject of an adjudication may be redeemed on payment of the debt adjudged for. Bell, Dict.; 3 Jurid. Styles, 3d ed. 1107.

EXPLICATIO (Lat.). In Civil Law. The fourth pleading; equivalent to the sur-rejoinder of the common law. Calvinus, Lex.

EXPLOSION. A sudden and rapid combustion, causing violent expansion of the air, and accompanied by a report. United Life, Fire & Marine Ins. Co. v. Foote, 22 Ohio St. 348, 10 Am. Rep. 735.

There is no difference in ordinary use between "explode" and "burst." The ordinary idea is that the explosion is the cause, while the rupture is the effect; Evans v. Ins. Co., 44 N. Y. 151, 4 Am. Rep. 650; Mitchell v. Ins. Co., 183 U. S. 42, 22 Sup. Ct. 22, 46 L. Ed. 74. See INSURANCE.

The insurer against fire is not liable for loss or damage to a building caused by explosion; Hustace v. Ins. Co., 175 N. Y. 292, 67 N. E. 592, 62 L. R. A. 651; Briggs v. Ins. Co., 53 N. Y. 446; German Fire Ins. Co. v. Roost, 55 Ohio St. 587, 45 N. E. 1097, 36 L. R. A. 236, 60 Am. St. Rep. 711; Heuer v. Ins. Co., 144 Ill. 393, 33 N. E. 411, 19 L. R. A. 594; Phoenix Ins. Co. v. Greer, 61 Ark. 509, 33 S. W. 840. See INSURANCE also as to liability for fire caused by explosions, and for explosions caused by fire; FIRE.

EXPLOSIVES. The standard form of policy issued by the New York fire insurance companies includes benzine, benzole, dynamite, ether, fireworks, gasoline, Greek fire, gunpowder, exceeding 25 pounds in quantity, nitro-glycerin, or other explosives. Blasting powder is held to be included by the words "other explosives" within the meaning of such a policy; Penman v. Ins. Co., 216 U. S. 311, 30 Sup. Ct. 312, 54 L. Ed. 493; St. Paul Fire & Marine Ins. Co. v. Penman, 151 Fed. 961, 81 C. C. A. 151.

A person in possession of dynamite is bound to exercise the highest degree of care to take every reasonable precaution to prevent explosion; Sowers v. McManus, 214 Pa. 244, 63 Atl. 601.

The regulations of The Hague tribunal of 1899 forbid the throwing of explosives from balloons or other airships. Inasmuch as this provision is only binding upon the contracting powers, it is provided that, if either of the nations at war form an alliance with a non-contracting power, the prohibition shall be null.

See BLASTING; DANGEROUS GOODS; FIRE.

EXPORTS. Goods and merchandise sent from one country to another. 2 M. & G. 155; 3 id. 959.

While the word export technically includes the landing in as well as the shipment to a foreign country, it is often used as meaning only the shipment from this country, and it will be so construed when used in a suit the manifest purpose of which would be defeated by limiting the word to its strict technical meaning; U. S. v. Chavez, 228 U. S. 525, 33 Sup. Ct. 595, 57 L. Ed. —, where the word is construed as used in the joint resolution of March 14, 1912.

In order to preserve equality among the states in their commercial relations, the constitution provides that "no tax or duty shall be laid on articles exported from any state." Art. 1, s. 9. And, to prevent a pernicious interference with the commerce of the nation, the tenth section of the first article of the constitution contains the following prohibition: "No state shall, without the consent of congress, lay any imposts or duties on imports or exports, except what may be absolutely necessary for executing its inspection laws; and the net produce of all duties and imposts laid by any state on imports or exports shall be for the use of the treasury of the United States; and all such laws shall be subject to the revision and control of the congress." See Brown v. Maryland, 12 Wheat. (U. S.) 419, 6 L. Ed. 678; IMPORTATION.

EXPOSÉ. A French word, sometimes applied to a written document containing the reasons or motives for doing a thing. The word occurs in diplomacy.

EXPOSE. To cast out to chance, to place abroad, or in a situation unprotected; Shannon v. People, 5 Mich. 90.

EXPOSURE OF PERSON. Such an intentional exposure, in a public place, of the naked body, as is calculated to shock the feelings of chastity or to corrupt the morals.

This offence is indictable on the ground that every public show and exhibition which outrages decency, shocks humanity, or is contrary to good morals, is punishable at common law. 1 Bish. Cr. Law § 1125; State v. Rose, 32 Mo. 560. An indecent exposure, though in a place of public resort, if visible by only one person, is not indictable as a common nuisance. An omnibus is a public place sufficient to support the indictment; Clark, Cr. L. 306, n.; 1 Den. 338; Templ. & M. 23; 2 C. & K. 933; 2 Cox, Cr. Cas. 376; 3 id. 183; Dearsl. 207. But see State v. Roper, 18 N. C. 208; State v. Pepper, 68 N. C. 259, 12 Am. Rep. 637. An ordinance making it an offence to expose the person indecently without reference to the intent which accompanies the act, is a valid exercise of police power; City of Grand Rapids v. Bateman, 93 Mich. 135, 53 N. W. 6.

EXPRESS. Stated or declared, as opposed to implied. That which is made known and not left to implication. It is a rule that when a matter or thing is expressed it ceases to be implied by law; expressum facit cessare tacitum. Co. Litt. 183.

EXPRESS ABROGATION. A direct repeal in terms by a subsequent law referring to that which is abrogated.

EXPRESS ASSUMPSIT. A direct undertaking. See ASSUMPSIT; ACTION.

EXPRESS COMPANIES. Companies organized to carry small and valuable packages expeditiously in such manner as not to subject them to the danger of loss and damage which to a greater or less degree attends the transportation of heavy or bulky articles of commerce. Southern Express Co. v. R. Co., 10 Fed. 213.

A common carrier that carries at regular and stated times, over fixed and regular routes, money and other valuable packages, which cannot be conveniently or safely carried as common freight; and also other articles and packages of any description which the shipper desires or the nature of the article requires should have safe and rapid transit and quick delivery, transporting the same in the immediate charge of its own messenger on passenger steamers and express and passenger railway trains, which it does not own or operate, but with the owners of which it contracts for the carriage of its messengers and freights; and within cities and towns or other defined limits, it collects from the consignors and delivers to the consignees at other places of business the goods which it carries. Pacific Exp. Co. v. Seibert, 44 Fed. 310. The right to use the facilities afforded by a railroad depends entirely on contract; St. Louis, I. M. & S. R. Co. v. Express Co., 117 U. S. 3, 6 Sup. Ct. 542, 628, 29 L. Ed. 791. In St. Louis, I. M. & S. R. Co. v. Express Co., 117 U. S. 1, 6 Sup. Ct. 542, 628, 29 L. Ed. 791; it was held that a railroad company might make an exclusive contract with a single express company, and this has been followed by many state courts; but it is held that under the anti-trust laws such exclusive contract is not valid; State v. R. Co., 99 Tex. 516, 91 S. W. 214, 5 L. R. A. (N. S.) 783, 13 Ann. Cas. 1072.

They are common carriers; Southern Express Co. v. Crook, 44 Ala. 468, 4 Am. Rep. 140; U. S. Express Co. v. Backman, 28 Ohio St. 144; notwithstanding a declaration in their bill of lading that they are not to be so considered; Bank of Kentucky v. Express Co., 93 U. S. 174, 23 L. Ed. 872; Christenson v. Express Co., 15 Minn. 270 (Gil. 208), 2 Am. Rep. 122.

In section 1 of the Railroad Rate Act (June 29, 1906), it is provided that the term "common carrier" in that act should include express companies; State v. Express Co., 171 Ind. 138, 85 N. E. 337, 19 L. R. A. (N. S.) 93, where it was said that congress has assumed jurisdiction over interstate traffic by express down to the point where the transit is entirely at an end; and a state statute requiring such companies to make free deliveries of parcels committed to their care was held void.

The Interstate Commerce Act and its amendments provide that the term "common carrier" as used in the act shall include express companies; U. S. Comp. St. Stat. Supp. 1911, 1285; and in an indictment of express companies under that act it was held that where a joint stock company did a general interstate express business and had filed a schedule of its rates with the Interstate Commerce Commission it was a quasi corporation and subject to indictment as a legal entity; U. S. v. Am. Express Co., 199 Fed. 321.

See COMMON CARRIERS.

Like all other common carriers they must receive all goods offered for transportation, on being paid or tendered the proper charge; Jordan v. R. Co., 5 Cush. (Mass.) 69, 51 Am. Dec. 44; and if they cannot transport them within a reasonable time, must refuse them or be responsible for loss caused by the delay; Condict v. R. Co., 54 N. Y. 500; Tierney v. R. Co., 76 N. Y. 305; Illinois Cent. R. Co. v. Cobb, 64 Ill. 128. They may also refuse to receive dangerous articles for transportation; Parrot v. Wells, 15 Wall. (U. S.) 524, 21 L. Ed. 206; Boston & A. R. Co. v. Shanly, 107 Mass. 568.

An express company insures the safe delivery of goods received at the destination, if on its own route; if not, safe delivery at the end of its route to the next carrier; and will be relieved only by act of God or of the public enemy; Stephens & C. Transp. Co. v. Tuckerman, Milligan & Co., 33 N. J. L. 543; U. S. Exp. Co. v. Hutchins, 58 Ill. 44; Southern Exp. Co. v. Craft, 49 Miss. 480, 19 Am. Rep. 4; Babcock v. Ry. Co., 49 N. Y. 491; American Exp. Co. v. Bank, 69 Pa. 394, 8 Am. Rep. 268; Hadd v. Exp. Co., 52 Vt. 335, 36 Am. Rep. 757.

An express company may by special contract limit its liability for the value of goods lost; Oppenheimer v. Exp. Co., 69 Ill. 62, 18 Am. Rep. 596; Magnin v. Dinsmore, 62 N. Y. 35, 20 Am. Rep. 442; Baldwin v. Steamship Co., 74 N. Y. 125, 30 Am. Rep. 277; U. S. Exp. Co. v. Backman, 28 Ohio St. 144; except for losses due to its own negligence or misconduct; Bank of Kentucky v. Exp. Co., 93 U. S. 174, 23 L. Ed. 872; Boscowitz v. Exp. Co., 93 Ill. 523, 34 Am. Rep. 191; Harvey v. R. Co., 74 Mo. 538; Whitworth v. Ry. Co., 87 N. Y. 413. A contract between an express company and its messenger exempting it from liability for injury to him by the negligence of the carrier, is valid and may extend so far as to authorize the express company to contract with the carrier against liability to the messenger; but such contract will not enure to the benefit of the carrier having no knowledge of it or not having availed itself of it by contracting with the express company; Louisville, N. A. & C. Ry. Co. v. Keefer, 146 Ind. 21, 44 N. E. 796, 38 L. R. A. 93, 58 Am. St. Rep. 348.

An express company is liable for damages to perishable freight injured by delay; Adams Exp. Co. v. Williams (Ark.) 14 S. W.

40; but a delay, to create a liability, must be "an unreasonable delay which is such as involves some want of ordinary care or diligence"; Adams Exp. Co. v. Bratton, 106 Ill. App. 563.

Where it was a habit to carry large sums of money for hire and keep the same for several hours after its transportation before called for, the liability for its loss is as a warehouseman and not as a common carrier; President, etc., of Conway Bank v. Exp. Co., 8 Allen (Mass.) 512. The liability of an express company as a common carrier terminates on the safe carriage of the goods to their destination and notice to the consignee; Hasse v. Exp. Co., 94 Mich. 133, 53 N. W. 918, 34 Am. St. Rep. 328; and where goods are sent C. O. D., and the consignee refuses to accept them, and the shipper on notice directs the company to hold them until called for, its liability is only that of a warehouseman; Byrne v. Fargo, 36 Misc. 543, 73 N. Y. Supp. 943; but it is held that in the absence of a special contract the duty of the company is not completed on the arrival of the goods, but includes delivery; Burr v. Exp. Co., 71 N. J. L. 263, 58 Atl. 609; or constructive delivery by notice to the consignee; Rogers v. Fargo, 47 Misc. 155, 93 N. Y. Supp. 550; where there is such local usage; Hutchinson v. Exp. Co., 63 W. Va. 128, 59 S. E. 949, 14 L. R. A. (N. S.) 393, and note on delivery.

An express company is not denied the equal protection of the laws by classifying it with railroad and telegraph companies as subject to the unit rule of taxation, which estimates the value of the whole plant, though situated in different states, as an entirety, for the purpose of determining the value of the property in one state; Adams Exp. Co. v. Ohio State Auditor, 165 U. S. 194, 17 Sup. Ct. 305, 41 L. Ed. 683; id., 166 U. S. 185, 17 Sup. Ct. 604, 41 L. Ed. 965; and a state statute, requiring foreign express companies to file a statement before doing business and an agreement in reference to suits brought against them, did not give them a vested right to carry on business subject to the then existing laws or exempt them from future legislative control; Adams Exp. Co. v. State, 161 Ind. 328, 67 N. E. 1033.

Under a state statute providing that one who offers to carry persons, property or messages is a common carrier of what he thus offers to carry, an express company offering to carry money for hire is a common carrier thereof; Platt v. Le Cocq, 150 Fed. 391, where it was held that the railroad commissioners' order requiring it to receive money, of which it held itself out to be a common carrier, at all reasonable business hours preceding the departure of trains, was reasonable. A state statute regulating express companies by requiring equal terms to all, without discrimination, does not violate the XIVth amendment of the United States constitution; Am. Express Co. v. Express Co., 167 Ind. 292, 78 N. E. 1021.

In some states statutes relating to the transportation of property by railroad companies are applicable to express companies; MacMillan v. Express Co., 123 Ia. 236, 98 N. W. 629; but a statute prescribing the duties of railroads with reference to intersecting lines relates to the mere physical connection of the tracks and has no application to express companies; Southern Ind. Express Co. v. Ex. Co., 92 Fed. 1022, 35 C. C. A. 172.

See an epitome of the law on this subject at that date by Judge Redfield in 5 Am. Law Reg. N. S. 1; and three articles on express companies as common carriers; id. 449, 513, 648.

EXPRESS CONSIDERATION. A consideration expressed or stated by the terms of the contract.

EXPRESS CONTRACT. One in which the terms are openly uttered and avowed at the time of making. 2 Bla. Com. 443; 1 Pars. Contr. 4. One made in express words. 2 Kent 450. See CONTRACT.

EXPRESS COVENANTS. Those stated in words more or less distinctly expressing the intent to covenant. McDonough v. Martin, 88 Ga. 675, 16 S. E. 59, 18 L. R. A. 343.

EXPRESS TRUST. One declared in express terms. See TRUSTS.

EXPRESS WARRANTY. One expressed by particular words. 2 Bla. Com. 300. The statements in an application for insurance are usually construed to constitute an express warranty. 1 Phil. Ins. 346. See WARRANTY.

EXPROMISSIO (Lat.). In Civil Law. The species of novation by which a creditor accepts a new debtor, who becomes bound instead of the old, the latter being released. See NOVATION.

EXPROMISSOR. In Civil Law. The person who alone becomes bound for the debt of another, whether the latter were obligated or not. He differs from a surety, who is bound together with his principal. Dig. 12, 4, 4; 16, 1, 13; 24, 3, 64, 4; 38, 1, 37, 8.

EXPROPRIATION. A taking of private property for public use upon providing compensation. Brownsville v. Pavazos, 2 Woods 293, Fed. Cas. No. 2,043. It corresponds to the right of eminent domain in our law. In Louisiana expropriation is used as is taking under eminent domain in most of the other states. In England "compulsory purchase" is used; Halsbury, Laws of England.

In French Law. The compulsory realization of a debt by the creditor out of the lands of a debtor, or the usufruct thereof; confined first to lands (if any) in hypothèque, and then extending to others. Black, L. Dict.

EXPULSION (Lat. expellere, to drive out). The act of depriving a member of a body politic or corporate, or of a society, of his right of membership therein, by the vote of such body or society, for some violation of his duties as such, or for some offence which renders him unworthy of longer remaining a member of the same.

By the constitution of the United States, art. 1, s. 5, § 2, each house may determine the rules of its proceedings, punish its members for disorderly behavior, and, with the concurrence of two-thirds, expel a member. In the case of John Smith, a senator from Ohio, who was expelled from the senate in 1807, the committee made a report which embraces the following points:

First. That the senate may expel a member for a high misdemeanor, such as a conspiracy to commit treason. Its authority is not confined to an act done in its presence.

Second. That a previous conviction is not requisite in order to authorize the senate to expel a member from their body for a high offence against the United States.

Third. That although a bill of indictment against a party for treason and misdemeanor has been abandoned, because a previous indictment against the principal party had terminated in an acquittal, owing to the inadmissibility of the evidence upon that indictment, yet the senate may examine the evidence for themselves, and if it be sufficient to satisfy their minds that the party is guilty of a high misdemeanor it is sufficient ground of expulsion.

Fourth. That the fifth and sixth articles of the amendments of the constitution of the United States, containing the general rights and privileges of the citizens as to criminal prosecutions, refer only to prosecutions at law, and do not affect the jurisdiction of the senate as to expulsion.

Fifth. That before a committee of the senate, appointed to report an opinion relative to the honor and privileges of the senate, and the facts respecting the conduct of the member implicated, such member is not entitled to be heard in his defence by counsel, to have compulsory process for witnesses, or to be confronted with his accusers. It is before the senate that the member charged is entitled to be heard.

Sixth. In determining on expulsion the senate is not bound by the forms of judicial proceedings or the rules of judicial evidence; nor, it seems, is the same degree of proof essential which is required to convict of a crime. The power of expulsion must, in its nature, be discretionary, and its exercise of a more summary character. 1 Hall, Law Journ. 459, 465; Anderson v. Dunn, 6 Wheat. (U. S.) 204, 5 L. Ed. 242; Cooley, Const. Lim. 162.

Corporations have the right of expulsion in certain cases, as such power is necessary to the good order and government of corporate bodies; and the cases in which the inherent power may be exercised are classified by Lord Mansfield as follows: 1. When an offence is committed which has no immediate relation to a member's corporate duty, but is of so infamous a nature as to render him unfit for the society of honest men; such as the offences of perjury, forgery, and the like. But before an expulsion is made for a cause of this kind it is necessary that there should be a previous conviction by a jury according to the law of the land. 2. When the offence is against his duty as a corporator, in which case he may be expelled on trial and conviction before the corporation. 3. The third is of a mixed nature, against the member's duty as a corporator, and also indelible by the law of the land; 1 Burr. 517; Diligent Fire Co. v. Com., 75 Pa. 291; Evans v. Philadelphia Club, 50 Pa. 107; Gregg v. Medical Society, 111 Mass. 185, 15 Am. Rep. 27.

The decisions of any kind of a voluntary association in admitting, disciplining, suspending or expelling members are of a quasi-judicial character; the courts will not interfere in such cases except to ascertain whether or not the proceeding was pursuant to the rules of the society, in good faith, and not in violation of the law of the land. If so found, the proceeding is conclusive, like that of a judicial proceeding; Connelly v. Masonic Ass'n, 58 Conn. 552, 20 Atl. 671, 9 L. R. A. 428, 18 Am. St. Rep. 296. Upon questions of doctrine and policy the society is the sole and exclusive judge; Grand Lodge. K. P. v. People, 60 Ill. App. 550.

Rules enacted for the government of its members must be conformed to by it in all matters relating to the disciplining of the members; Green v. Board of Trade, 174 Ill. 585, 51 N. E. 599, 49 L. R. A. 365; Lewis v. Wilson, 121 N. Y. 284, 24 N. E. 474; Farmer v. Board of Trade, 78 Mo. App. 557. When suspension or expulsion results necessarily in affecting the financial standing of the complainants as well as depriving them of the use of property that is common to all, however insignificant its value, there is no reason to deny relief by injunction; Huston v. Reutlinger, 91 Ky. 333, 15 S. W. 867, 34 Am. St. Rep. 225. So where it appears that the complainant, unless aided by the courts, will be expelled from an association for some cause which under no circumstances can justify his expulsion; Otto v. Tailors' Union, 75 Cal. 315, 17 Pac. 217, 7 Am. St. Rep. 156.

A mutual benefit society cannot expel a member or deprive him of his rights in the society without giving him notice and a full opportunity to be heard in defence of the charges against him, and the proceeding for his expulsion must be conducted fairly and in good faith; State v. Temperance Soc., 42 Mo. App. 485; Berkhout v. Royal Arcanum, 62 N. J. L. 103, 43 Atl. 1; Wachtel v. Benev. Soc., 84 N. Y. 28, 38 Am. Rep. 478; People v. Alpha Lodge, 13 Misc. 677, 35 N. Y. Supp. 214, affirmed 8 App. Div. 591, 40 N. Y. Supp. 1147. Irregularities in the proceedings by which a member was suspended will not afford ground for relief in equity, where they were waived by the member's appearance and failure to raise them before the tribunals of the society; Sperry's Appeal, 116 Pa. 391, 9 Atl. 478. If the rules authorize the expulsion of a member, and he is given an opportunity to be heard, and the investigation is conducted in good faith, the decision of the association is conclusive upon the court in mandamus proceedings to compel his restoration; Lewis v. Wilson, 121 N.

It is generally held that persons who join churches, secret societies, benevolent associations, or temperance societies, etc., voluntarily submit themselves to the jurisdiction of those bodies, and in matters of faith and individual conduct affecting their relations as members thereof subject themselves to the tribunals established by those bodies to pass upon such questions; if aggrieved by a decision against them, made in good faith by such judicatories, they must seek their redress within the organization, as provided by its laws and regulations; Landis v. Campbell, 79 Mo. 433, 49 Am. Rep. 239; Shannon v. Frost, 3 B. Monr. (Ky.) 253; Grosvenor v. Society of Believers, 118 Mass. 78.

A complaining member should exhaust the remedies provided by the laws of the organization before applying to the courts; Union Fraternal League of Boston v. Johnston, 124 Ga. 902, 53 S. E. 241; Beeman v. Supreme Lodge, 215 Pa. 627, 64 Atl. 792; Weigand v. Fraternities Order, 97 Md. 443, 55 Atl. 530; but where those laws provide no remedy, and the organization provides none, it becomes a question for the courts to determine whether or not the member has done all that could reasonably be expected of him; Schneider v. Local Union No. 60, 116 La. 270, 40 South. 700, 5 L. R. A. (N. S.) 891, 114 Am. St. Rep. 549, 7 Ann. Cas. 868. His compensatory remedies against an association which denies him some property right to which he is entitled are the same as if he were entitled to some right or property from a natural person or a private corporation which has refused to concede it. If the contingencies have arisen in which the association has agreed to pay him a sum of money, an action may be maintained therefor as in the case of any other creditor against a debtor; Supreme Sitting Order of Iron Hall v. Stein, 120 Ind. 270, 22 N. E. 136; Supreme Lodge of Ancient Order of United Workmen v. Zuhlke, 129 Ill. 298, 21 N. E. 789.

See Barbour on Parties; 2 L. R. A. (N. S.) 789, n.; BY-LAW; CLUB; RELIGIOUS SOCIETY; CHURCH; BENEFICIAL SOCIETY; ASSOCIATION; AMOTION; DISFRANCHISEMENT. The subject is treated with fulness in Thomps. Corp. 806-930. See State v. Chamber of Commerce, 47 Wis. 670.

EXTENSION. This term is applied among merchants to signify an agreement made between a debtor and his creditors, by which the latter, in order to enable the former, embarrassed in his circumstances, to retrieve his standing, agree to wait for a definite length of time after their several claims become due and payable, before they will demand payment. It is often done by the issue of notes of various maturities.

Among the French, a similar agreement is known by the name of attermolement. Meriin, Répert. mot Attermolement.

EXTENSION OF PATENT (sometimes termed Renewal of Patent). Under the earlier patent acts (1836 and 1848) a patent was granted for the term of fourteen years. But the law made provision that when any patentee, without neglect or fault on his part, had failed to obtain a reasonable remuneration for the time, ingenuity, and expense bestowed upon the same and the introduction thereof into use, he might obtain an extension of such patent for the term of seven years longer. No extension could be granted after the patent had once expired. The extension was intended for the sole benefit of the inventor; and where it was made to appear that he would receive no benefit therefrom, it would not be granted. The assignee, grantee, or licensee of an interest in the original patent retained no right in the extension, unless by reason of some stipulation to that effect. Where any person had a right to use a specific machine under the original patent he still retained that right after the extension. By act March 2, 1861, it was provided that patents should be granted for the term of seventeen years and further extension was forbidden. Congress may still extend a patent.

EXTENT. A writ, issuing from the exchequer, by which the body, goods, and lands of the debtor may all be taken at once to satisfy the judgment.

It is so called because the sheriff is to cause the lands to be appraised at their full extended value before he delivers them to the plaintiff. Fitzh. N. B. 131. The writ originally lay to enforce judgments in case of recognizances or debts acknowledged on statutes merchant or staple; see stat. 13 Edw. I. de Mercatoribus; 27 Edw. III. c. 9; and by 33 Hen. VIII. c. 39, was extended to debts due the crown. The term is sometimes used in the various states of the United States to denote writs which give the creditor possession of the debtor's lands for a limited time till the debt be paid. Roberts v. Whiting, 16 Mass. 186.

Extent in aid is an extent issued at the suit or instance of a crown-debtor against a person indebted to himself. This writ was much abused, owing to some peculiar privileges possessed by crown-debtors, and its use was regulated by stat. 57 Geo. III. c. 117. See 3 Bla. Com. 419.

Extent in chief is an extent issued to take a debtor's lands into the possession of the crown.

Manorial extent. A survey of a manor made by a jury of tenants, often of unfree men sworn to sit for the particulars of each tenancy, and containing the smallest details as to the nature of the service due.

These manorial extents "were made in the interest of the lords, who were anxious that all due services should be done; but they imply that other and greater services are not due, that the customary tenants, even though they be unfree men, owe these services for their tenements, no less and no more. Statements that the tenants are not bound to do services of a particular kind are not very uncommon;" 1 Poll. & Maitl. 343. "Many admissions against their own (the lords) interests the extent of their manors may contain; they suffer it to be recorded that a 'day's work' ends at noon, that in return for some works they must provide food, even that the work is not worth the food that has to be provided; but they do not admit that for certain causes, and for certain causes only, may they take these tenements into their own hands. As a matter of fact it is seldom of an actual ejectment that the peasant has to complain;" id. 359. Many examples of the manorial extents have been preserved in the monastic cartularies and elsewhere. "Among the most accessible are the Boldon Book (printed at the end of the official edition of the Domesday); the Black Book of Peterborough, the Domesday of St. Paul's, the Worcester Register, the Battle Cartulary, all published by the Camden Society; the Ramsey, Gloucester, and Malmesbury Cartularies or registers published in the Rolls series; the Burton Cartulary of the Salt Society and the Yorkshire Inquisitions of the Yorkshire Record Society;" id. 189.

The "extents" of manors are descriptions which give the numbers and names of the tenants, the size of their holdings, the legal kind of their tenure and the kind and amount of their service; Maitland, Material for Hist. E. L. in 2 Sel. Essays in Anglo-Amer. Leg. Hist. 87.

EXTENUATION. That which renders a crime or tort less heinous than it would be without it. It is opposed to aggravation.

In general, extenuating circumstances go in mitigation of punishment in criminal cases, or of damages in those of a civil nature.

EX TERRITORIALITY. The exemption from the operation of the ordinary laws of the state accorded to foreign monarchs temporarily within the state and their retinue, to diplomatic agents and the members of their household, to consuls in non-Christian states, and to foreign men of war in port. 1 Opp. 460-469. See AMBASSADOR; CONFLICT OF LAWS; PRIVILEGE FROM ARREST.

EXTINGUISHMENT. The destruction of a right or contract. The act by which a contract is made void. The annihilation of a collateral thing or subject in the subject itself out of which it is derived. Prest. Merg. 9. For the distinction between an extinguishment and passing a right, see 2 Sharsw. Bla. Com. 325.

An extinguishment may be by matter of fact and by matter of law. It is by matter of fact either express, as when one receives satisfaction and full payment of a debt and the creditor releases the debtor; Jackson v. Shaffer, 11 Johns. (N. Y.) 513; or implied, as when a person hath a yearly rent out of lands and becomes owner, either by descent or purchase, of the estate subject to the payment of the rent, and the latter is extinguished; Martin v. Searcy, 3 Stew. (Ala.) 50, 20 Am. Dec. 64; but the person must have as high an estate in the land as in the rent, or the rent will not be extinct; Co. Litt. 147 b.

There are numerous cases where the claim is extinguished by operation of law: for example where two persons are jointly but not severally liable for a simple contract-debt, a judgment obtained against one is at common law an extinguishment of the claim on the other debtor; Willings v. Consequa, 1 Pet. C. C. 301, Fed. Cas. No. 17,767; Tom v. Goodrich, 2 Johns. (N. Y.) 213.

A conveyance of mortgaged land by the mortgagor to the mortgagee extinguishes the mortgage; Lyman v. Gedney, 114 Ill. 388, 29 N. E. 282, 55 Am. Rep. 871. Taking a note for the amount due does not deprive a claimant of his right to a lien, but merely suspends its enforcement until the note is payable; Keogh Mfg. Co. v. Eisenberg, 7 Misc. 79, 27 N. Y. Supp. 356.

See Co. Litt. 147 b; Morris v. Brady, 5 Whart. (Pa.) 541; Derby Bank v. Landon, 3 Conn. 62; Jackson v. Shaffer, 11 Johns. (N. Y.) 513; Cattel v. Warwick, 6 N. J. L. 190; McMurphy v. Minot, 4 N. H. 251; Caldwell v. Fulton, 31 Pa. 475, 72 Am. Dec. 760; Boston & P. R. Corp. v. Doherty, 154 Mass. 314, 28 N. E. 277; Fitzpatrick v. R. R., 84 Me. 33, 24 Atl. 432; Sowles v. Witters, 54 Fed. 568; I. Smith & Son Co. v. Parsons, 37 Neb. 677, 56 N. W. 326.

EXTINGUISHMENT OF COMMON. Loss of the right to have common. This may happen from various causes; by the owner of the common right becoming owner of the fee; by severance from the land; by release; by approvement; 2 Steph. Com. 41; Co. Litt. 280; 1 Bacon, Abr. 628; Cro. Eliz. 594.

EXTINGUISHMENT OF COPYHOLD. This takes place by a union of the copyhold and freehold estate in the same person; also by an act of the tenant showing an intention not to hold any longer of his lord; Hutt. 81; Cro. Eliz. 21; Wms. R. P. 287; Watk. Copyh.

EXTINGUISHMENT OF A DEBT. Destruction of a debt. This may be by the creditor's accepting a higher security; 1 Salk. 304; Davidson v. Kelly, 1 Md. 492; Brewer v. Branch Bank, 24 Ala. 439. A judgment recovered extinguishes the original debt; Gibbs v. Bryant, 1 Pick. (Mass.) 118. A trust deed given to secure the payment of a bond is not affected by the rendition of a judgment on the bond, since the original debt is not thereby merged, but only the form of the evidence of the debt charged; Gibson v. Green's Adm'r, 89 Va. 524, 16 S. E. 661, 37 Am. St. Rep. 888. A debt evidenced by a note may be extinguished by a surrender of the note; Bryant v. Smith, 10 Cush. (Mass.) 169; Albert's Ex'rs v. Ziegler's Ex'rs, 29 Pa. 50; Sherman v. Sherman, 3 Ind. 337. As to the effect of payment in extinguishing a debt, see PAYMENT.

EXTINGUISHMENT OF RENT. A destruction of the rent by a union of the title to the lands and the rent in the same person. Termes de la Ley; Cowell; 3 Sharsw. Bla. Com. 325, note. A ground rent in Pennsylvania is usually extinguished by a conveyance thereof from the owner of the ground rent to the terre-tenant.

EXTINGUISHMENT OF WAYS. Destruction of a right of way, effected usually by a purchase of the close over which it lies by the owner of the right of way. 2 Washb. R. P.

EXTORSIVELY. A technical word used in indictments for extortion.

When a person is charged with extorsively taking, the very import of the word shows that he is not acquiring possession of his own; 4 Cox, Cr. Cas. 387. In North Carolina the crime may be charged without using this word; State v. Dickens, 2 N. C. 406.

EXTORTION. The unlawful taking by any officer, by color of his office, of any money or thing of value that is not due to him, or more than is due, or before it is due. 4 Bla. Com. 141; Com. v. Saulsbury, 152 Pa. 554, 25 Atl. 610; 1 Hawk. Pl. Cr. c. 68, s. 1; 1 Russ. Cr.* 144; 2 Bish. Cr. L. 390; U. S. v. Deaver, 14 Fed. 595.

At common law, any oppression by color of right; but technically the taking of money by an officer, by reason of his office, where none at all was due, or when it was not yet due. The obtaining of money by force or fear is not extortion; People v. Barondess, 61 Hun 571, 16 N. Y. Supp. 436; Whart. Cr. L. 833.

In a large sense the term includes any oppression under color of right; but it is generally and constantly used in the more limited technical sense above given.

The incumbent of an office, which it was attempted to create by an unconstitutional statute, cannot be guilty of extortion, as he is neither a de jure nor a de facto officer; Kitby v. State, 57 N. J. L. 320, 31 Atl. 213.

To constitute extortion, there must be the receipt of money or something of value; the taking a promissory note which is void is not sufficient to make an extortion; Com. v. Cony, 2 Mass. 523; Com. v. Pease, 16 Mass. 93. See Bacon, Abr.; Co. Litt. 168. It is extortion and oppression for an officer to take money for the performance of his duty, even though it be in the exercise of a discretionary power; 2 Burr. 927. See People v. Whaley, 6 Cow. 661; Helser v. Pott, 3 Pa. 183; Com. v. Saulsbury, 152 Pa. 554, 25 Atl. 610; Com. v. Bagley, 7 Pick. (Mass.) 279; 4 Cox, Cr. Cas. 387. See Brackenridge v. State, 27 Tex. App. 513, 11 S. W. 630, 4 L. R. A. 360; People v. Barondess, 133 N. Y. 649, 31 N. E. 240.

EXTRA-DOTAL PROPERTY. In Louisiana this term designates that property which forms no part of the dowry of a woman, and which is also called paraphernal property. Civ. Code, art. 2315.

EXTRA-JUDICIAL. That which does not belong to the judge or his jurisdiction, notwithstanding which he takes cognizance of it. Extra-judicial judgments and acts are absolutely void. See CORAM NON JUDICE; Merlin, Répert., Excès de Pouvoir.

EXTRA QUATUOR MARIA (Lat. beyond four seas). Out of the realm. 1 Bla. Com. 157. See BEYOND SEA.

EXTRA SERVICES. When used with reference to officers it should be construed to embrace all services rendered by such for which no compensation is given by law. Board of Com'rs of Miami Co. v. Blake, 21 Ind. 32.

EXTRA TERRITORIUM. Beyond or outside of the territorial limits of a state. Milne v. Moreton, 6 Biun. (Pa.) 353, 6 Am. Dec. 466.

EXTRA VIAM. Out of the way. When, in an action of trespass, the defendant pleads a right of way, the defendant may reply extra viam, that the trespass was committed beyond the way, or make a new assignment. 16 East 343, 349.

EXTRACT. A part of a writing. In general, an extract is not evidence, because the whole of the writing may explain the part extracted, so as to give it a different sense; but sometimes extracts from public books are evidence, as extracts from the registers of births, marriages, and burials, kept according to law, when the whole of the matter has been extracted which relates to the cause or matter in issue.

EXTRADITION. (Lat. ex, from, traditio, handing over). The surrender by one sovereign state to another, on its demand, of persons charged with the commission of crime within its jurisdiction, that they may be dealt with according to its laws; the surrender of persons by one federal state to another, on its demand, pursuant to their federal constitution and laws.

Without treaty stipulations. Public jurists are not agreed as to whether extradition, independent of treaty stipulations, is a matter of imperative duty or of discretion merely. Some have maintained the doctrine that the obligation to surrender fugitive criminals is perfect, and the duty of fulfilling it is, therefore, imperative, especially where the crimes of which they are accused affected the peace and safety of the state; but others regard the obligation as imperfect in its nature, and a refusal to surrender such fugitives as affording no ground of offence. Of the former opinion are Grotius, Heineccius, Burlamaqui, Vattel, Rutherford, Schmelzing, and Kent; the latter opinion is maintained by Puffendorf, Voet, Martens, Klüber, Leyser, Kluit, Saalfeld, Schmaltz, Mittermeyer, Heffter, and Wheaton.

Except under the provisions of treaties, the delivery by one country to another of fugitives from justice is a matter of comity, not of obligation; U. S. v. Rauscher, 119 U. S. 407, 7 Sup. Ct. 234, 30 L. Ed. 425.

Many nations have practised extradition without treaty engagements to that effect, as the result of mutual comity and convenience; others have refused. The United States has always declined to surrender criminals unless bound by treaty to do so; 1 Kent 39 n.; 1 Opin. Attys. Gen. 511; 6 id. 85, 431; People v. Curtis, 50 N. Y. 321, 10 Am. Rep. 483; Holmes v. Jennison, 14 Pet. (U. S.) 540, 10 L. Ed. 579; Ex parte Holmes, 12 Vt. 631. The existence of an extradition treaty does not prohibit the surrender by either country of a person charged with a crime not enumerated in the treaty; Ex parte Foss, 102 Cal. 347, 36 Pac. 669, 25 L. R. A. 593, 41 Am. St. Rep. 182. No state has an absolute right to demand of another the delivery of a fugitive criminal, though it has what is called an imperfect right, but a refusal to deliver the criminal is no just cause of war. Per Tilghman, C. J., in Com. v. Deacon, 10 S. & R. (Pa.) 125.

Under treaty stipulations. The sovereignty of the United States, as it respects foreign states, being vested by the constitution in the federal government, it appertains to it exclusively to perform the duties of extradition which, by treaties, it may assume; Holmes v. Jennison, 14 Pet. (U. S.) 540, 10 L. Ed. 579; U. S. v. Rauscher, 119 U. S. 407, 7 Sup. Ct. 234, 30 L. Ed. 425; and, to enable the executive to discharge such duties, congress passed the acts of Aug. 12, 1848, July 12, 1889, and June 6, 1900. The general government alone has the power to enact laws for the extradition of foreign criminals. It possesses that power under the treaty power in the constitution; Holmes v. Jennison, 14 Pet. (U. S.) 540, 10 L. Ed. 579; People v. Curtis, 50 N. Y. 321, 10 Am. Rep. 483; In re De Giacomo, 12 Blatch. 391, Fed. Cas. 3,747.

While a violation of an extradition treaty with Italy might render the treaty denounceable by the United States, it does not render it void and of no effect. The refusal of Italy to surrender its nationals has not had the effect of abrogating the treaty but of merely placing the government in the position of having the right to denounce it; Charlton v. Kelly, 229 U. S. 447, 33 Sup. Ct. 945, 57 L. Ed. —.

In the absence of a treaty, it has been said the president has no power as well as no duty to surrender a fugitive; Ex parte McCabe, 46 Fed. 363, 12 L. R. A. 589. As to whether congress has this power was said in Neely v. Henkel, 180 U. S. 109, 21 Sup. Ct. 302, 45 L. Ed. 448, to be an undecided question. It was there said to be competent for congress to enforce or give efficacy to the provisions of the treaty between the U. S. and Spain with respect to Cuba, and that the act of June 6, 1900, providing for the extradition of criminals in certain cases "to foreign countries or territories" occupied by or under the control of the United States was constitutional. See 14 Harv. L. Rev. 607.

Treaties have been made between the United States and many foreign powers for the mutual surrender of persons charged with certain crimes. These treaties may be found in full in the United States Statutes at Large, in 2 Moore on Extradition 1072; Haswell, Treaties, etc., U. S.; see 4 Moore, Int. L. 146.

The United States interstate extradition laws extend to Porto Rico; People v. Bingham, 211 U. S. 468, 29 Sup. Ct. 190, 53 L. Ed. 286; and to any portion of the country not within the limits of a state, but organized under the laws of congress, with an executive, legislative and judicial system of its own; In re Lane, 135 U. S. 443, 10 Sup. Ct. 760, 34 L. Ed. 219; this does not include the Cherokee Nation; Ex parte Morgan, 20 Fed. 208, approved in People v. Bingham, 211 U. S. 468, 29 Sup. Ct. 190, 53 L. Ed. 286; nor (at that time) Oklahoma; In re Lane, 135 U. S. 443, 10 Sup. Ct. 760, 34 L. Ed. 219.

The general principle of international law is that in all cases of extradition the act done on account of which extradition is demanded must be considered a crime by both countries. For nearly all crimes, the laws of the states, and not the enactments of congress, must be looked to for the definition of the offence; Wright v. Henkel, 190 U. S. 40, 23 Sup. Ct. 781, 47 L. Ed. 948; Pettit v. Walshe, 194 U. S. 210, 24 Sup. Ct. 657, 48 L. Ed. 938. Where a British fugitive was demanded in New York, and the British and New York statutes both covered the publication of fraudulent statements by corporate officers, it was held that the two statutes were substantially analogous under an extradition treaty relating to fraud by corporate officers; Wright v. Henkel, 190 U. S. 40, 23 Sup. Ct. 781, 47 L. Ed. 948.

In the construction and carrying out of such treaties, the ordinary technicalities of criminal proceedings are applicable only to a limited extent. Proceedings for surrender simply demand of the accused that he shall do what all good citizens are required and ought to be willing to do, viz. submit themselves to the law of their country. Care should be taken that the treaty be not made a pretext for collecting private debts, wreaking individual malice, or forcing the surrender of political offenders; but where the proceeding is manifestly taken in good faith, a technical non-compliance with some formality should not be allowed to stand in the way of a faithful discharge of our obligations; Grin v. Shine, 187 U. S. 181, 23 Sup. Ct. 98, 47 L. Ed. 130.

When a person is held in custody as a fugitive from justice under an extradition warrant in proper form and showing upon its face all that is required by law to be shown, he should not be discharged from custody until it is made clearly to appear that he is not a fugitive from justice within the meaning of the constitution and laws of the United States; People v. Pease, 207 U. S. 100, 28

The extradition act of Canada provides that a prisoner shall be surrendered only upon such evidences of criminality as would, under the Canadian law, justify his commitment for trial if the crime had been committed in Canada. Canadian law should determine whether the act alleged constitutes one of the extradition crimes; 6 B. & S. 522; 4 U. C. P. R. 215. The further question as to whether the act must also be shown to be a crime according to the laws of the demanding country was raised but not decided in 31 Can. L. J. 594.

The preliminary examination of a person sought to be extradited under the treaties of August 9, 1842, and July 12, 1889, between the United States and Great Britain on a conviction of murder, must be had in the state where he was arrested, in view of the tenth article of the earlier treaty providing that the alleged fugitive criminal shall be arrested and delivered up only upon such evidence of criminality as, according to the laws of the place where he is found, would justify his arrest and commitment for trial if the crime had been committed there, and of the proviso in the sundry civil appropriations act of August 18, 1894, by which it is made the duty of a marshal arresting a person charged with any offence to take him before the nearest United States commissioner, or judicial officer having jurisdiction, for a hearing, commitment, or taking bail for trial, notwithstanding those parts of the act of August 12, 1848, and of R. S. § 5270, which provide for bringing the accused in extradition proceedings before the justice, judge or commissioner who issued the warrant of arrest; Pettit v. Walshe, 194 U. S. 205, 24 Sup. Ct. 657, 48 L. Ed. 938.

Desertion from a foreign army or navy is said not to be an extraditable offence; 15 Harv. L. Rev. 657; but in Tucker v. Alexandroff, 183 U. S. 424, 22 Sup. Ct. 195, 46 L. Ed. 264, where the provisions of the treaty with Russia for the extradition of deserters from ships of war and merchant vessels were under consideration, it was held that a deserting seaman might be extradited, though the vessel to which he had been assigned was in the course of building and had not yet been accepted by the Russian government.

The treaties enumerate the crimes for which persons may be surrendered, and in some other particulars limit their own application. They also contain some provisions relating to the mode of procedure; but, as it was doubted whether such stipulations had the force of law; Park. Cr. Cas. 108; congress passed the act of August 12, 1848, entitled "An act for giving effect to certain treaty stipulations between this and foreign governments for the apprehension and delivery up of certain offenders." 9 Stat. L.

302. This has since been amended; and the statutes on the subject are found in U. S. R. S. §§ 5270-5277, as amended June 6, 1900.

These acts embody those provisions contained in the treaties relating to the procedure, and contain others designed to facilitate the execution of the duty assumed by treaty.

The following are the main provisions of the law relating to the practice: 1. A complaint under oath or affirmation charging the person with the commission of one of the enumerated crimes. 2. A warrant may be issued by any of the justices of the supreme court or judges of the several circuit or district courts of the United States, or of a court of record of general jurisdiction of any state, or the commissioners authorized so to do by any of the courts of the United States. 3. The person arrested is to be brought before the officer issuing the warrant, to the end that the evidence of criminality may be considered. 4. Copies of the depositions upon which an original warrant in the country demanding the fugitive may have been granted, certified under the hand of the person issuing such warrant, and attested upon the oath of the party producing them to be true copies of the original depositions, may be received in evidence of the criminality of the person apprehended. 5. The degree of evidence must be such as, according to the laws of the place where the person arrested shall be found, would justify his apprehension and commitment for trial if the crime or offence had there been committed. 6. If the evidence is deemed sufficient, the officer hearing it must certify the same, together with a copy of all the testimony taken before him, to the secretary of state, and commit the prisoner to the proper gaol until the surrender be made, which must be within two calendar months. 7. The secretary of state, on the proper demand being made by the foreign government, orders, under his hand and seal of office, in the name and by authority of the president, the person so committed to be delivered to such person as may be authorized, in the name and on behalf of such foreign government, to receive him. 8. The demand must be made by and upon those officers who represent the sovereign power of their states. 7 Op. Attys. Gen. 6; 8 id. 521. By act of Aug. 3, 1882, it is directed that all extradition cases under treaties shall be heard publicly; 22 Stat. 215.

The usual method is for some police officer or other special agent, after obtaining the proper papers in his own country, to repair to the foreign country, carry the case through with the aid of his minister, receive the fugitive, and conduct him back to the country having jurisdiction of the crime; 8 Op. Attys. Gen. 521. In all the treaties the parties stipulate upon mutual requisitions, etc., to deliver up to justice all persons who, being charged with crime, shall seek an asylum or shall be found in the territories of the other. The terms of the stipulation embrace cases of absence without flight as well as those of actual flight; 8 Op. Attys. Gen. 306.

The treaties of the United States do not guarantee an asylum to a fugitive from any foreign country. They only provide how he shall be deprived of an asylum; Ker v. Illinois, 119 U. S. 436, 7 Sup. Ct. 225, 30 L. Ed. 421. See as to the right of asylum 6 L. Mag. & Rev. 4th, 262. If the prisoner escapes, he may be retaken in the same manner as any person accused of any crime against the laws in force in that part of the United States to which he shall so escape shall be retaken on an escape; U. S. R. S. § 5272. The expense of the apprehension and delivery shall be borne by the party making the requisition.

Between the several states. By art. iv. sec. ii. of the constitution of the United States, it is provided that "a person charged in any state with treason, felony, or other crime, who shall flee from justice and be found in another state, shall, on demand of the executive authority of the state from which he fled, be delivered up to be removed to the state having the jurisdiction of the crime."

The act of congress of Feb. 12, 1793, U. S. R. S. §§ 5278, 5279, prescribed the mode of procedure in such cases. It requires, on demand of the executive authority of a state and production of a copy of an indictment found or an affidavit made before a magistrate charging the person demanded with treason, felony, or other crime, certified as authentic by the governor or chief magistrate of the state from whence the person so charged fled, that the executive authority of the state or territory to which such person shall have fled shall cause the person charged to be arrested and secured, and notice of the arrest to be given to the executive authority making such demand, or to the agent of such authority appointed to receive the fugitive, and cause the fugitive to be delivered to such agent when he shall appear; but if such agent do not appear within six months, the prisoner shall be discharged. It further provides that if any person shall by force set at liberty or rescue the fugitive from such agent while transporting the fugitive to the state or territory from which he fled, the person so offending shall, on conviction, be fined not exceeding five hundred dollars and be imprisoned not exceeding one year, and that all costs or expenses incurred in the apprehending, securing, and transmitting such fugitive shall be paid by the state or territory making the demand. U. S. Rev. Stat. § 5278-9.

In the execution of the obligation imposed by the constitution, the following points deserve attention:—

The crime, other than treason or felony, for which a person may be surrendered.

Some difference of opinion has prevailed on this subject, owing to some diversity of the criminal laws of the several states; but the better opinion appears to be that the terms of the constitution extend to all acts which by the laws of the state where committed are made criminal; 1 Kent 42; Johnston v. Riley, 13 Ga. 97; In re Fetter, 23 N. J. L. 311, 57 Am. Dec. 382; Kentucky v. Dennison, 24 How. (U. S.) 107, 16 L. Ed. 717; People v. Brady, 56 N. Y. 187. The word "crime" embraces every species of indictable offence; Kentucky v. Dennison, 24 How. (U. S.) 99, 16 L. Ed. 717; including an act not criminal at the time the constitution was adopted but made so afterwards; Howe v. Treasurer, 37 N. J. L. 147; People v. Brady, 56 N. Y. 182; and an act which is criminal under the law of the state from which the accused has fled, but is not so under the law of the state into which he has fled; Kentucky v. Dennison, 24 How. (U. S.) 103, 16 L. Ed. 1717.

That the courts of the asylum state have jurisdiction to pass upon the sufficiency of the requisition papers has been held; Jones v. Leonard, 50 Ia. 110, 32 Am. Rep. 116; People v. Hyatt, 172 N. Y. 176, 64 N. E. 825, 60 L. R. A. 774, 92 Am. St. Rep. 706, affirmed Hyatt v. New York, 188 U. S. 691, 23 Sup. Ct. 456, 47 L. Ed. 657; In re Waterman, 29 Nev. 288, 89 Pac. 291, 11 L. R. A. (N. S.) 424, 13 Ann. Cas. 926; that the accused should be permitted to show that the indictment or affidavit accompanying the requisition charged no crime under the laws of the demanding state, see Barriere v. State, 142 Ala. 72, 39 South. 55; Ex parte Slauson, 73 Fed. 666.

In Hyatt v. New York, 188 U. S. 691, 23 Sup. Ct. 456, 47 L. Ed. 657, it is said: Upon the executive of the state in which the accused is found rests the responsibility of determining whether he is a fugitive from the demanding state. He does not fail in duty if he makes it a condition precedent to the surrender of the accused that it be shown to him by competent proof that the accused is in fact a fugitive from the justice of the demanding state; and in People v. Brady, 56 N. Y. 182, that the courts have jurisdiction to interfere by habeas corpus, and to examine the grounds upon which an executive warrant for the apprehension of an alleged fugitive from justice from another state is issued, and in case the papers are defective and insufficient, to discharge the prisoner.

It must appear to the governor of the asylum state, before he can lawfully comply with it: First, that the person demanded is substantially charged with a crime against the laws of the demanding state, by an indictment or an affidavit certified as authentic by the governor of the demanding state; and, second, that the person demanded is a fugitive from the justice of the demanding state; Roberts v. Rellly, 116 U. S. 80, 6 Sup. Ct. 291, 29 L. Ed. 544. The first of these prerequisites is a question of law and is always open on the face of the papers to judicial inquiry under an application for a discharge under a writ of habeas corpus. The second is a question of fact, which the governor of the asylum state must decide. How far his decision may be reviewed judicially by habeas corpus, or whether it is not conclusive, are said to be questions not settled by harmonious judicial decisions, nor by any authoritative judgment by the Supreme Court; Appleyard v. Massachusetts, 203 U. S. 222, 27 Sup. Ct. 122, 51 L. Ed. 161; but it is conceded that the determination of the fact by the executive of the state in issuing his warrant of arrest, upon a demand made on that ground, whether the writ contains a recital of an express finding to that effect or not, must be regarded as sufficient to justify the removal, until the presumption in its favor is overthrown; In re Reggel, 114 U. S. 642, 5 Sup. Ct. 1148, 29 L. Ed. 250; Appleyard v. Massachusetts, 203 U. S. 222, 27 Sup. Ct. 122, 51 L. Ed. 161.

The motives which prompt the governor to issue his warrant are held not proper subjects of judicial inquiry; In re Moyer, 12 Idaho 250, 85 Pac. 897, 12 L. R. A. (N. S.) 227, 118 Am. St. Rep. 214; Com. v. Superintendent of Philadelphia County Prison, 220 Pa. 401, 69 Atl. 916, 21 L. R. A. (N. S.) 939. Jurisdiction to take the action complained of is the test; id. The governor need not demand independent proof, apart from the requisition papers, that accused was a fugitive from justice; Pettibone v. Nichols, 203 U. S. 192, 27 Sup. Ct. 111, 51 L. Ed. 148. When the person for whom a requisition is made is in prison in the asylum state under conviction of crime, the governor cannot deliver him up; Opinion of Justices, 201 Mass. 609, 89 N. E. 174, 24 L. R. A. (N. S.) 799, and note.

An indictment is not a prerequisite to extradition; Pierce v. Creecy, 210 U. S. 387, 28 Sup. Ct. 714, 52 L. Ed. 1113. Extradition is a mere proceeding in securing arrest and attention; a complaint before a committing magistrate is a charge of crime; In re Strauss, 197 U. S. 324, 25 Sup. Ct. 535, 49 L. Ed. 774.

The indictment, in order to constitute a sufficient charge of crime to warrant interstate rendition, need show no more than that the accused was substantially charged with crime; Pierce v. Creecy, 210 U. S. 387, 28 Sup. Ct. 714, 52 L. Ed. 1113. If more were required, it would impose upon courts at the trial under writs of habeas corpus the duty of a critical examination of the laws of the states with whose jurisprudence and criminal procedure they can have but a general acquaintance.

If the accusation is by affidavit, it should be sufficiently full and explicit to justify arrest and commitment for hearing; Ex parte Smith, 3 McLean 121, Fed. Cas. No. 12,968; In re Heyward, 1 Sandf. (N. Y.) 701; In re

Fetter, 23 N. J. L. 311, 57 Am. Dec. 382; State v. Patterson, 116 Mo. 505, 22 S. W. 696; In re Hooper, 52 Wis. 699, 58 N. W. 741. The demand must be made by the governor of the state; Com. v. Hall, 9 Gray (Mass.) 262, 69 Am. Dec. 285.

The accused must have fled from the state in which the crime was committed; and of this the executive authority of the state upon which the demand is made should be reasonably satisfied. This is sometimes done by affidavit. The governor upon whom the demand is made acts judicially, so far as to see whether the case is a proper one; In re Greenough, 31 Vt. 279; but he cannot look behind the indictment in which the crime is charged; In re Voorhees, 32 N. J. L. 145; Taylor v. Taintor, 16 Wall. (U. S.) 366, 21 L. Ed. 287. The duty to surrender the fugitive is obligatory; Kentucky v. Dennison, 24 How. (U. S.) 103, 16 L. Ed. 717; Taylor v. Taintor, 16 Wall. (U. S.) 370, 21 L. Ed. 287. But in the case of a conflict of jurisdiction between the two states the surrender may be postponed; Taylor v. Taintor, 16 Wall. (U. S.) 366, 21 L. Ed. 287; In re Briscoe, 51 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 422; Com. v. Wright, 158 Mass. 149, 33 N. E. 82, 19 L. R. A. 206, 35 Am. St. Rep. 475.

It is not necessary that the party charged should have left the state in which the crime is alleged to have been committed, after an indictment found or for the purpose of escaping a prosecution anticipated or begun; Ex parte Brown, 28 Fed. 653; but simply that having committed a crime within a state, when he is sought to be subjected to its criminal process, he has left its jurisdiction and is found within another state; In re Reggel, 114 U. S. 642, 5 Sup. Ct. 1148, 29 L. Ed. 250; Renaud v. Abbott, 116 U. S. 287, 6 Sup. Ct. 1194, 29 L. Ed. 629; Streep v. U. S., 160 U. S. 128, 16 Sup. Ct. 244, 40 L. Ed. 365; Moyer v. Nichols, 203 U. S. 221, 27 Sup. Ct. 121, 51 L. Ed. 160; Ex parte Brown, 28 Fed. 653; In re Cook, 49 Fed. 833; In re White, 55 Fed. 54, 5 C. C. A. 29; In re Bloch, 87 Fed. 981; Kingsbury's Case, 106 Mass. 223. Whether the motive for leaving was to escape prosecution or not, his return to answer the charges against him is equally within the spirit and purpose of the statute; and the simple fact that he was not within the state to answer its criminal process, when required, renders him a fugitive from justice, regardless of his purpose in leaving; State v. Richter, 37 Minn. 436, 35 N. W. 9. That the accused did not believe he had committed any crime against the demanding state will not prevent his being a fugitive from justice; Appleyard v. Massachusetts, 203 U. S. 222, 27 Sup. Ct. 122, 51 L. Ed. 161, 7 Ann. Cas. 1073; or that he commits a crime within a state and then simply returns to his own home in another state; Ex parte Swearingen, 13 S. C. 74; In re Mohr, 73 Ala.

503, 49 Am. Rep. 63. He is held not to be a fugitive from justice if he has never been in the demanding state, but is alleged to have obtained money by false pretences through the mails; State of Tennessee v. Jackson, 36 Fed. 258, 1 L. R. A. 370. In In re Robinson, 29 Neb. 135, 45 N. W. 267, 8 L. R. A. 398, 26 Am. St. Rep. 378, the court ordered the discharge of a prisoner because he had been forcibly brought into the state without requisition papers; and to the same effect, State v. Simmons, 39 Kan. 262, 18 Pac. 177. Crimes which are not actually, but only constructively, committed within the demanding state do not fall within the class of cases embraced by the constitution or acts of congress. Not that the jurisdiction to try the crime is lacking, but that no one can in any sense be alleged to have fled from a state in which he has never been corporally present since the commission of the crime; In re Mohr, 73 Ala. 503, 49 Am. Rep. 63; In re Reggel, 114 U. S. 642, 5 Sup. Ct. 1148, 29 L. Ed. 250; State v. Hall, 115 N. C. 811, 20 S. E. 729, 28 L. R. A. 289, 44 Am. St. Rep. 501, where the constructive presence of a murderer in the state, where the victim was struck by a bullet fired across the state boundary, was held not sufficient to make him a fugitive from that state when found in the state from which the shot was fired.

In criminal cases, a forcible abduction is no sufficient reason why the party should not answer when brought within the jurisdiction of the court which has the right to try him for such offence, and presents no valid objection to his trial in such court; Ker v. Illinois, 119 U. S. 436, 7 Sup. Ct. 225, 30 L. Ed. 421; Ex parte Scott, 9 Barn. & C. 446; State v. Smith, 1 Bail. (S. C.) 283, 19 Am. Dec. 679; Dows' Case, 18 Pa. 37. Although it has been frequently held that if a defendant in a civil case be brought within the presence of the court by a trick or a device, the service will be set aside, and he will be discharged from custody; Wells v. Gurney, 8 Barn. & C. 769; Metcalf v. Clark, 41 Barb. (N. Y.) 45. The law will not permit a person to be kidnapped or decoyed within the jurisdiction for the purpose of being compelled to answer to a mere private claim, but in criminal cases the interests of the public override that which is, after all, a mere privilege from arrest; In re Johnson, 167 U. S. 120, 17 Sup. Ct. 735, 42 L. Ed. 103.

As between the states, fugitives from justice have no right of asylum, in the international sense; and a fugitive who has been returned by interstate rendition may be tried for other offences than that for which his return was demanded, without violating any rights secured by the constitution or laws of the United States; Mahon v. Justice, 127 U. S. 700, 8 Sup. Ct. 1204, 32 L. Ed. 283; Lascelles v. Georgia, 148 U. S. 537, 13 Sup. Ct. 687, 37 L. Ed. 549, affirming id., 90 Ga. 347, 16 S. E. 945,

In some states the courts have overruled former decisions, bringing themselves in accord with the United States supreme court; Petry v. Leidigh, 47 Neb. 126, 66 N. W. 308; see In re Robinson, 29 Neb. 135, 45 N. W. 267, 8 L. R. A. 398, 26 Am. St. Rep. 378; In re Brophy, 2 Ohio N. P. 230; Ex parte McKnight, 3 Ohio N. P. 255; id., 48 Ohio St. 588, 28 N. Habeas corpus will not lie to release from custody one who has been forcibly abducted from another state and brought to trial into the jurisdiction of a tribunal having jurisdiction of the offence charged; Ex parte Davis, 51 Tex. Cr. R. 608, 103 S. W. 891, 12 L. R. A. (N. S.) 225, 14 Ann. Cas. 522; and to the same effect Ker v. Illinois, 119 U. S. 436, 7 Sup. Ct. 225, 30 L. Ed. 421, where the prisoner was kidnapped in Peru, without any pretence of authority under the treaty or from the United States, and brought to Illinois; his trial in the state courts was held not to involve a violation of the due process clause of the constitution, nor of the treaty with Peru. The principle upon which the judgment rested was that when a criminal is brought into, or is in fact within, the custody of the state, charged with a crime against its laws, the state may, so far as the constitution and laws of the United States are concerned, proceed against him for the crime, and need not inquire as to the particular methods employed to bring him into the state. In meeting the contention that the accused, by virtue of the treaty with Peru, acquired by his residence a right of asylum, it was said: "There is no language in this treaty, or in any other treaty made by this country on the subject of extradition of which we are aware, which says in terms that a party fleeing from the United States to escape punishment for crime becomes thereby entitled to an asylum in the country to which he has fled." The right of a government voluntarily to give an asylum is different from the right to demand security in such asylum. The treaty, so far as it regulates the right of asylum at all, is intended to limit this right in one who is proved to be a criminal fleeing from justice, so that on proper demand and proceedings had therein the government of the country of the asylum shall deliver him up to the country where the crime was committed. To this extent, and to this alone, the treaty does regulate or impose a restriction upon the right of the government of the country of the asylum to protect the criminal from removal therefrom. In Mahon v. Justice, 127 U. S. 700, 8 Sup. Ct. 1204, 32 L. Ed. 283, the governor of Kentucky made a requisition upon the governor of West Virginia for one charged with the crime of murder in Kentucky, alleged to have fled from its jurisdiction and taken refuge in West Virginia. While the two governors were in correspondence on the subject, a body of armed men without warrant or other legal process, arrested the accused in West Virginia and delivered him to the jailor of Pike county, Kentucky, in the courts of which he stood indicted for murder. Thereupon the governor of West Virginia, on behalf of that state, applied to the district court of the United States for the Kentucky district for a writ of habeas corpus and his return to the jurisdiction of West Virginia. The supreme court held that no mode is provided by which a person unlawfully abducted from one state to another can be restored to the state from which he was taken, if held upon any process of law for offences against the state to which he has been carried. The decision was by a divided court, but its authority is said to be none the less controlling; Moyer v. Nichols, 203 U. S. 221, 27 Sup. Ct. 121, 51 L. Ed. 160; affirming In re Moyer, 12 Idaho 250, 85 Pac. 897, 12 L. R. A. (N. S.) 227, 118 Am. St. Rep. 214. In Cook v. Hart, 146 U. S. 183, 13 Sup. Ct. 40, 36 L. Ed. 934, it was said that the cases of Ker v. Illinois, 119 U. S. 436, 7 Sup. Ct. 225, 30 L. Ed. 421, and Mahon v. Justice, 127 U. S. 700, 8 Sup. Ct. 1204, 32 L. Ed. 283, established two propositions: 1. That that court will not interfere to relieve persons who have been arrested and taken by violence from one state to another, where they are held under process legally issued from the courts of the latter state. 2. That the question of the applicability of this doctrine to a particular case is as much the province of the state courts as a question of common law, or of the law of nations, as it is of the courts of the United States. If a forcible abduction from another state and conveyance within the jurisdiction of the court holding him is no objection to his detention and trial for the offence charged, no more is the objection allowed if the abduction has been accomplished under the forms of law. The act complained of does not relate to the restraint from which the petitioner seeks to be relieved, but to the means by which he was brought within the jurisdiction of the court under whose process he is held; Pettibone v. Nichols, 203 U. S. 192, 27 Sup. Ct. 111, 51 L. Ed. 148, where conspiracy was charged against the governors of the states of Idaho and Colorado and other officers to secure the presence of Pettibone in the former state. It was held that the fundamental question was whether a United States circuit court, when asked upon habeas corpus to discharge a person held in actual custody by a state for trial in one of its courts, under an indictment charging a crime against its laws, can properly take into account the methods whereby the state obtained such custody, and that that question had been determined in the negative in Ker v. Illinois, 119 U. S. 436, 7 Sup. Ct. 225, 30 L. Ed. 421, and Mahon v. Justice, 127 U. S. 700, 8 Sup. Ct. 1204, 32 L. Ed. 283, supra.

The constitutional provision for interstate rendition warrants a surrender after conviction; In re Hope, 7 N. Y. C. R. R. 406, 10 N. Y. Supp. 28; but after serving his sentence the convict cannot be surrendered under a requisition from another state until he has had reasonable time to return to the state from which he was extradited; id.

Extradition proceedings may be made the basis of a suit for malicious prosecution; Castro v. De Uriarte, 16 Fed. 93.

See FUGITIVE FROM JUSTICE.

EXTRA JUDICIUM. Extra-judicial; out of the proper cause. Judgments rendered or acts done by a court which has no jurisdiction of the subject, or where it has no jurisdiction, are said to be extra-judicial.

EXTRANEUS. In Old English Law. One foreign born; a foreigner. 7 Rep. 16.

In Roman Law. An heir not born in the family of the testator. Those of a foreign state. The same as alienus. Vicat, Voc. Jur.; Du Cange.

EXTRAORDINARY. Beyond or out of the common order or rule; not usual, regular, or of a customary kind; not ordinary; remarkable; uncommon; rare. Ten Eyck v. Episcopal Church, 29 Abb. N. C. (N. Y.) 154, 20 N. Y. Supp. 157; The Titania, 19 Fed. 103.

EXTRATERRITORIALITY. A term formerly used to express the exemption from the obligation of the laws of a state granted to foreign diplomatic agents, war-ships, etc. Wheaton, § 224. It has now been generally replaced by the term "Exterritoriality" (q. v.). See also FOREIGN JUDGMENT; FOREIGN LAW; EQUITY. The term is used to indicate jurisdiction exercised by a nation in other countries, by treaty, as, by the United States in China or Egypt; or by its own ministers or consuls in foreign lands. Crime is said to be extraterritorial when committed in a country other than that of the forum in which the party is tried. See 2 Moore, Int. L. Dig.

EXTRAVAGANTES. In Canon Law. The name given to the constitutions of the popes posterior to the Clementines.

They are thus called, quasi vagantes extra corpus juris, to express that they were out of the canonical law, which at first contained only the decrees of Gratian: afterwards the Decretals of Gregory IX., the Sexte of Boniface VIII., the Clementines, and at last the Extravagantes, were added to it. There are the Extravagantes of John XXII., and the common Extravagantes. The first contain twenty epistles, decretals, or constitutions of that pope, divided under fifteen titles, without any subdivision into books. The others are epistles, decretals, or constitutions of the popes who occupied the holy see either before or after John XXII. They are divided into books, like the decretals.

EXTREMIS (Lat. in extremity). When a person is sick beyond the hope of recovery, and near death, he is said to be in extremis.

A will made in this condition, if made without undue influence, by a person of sound mind, is valid. As to the effect of declarations of persons in extremis, see DYING DECLARATIONS; DECLARATIONS.

EYE-WITNESS. One who saw the act or fact to which he testifies. When an eye-witness testifies, and is a man of intelligence and integrity, much reliance must be placed on his testimony.

EYOTT. A small island arising in a river. Fleta, l. 3, c. 2, s. b; Bracton, l. 2, c. 2. See ISLAND.

EYRE. A journey; a court of itinerant justices. In old English law applied to the judges who traveled on circuit to hold courts in the different counties. See JUSTICES IN EYRE.

EYRER. To go about. See EYRE.

F

F. The sixth letter of the alphabet. A fighter or maker of frays, if he had no ears, and a felon on being admitted to clergy, was to be branded in the cheek with this letter. Cowell; Jacob. Those who had been guilty of falsity were to be so marked. 2 Reeve, Hist. Eng. L. 392.

F. O. B. Free on board. A term frequently inserted in contracts for the sale of goods to be conveyed by ship, signifying that the buyer will be responsible for the cost of shipment. In London, when goods are so sold, the buyer is considered as the shipper and the goods are shipped at his risk; 3 Hurlst. & N. 484; 4 id. 822; 29 L. J. C. P. 213; Knapp Electrical Works v. Wire Co., 157 Ill. 456, 42 N. E. 147.

Its use extends to all carriers.

The ordinary effect is to pass title on delivery to the carrier; Hoffman v. Gosline, 172 Fed. 113, 96 C. C. A. 318; Murphy v. Lumber Co., 125 Wis. 363, 103 N. W. 1113; the railroad is the buyer's agent; Blakeslee Mfg. Co. v. Hilton, 5 Pa. Super. Ct. 184. Where machinery is sold f. o. b. cars at place of manufacture, title passes on delivery to the railroad; Dentzel v. Island Park Ass'n, 229 Pa. 403, 78 Atl. 935, 33 L. R. A. (N. S.) 54. Otherwise when f. o. b. at destination; Havens v. Fuel Co., 41 Neb. 153, 59 N. W. 681.

See FRAIS JUSQU'À BORD.

FABRIC LANDS. In English Law. Lands given for the repair, rebuilding, or maintenance of cathedrals or other churches.

It was the custom, says Cowell, for almost every one to give by will more or less to the fabric of the cathedral or parish church where he lived. These lands so given were called fabric lands, because given ad fabricam ecclesiæ reparandam (for repairing the fabric of the church). Called by the Saxons timber-lands. Cowell; Spelman, Gloss.

FABRICARE (Lat.). To make. Used in an indictment for forging a bill of lading; 1 Salk. 341.

FABRICATE. To invent; to devise falsely. Invent is sometimes used in a bad sense, but fabricate never in any other. To fabricate a story implies that it is so contrary to probability as to require the skill of a workman to induce belief in it. Crabbe, Syn. The word implies fraud or falsehood; a false or fraudulent concoction, knowing it to be wrong. L. R. 10 Q. B. 162.

FABULA. In old European law, a contract or covenant. Also, in the laws of the Lombards and Visigoths, a nuptial contract; a will. Burrill.

FACE. The outward appearance or aspect of a thing.

The words of a written paper in their apparent or obvious meaning, as, the face of a note, bill, bond, check, draft, judgment, record, or contract, which titles see. The face of a judgment is the sum for which it was rendered, exclusive of interest. Osgood v. Bringolf, 32 Ia. 265.

FACIAS (Lat. facere, to make, to do). That you cause. Occurring in the phrases scire facias (that you cause to know), feri facias (that you cause to be made), etc. Used also in the phrases Do ut facias (I give that you may do), Facio ut facias (I do that you may do), two of the four divisions of considerations made by Blackstone, 2 Com. 444.

FACILITIES. A name formerly given to certain notes of some of the banks in the state of Connecticut, which were made payable in two years after the close of the war of 1812. President, etc., of Springfield Bank v. Merrick, 14 Mass. 322.

As to facilities in transportation, see INTERSTATE COMMERCE COMMISSION.

FACIO UT DES (Lat. I do that you may give). An expression applied in the civil law to the consideration of that species of contract by which a person agrees to perform anything for a price either specifically mentioned or left to the determination of the law to set a value on it; as, when a servant hires himself to his master for certain wages or an agreed sum of money. 2 Bla. Com. 445. See CONSIDERATION.

FACIO UT FACIAS (Lat. I do that you may do). An expression used in the civil law to denote the consideration of that species of contract by which I agree with a man to do his work for him if he will do mine for me; or if two persons agree to marry together, or to do any other positive acts on both sides; or it may be to forbear on one side in consideration of something done on the other. 2 Bla. Com. 444. See CONSIDERATION.

FACSIMILE. An exact copy or accurate imitation of an original instrument.

In England, where the construction of a will may be affected by the appearance of the original paper, the court will order the probate to pass in facsimile as it may possibly help to show the meaning of the testator; 1 Wms. Ex. (7th ed.) 331, 386, 566. See PROBATE.

FACT (Lat. factum). An action; a thing done. A circumstance.

Fact (factum, fait) stands in lawbooks for: 1. An act; 2. For a completed and operative transaction brought about by sealing and executing a certain sort of writing, and so for the instrument itself, a deed (factum); 3. As designating what exists, in contradistinction to what should exist (de facto as contrasted with de jure); 4. As indicating things, events, actions, conditions, as happening, existing, really taking place. Thayer, Evid. 190.

Material facts are those which are essential to the right of action or defence. See Boggs & Leathe v. Ins. Co., 30 Mo. 68; Clark v. Ins. Co., 40 N. H. 338, 77 Am. Dec. 721.

Immaterial facts are those which are not essential to the right of action or defence. Material facts must be shown to exist; immaterial facts need not. As to what are questions of law for the court and of fact for the jury, see Wells, Law and Fact. As to pleading material facts, see Gould, Pl. c. 3, § 28.

Facts constituting a cause of action are those facts which the evidence upon the trial will prove, and not the evidence which will be required to prove the existence of such facts. Clay County v. Simonsen, 1 Dak. 403, 46 N. W. 592.

See Ram; Moore, Facts.

FACTIO TESTAMENTI (Lat.). In Civil Law. The power of making a will, including right and capacity. Also, the power of receiving under a will. Vicat, Voc. Jur.

FACTOR. An agent employed to sell goods or merchandise consigned or delivered to him, by or for his principal, for a compensation, commonly called factorage or commission. Pal. Ag. 13; Sto. Ag. § 33; Com. Dig. Merchant, B; Malynes, Lex Merc. 81; Beawes, Lex Merc. 44; 3 Chit. Com. L. 193; 2 Kent 622; 1 Bell, Comm. 385, § 408; 2 B. & Ald. 143.

An agent for the sale of goods in his possession or consigned to him. Lawson, R. & Rem. § 227.

A factor or commission merchant is one who has the actual or technical possession of goods or wares of another for sale. A merchandise broker is one who negotiates the sale of merchandise without having it in his possession or control. He is simply an agent with very limited powers; J. M. Robinson, Norton & Co. v. Cotton Factory, 124 Ky. 435, 99 S. W. 305, 102 S. W. 869, 8 L. R. A. (N. S.) 474, 14 Ann. Cas. 802.

When the agent accompanies the ship, taking a cargo aboard, and it is consigned to him for sale, and he is to purchase a return cargo out of the proceeds, such agent is properly called a factor; he is, however, usually known by the name of a supercargo (q. v.). Beawes, Lex Merc. 44; Livermore, Ag. 69; 1 Domat, b. 1, t. 16, § 3, art. 2.

A factor differs from a broker in some important particulars: namely, he may buy and sell for his principal in his own name, as well as in the name of his principal; on the contrary, a broker acting as such should buy and sell in the name of his principal; 2 B. & Ald. 143; 3 Kent 622; Slack v. Tucker, 23 Wall. (U. S.) 321, 23 L. Ed. 143; Ward v. Brandt, 11 Mart. O. S. (La.) 331, 13 Am. Dec. 352. Again, a factor is intrusted with possession, management, disposal, and control of the goods to be bought and sold, and has a special property and a lien on them; the broker, on the contrary, has usually no such possession, management, control, or disposal of the goods, nor any such special property or lien; Paley, Ag. 13; 1 Bell, Com. 385. The business of factors in the United States is usually done by commission merchants, who are known by that name, and the term factor is but little used; 1 Pars. Contr. 78. The term factor, however, is largely used in the Southern States in the cotton business, and in a different sense from commission merchant; Fordyce v. Peper, 16 Fed. 516. He not only sells cotton, but makes advances to the merchant or planter, in cash or goods, to be paid when the crop comes in. He thus has a lien upon the crop before it is shipped to him. In Alabama the term "commission merchant" as used in the revenue laws is synonymous with "factor"; Perkins v. State, 50 Ala. 154.

A domestic factor is one who resides in the same country with his principal.

By the usages of trade, or intention of law, when domestic factors are employed in the ordinary business of buying and selling goods, it is presumed that a reciprocal credit among the principal and the agent and third persons has been given. When a purchase has been made by such a factor, he, as well as his principal, is deemed liable for the debt; and in case of a sale the buyer is responsible both to the factor and principal for the purchase-money; but this presumption may be rebutted by proof of exclusive credit; Story, Ag. § 267, 291, 293; Paley, Ag. 243, 371; 9 B. & C. 78; 15 East 62.

A foreign factor is one who resides in a different country from his principal. 1 Term 112; 4 Maule & S. 576.

Foreign factors are held personally liable upon all contracts made by them for their employers, whether they describe themselves in the contract as agents or not. In such cases the presumption is that the credit is given exclusively to the factor. But this presumption may be rebutted by proof of a contrary agreement; Story, Ag. § 268; Mech. Ag. 1051; Bull, N. P. 130; 1 B. & P. 398; 9 B. & C. 78.

His duties. He is required to use reasonable skill and ordinary diligence in his vocation; 1 Ventr. 121; De Bavier v. Funke, 66 Hun 633, 21 N. Y. Supp. 410; Foster v. Bush, 104 Ala. 662, 16 South. 625. If for any reason not tortious, he delays selling the goods consigned to him, he is not liable for a subsequent loss occurring through an act of God; Dunbar v. Gregg, 44 Ill. App. 527. He is bound to obey his instructions; Marfield v. Goodhue, 3 N. Y. 62; Clark v.

Cumming & Co., 77 Ga. 64, 4 Am. St. Rep. 72; 5 C. B. 895; but when he has none he may and ought to act according to the general usages of trade; Brown v. McGran, 14 Pet. (U. S.) 479, 10 L. Ed. 550; 7 Taunt. 164; Judson v. Sturgis, 5 Day (Conn.) 556; Liotard v. Graves, 3 Caines (N. Y.) 226; Forrester v. Bordman, 1 Story, 43, Fed. Cas. No. 4,945; to sell for cash when that is usual, or to give credit on sales when that is customary; Daylight Burner Co. v. Odlin, 51 N. H. 56, 12 Am. Rep. 45. He is bound to render a just account to his principal, and to pay him the moneys he may receive for him. The mere fact that one sells products as a factor, does not impose upon him the burden of proving due diligence in the sale; Govan v. Cushing, 111 N. C. 458, 16 S. E. 619.

His rights. He has the right to sell the goods in his own name; and, when untrammelled by instructions, he may sell them at such times and for such prices as, in the exercise of a just discretion, he may think best for his employer; 3 C. B. 380; Bessent v. Harris, 63 N. C. 542; but he must obey instructions if given; Ernest v. Stoller, 5 Dill. 438, Fed. Cas. No. 4,520; Scott v. Rogers, 31 N. Y. 676; but when the instructions are to wait until a certain law has produced its effect on the market, a certain discretion as to time may be exercised; Milbank v. Dennistoun, 21 N. Y. 386. He may sell on credit when such is the usage of the market; Forrester v. Bordman, 1 Sto. 43, Fed. Cas. No. 4,945; but, if he sell on change he is held to a high degree of diligence to ascertain the solvency of the purchaser; Foster v. Waller, 75 Ill. 464. In the absence of instructions he may give a warranty; Schuchardt v. Allens, 1 Wall. (U. S.) 359, 17 L. Ed. 642; and he may insure the goods of the principal in his own name; Johnson v. Campbell, 120 Mass. 449.

He is, for many purposes, between himself and third persons, to be considered as the owner of the goods. He may, therefore, recover the price of goods sold by him in his own name, and, consequently, he may receive payment and give receipts, and discharge the debtor, unless, indeed, notice has been given by the principal to the debtor not to pay. But the title to goods consigned to a factor to be sold remains in the principal until sold, and may not be sold on execution to pay debts of the factor; Barnes Safe & Lock Co. v. Tobacco Co., 38 W. Va. 158, 18 S. E. 482, 22 L. R. A. 850, 45 Am. St. Rep. 846. He has a lien on the goods for advances made by him, and for his commissions; this exists by law and apart from any agreement; Plattner Implement Co. v. International Harvester Co., 133 Fed. 376, 66 C. C. A. 438; but he is not to be considered as the owner, beyond the extent of his lien; id.; Haebler v. Luttgen, 61 Minn. 315, 63 N. W. 720; U. S. v. Villalonga, 23 Wall. (U. S.)

35, 23 L. Ed. 64. He has no right to barter the goods of his principal; Wheeler & Wilson Mfg. Co. v. Givan, 65 Mo. 89; Victor Sewing Mach. Co. v. Heller, 44 Wis. 265; nor to pledge them for the purpose of raising money for himself, nor to secure a debt he may owe; Odiorne v. Maxcy, 13 Mass. 178; Berry v. Allen, 59 Ill. App. 149; Bowie v. Napier, 1 McCord (S. C.) 1, 10 Am. Dec. 641; Van Amringe v. Peabody, 1 Mas. 440, Fed. Cas. No. 16,825; Rodriguez v. Hefferman, 5 Johns. Ch. (N. Y.) 429; Macky v. Dillinger, 73 Pa. 85; L. R. 10 C. P. 354. See FACTOR'S ACTS. But he may pledge them for advances made to his principal, or for the purpose of raising money for him, or in order to reimburse himself to the amount of his own lien; 2 Kent 625; Urquhart v. McIver, 4 Johns. (N. Y.) 103; 7 East 5; Story, Bailm. § 325; Field v. Farrington, 10 Wall. (U. S.) 141, 19 L. Ed. 923. He may raise money by pledging the goods for the payment of duties or any other charge or purpose allowed or justified by the usages of the trade; Evans v. Potter, 2 Gall. (U. S.) 13, Fed. Cas. No. 4,569; Laussatt v. Lippincott, 6 S. & R. (Pa.) 386, 9 Am. Dec. 440; 3 Esp. 182. A custom in the diamond trade, that it is not usual for agents employed to sell diamonds to pledge them, cannot be set up to prevent the application of the factors act to a pledge by such an agent; [1907] 1 K. B. 510. See PLEDGE. He has a lien upon the goods of his principal in his possession, to protect himself against unpaid drafts drawn and accepted in the course of the agency; State v. Thompson, 120 Mo. 12, 25 S. W. 346; and such lien is personal to the factor; Barnes S. & L. Co. v. Tobacco Co., 38 W. Va. 158, 18 S. E. 482, 22 L. R. A. 850, 45 Am. St. Rep. 846. Where a factor disobeys instructions in selling grain which he has bought for his principal, he thereby loses his lien on money deposited with him as security; Jones v. Marks, 40 Ill. 313.

It may be laid down as a general rule that when the property is found distinguishable in the hands of the factor, capable of being traced by a clear and connected chain of identity, in no one link of it degenerating from a specific trust into a general debt, the creditors of the factor who has become bankrupt have no right to the specific property; 2 Stra. 1182; 3 Maule & S. 562; even where it is money in the factor's hands; 2 Burr. 1369; Hall v. Boardman, 14 N. H. 38; Price v. Ralston, 2 Dall. (U. S.) 60, 1 L. Ed. 289; Denston v. Perkins, 2 Pick. (Mass.) 86. He may sell to reimburse advances; Brown v. McGran, 14 Pet. (U. S.) 479, 10 L. Ed. 550; unless restrained by an agreement with his principal, but if he has agreed to hold for a given time he is bound to do so; Fordyce v. Peper, 16 Fed. 516. And where the factor dies insolvent, before remitting to the shipper, the latter is entitled to satisfaction out of the proceeds of the sale or deposit in bank, as against the claim of the bank on an unmatured note; Ewart v. Bank, 70 Hun 90, 23 N. Y. Supp. 1124. And see 1 B. & P. 539, 648, for the rule as to promissory notes. Stock ordered of a broker on margin contracts belongs not to the broker, but to the customer, and may be redeemed by him from an assignee of the broker for benefit of creditors; Skiff v. Stoddard, 63 Conn. 198, 26 Atl. 874, 28 Atl. 104, 21 L. R. A. 102.

But the rights of third persons dealing bona fide with the factor as a principal, where the name of the principal is sunk entirely, are to be protected; 7 Term 360; 3 Bingh. 139; 6 Maule & S. 14.

See, generally, 58 Am. Dec. 156, note; Lawson, Rights & Rem. §§ 227-230; 3 Wait, Act. & Def. 289; 2 Sm. L. Cas. 118; 1 Am. L. Cas. 788; Fordyce v. Peper, 16 Fed. 516, note; LIEN; AGENT; STOCK BROKER; REAL ESTATE BROKER; DEL CREDERE COMMISSION.

FACTOR'S ACTS. A name given to legislative enactments in England and the United States designed to mitigate the hardships of the common-law rule governing dealings with factors, and especially with respect to pledges made by them of the goods of the principal. The object of the English legislation known under this general designation is the protection of persons dealing with those having possession of goods or documents representing the title thereto. The first acts were 4 Geo. IV. c. 84 and 6 Geo. IV. c. 94, and these were confined to persons entrusted with documents of title, not with the goods themselves. This defect was remedied by 5 & 6 Vict. c. 39, of which the Ontario act is merely a copy; R. S. Ont. c. 121. The subject was again dealt with in 40 & 41 Vict. c. 39, under which many of the decisions under the former acts were practically set aside. As to the provisions of the English acts and decisions thereunder, see 5 Can. L. T. 145.

In the United States the rule of the common law that a factor cannot pledge the property of his principal has been largely altered by statute in many of the states, founded generally it is said upon the statutes of 6 Geo. IV. c. 94; 3 Wait, Act. & Def. 300. See, as to legislation in this country, 58 Am. Dec. 165, note. See also FACTOR.

FACTORAGE. The wages or allowances paid to a factor for his services; it is more usual to call this commissions.

FACTORIZING PROCESS. A process for attaching effects of the debtor in the hands of a third party. It is substantially the same process known as the garnishee process, trustee process, process by foreign attachment; Drake, Attach. § 451.

FACTORY. A building or group of buildings appropriated to the manufacture of goods, including the machinery necessary to produce the goods, and the engine or other power by which the machinery is propelled; the place where workers are employed in fabricating goods, wares, or utensils. Cent. Dict. The term includes the fixed machinery when used in a policy of insurance; Mayhew v. Hardesty, 8 Md. 479.

FACTORY ACTS. Laws enacted for the purpose of regulating the hours of work, and the sanitary condition, and preserving the health and morals, of the employes, and promoting the education of young persons employed at such labor. See LABOR LAWS; EIGHT HOUR LAWS; EMPLOYER'S LIABILITY.

FACTORY PRICES. The prices at which goods may be bought at factories, as distinguished from the prices of those bought in the market, after they have passed into the hands of third parties or shopkeepers. Whipple v. Levett, 2 Mas. 90, Fed. Cas. No. 17,518.

FACTUM. A deed; a man's own act and deed. A culpable or criminal act; an act not founded in law. A deed; a written instrument under seal: called, also, charta. Spelman, Gloss.; 2 Bla. Com. 295.

The difference between factum and charta originally would seem to have been that factum denoted the thing done, and charta the evidence thereof; Co. Litt. 9 b. When a man denies by his plea that he made a deed on which he is sued, he pleads non est factum (it is not his deed).

In wills, factum seems to retain an active signification and to denote a making. See Weatherhead's Lessee v. Baskerville, 11 How. (U. S.) 358, 13 L. Ed. 717.

A fact. Factum probandum (the fact to be proved). 1 Greenl. Ev. § 13.

A portion of land granted to a farmer; otherwise called a hide, bovata, etc. Spelm.

See FACT.

In French Law. A memoir which contains concisely set down the fact on which a contest has happened, the means on which a party founds his pretensions, with the refutation of the means of the adverse party. See Vicat, Voc. Jur.

FACULTY. In Canon Law. A license; an authority. For example, the ordinary, having the disposal of all seats in the nave of a church, may grant this power, which when it is delegated is called a faculty, to another.

Faculties are of two kinds: first, when the grant is to a man and his heirs in gross; second, when it is to a person and his heirs as appurtenant to a house which he holds in the parish; 1 Term 429, 432; 12 Co. 106.

In Scotch Law. Ability or power. The term faculty is more properly applied to a power founded on the consent of the party from whom it springs, and not founded on property; Kames, Eq. 504.

FACULTY OF ADVOCATES. See ADVOCATES.

FACULTIES, MASTER OF THE. An official in the archdiocese of Canterbury who granted dispensations. 4 Inst. 337. See COURT OF THE ARCHES.

FADERFIUM. A marriage gift coming from the father or brother of the bride. Spelman, Gloss.

FAEDERFEON. The portion brought by a wife to her husband, and which reverted to a widow in case the heir of her deceased husband refused his consent to her second marriage. Cyclopedic L. Dict.

FAESTING-MEN. Approved men who were strong-armed. Subsequently the word seems to have been used in the sense of rich, and hence it probably passed into its later and common meaning of pledges or bondsmen, which, by Saxon custom, were bound to answer for each other's good behavior. Cowell; Du Cange.

FAGGOT. A badge, worn in medieval times by persons who had recanted their heretical opinions, designed to show what they considered they had merited but had escaped. Cowell.

FAGGOT VOTE. A term applied to votes manufactured by nominally transferring land to persons otherwise disqualified from voting for members of parliament.

FAIDA. In Saxon Law. Great and open hostility which arose on account of some murder committed. The term was applied only to that deadly enmity in deference to which, among the Germans and other northern nations, if murder was committed, punishment might be demanded from any one of kin to the murderer by any one of the kin of the murdered man. Du Cange; Spelman, Gloss.

FAIL. To leave unperformed; to omit; to neglect, as distinguished from refuse, which latter involves an act of the will, while the former may be an act of inevitable necessity. Taylor v. Mason, 9 Wheat. (U. S.) 344, 6 L. Ed. 101.

FAILLITE (Fr.). In French Law. Bankruptcy; failure. The condition of a merchant who ceases to pay his debts. 3 Massé, Droit Comm. 171; Guyot, Répert.

FAILURE. In legal parlance, the neglect of any duty may be a failure, and the commission of any fault a delinquency. When applied to a mercantile concern, it means an inability to meet its debts from insolvency. It is synonymous with insolvency, which see. Boyce v. Ewart, 1 Rice (S. C.) 126.

FAILURE OF CONSIDERATION. See CONSIDERATION.

FAILURE OF EVIDENCE. A failure to offer proof, either positive or inferential, to establish one or more of the many facts, the establishment of all of which is indispensable to the finding of the issue for the plaintiff. Cole v. Hebb, 7 Gill & J. (Md.) 28.

FAILURE OF ISSUE. A want of issue to take an estate limited over by an executory devise.

Failure of issue is definite or indefinite. When the precise time for the failure of issue is fixed by the will, as in the case of a devise to Peter, but, if he dies without issue living at the time of his death, then to another, this is a failure of issue definite. An indefinite failure of issue is a general failure whenever it may happen, without fixing any time, or a certain and definite period, within which it must happen. 4 Kent 275. An executory devise in fee, with remainder over, to take effect on an indefinite failure of issue is void for remoteness, and hence courts are astute to devise some construction which shall restrain the failure of issue to the term of limitation allowed; id. 276, n. See Appeal of Bedford, 40 Pa. 18; 2 Redf. Wills 276, n.; EN VENTRE SA MERE; SHELLEY'S CASE, RULE IN.

FAILURE OF JUSTICE. An expression used to denote the deprivation of a right or the loss of reparation for an injury as the result of the lack or inadequacy of a legal remedy. It is also colloquially applied to the miscarriage of justice which occurs when the result of a trial is so palpably wrong as to shock the moral sense.

FAILURE OF RECORD. The neglect to produce the record after having pleaded it. When a defendant pleads a matter and offers to prove it by the record, and the plaintiff pleads nul tiel record, a day is given to the defendant to bring in the record; if he fails to do so, he is said to fail of his record, and, there being a failure of record, the plaintiff is entitled to judgment. Termes de la Ley. See the form of entering it; 1 Wms. Saund. 92, n. 3.

FAILURE OF TITLE. The entire or partial loss of title suffered by a grantee or one who has contracted to purchase property, resulting from failure or inability of the grantor or vendor to pass a satisfactory title.

FAILURE OF TRUST. The lapse or inability to execute a trust, whether from the legal insufficiency or defective execution of the instrument creating it, the uncertainty of the object, or the lack of a person to take as cestui que trust. It is a doctrine of equity that a trust shall not fail for want of a trustee. See TRUST.

FAINT PLEADER. A false, fraudulent, or collusive manner of pleading, to the deception of a third person.

FAIR. A public mart or place of buying or selling. 1 Bla. Com. 274. A greater species of market, recurring at more distant intervals.

Though etymologically signifying a market for buying and selling exhibited articles, it includes a place for the exhibition of agricultural and mechanical products. State v. Long, 48 Ohio St. 509, 28 N. E. 1038.

Where a fair association maintains on its grounds a track for horse racing, it must use reasonable care to keep such track free from danger to patrons when they are invited or permitted to cross and while they are thus crossing; Higgins v. Agricultural Society, 100 Me. 565, 62 Atl. 708, 3 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1132.

Where a city authorized the use of a street for a carnival or street fair, it was held liable for injurious consequences to one injured by a defective structure therein; Van Cleef v. City of Chicago, 240 Ill. 318, 88 N. E. 815, 23 L. R. A. (N. S.) 636, 130 Am. St. Rep. 275.

A fair is usually attended by a greater concourse of people than a market, for the amusement of whom various exhibitions are gotten up. McCulloch, Comm. Dict.; Wharton, Dict.

A solemn or greater sort of market, granted to any town by privilege, for the more speedy and commodious provision of such things as the subject needeth, or the utterance of such things as we abound in above our own uses and occasions. Cowell; Cunningham, Law Dict. A privileged market.

A fair is a franchise which is obtained by a grant from the crown. 2d Inst. 220; 3 Mod. 123; 1 Ld. Raym. 341; 2 Saund. 172; 1 Rolle, Abr. 106; Tomlin; Cunningham, Law Dict.

In the Middle Ages, the right to hold a fair meant the right to hold a court of pie-powder for the fair. Sometimes these courts were held by the mayor of a corporate town; sometimes they belonged to a lord. The law merchant was administered in addition to many other kinds of jurisdiction, civil and criminal. Of these, the Lord Mayor's Court in London, the Tolzey Court, and a branch of it sitting in fair time as a pie-powder court, at Bristol, are examples of survivals. There are many others: Derby, Exeter, Newark, Norwich, etc.; 1 Holdsw. Hist. E. L. 308.

Fairs are usually recognized and regulated by statute. See AGRICULTURAL SOCIETY; FRANCHISE.

FAIR ABRIDGMENT. See COPYRIGHT.

FAIR COMMENT. See LIBEL.

FAIR CRITICISM. See CRITICISM.

FAIR KNOWLEDGE OR SKILL. A reasonable degree of knowledge or measure of skill. Jones v. Angell, 95 Ind. 382.

FAIR-PLAY MEN. A local irregular tribunal which at one time existed in Pennsylvania.

About the year 1769 there was a tract of country in Pennsylvania, situate between Lycoming creek and Pine creek, in which the Proprietaries prohibited the making of surveys, as it was doubtful whether it had or had not been ceded by the Indians. Although settlements were forbidden, yet adventurers settled themselves there. Being without the pale of ordinary authorities, the inhabitants annually elected a tribunal, in rotation, of three of their number, whom they denominated fair-play men, who had authority to decide all disputes as to boundaries. Their decisions were final, and enforced by the whole community en masse. Their decisions are said to have been just and equitable. 2 Smith, Pa. Laws 195; Sergeant, Land Laws, 77.

FAIR PLEADER. The name of a writ given by the statute of Marlebridge, 52 Hen. III. c. 11. See BEAU PLEADER.

FAIR PREPONDERANCE. Of evidence, a preponderance which is apparent upon fair consideration. State v. Grear, 29 Minn. 225, 13 N. W. 140; Bryan v. R. Co., 63 Ia. 466, 19 N. W. 295; City Bank's Appeal, 54 Conn. 274, 7 Atl. 548.

FAIR SALE. A sale conducted with fairness as respects the rights of all parties affected. Lalor v. McCarthy, 24 Minn. 419. A sale at a price sufficient to warrant confirmation or approval when it is required. See SALE.

FAIR VALUE. In a contract by a city to purchase a waterworks plant at "fair and equitable value," the amount is to be determined not by capitalization of the earnings nor limited to the cost of reproducing the plant, but allowance should be made for the additional value created by connection with and supply of buildings, although the company did not own the connections. National Waterworks Co. v. Kansas City, 62 Fed. 863, 10 C. C. A. 653.

FAIRLY. Reasonably; justly; equitably. It is not synonymous with "truly," and the latter should not be substituted for it in a commissioner's oath to take testimony fairly. Language may be "truly," yet unfairly, reported, and it may be fairly reported, yet not in accordance with strict truth; Lawrence v. Finch, 17 N. J. Eq. 234; but it may be deemed synonymous with "equitably"; Satcher v. Satcher's Adm'r, 41 Ala. 40, 91 Am. Dec. 498. "Fairly merchantable" conveys the idea of mediocrity in quality, or something just above it; Warner v. Ice Co., 74 Me. 479.

FAIRWAY. Used to indicate the middle and deepest or most navigable channel. See THALWEG.

FAIT. Anything done.

A deed lawfully executed. Comyns, Dig. Fait. See FACT.

Femme de fait. A wife de facto.

FAIT ENROLLE. A deed of bargain and sale, etc. 1 Keb. 568.

FAIT JURIDIQUE. In French Law. A judicial fact. One of the factors or elements constitutive of an obligation.

FAITH. A term used in the law only in connection with the adjectives good and bad, as expressing the belief, intent, or purpose with which a transaction has been entered into or completed. See GOOD FAITH.

FAITH AND CREDIT. See CONFLICT OF LAWS; FOREIGN JUDGMENTS.

FAITHFUL. As respects temporal affairs, diligently, and without unnecessary delay; but it does not include the idea of impartiality. Den v. Thompson, 16 N. J. L. 72.

FAITOURS. Idle persons; idle livers; vagabonds. Termes de la Ley; Cowell; Blount; Cunningham, Law Dict.

FAKIR. A term applied among the Mohammedans to a kind of religious ascetic or beggar, whose claim is that he "is in need of mercy, and poor in the sight of God, rather than in need of worldly assistance." Hughes, Dict. of Islam. Sometimes spelled Faqeer or Fakeer. It is in common use to designate a person engaged in some useless or dishonest business. Fake is also so used and also to designate the quality of such business.

FALCARE (Lat.). To cut or mow down. Falcare prata, to cut or mow down grass in meadows hayed (laid in for hay), was a customary service for the lord by his inferior tenants. Kennett, Gloss.

Falcator. The tenant performing the service.

Falcatura. A day's mowing. Falcatura una. Once mowing the grass.

Falcatio. A mowing.

Falcata. That which was mowed. Kennett, Gloss; Cowell; Jacobs.

FALCIDIA. In Spanish Law. The fourth portion of an inheritance, which legally belongs to the heir, and for the protection of which he has the right to reduce the legacies to three-fourth parts of the succession, in order to protect his interest.

FALCIDIAN LAW. In Roman Law. A statute or law restricting the right of disposing of property by will, enacted by the people during the reign of Augustus, on the proposition of Falcidius, who was a tribune, in the year of Rome 714.

Its principal provision gave power to fathers of families to bequeath three-fourths of their property, but deprived them of the power to give away the other fourth, which was to descend to the heir. Inst. 2. 22. This fourth was termed the Falcidian portion.

A similar principle exists in Louisiana.

See LEGITIME.

As to the early history of testamentary law, see Maine, Ancient Law.

In some of the states the statutes authorizing bequests and devises to charitable corporations limit the amount which a testator may give, to a certain fraction of his estate.

FALDAGE. The privilege which anciently several lords reserved to themselves of setting up folds for sheep in any fields within their manors, the better to manure them, and this not only with their own but their tenants' sheep. Called, variously, secta faldare, fold-course, free-fold, faldagii. Cunningham, Law Dict.; Cowell.

FALDFEY. A compensation paid by some customary tenants that they might have liberty to fold their own sheep on their own land. Cunningham, Law Dict.

FALDISDORY. The bishop's seat or throne within the chancel.

FALDSOCA. Liberty or privilege of foldage.

FALDSTOOL. A folding seat similar to a camp stool, made either of wood or metal, sometimes covered with silk or other material. It was used by a bishop when officiating in other than his own cathedral church. Encyc. Dic.

FALDWORTH. A person reckoned old enough to become a member of the decenary, and so subject to the law of frankpledge. Spelm.

FALESIA. In Old English Law. A bill or down by the sea-side. Co. Litt. 5 b; Domesday.

FALK-LAND. See FOLC-LAND.

FALL. In Scotch Law. To loose. To fall from a right is to loose or forfeit it. 1 Kames, Eq. 228.

FALL OF LAND. In English Law. A quantity of land six ells square.

FALLO. In Spanish Law. The final decree or judgment given in a lawsuit.

FALLOW LAND. Land ploughed, but not sown, and left uncultivated for a time, after successive crops; land left untilled for a year or more.

FALLUM. In Old English Law. An unexplained term for some particular kind of land. Jacob, L. Dic.

FALSA DEMONSTRATIO. In Civil Law. False designation; erroneous description of a person or a thing in a written instrument. Inst. 2, 20, 30.

In construing a deed purporting to assure a property, if there be a description of the property sufficient to render certain what is intended, the addition of a wrong name or of an erroneous statement as to quantity, occupancy, locality, or an erroneous enumeration of particulars, will have no effect; [1898] 2 Ch. 551.

See DEMONSTRATION; LATENT AMBIGUITY; WILL.

FALSA DEMONSTRATIO NON NOCET. See MAXIMS; DEMONSTRATIO.

FALSA MONETA. In the Civil Law. Counterfeit money. Cod. 9, 24.

FALSARE. In Old English Law. To counterfeit. Bract. fol. 276 b. Falcarious, a counterfeiter.

FALSE. Applied to the intentional act of a responsible being, it implies a purpose to deceive. State v. Smith, 63 Vt. 201, 22 Atl. 604; 18 U. C. C. P. 19. In a statute prescribing punishment for false statements in making an entry of imported goods, "false" means more than incorrect or erroneous. It implies wrong or culpable negligence, and signifies knowingly or negligently untrue; United States v. Ninety-Nine Diamonds, 139 Fed. 961, 72 C. C. A. 9, 2 L. R. A. (N. S.) 185.

FALSE ACTION. See FEIGNED ACTION.

FALSE AND PRETENDED PROPHECIES. When made with intent to disturb the public peace they are punishable under 33 Hen. VIII. c. 14, 3 & 4 Edw. VI. c. 15, and 5 Eliz. c. 15. These statutes, although unrepealed, are not likely to be enforced.

FALSE CHARACTER. To personate the master or mistress of a servant or his or her representative and give a false character to the servant, is an offence punishable by fine, by 32 Geo. III. c. 56. See PERSONATE.

FALSE CLAIM. A claim made by a man for more than his due. An instance is given where the prior of Lancaster claimed a tenth part of the venison in corio as well as in carne, where he was entitled to that in carne only. Manw. For. Laws, cap. 25, num. 3.

FALSE DECRETALS. A collection of canon law, dated about the middle of the 9th century, probably by a Frankish ecclesiastic who called himself Isadon. It continued to be the chief repertory of the canon law till the 15th century when its untrustworthy nature was demonstrated.

FALSE IMPRISONMENT. Any unlawful restraint of a man's liberty, whether in a place made use of for imprisonment generally, or in one used only on the particular occasion, or by words and an array of force, without bolts or bars, in any locality whatever. 1 Bish. Cr. Law § 553; Webb's Poll. Torts 259; State v. Rollins, 8 N. H. 550; Smith v. State, 7 Humphr. (Tenn.) 43; Floyd v. State, 12 Ark. 43, 54 Am. Dec. 250; 7 Q. B. 742; Wood v. Kinsman, 5 Vt. 588; Adams v. Freeman, 9 Johns. (N. Y.) 117; Webber v. Kenny, 1 A. K. Marsh. (Ky.) 345; Fotheringham v. Express Co., 36 Fed. 252, 1 L. R. A. 474; Moore v. Thompson, 92 Mich. 498, 52 N. W. 1000; Callahan v. Searles, 78 Hun 238, 28 N. Y. Supp. 904.

The total, or substantially total, restraint of a man's freedom of locomotion, without authority of law, and against his will. Big. Torts 113. Partial and conditional restraint is held not to constitute false imprisonment; Crossett v. Campbell, 122 La. 659, 48 South. 141, 20 L. R. A. (N. S.) 967, 129 Am. St. Rep. 362; 7 Q. B. 742; Sullivan v. R. Co., 148 Mass. 119, 18 N. E. 678, 1 L. R. A. 513; as where the restraint was voluntary, in that it rested with the plaintiff to terminate it by desisting from the doing of an unlawful act; Crossett v. Campbell, 122 La. 659, 48 South. 141, 20 L. R. A. (N. S.) 967, 129 Am. St. Rep. 362; but where one is restrained until he shall make certain promises; Hildebrand v. McCrum, 101 Ind. 61; Bonesteel v. Bonesteel, 28 Wis. 245; or statements; McNay v. Stratton, 9 Ill. App. 215; or payments; Smith v. State, 7 Humph. (Tenn.) 43; it is usually held an imprisonment.

Arresting the wrong person under a warrant constitutes false imprisonment; F. Moo. 457; so if there is a misnomer in the warrant, even though the person actually intended was arrested; Scott v. Ely, 4 Wend. (N. Y.) 555; and if the officer makes the arrest out of his bailiwick, or detains the person unduly; 4 B. & C. 596; an arrest under a void writ constitutes a false imprisonment; Deyo v. Van Valkenburgh, 5 Hill (N. Y.) 242. A writ may be void because defective in language, because the court had no jurisdiction of the proceedings, or because the court had no jurisdiction to issue the writ; Big. Torts 122; Nixon v. Reeves, 65 Minn. 159, 67 N. W. 989, 33 L. R. A. 506. The clerk of the court who issues a defective writ, or one not authorized by the court, is liable; and so is a judge who orders a writ which he had no right to issue, or where he had no jurisdiction. Both the attorney and his client may be liable if the former ordered the arrest, and even when the arrest has been ordered by a judge, i. e. in a case where they participate in making the arrest; Big. Torts 128; or where the writ was issued by the misconduct of the attorney; id. 129.

A judge of a superior court can never be liable for an act done by him in his official capacity; [1895] 1 Q. B. 668. Otherwise of a judge of an inferior court, if he acted beyond his jurisdiction; 1 B. & C. 169; and it must appear that he knew or had means of knowing that he was doing so; 3 Bing. 78; a mistake of law will not protect him; 19 L. J. Q. B. 70.

If the writ be voidable it must be set aside before an action for false imprisonment will lie, but otherwise if it be void; id. 131.

Every imprisonment of a man is prima facie a trespass, and in an action to recover damages therefor, if the imprisonment is admitted or proved, the burden of justifying it is on the defendant; Bassett v. Porter, 10 Cush. (Mass.) 418; Jackson v. Knowlton, 173 Mass. 94, 53 N. E. 134; McCarthy v. De Armit, 99 Pa. 63; McAleer v. Good, 216 Pa. 473, 65 Atl. 934, 10 L. R. A. (N. S.) 303, 116 Am. St. Rep. 782; Franklin v. Emerson, 118 Ga. 860, 45 S. E. 698; Barker v. Anderson, 81 Mich. 508, 45 N. W. 1108. Where the arrest was under a warrant lawfully issued and by a person entitled to issue it, then a justification is made out and the burden is on the plaintiff to show that the warrant was wrongly issued; Snow v. Weeks, 75 Me. 105; Petit v. Colmery, 4 Pennewill (Del.) 266, 55 Atl. 344.

An arrest and detention, without a warrant, of one acting in a disorderly manner in a public place, by one clothed with the authority of a police officer, is not a false imprisonment; Erie R. Co. v. Reigherd, 166 Fed. 247, 92 C. C. A. 590, 20 L. R. A. (N. S.) 295, 16 Ann. Cas. 459. Where the accused pleads guilty, his right to recover for false arrest is barred; Billington v. Hoverman, 18 Ohio C. P. 637; Williamson v. Wilcox, 63 Miss. 335; Howe Mach. Co. v. Lincoln, 24 Kan. 123; Williams v. Shillaber, 153 Mass. 541, 27 N. E. 767; Ilsley v. Harris, 10 Wis. 96; Jones v. Foster, 43 App. Div. 33, 59 N.

Y. Supp. 738; Maxwell v. Deens, 46 Mich. 35, 8 N. W. 561.

Malice is not an element of false imprisonment; Hewitt v. Newburger, 66 Hun 230, 20 N. Y. Supp. 913; Gillingham v. R. Co., 35 W. Va. 588, 14 S. E. 243, 14 L. R. A. 798, 29 Am. St. Rep. 827; except so far as it affects the measure of damages; Johnson v. Bouton, 35 Neb. 898, 53 N. W. 995.

In order to be restored to liberty, the remedy is, by writ of habeas corpus. An action of trespass vi et armis lies. To punish the wrong done to the public by the false imprisonment of an individual, the offender may be indicted; 4 Bla. Com. 218; 2 Burr. 993. See Bacon, Abr. Trespass (D, 3); Pike v. Hanson, 9 N. H. 491; State v. Guest, 6 Ala. 778; Click v. State, 3 Tex. 282; Allen v. Shed, 10 Cush. (Mass.) 375.

One cannot maintain an action for false imprisonment where he is arrested by a proper officer, under a warrant lawful on its face, and issued by proper authority; Leib v. Shelby Iron Co., 97 Ala. 626, 12 South. 67; Johnson v. Morton, 94 Mich. 1, 53 N. W. 816. Justification is not available as a defence unless pleaded; Wilson v. R. Co., 2 Misc. 127, 20 N. Y. Supp. 852.

Damages may be recovered against a charitable institution for false imprisonment and the question of good intention is immaterial; Gallon v. House of Good Shepherd, 158 Mich. 363, 122 N. W. 631, 24 L. R. A. (N. S.) 286, 123 Am. St. Rep. 387.

FALSE JUDGMENT. The name of a writ which lies when a false judgment has been given in the county court, court baron, or other courts not of record. Fitzh. N. B. 17, 18.

FALSE LATIN. When legal proceedings were conducted in Latin, if a word were significant, though not good Latin, yet an indictment, declaration, or fine should not be made void by it; but if the word were not Latin, nor allowed by the law, and it were in a material point, it made the whole vicious. 5 Coke 121.

FALSE LIGHTS AND SIGNALS. Lights and signals falsely and maliciously displayed for the purpose of bringing a vessel into danger. Exhibiting false lights or signals, with intent to bring any ship into danger, is felony, punishable, in England, with penal servitude for life; stat. 24 & 25 Vict. c. 97, § 47; and in the United States by imprisonment; U. S. R. S. § 5358.

FALSE NEWS. Spreading false news, whereby discord may grow between the queen of England and her people, or the great men of the realm, or which may produce other mischiefs, still seems to be a misdemeanor under Stat. 3 Edw. I. c. 34; Steph. Cr. Dig. § 95.

FALSE OATH. See PERJURY.

FALSE PERSONATION. See PERSONATION.

FALSE PLEA. See SHAM PLEA.

FALSE PRETENCES. False representations and statements, made with a fraudulent design to obtain "money, goods, wares, and merchandise," with intent to cheat. 2 Bouvier, Inst. n. 2308.

A representation of some fact or circumstance calculated to mislead, which is not true. Com. v. Drew, 19 Pick. (Mass.) 184.

Such a fraudulent representation of fact by one who knows it not to be true as is adapted to induce the person to whom it is made to part with something of value. It may relate to quality, quantity, the nature or other incident of the article offered for sale, whereby the purchaser buying it, is defrauded; Jackson v. People, 126 Ill. 139, 18 N. E. 286.

They must relate to the past or present; Biddle v. U. S., 156 Fed. 764, 84 C. C. A. 415; People v. Miller, 169 N. Y. 339, 62 N. E. 418, 88 Am. St. Rep. 546; Cook v. State, 71 Neb. 243, 98 N. W. 810. Any representation or assurance in relation to a future transaction may be a promise, or covenant, or warranty, but cannot amount to a statutory false pretence; Com. v. Drew, 19 Pick. (Mass.) 185; 3 Term 98; but one will be guilty if there are false representations of a past or existing fact, although a promise be also a part of the inducement to the person defrauded to part with his property; Pearce v. State, 115 Ala. 115, 22 South. 502; State v. Gordon, 56 Kan. 64, 42 Pac. 346; Taylor v. Com., 94 Ky. 281, 22 S. W. 217; Thomas v. People, 34 N. Y. 351; Holton v. State, 109 Ga. 127, 34 S. E. 358; State v. Fooks, 65 Ia. 196, 452, 21 N. W. 561, 773. It must be such as to impose upon a person of ordinary strength of mind; State v. Simpson, 10 N. C. 620; Com. v. Wilgus, 4 Pick. (Mass.) 178; People v. Haynes, 11 Wend. (N. Y.) 557. But, although it may be difficult to restrain false pretences to such as an ordinarily prudent man may avoid, yet it is not every absurd or irrational pretence which will be sufficient. See Cowen v. People, 14 Ill. 348; State v. Mills, 17 Me. 211; Russ. & R. 127. Where the statements were absurd or irrational, the offence is not made out; State v. Cameron, 117 Mo. 641, 23 S. W. 767; State v. Jackson, 128 Ia. 543, 105 N. W. 51; Com. v. Beckett, 119 Ky. 817, 84 S. W. 758, 27 Ky. L. Rep. 265, 68 L. R. A. 638, 115 Am. St. Rep. 285; State v. Stewart, 9 N. D. 409, 83 N. W. 869; unless the defrauded person was weak and ignorant; People v. Bird, 126 Mich. 631, 86 N. W. 127; State v. Southall, 77 Minn. 296, 79 N. W. 1007; People v. Cole, 137 N. Y. 530, 33 N. E. 336; Bowen v. State, 9 Baxt. (Tenn.) 45, 40 Am. Rep. 71. It is not necessary that all the pretences should be false, if one of them, per se, is sufficient to constitute the offence; People v. Haynes, 14 Wend. (N. Y.) 547, 28 Am. Dec. 530. And although other circumstances may have induced the credit, or the delivery of the property, yet it will be sufficient if the false pretences had such an influence that without them the credit would not have been given or the property delivered; People v. Haynes, 11 Wend. (N. Y.) 557; People v. Haynes, 14 Wend. (N. Y.) 547, 28 Am. Dec. 530. The false pretences must have been used before the contract was completed; People v. Gates, 13 Wend. (N. Y.) 311. Extra-judicial admissions and statements of the defendant alone as to the falsity of the statement are not sufficient to warrant a conviction, as the falsity is in the nature of a corpus delicti which requires other proof; People v. Simonsen, 107 Cal. 345, 40 Pac. 440.

If the person defrauded was deceived by false statements, it is no defence that he might have ascertained by investigation that they were false; State v. Keyes, 196 Mo. 136, 93 S. W. 801, 6 L. R. A. (N. S.) 369, 7 Ann. Cas. 23; Crawford v. State, 117 Ga. 247, 43 S. E. 762; Jenkins v. State, 97 Ala. 66, 12 South. 110; State v. Trisler, 49 Ohio St. 583, 31 N. E. 881; State v. Penley, 27 Conn. 589; contra, Com. v. Grady, 13 Bush (Ky.) 285, 26 Am. Rep. 192; Cowan v. State, 41 Tex. Cr. R. 617, 56 S. W. 751.

The question is modified in the different states by the wording of the statutes, which vary from each other somewhat. It may be laid down as the general rule of the interpretation of the words "by any false pretence," which are in the statutes, that wherever a person fraudulently represents as an existing fact that which is not an existing fact, and so gets money, etc., that is an offence within the acts. See 1 Den. Cr. Cas. 559; 3 C. & K. 98; Com. v. Henry, 22 Pa. 253; People v. Wieger, 100 Cal. 352, 34 Pac. 826.

It is a false pretence where a man falsely represents himself to be in a situation or business in which he is not; Higler v. People, 44 Mich. 299, 6 N. W. 664, 38 Am. Rep. 267; Taylor v. Com., 94 Ky. 281, 22 S. W. 217; Com. v. Stevenson, 127 Mass. 446; Pearce v. State, 115 Ala. 115, 22 South. 502; Thomas v. People, 34 N. Y. 351; Boscow v. State, 33 Tex. Cr. R. 390, 26 S. W. 625; State v. Briggs, 74 Kan. 377, 86 Pac. 447, 7 L. R. A. (N. S.) 278, 10 Ann. Cas. 904; or that he possesses the power to produce the spirits of the dead; Com. v. Keeper of County Prison, 15 W. N. C. (Pa.) 282; or that he possesses extraordinary and supernatural power to cure; Jules v. State, 85 Md. 305, 36 Atl. 1027; or to wear a badge or emblem of an order or society to which he does not belong; Hammer v. State, 173 Ind. 199, 89 N. E. 850, 24 L. R. A. (N. S.) 795, 140 Am. St. Rep. 248, 21 Ann. Cas. 1034; for a minor to state falsely that he is over twenty-one years of age, for the purpose of inducing one to enter into a contract with him; Com. v. Ferguson, 135 Ky. 32, 121 S. W. 967, 24 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1101, 21 Ann. Cas. 434; to obtain money as a charity upon false statements; Com. v. Whitcomb, 107 Mass. 486; Bink v. State, 50 Tex. Cr. R. 445, 98 S. W. 863; Baker v. State, 120 Wis. 135, 97 N. W. 566; State v. Matthews, 91 N. C. 635; State v. Styner, 154 Ind. 131, 56 N. E. 98; contra, People v. Clough, 17 Wend. (N. Y.) 351, 31 Am. Dec. 303. To induce one to cash a check on a bank in which the maker has no funds, is obtaining money under false pretences; State v. Hammelsy, 52 Or. 156, 96 Pac. 865, 17 L. R. A. (N. S.) 244, 132 Am. St. Rep. 686; People v. Wasservogle, 77 Cal. 173, 19 Pac. 270; Com. v. Drew, 19 Pick. (Mass.) 179; although the drawer did not expressly say the check was good; id.; but where the statute provides that before a conviction for false pretences can be had there must be a distinct and certain representation of an existing fact, the mere drawing and passing a check on a bank in which the drawer has no funds is held not a representation that such check is good; Ayers v. State, 37 Tex. Cr. R. 1, 38 S. W. 792. So it was not a false pretence where a bank cashier drew and certified a check on his bank which he exchanged for property, when he told the seller that such check was not collectible; State v. Miller, 47 Or. 562, 85 Pac. 81, 6 L. R. A. (N. S.) 365; it is essential that the person injured must have relied upon a false representation in parting with his property; id.; Therasson v. People, 82 N. Y. 238; People v. Baker, 96 N. Y. 340; People v. Turpin, 233 Ill. 452, 84 N. E. 679, 17 L. R. A. (N. S.) 276; Baker v. State, 120 Wis. 135, 97 N. W. 566; Mitchell v. State, 70 Ark. 30, 65 S. W. 935; Stifel v. State, 163 Ind. 628, 72 N. E. 600; State v. Cameron, 117 Mo. 641, 23 S. W. 767.

There must be an intent to cheat or defraud some person; Russ. & R. 317; State v. Garriss, 98 N. C. 733, 4 S. E. 633; State v. Jackson, 112 Mo. 585, 20 S. W. 674. This may be inferred from a false representation; People v. Herrick, 13 Wend. (N. Y.) 87. The intent is all that is requisite; it is not necessary that the party defrauded should sustain any loss; People v. Genung, 11 Wend. (N. Y.) 18, 25 Am. Dec. 594; 1 C. & M. 516, 537; Com. v. Wilgus, 4 Pick. (Mass.) 177. The offence is not proven where the representations were not relied on; People v. Gibbs, 98 Cal. 661, 33 Pac. 630.

See DECEIT; FRAUD.

FALSE REPRESENTATION. A representation which is untrue, wilfully made to deceive another, to his injury. See DECEIT; MISREPRESENTATION; FRAUD; FALSE PRETENCES.

FALSE RETURN. A return made by the sheriff, or other ministerial officer, to a writ, in which is stated a fact contrary to the truth, and injurious to one of the parties or some one having an interest in it.

In this case the officer is liable for damages to the party injured; 2 Esp. 475. When the sheriff has levied on property sufficient to satisfy an execution, and yet returns it unsatisfied, he is prima facie liable to the plaintiff for the full amount of the judgment, and he must show such facts as will exonerate or excuse him; Ansonia Brass & Copper Co. v. Rabbitt, 74 N. Y. 395. In some states, every return of process, untrue in fact, is held to expose the sheriff to all the penalties of a false return; Peebles v. Newsom, 74 N. C. 473; Finley v. Hayes, 81 N. C. 368. But when the actual damage is the result of the negligence of the party complaining, the sheriff will only be liable for nominal damages; Tutein v. Hurley, 98 Mass. 211, 93 Am. Dec. 154; Carter v. Towne, 103 Mass. 507; Parker v. City of Cohoes, 10 Hun (N. Y.) 531. See RETURN OF WRITS.

FALSE SWEARING. In English Law. The misdemeanor committed by a person who swears falsely before any person authorized to administer an oath upon a matter of public concern, under such circumstances that the false swearing would have amounted to perjury if committed in a judicial proceeding; as where a person makes a false affidavit under the Bills of Sale Acts. Steph. Cr. Dig. 84.

FALSE TOKEN. A false document or sign of the existence of a fact,—in general used for the purpose of fraud. See 3 Term 98; 2 Starkie, Ev. 563; 1 Bish. Cr. L. 585; People v. Gates, 13 Wend. (N. Y.) 311; People v. Haynes, 14 Wend. (N. Y.) 570, 28 Am. Dec. 530; People v. Stone, 9 Wend. (N. Y.) 182. See FALSE PRETENCES.

FALSE VERDICT. One obviously opposed to the principles of right and justice.

The false verdict of jurors, whether occasioned by embracery or not, was anciently considered as criminal, and, therefore, exemplarily punished by attain, but by 6 Geo. IV. c. 50 the writ of attain was wholly abolished and superseded by the practice of setting aside the first verdict and granting new trials; 3 Bla. Com. 402.

FALSE WEIGHTS AND MEASURES. Weights and measures which do not conform to those established by law.

In the laws of King Edgar, nearly a century before the Conquest, we find an injunction that one measure kept at Winchester should be observed throughout the realm. In England the prerogative of fixing the standard anciently vested in the crown; in Normandy in the duke. "The regulation of weights and measures cannot, however, with propriety be referred to the king's prerogative; for from Magna Carta to the present time there are about twenty acts of parliament to fix and establish the standard and uniformity of weights and measures." 1 Bla. Com. 274, n. In a case before the Court of King's Bench it was held that although it was the custom of the town to sell eighteen ounces in a pound of butter, yet the jury of the court-leet were not justified in seizing the butter of a person who sold pounds less than that, but more than sixteen ounces each, the statutable weight: 3 T. R. 271; and it has been determined that no practice or usage could countervail the statutes 22 Car. II. c. 8 and 22 & 23 Car. II. c. 12, which enact that if any person shall either buy or sell salt or grain by any other measure than the Winchester bushel, he shall forfeit forty shillings and also the value of the grain or salt so sold or bought; one-half to the poor, the other to the informer; 4 T. R. 760; 5 id. 353. In this country the power to fix the standard of weights and measures is in congress; Const. U. S. art. 1, c. 8. See WEIGHTS; MEASURES.

FALSEHOOD. Any untrue assertion or proposition. A wilful act or declaration contrary to the truth. See Putnam v. Osgood, 51 N. H. 207.

It has been said that the use of the term falsehood does not always and necessarily imply a lie or wilful untruth, but is generally used in the second sense here given. It is committed either by the wilful act of the party, or by dissimulation, or by words. It is wilful, for example, when the owner of a thing sells it twice, by different contracts to different individuals, unknown to them; for in this the seller must wilfully declare the thing is his own when he knows that it is not so. It is committed by dissimulation when a creditor, having an understanding with his former debtor, sells the land of the latter, although he has been paid the debt which was due to him. Falsehood by word is committed when a witness swears to what he knows not to be true.

Crabbe thus distinguishes between falsehood and untruth: "The latter is an untrue saying, and may be unintentional, in which case it reflects no disgrace on the agent. A falsehood and a lie are intentional false sayings, differing only in degree of the guilt of the offender; falsehood being not always for the express purpose of deceiving, but a lie always for the worst of purposes." See Rosc. Cr. Ev. 362; DECEIT; FRAUD; MISREPRESENTATION.

FALSELY. Under a statute making it a misdemeanor "wilfully to make a false answer," an indictment charging that one "falsely and fraudulently answered," is bad for omitting "wilfully;" 1 Den. C. C. 157.

In an indictment for forgery the averment that defendant swore falsely was held insufficient, without the additional words "corruptly and wilfully;" Cro. Eliz. 201; and "falsely and corruptly" were held insufficient without "wilfully;" id. 143; and falsely and maliciously were held insufficient without "wilfully and corruptly," with a quere whether one of the last two words would suffice without the other; 7 D. & R. 665; but in Cox's Case, Leach 69, it was held that wilfully was not required at common law but was necessary under stat. 5 Eliz. c. 9. An indictment for perjury was held good without the averment that the defendant did falsely, corruptly, and wilfully swear, etc., and the court said: "The words falsely, corruptly, and wilfully . . . are mere expletives to swell the sentence, in the language of Lord Hardwicke, 1 Atk. 50;" Republica v. Newell, 3 Yeates (Pa.) 407, 413, 2 Am. Dec. 381. In obtaining money under false pretences it is not enough to charge that the defendant falsely pretended by certain pretences set forth, without specially averring the falsity of the pretences; 2 M. & S. 379.

The use of the word falsely in a statute (against counterfeiting) implies that there must be a fraudulent or criminal intent in the act; U. S. v. King, 5 McLean 208, Fed. Cas. No. 15,535. See also 4 B. & C. 329; 6 Com. Dig. 58; Stark. Cr. Pl. 86.

In an action for libel, "wrongfully and falsely published" will, it seems, amount to maliciously published, but it is better to add falsely and maliciously; 1 Chit. Pl. 421; the word falsely must have great stress laid on it in an action for slander; 2 Wils. 300, 301. Case will lie for falsely and maliciously suing out a commission in bankruptcy; 2 Wils. 145; or for falsely, maliciously, and without probable cause procuring a search warrant; 1 D. & R. 97. In an action on the case for conspiracy or for malicious prosecution, the allegation that the prosecution was false and malicious is not sufficient without averring a want of probable cause; Kirtley v. Deck, 2 Munf. (Va.) 10, 5 Am. Dec. 445; contra as to conspiracy; Griffith v. Ogle, 1 Binn. (Pa.) 172.

FALSI CRIMEN. See CRIMEN FALSI.

FALSIFICATION. In Equity Practice. The showing an item in the debit of an account to be either wholly false or in part erroneous. 1 Sto. Eq. Jur. § 525.

FALSIFY. To prove that an item in an account before the court, which is inserted to the debit of the person falsifying, should have been omitted.

When a bill to open an account has been filed, the plaintiff is sometimes allowed to surcharge and falsify such account; and if anything has been inserted that is a wrong charge, he is at liberty to show it; and that is a falsification. 2 Ves. 565; Armstrong v. Toler, 11 Wheat. (U. S.) 237, 6 L. Ed. 468. See SURCHARGE.

In Criminal Law. To alter or make false.

The alteration or making false of a record is punishable at common law or by statute in the states, and, if of records of the United States courts, by act of congress of April 30, 1790; U. S. Rev. Stat. § 5394.

In Practice. To prove a thing to be false. Co. Litt. 104 b.

FALSIFYING A RECORD. A crime against public justice punishable in England by 24 & 25 Vict. c. 98, and by statute in the several states and District of Columbia. See ALTERATION.

FALSIFYING JUDGMENTS. A term sometimes used for reversing judgments. See 4 Steph. Com. 553.

FALSING OF DOOMS. In Scotch Law. Protesting against a sentence and taking an appeal to a higher tribunal. Bell, Dict.

An action to set aside a decree. Skene.

FALSO RETORNO BREVIUM (L. Lat.). In Old English Law. The name of a writ which might have been sued out against a sheriff for falsely returning writs. Cunningham, Law Dict.

FALSONARIUS. A person guilty of forgery; a counterfeiter.

FALSUS. Deceiving; fraudulent; erroneous. In the first two senses it is applied to persons in respect to their acts and conduct, as well as to things; and in the third sense it is applied to persons on the question of personal identity.

FAMACIDE. A killer of reputation; a slanderer.

FAMILIA (Lat.). In Roman Law. A family.

This word had four different acceptations in the Roman law. In the first and most restricted sense it designated the pater-familias,—his wife, his children, and other descendants subject to his paternal power. In the second and more enlarged sense it comprehended all the agnates,—that is to say, all the different families who would all be subject to the paternal authority of a common chief if he were still living. Here it has the same meaning as agnatio. In a third acceptance it comprises the slaves and those who are in mancipio of the chief,—although considered only as things, and without any tie of relationship. And, lastly, it signifies the whole fortune or patrimony of the chief. See PATER-FAMILIAS; 1 Ortolan 28.

In Old English Law. A household. All the servants belonging to one master. Du Cange; Cowell. A sufficient quantity of land to maintain one family. The same quantity of land is called sometimes mansa (a manse), familia, carucata. Du Cange; Cunningham, Law Dict.; Cowell; Creasy, Church Hist. See MANSIO.

FAMILIÆ EMPTOR. In Roman Law. An intermediate person who purchased the aggregate inheritance when sold per æs et libram, in the progress of making a will under the twelve tables. The purchaser was merely a man of straw, transmitting the inheritance to the hæres proper. Brown.

FAMILIÆ ERCISCUNDÆ (Lat.). In Civil Law. An action which lay for any of the co-heirs for the division of what fell to them by inheritance. Stair, Inst. l. 1, tit. 7, § 15.

FAMILIARES REGIS. Persons of the king's household. The ancient titles of the six clerks of chancery in England. 2 Reeve, Hist. Eng. Law 249, 251.

FAMILY. Father, mother, and children. All the individuals who live under the authority of another, including the servants of the family. Poor v. Ins. Co., 2 Fed. 432. All the relations who descend from a common ancestor or who spring from a common root. La. Code, art. 3522, no. 16; 9 Ves. 323. The primary meaning of a testator's "family" in a will is children; 3 Ch. Div. 672.

In common parlance it consists of those who live under the same roof with the pater-familias. When they branch out and become the heads of new establishments, they cease to be part of the father's family. 4 Term 797; Dodge v. R. Co., 154 Mass. 290, 28 N. E. 243, 13 L. R. A. 318.

While usually importing a household, including parents, children, and servants, it is not necessary, to sustain the family relation between parents and children, that they should reside together; Putman v. Southern Pac. Co., 21 Or. 230, 27 Pac. 1033.

Where the mother of an insured person did not live with him and was not dependent upon him for support, it was held she was not a member of his family; Western Commercial Travelers' Ass'n v. Tennent, 128 Mo. App. 541, 106 S. W. 1073.

It is said to mean, in the Texas constitution, "every collective body of persons living together within the same curtilage, subsisting in common, directing their attention to a common object—the promotion of their mutual interests and social happiness." Wilson v. Cochran, 31 Tex. 680, 98 Am. Dec. 553. "A family is the collective body of persons who live in one house, under one head or manager." Tyson v. Reynolds, 52 Ia. 431, 3 N. W. 469; Arnold v. Waltz, 53 Ia. 706, 6 N. W. 40, 36 Am. Rep. 248.

Those members of the household who are dependent on the householder to whom he owes some duty. Brokaw v. Ogle, 170 Ill. 115, 48 N. E. 394.

The meaning of the term is frequently a matter of statutory or constitutional interpretation. An unmarried woman keeping house and taking care of two children of a deceased sister is the head of a family; Arnold v. Waltz, 53 Ia. 706, 6 N. W. 40, 36 Am. Rep. 248; a widower without children, who takes his mother to live with him; Parsons v. Livingston, 11 Ia. 104, 77 Am. Dec. 135; an unmarried man who succeeds his father in taking care of his minor sisters may be deemed the head of a family; Greenwood v. Maddox, 27 Ark. 658; an unmarried man supporting his widowed sister and her small children; Wade v. Jones, 20 Mo. 75, 61 Am. Dec. 584; an unmarried man whose widowed sister lived with him and kept his house; Bailey v. Comings, Fed. Cas. No. 733; an unmarried woman with her illegitimate child; Ellis v. White, 47 Cal. 73. But not a man who has no family; Abercrombie v. Alderson, 9 Ala. 981; Woodworth v. Comstock, 10 Allen (Mass.) 425. A single person in the actual occupancy of a homestead, although not the head of a family, is entitled to a homestead exemption as a family; Hesnard v. Plunkett, 6 S. D. 73, 60 N. W. 159.

Husband and wife constitute a family under homestead and exemption laws; Williams v. Young, 17 Cal. 403; Oppenheim v. Myers, 99 Va. 582, 39 S. E. 218; Chafee v. Rainey, 21 S. C. 11; Dye v. Cooke, 88 Tenn. 275, 12 S. W. 631, 17 Am. St. Rep. 882; Trotter v. Dobbs, 38 Miss. 198; Miller v. Finegan, 26 Fla. 29, 7 South. 140, 6 L. R. A. 813; Cox v. Stafford, 14 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 519; Kitchell v. Burgwin, 21 Ill. 45; a widow constitutes a family on the death of her husband, though her children were all of age; Aultman, Mil- ler & Co. v. Price, 68 Kan. 640, 75 Pac. 1019; and a widow without children; Moore v. Parker, 13 S. C. 490; and one whose children had all reached majority, where one of them had lived in her house and was dependent on her for support; Sheehy v. Scott, 128 Ia. 551, 104 N. W. 1139, 4 L. R. A. (N. S.) 365; a deserted wife without children was head of a family; Berry v. Hanks, 28 Ill. App. 51; and so was a widower with whom lived his son and his son's wife and a servant; Tyson v. Reynolds, 52 Ia. 421, 3 N. W. 469; or a widower and a grown-up daughter; Cox v. Stafford, 14 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 521; or merely a widower; In re Lamb's Estate, 95 Cal. 397, 30 Pac. 568; and where the homestead had been acquired, a widower having a son and daughter of age was entitled to the exemption; Webb v. Cowley, 5 Lea (Tenn.) 722; so where there were no children, but a widower kept house with a housekeeper; Ellis v. Davis, 90 Ky. 183, 14 S. W. 74; but a widower keeping house with a female relative, to whom he owes no duty of support, has no family; Whitehead v. Nickelson, 48 Tex. 517.

Under homestead laws: (1) Family relates to social status, not a mere contract; (2) legal or moral obligations on the head of the family to support the other members must be considered; and (3) corresponding state of dependence on the part of the other members for this support; Roco v. Green, 50 Tex. 488.

In the payment of mutual benefits to the family of the holder of a certificate, a stepfather, not a member of the insured's household, was held not a member of his family; Supreme Lodge Order of Mutual Protection v. Dewey, 142 Mich. 666, 106 N. W. 140, 3 L. R. A. (N. S.) 334, 113 Am. St. Rep. 596, 7 Ann. Cas. 681. In mutual benefit statutes "family" is an expression of great flexibility. It may mean the husband and wife, having no children and living alone together, or it may mean children or wife and children, or blood relatives, or any group constituting a distinct domestic or social body; Carmichael v. Ben. Ass'n, 51 Mich. 494, 16 N. W. 871. It may apply to blood relatives, even though living apart from the applicant and having families of their own. It may apply to those who are neither relatives by consanguinity or affinity, provided they are of the household of the applicant and maintaining the relations usual in families united by blood; Carmichael v. Ben. Ass'n, 51 Mich. 494, 16 N. W. 871; Simcoke v. Grand Lodge of A. O. U. W. of Iowa, 84 Ia. 283, 51 N. W. 8, 15 L. R. A. 114; Spear v. Robinson, 29 Me. 531; Klotz v. Klotz, 22 S. W. 551, 15 Ky. L. Rep. 183; Appeal of Folmer, 87 Pa. 133; Danielson v. Wilson, 73 Ill. App. 287; Carpenter v. Ins. Co., 161 Pa. 9, 28 Atl. 943, 23 L. R. A. 571, 41 Am. St. Rep. 880; Norwegian Old People's Home Society v. Wilson, 176 Ill. 94, 52 N. E. 41.

In the construction of wills, the word family, when applied to personal property, is synonymous with kindred or relations. It may, nevertheless, be confined to particular relations by the context of the will, or may be enlarged by it, so that the expression may in some cases mean children, or next of kin, and in others may even include relations by marriage; Schoul. Wills 537. The primary meaning of the word family is children, and it must be so construed in all cases unless the context shows that it was used in a different sense; Phillips v. Ferguson, 85 Va. 509, 8 S. E. 241, 1 L. R. A. 837, 17 Am. St. Rep. 78. It has been more commonly held that parents are not included in the term; 8 Ves. 604; 2 Redf. Wills 73; 5 Maule & S. 126; Spencer v. Spencer, 11 Paige (N. Y.) 159; it may include a wife as well as children; Bowditch v. Andrew, 8 Allen (Mass.) 339. A statute providing that real estate shall not go "out of the family" restricts the descent to the issue of the ancestor; Den v. D'Hart, 3 N. J. L. 481. See HEAD OF A FAMILY.

FAMILY ARRANGEMENT. An agreement made between a father and his son, or children, or between brothers, to dispose of property in a different manner to that which would otherwise take place.

In these cases, frequently, the mere relation of the parties will give effect to bargains otherwise without adequate consideration. 1 Chitty, Pr. 67; 1 Turn. & R. 13; Boyd v. Robinson, 93 Tenn. 1, 23 S. W. 72; De Hatre v. De Hatre, 50 Mo. App. 1.

Such an arrangement may be upheld, although there were no rights in dispute at the time of making it, and the court will not be disposed to scan with much nicety the quantum of the consideration; L. R. 2 Ch. 294. It is said that a family arrangement is not by itself a valuable consideration; Brett, L. C. in Mod. Eq. 294. Wherever doubts and disputes have arisen with regard to the rights of different members of a family (especially when relating to legitimacy) and fair compromises have been entered into to preserve harmony, they have been sustained, though, perhaps, resting upon grounds which would not have been considered satisfactory if the transaction had occurred between mere strangers; 2 Dr. & War. 503. The impossibility of estimating money considerations in family arrangements has led to their exemption from the rules which affect other arrangements; 7 Cl. & F. 280.

In ordinary cases a father's dealings with his child who has just come of age are open to suspicion, and so are dealings with a reversioner, but if these are in the nature of a family arrangement, the court will regard them, not with suspicion, but with favor; 2 Giff. 232. It is not essential that the son should have independent advice, nor will inquiry be made as to how far the father's influence was exerted. At the same time any unusual benefit secured to the father will be scrutinized and perhaps expunged; 41 Ch. D. 200; and only the usual provisions should be inserted. It seems that resettlements under a family arrangement will justify the execution of a power under which the donee retains some benefit, which would otherwise be a fraud on the power. See 1 Swans. 129. An agreement between the children of a testator that the shares of the children shall be considered as vesting at the death of the testator divested of the survivorship clause contained in the will, will be upheld in equity; Ralston's Estate, 172 Pa. 104, 33 Atl. 273.

Evidence of circumstances to show a family arrangement at the execution of deeds is admissible, and a deed otherwise invalid would be good evidence if it formed a component part of such arrangement; Jourdan v. Jourdan, 9 S. & R. (Pa.) 268, 11 Am. Dec. 724. See FAMILY MEETING.

FAMILY BIBLE. A Bible containing a record of the births, marriages, and deaths of the members of a family.

An entry by a father, made in a Bible, stating that Peter, his eldest son, was born in lawful wedlock, of Maria, his wife, at a time specified, is evidence to prove the legitimacy of Peter; 4 Campb. 401. But the entry in order to be evidence must be an original entry; and, when it is not so, the loss of the original must be proved before the copy can be received; Curtis v. Patton, 6 S. & R. (Pa.) 135. See Carskadden v. Poorman, 10 Watts (Pa.) 82, 36 Am. Dec. 145.

A family Bible, containing entries of family incidents, where the parties who made the entries are dead, will be received in evidence; Whart. Ev. § 219; Tayl. Ev. 572; 1 Greenl. Ev. § 104; L. R. 1 Ex. 255; Greenleaf v. R. Co., 30 Ia. 301; Southern Life Ins. Co. v. Wilkinson, 53 Ga. 535. See 11 Cl. & F. 85; Town of Union v. Town of Plainfield, 39 Conn. 563. In order to make an entry evidence as to the birth or death of a child, it must be shown that the entry is in the handwriting of a parent; Greenleaf v. R. Co., 30 Ia. 301. But it is held that entries in a family Bible are admissible in evidence without proof that they have been made by a parent or relative; Weaver v. Leiman, 52 Md. 709.

FAMILY COUNCIL. See FAMILY ARRANGEMENT; FAMILY MEETING.

FAMILY EXPENSES. Obligations incurred for something intended for the use or comfort of the collection spoken of as the family, as distinguished from individual or personal expenses. Vose v. Myott, 141 Ia. 506, 120 N. W. 58, 21 L. R. A. (N. S.) 277. Medical services furnished to a member of the family are such; Mueller v. Kuhn, 59 Ill. App. 353; Russell v. Graumann, 40 Wash. 667, 82 Pac. 998, 5 Ann. Cas. 830; Murdy v. Skyles, 101 Ia. 549, 70 N. W. 714, 63 Am. St. Rep. 411; wages of servants and domestics; Perkins v. Morgan, 36 Colo. 300, 85 Pac. 640; the rent of a house; Houghteling v. Walker, 100 Fed. 253; an article of jewelry is held not, though sometimes worn by members of the family; Hyman v. Harding, 162 Ill. 357, 44 N. E. 754; but contra Neasham v. McNair, 103 Ia. 695, 72 N. W. 773, 38 L. R. A. 847, 64 Am. St. Rep. 202; nor is the cost of keeping an insane husband in an asylum; Blackhawk County v. Scott, 111 Ia. 190, 82 N. W. 492.

FAMILY MEETING (called, also, family council). In Louisiana. Meetings of at least five relations of minors or other persons on whose interest they are called upon to deliberate, or, in default of relations, then of the friends of such minors or other persons. See Lemoine v. Ducote, 45 La. Ann. 857, 12 South. 939.

The appointment of the members of the family meeting is made by the judge. The selection must be from among those domiciliated in the parish in which the meeting is held: the relations are selected according to their proximity, beginning with the nearest. The relation is preferred to the connection in the same degree; and among relations of the same degree the eldest is preferred. The undertutor must also be present. Commiaux v. Barbin, 6 Mart. La. (N. S.) 455.

The family meeting is held before a justice of the peace, or notary public, appointed by the judge for the purpose. It is called for a fixed day and hour, by citations delivered at least three days before the day appointed for that purpose.

The members of the family meeting, before commencing their deliberations, take an oath before the officer before whom the meeting is held, to give their advice according to the best of their knowledge touching the interests of the person respecting whom they are called upon to deliberate. The officer before whom the family meeting is held must make a particular procès-verbal of the deliberations, cause the members of the family meeting to sign it, if they know how to sign, and must sign it himself, and deliver a copy to the parties that they may have it homologated.

FAMILY PHYSICIAN. A physician who regularly attends and is consulted by the members of the family as their medical adviser; but he need not attend in all cases or be consulted by all the members of the family. Price v. Ins. Co., 17 Minn. 519 (Gil. 473), 10 Am. Rep. 166; Reid v. Ins. Co., 58 Mo. 424. See PHYSICIAN.

FAMILY USE. That use ordinarily made by and suitable for the members of a household whether as individuals or collectively. Spring Valley Water Works v. San Francisco, 52 Cal. 120. The supply of water in a municipal corporation for family use includes the supply of gaols, hospitals, almshouses, schools, and other municipal institutions; id. See GROCERIES.

FAMOSUS (Lat.). Defamatory; slanderous; scandalous. Used in civil and old English law to express that which affected injuriously the character or reputation.

FAMOSUS LIBELLUS (Lat.). Among the civilians these words signified that species of injuria which corresponds nearly to libel or slander.

FANATIC. A religious enthusiast; a bigot; a person entertaining wild and extravagant notions, or affected by zeal or enthusiasm, especially upon religious subjects.

The word was formerly defined in English law as a person pretending to be inspired, and was said to be a term applied to "Quakers, Anabaptists, and all other sectaries, and factious dissenters from the church of England." Jac. L. Dict. See Stat. 13 Car. II. c. 6.

FANEGA. In Spanish Law. A measure of land, which is not the same in every province. Diccionario de la Acad.; 2 White, Recop. 49. In Spanish America, the fanega consisted of six thousand four hundred square varas, or yards. 2 White, Recop. 138.

FARDEL. The fourth part of a yardland. Spelman, Gloss. According to others, the eighth part. Noy, Complete Lawyer 57; Cowell. See Cunningham, Law Dict.

FARDING-DEAL. The fourth part of an acre of land. Spelm. Gloss.

FARE. A voyage or passage. The money paid for a voyage or passage. The latter is the modern signification. See Chase v. R. Co., 26 N. Y. 526; TICKET; PASSENGER.

In case of a water company it means the tax or compensation which the company may charge for furnishing a supply of water. McNeal Pipe & Foundry Co. v. Howland, 111 N. C. 615, 16 S. E. 857, 20 L. R. A. 743. See RATES.

FARLEY or FARLEU. Money paid in lieu of a heriot (q. v.). Applied also to the best chattel as distinguished from heriot,—the best beast. Cowell.

FARLINGARII. Whoremongers; adulterers.

FARM. A certain amount of provision reserved as the rent of a messuage. Spelman, Gloss.

Rent generally which is reserved on a lease; when it was to be paid in money, it was called blanche ferme. Spelman, Gloss.; 2 Bla. Com. 42.

A term. A lease of lands; a leasehold interest. 2 Sharsw. Bla. Com. 17; 1 Reeve, Hist. Eng. Law 301, n.; 2 Chit. Pl. 879, n. e. The land itself, let to farm or rent. 2 Bla. Com. 368.

A portion of land used for agricultural purposes, either wholly or in part. Winn v. Cabot, 18 Pick. (Mass.) 553; Com. v. Carmalt, 2 Binn. (Pa.) 238.

A body of land, usually under one ownership, devoted to agriculture; either to the raising of crops, or pasturage, or both. It is not understood to have any necessary relation to, or to be circumscribed by, political subdivisions. A farm may consist of any number of acres, of one quarter section or less, or many quarter sections; of one field, or many fields; may lie in one township and county, or in more than one; People v. Caldwell, 142 Ill. 434, 32 N. E. 693. See Kendall v. Miller, 47 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 446.

Usually the chief messuage in a village or town whereto belongs a great demesne of all sorts. Cowell; Cunningham, Law Dict.; Termes de la Ley.

A large tract or portion of land taken by a lease under a yearly rent payable by the tenant. Tomlin, Law Dict.

From this latter sense is derived its common modern signification of a large tract used for cultivation or other purposes, as raising stock, whether hired or owned by the occupant, including a messuage with out-buildings, gardens, orchard, yard, etc. Plowd. 195; Touchst. 93.

In American law, the word has almost exclusively this latter meaning of a portion of land used for agricultural purposes, either wholly or in part. Com. v. Carmalt, 2 Binn. (Pa.) 238; Winn v. Cabot, 18 Pick. (Mass.) 553; Wheeler v. Randall, 6 Metc. (Mass.) 529.

By the conveyance of a farm will pass a messuage, arable land, meadow, pasture, wood, etc., belonging to or used with it; Co. Litt. 5 a; Shepp. Touchst. 93; 4 Cruise, Dig. 321; Plowd. 167.

In a will, the word farm may pass a freehold, if it appear that such was the intention of the testator; 6 Term 345; 9 East 448. See 6 East 604, n.; 8 id. 339.

FARM LET. Technical words in a lease creating a term for years. Co. Litt. 45 b; 1 Washb. R. Pr. Index, Lease.

FARM OUT. To rent for a certain term. The collection of the revenue among the Romans was farmed out to persons called publicani. The same system existed in France before the revolution of 1789; and in England the excise taxes were farmed out, and thereby their evils were greatly aggravated. The farming of the excise was abolished in Scotland by the union, having been before that time abandoned in England. In all these cases the custom gave rise to great abuse and oppression of the people, and in France most of the farmers-general, as they were called, perished on the scaffold.

Charter authority to a railroad company to farm out the right of transportation authorizes a lease of the road; Hill v. R. Co., 143 N. C. 539, 55 S. E. 854, 9 L. R. A. (N. S.) 606.

FARMER. The lessee of a farm. It is said that every lessee for life or years, although it be but of a small house and land, is called farmer. This word implies no mystery, except it be that of husbandman.

Cunn. Law Dict.; Cowell; 3 Sharsw. Bla. Com. 318.

In common parlance, and as a term of description in a deed, farmer means one who cultivates a farm, whether he owns it or not. There may also be a farmer of the revenue or of other personal property as well as lands. Plowd. 195; Cunn. Law Dict.

FARMER GENERAL. See FARM OUT.

FARRAGO LIBELLI (Lat.). An ill-composed book containing a collection of miscellaneous subjects not properly associated or scientifically arranged. Whart.

FARRIER. One who takes upon himself the public employment of shoeing horses.

Like an innkeeper, a common carrier, and other persons who assume a public employment, a farrier is bound to serve the public as far as his employment goes, and an action lies against him for refusing, when a horse is brought to him at a reasonable time for such purpose, if he refuses; Oliph. Horses 131; and he is liable for the unskilfulness of himself or servant in performing such work; 1 Bla. Com. 431; but not for the malicious act of the servant in purposely driving a nail into the foot of the horse with the intention of laming him; 2 Salk. 440; Hanover, Horses 215.

FARTHING. In English Law. The one-fourth part of a penny (q. v.).

FARTHING OF GOLD. An ancient coin of the value of one-fourth part of a noble. 9 Hen. V. c. 7.

FARTHING OF LAND. A great quantity of land, differing much from farding-deal, q. v.

FARVAND. Standing by itself, this word signifies "passage by sea or water." In charter-parties, it means voyage or passage by water. 18 C. B. 880.

FARYNDON INN. The ancient designation of Serjeants' Inn, Chancery Lane, London. See INNS OF COURT.

FAS (Lat.). Right; justice. 3 Bla. Com. 2. See PER FAS ET NEFAS.

In primitive times it was the will of the gods, embodied in rules regulating not only ceremonials but the conduct of all men. Taylor, Science of Jurispr. 65.

FAST BILL OF EXCEPTIONS. One which may be taken in Georgia in injunction cases and the like, in time and manner to secure speedy hearing. It is certified within twenty days after the decision. Sewell v. Edmonston, 66 Ga. 353.

FAST-DAY. A day of penitential observance and religious abstinence. As to counting it in legal proceedings, see 1 Chit. Archb. Pr., 12th ed. 160; HOLIDAY.

FAST ESTATE. Real property. A term sometimes used in wills. Jackson v. Merrill, 6 Johns. (N. Y.) 185, 5 Am. Dec. 213; Lewis v. Smith, 9 N. Y. 502, 61 Am. Dec. 706.

FASTERMANNES. Securities. Bonds-men. Spelman, Gloss. Men fast bound as sureties of the peace for each other under the Saxon law. Encyc. Lond.

FASTI. See DIES FASTI.

FATHER. He by whom a child is begotten. See PARENT AND CHILD; INFANT.

FATHER-IN-LAW. The father of one's spouse.

FATHOM. A measure of length, equal to six feet. Used as a nautical measure.

The word is probably derived from the Teutonic word fad, which signifies the thread or yarn drawn out in spinning to the length of the arm, before it is run upon the spindle. Webster; Minsheu.

FATUA MULIER. A whore. Du Fresne.

FATUM. In Civil Law. Fate. An overruling power. An event which can neither be anticipated nor prevented. See DAMNUM FATALE.

FATUOUS PERSON. In Scotch Law. One entirely destitute of reason; is qui omnino desipit. Erskine, Inst. b. 1, tit. 7, s. 48. An idiot. Jacob. One who is incapable of managing his affairs, by reason of a total defect of reason. He is described as having uniform stupidity and inattention of manner and childishness of speech. Bell's Law. Dict.

FATUUM JUDICIUM. A foolish judgment or verdict. As applied to the latter it is one rather false by reason of folly than criminally so as amounting to perjury. Bract. f. 289.

FATUUS. An idiot or fool. Bract. f. 420 b. Silly; ill-considered; foolish; indiscreet.

FAUBOURG. A district or part of a town adjoining the principal city; as a faubourg of New Orleans. City Council of Lafayette v. Holland, 18 La. 286.

FAUCES TERRÆ (Lat. jaws of the land). Projecting headlands or promontories, including arms of the sea. Such arms of the sea are said to be inclosed within the fauces terræ, in contradistinction to the open sea. 1 Kent 367. See ARM OF THE SEA; KING'S CHAMBER; TERRITORIAL WATERS; 16 Yale L. J. 471.

FAULT. An improper act or omission, which arises from ignorance, carelessness, or negligence. The act or omission must not have been meditated, and must have caused some injury to another. Leq. Elém. § 783.

In legal literature it is the equivalent of "negligence." An error or defect of judgment or conduct; any deviation from prudence, rectitude, or duty; any shortcoming or neglect of care or performance resulting from inattention, incapacity, or perversity; a wrong tendency, course, or act. Louisville, E. & St. L. R. Co. v. Berry, 2 Ind. App. 427, 28 N. E. 714.

Gross fault or neglect consists in not observing that care towards others which a man the least attentive usually takes of his own affairs. Such fault may, in some cases, afford a presumption of fraud, and in very gross cases it approaches so near as to be almost undistinguishable from it, especially when the facts seem hardly consistent with an honest intention. But there may be a gross fault without fraud; 2 Stra. 1090; Story, Bailm. § 18; Toullier, l. 3, t. 3, § 231.

Ordinary fault consists in the omission of that care which mankind generally pay to their own concerns; that is, the want of ordinary diligence.

A slight fault consists in the want of that care which very attentive persons take of their own affairs. This fault assimilates itself to, and in some cases is scarcely distinguishable from, mere accident or want of foresight.

This division has been adopted by common lawyers from the civil law. Although the civilians generally agree in this division, yet they are not without a difference of opinion. See Pothier, Observation générale sur le précédent Traité et sur les suivants, printed at the end of his Traité des Obligations, where he cites Accussus, Alciat, Cujas, Duaren, D'Avezan, Vinnius, and Heineccius, in support of this division. On the other side the reader is referred to Thomasius, tom. 2, Dissertationem, page 1006; Le Brun, cited by Jones, Bailm. 27; and Toullier, Droit Civil Français, liv. 3, tit. 3, § 231.

These principles established, different rules have been made as to the responsibilities of parties for their faults in relation to their contracts. They have been reduced to three. See BAILMENT; DOLUS; NEGLIGENCE.

See 2 Sto. Bailm. 24, for a discussion of the definition and classification of fault from Ayliffe, Pand.

FAUTOR. In Spanish Law. Accomplice; the person who aids or assists another in the commission of a crime.

FAUX. In French Law. A falsification or fraudulent alteration or suppression of a thing by words, by writings, or by acts without either. Biret, Vocabulaire des Six Codes.

Toullier says (tom. 9, n. 183), "Faux may be understood in three ways: in its most extended sense, it is the alteration of truth, with or without intention; it is nearly synonymous with lying; in a less extended sense, it is the alteration of truth, accompanied with fraud, mutatio veritatis cum dolo facta; and lastly, in a narrow, or rather the legal, sense of the word, when it is a question to know if the faux be a crime, it is the fraudulent alteration of the truth in those cases ascertained and punished by the law." See CRIMEN FALSI.

FAVOR. Bias; partiality; lenity; prejudice.

The grand jury are sworn to inquire into all offences which have been committed and into all violations of law, without fear, favor, or affection. See GRAND JURY. When a juror is influenced by bias or prejudice, so that there is not sufficient ground for a principal challenge, he may nevertheless be challenged for favor. See CHALLENGE; BAC.

Abr. Juries, E; Queen v. Hepburn, 7 Cranch (U. S.) 290, 3 L. Ed. 348.

FEAL. Truthful; true. The tenants by knight's service used to swear to their lords to be feal and leal. Feal homager, faithful subject.

FEAL AND DIVOT. A right in Scotland, similar to the right of turbary in England for fuel, etc. Wharton.

It is a predial servitude peculiar to the law of Scotland, in virtue of which the proprietor of the dominant tenement possesses the right of turning up and carrying off turf from the servient tenement for the purpose of building fences, roofing houses, and the like. This, as well as the servitude of fuel, implies the right of using the nearest ground of the servient tenement on which to lay and dry the turf peats or fuel. These servitudes do not extend beyond the ordinary uses of the actual occupants of the dominant tenements, and cannot be taken advantage of for such a purpose as to burn limestone for sale. They are not included in the servitude of pasturage, but must be constituted either by express grant, or by possession following on the usual clause of parts and pertinents; Ersk. ii. tit. ix. s. 17. The etymology of these words has been much disputed. Feal or fail is said to come from the Sui-Gothic wall, any grassy part of the surface of the ground; and Jamieson derives divot from delve (Sax. delfan or delvan), or, as another alternative, says that it may have been formed by the monkish writers of old charters from defodere, to dig the earth. The former is the more probable conjecture. Int. Cyc.

FEALTY. That duty which every man who holds lands of another owes to him of whom he holds.

Under the feudal system, every owner of lands held them of some superior lord, from whom or from whose ancestors the tenant had received them. By this connection the lord became bound to protect the tenant in the enjoyment of the land granted to him; and, on the other hand, the tenant was bound to be faithful to his lord and to defend him against all his enemies. This obligation was called fidelitas or fealty; 1 Bla. Com. 263; 2 id. 86; Co. Litt. 67 b.

This fealty was of two sorts: that which is general, and is due from every subject to his prince; the other special, and required of such only as in respect of their fee are tied by this oath to their landlords; 1 Bla. Com. 267; Cowell.

The oath or obligation of fealty was one of the essential requisites of the feudal relation; 2 Sharsw. Bla. Com. 45, 86; Littleton §§ 117, 131; Wright, Ten. 35; Termes de la Ley; 1 Washb. R. P. 19; see 1 Poll. & Maitl. 277-287, and was as follows: "Hear this ye good people that I (such a one by name) faith will bear to our lord King Edward from this day forward of life and limb, of body and chattels and earthly honor, and the services which belong to him for the fees and tenements which I hold of him will lawfully perform to him as they become due to the best of my power, so help me God and the saints." Stubbs, Const. Hist. § 462 n. Fealty was due alike from freeholders and tenants for years as an incident to their estates to be paid to the reversioner; Co. Lit. 67 b. Chal. R. P. 13. Tenants at will did not have fealty; 2 Burton, R. P. 395, n.; 1 Washb. R. P. 371. It has now fallen into disuse, and is no longer exacted; 3 Kent 510; Wright, Ten. 35, 55; Cowell.

FEAR. Dread; consciousness of approaching danger.

Fear in the person robbed is one of the ingredients required to constitute a robbery from the person; and without this the felonious taking of the property is a larceny. It is not necessary that the owner of the property should be in fear of his own person; but fear of violence to the person of his child; 2 East, Pl. Cr. 718; or to his property; id. 731; 2 Russ. Cr. 72; is sufficient; 2 Russ. Cr. 71. See Bonsall v. State, 35 Ind. 460; State v. Howerton, 58 Mo. 581; DURESS; PUTTING IN FEAR; THREAT.

FEASANCE. A doing; a performing or performance. Feasant, doing or making,—as damage feasant (q. v.). Feasor, doer, maker,—as feasors del estatute, makers of the statute; Dyer 3 b.

FEASTS. Certain established periods in the Christian church. Formerly the days of the feasts of saints were used to indicate the dates of instruments and memorable events; 8 Toulhier, n. 81. The feasts of the English church were formerly used to divide the terms of the legal year, but this division was abolished by the judicature act. See TERMS.

FECIAL LAW. A branch of Roman jurisprudence concerned with embassies, declarations of war, and treaties of peace; so called from feciales (q. v.), who were charged with its administration. It more nearly resembles the international law of modern times than any other department of the Roman law.

FECIALES. Amongst the ancient Romans, that order of priests who discharged the duties of ambassadors. Subsequently their duties appear to have related more particularly to the declaring war and peace. Calvinus, Lex.

FEDERAL. A term commonly used to express a league or compact between two or more states.

In the United States the central government of the Union is federal. The constitution was adopted "to form a more perfect union" among the states, for the purpose of self-protection and for the promotion of their mutual happiness. Freeman's Hist. Fed. Govt.; Austin, Jurispr. Lect. 6; see U. S. v. Cruikshank, 92 U. S. 542, 23 L. Ed. 588.

FEDERAL COURTS. See UNITED STATES COURTS.

FEDERAL GOVERNMENT. A union or confederation of sovereign states, created either by treaty, or by the mutual adoption of a federal constitution, for the purpose of presenting to the world the appearance of a single state, while retaining the rights and power of internal regulation and administration, or at least of local self-government.

The more extended the renunciation of individual sovereignty, the more powerful does the new government become and the more nearly does it approach to a substantial union. No real diminution of sovereignty is necessarily involved except the relinquishment of the power of conducting independent relations with foreign powers.

"There are two different modes of organizing a federal union. The federal authorities may represent the governments solely, and their acts may be obligatory only on the governments as such, or they may have the power of enacting laws and issuing orders which are binding directly on individual citizens. The former is the plan of the (old) German so-called confederation, and of the Swiss constitution previous to 1817. It was tried in America for a few years immediately following the war of independence. The other principle is that of the existing constitution of the United States, and has been adopted within the last dozen years by the Swiss confederacy. The federal congress of the American union is a substantive part of the government of every individual state. Within the limits of its attributions, it makes laws which are obeyed by every citizen individually, executes them through its own officers, and enforces them by its own tribunals. This is the only principle which has been found, or which is even likely to produce an effective federal government. A union between the governments only is a mere alliance, and subject to all contingencies which render alliances precarious." Mills, Representative Government 301.

A primary difficulty, it has been said, in framing a federal government and a source of danger to its permanence, is liability to disagreements between the constituent governments or between one or more of the local governments and the federal government as to the limits of their respective powers. The scheme adopted in the American system as a provision for such cases has been thus described: "Under the more perfect mode of federation, where every citizen of each particular state owes obedience to two governments—that of his own state, and that of the federation—it is evidently necessary not only that the constitutional limits of the authority of each should be precisely and clearly defined, but that the power to decide between them in any case of dispute should not reside in either of the governments, or in any functionary subject to it, but in an umpire independent of both. There must be a supreme court of justice, and a system of subordinate courts in every state of the union, before whom such questions shall be carried, and whose judgment on them, in the last stage of appeal, shall be final. Every state of the union, and the federal government itself, as well as every functionary of each, must be liable to be sued in those courts for exceeding their powers, or for non-performance of their federal duties, and must in general be obliged to employ those courts as the instruments for enforcing their federal rights. This involves the remarkable consequence, actually realized in the United States, that a court of justice, the highest federal tribunal, is supreme over the various governments, both state and federal, having the right to declare that any new law made, or act done by them, exceeds the powers assigned to them by the federal constitution, and in consequence has no legal validity." "The tribunals which act as umpires between the federal and state governments naturally also decide all disputes between two states, or between a citizen of one state and the government of another. The usual remedies between nations, war and diplomacy, being precluded by the federal union, it is necessary that a judicial remedy should supply the place. The supreme court of the federation dispenses international law, and is the first great example of what is now one of the most prominent wants of civilized society, a real international tribunal." Id. 305. See Freeman, Fed. Gov't.

The American union is the most striking illustration of federal government in existence, and its permanent character was settled by the civil war which finally determined its indestructibility by action of individual states. In Europe, the empire of Germany and the republic of Switzerland are instances of the operation of successful federal governments, as are most of the South American States; while in the British Empire the Dominion of Canada, the Australian federation, and South Africa, as also the Greater Republic of Central America, are indications of a tendency in that direction which existing conditions are likely to increase very rapidly. See these several titles, and also UNITED STATES OF AMERICA; GOVERNMENT.

FEDERAL QUESTION. A term used to designate a case of which the federal court has jurisdiction because it requires a construction of the constitution or some law of the United States or of a treaty made under its authority. Bryan v. Kennett, 113 U. S. 190, 5 Sup. Ct. 407, 28 L. Ed. 908.

The existence or non-existence of a federal question determines the original jurisdiction in many cases of the district court, now the only federal court of first instance, and the appellate jurisdiction of the supreme court in cases from the state courts.

The judiciary act of March 3, 1887, as amended Aug. 13, 1888, conferred jurisdiction upon the federal courts in "cases arising under the constitution or laws of the United States," or, as commonly expressed by the profession, in cases involving a "federal question"; In re Sievers, 91 Fed. 366. And the same jurisdiction is conferred by the Judicial Code of March 3, 1911, in section 24 as to the district court, and in section 237 as to cases taken to the supreme court from the state courts; U. S. Comp. Laws (1911) p. 135.

If, from the questions involved in a case, it appears that some title, right, privilege, or immunity, on which the recovery depends, will be defeated by one construction of the constitution, or of a law or treaty of the United States, or sustained by the opposite construction, the case will be one arising under the constitution or laws of the United States, and involves a federal question; Starin v. New York, 115 U. S. 257, 6 Sup. Ct. 28, 29 L. Ed. 388; Provident Sav. Life Assur. Society v. Ford, 114 U. S. 641, 5 Sup. Ct. 1104, 29 L. Ed. 261; Kansas P. R. Co. v. R. Co., 112 U. S. 416, 5 Sup. Ct. 208, 28 L. Ed. 794; Ames v. Kansas, 111 U. S. 462, 4 Sup. Ct. 437, 28 L. Ed. 482. Where it does not appear from the record that a federal question was actually presented or in any way relied on before final judgment below, the supreme court is without jurisdiction; Simmerman v. Nebraska, 116 U. S. 54, 6 Sup. Ct. 333, 29 L. Ed. 535; as it must appear on the record that it was raised and decided, or that its decision was necessary to the judgment or decree rendered; Detroit City R. Co. v. Guthard, 114 U. S. 133, 5 Sup. Ct. 811, 29 L. Ed. 118; McManus v. O'Sullivan, 91 U. S. 578, 23 L. Ed. 390; Chouteau v. Gibson, 111 U. S. 200, 4 Sup. Ct. 340, 28 L. Ed. 400; Harrison v. Morton, 171 U. S. 38, 18 Sup. Ct. 742, 43 L. Ed. 63. See Kaukauna Water Power Co. v. Canal Co., 142 U. S. 254, 12 Sup. Ct. 173, 35 L. Ed. 1004.

Spencer v. Silk Co., 191 U. S. 526, 24 Sup. Ct. 174, 48 L. Ed. 287; Bankers' Mut. Casualty Co. v. R. Co., 192 U. S. 371, 24 Sup. Ct. 325, 48 L. Ed. 484; and the supreme court cannot indulge in presumptions to supply omissions from the record; Downham v. Alexandria, 10 Wall. (U. S.) 173, 19 L. Ed. 929; nor can it resort to judicial knowledge to raise controversies not presented by the record; Mutual Life Ins. Co. v. McGrew, 188 U. S. 291, 23 Sup. Ct. 375, 47 L. Ed. 480; nor can the court resort to forced inferences and conjectural reasonings, or possible or even probable suppositions of the points raised in and decided by the state courts; Ocean Ins. Co. v. Polleys, 13 Pet. (U. S.) 157, 10 L. Ed. 105; nor is it bound to search the statutes to find one violating the obligation of a contract, when none is set up in pleadings or opinion; Yazoo & M. V. R. Co. v. Adams, 180 U. S. 41, 21 Sup. Ct. 256, 45 L. Ed. 415.

Where the record discloses that no authority was cited or argument advanced in support of an alleged constitutional objection and the decision was based upon other than legal grounds the decision of the state court will not be reversed; Harding v. Illinois, 196 U. S. 78, 25 Sup. Ct. 176, 49 L. Ed. 394.

No particular form of words or phrases in which a claim of federal rights must be asserted in the state court has ever been declared necessary by the supreme court, but it is sufficient if it appears from the record that such rights were specially set up or claimed there in such a way as to bring the subject to the attention of the state court; Green Bay & M. Canal Co. v. Paper Co., 172 U. S. 66, 19 Sup. Ct. 97, 43 L. Ed. 364; as where the constitutionality of a state statute is directly attacked in the answer; Minneapolis & St. L. R. Co. v. Minnesota, 193 U. S. 53, 24 Sup. Ct. 396, 48 L. Ed. 614. The federal question must be distinctly raised in the state court, and a mere claim, which amounts to no more than a vague and inferential suggestion that a right under the constitution of the United States had been denied, is not sufficient; Thomas v. Iowa, 209 U. S. 258, 28 Sup. Ct. 487, 52 L. Ed. 782; and it is too late to raise it for the first time in the petition for writ of error to the state court, or in the assignment of errors in the supreme court; id.; Montana v. Rice, 204 U. S. 291, 27 Sup. Ct. 281, 51 L. Ed. 490; Mallors v. Trust Co., 216 U. S. 613, 30 Sup. Ct. 438, 54 L. Ed. 638; so also in a petition for rehearing in the state court of last resort, unless (and it must so appear) that court actually entertains the motion and passes upon the federal question; Mallett v. North Carolina, 181 U. S. 589, 21 Sup. Ct. 730, 45 L. Ed. 1015; Leigh v. Green, 193 U. S. 79, 24 Sup. Ct. 390, 48 L. Ed. 623; McCorquodale v. Texas, 211 U. S. 432, 29 Sup. Ct. 146, 53 L. Ed. 269; Forbes v. State Council of Virginia, 216 U. S. 396, 30 Sup. Ct. 295, 54 L. Ed. 534; but it is sufficient if this appears in a motion for a new trial and in an assignment of error in the state supreme court; San Jose Land & Water Co. v. Ranch Co., 189 U. S. 177, 23 Sup. Ct. 487, 47 L. Ed. 765, where also it appeared from the opinion of the court that a federal question was raised. Such question, not raised by the pleadings, cannot be availed of on a motion to dismiss; Illinois C. R. Co. v. Adams, 180 U. S. 28, 21 Sup. Ct. 251, 45 L. Ed. 410. The federal question is raised in time when the plaintiff in error, defendant below, after filing the general issue, moves to amend, claiming rights under the XIVth amendment, and at the trial asks an instruction based thereon; National Mut. Bldg. & Loan Ass'n v. Brahan, 193 U. S. 635, 24 Sup. Ct. 532, 48 L. Ed. 823.

One who relies upon a federal right must specially set it up, and the certificate of the presiding judge of the state court may make more certain and specific what is too general and indefinite in the record, but cannot give jurisdiction where there is nothing in the record by way of a federal question; Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Smith Co., 204 U. S. 551, 27 Sup. Ct. 401, 51 L. Ed. 612; but such certificate that a federal question was raised, though insufficient to give jurisdiction, may be resorted to, in the absence of an opinion, to show that a federal question, which is otherwise raised in the record, was actually passed upon by the court; Gulf & S. I. R. Co. v. Hewes, 183 U. S. 66, 22 Sup. Ct. 26, 46 L. Ed. 86.

Notwithstanding the claim that a federal question was set up in the state court, if it appears to the supreme court to have no foundation or substance, there is no jurisdiction; New Orleans Waterworks Co. v. Louisiana, 185 U. S. 336, 22 Sup. Ct. 691, 46 L. Ed. 936.

Where a federal question is raised in the state courts, the party who brings the case to the supreme court cannot raise there another question which was not raised below; Chapin v. Fye, 179 U. S. 127, 21 Sup. Ct. 71, 45 L. Ed. 119.

In an action in a state court for taxes, where a federal question was not set up in defense until after judgment and reversal by the supreme court of the state, and a new trial was had below in which the question was raised, it was held too late; Yazoo & M. V. R. Co. v. Adams, 180 U. S. 1, 21 Sup. Ct. 240, 45 L. Ed. 395.

"Whenever the highest court of a state, by any form of decision, affirms or denies the validity of a judgment of an inferior court, over which it by law can exercise appellate authority, the jurisdiction of this court to review such decision, if it involve a federal question will upon a proper proceeding attach. . . . And when this court has once acquired jurisdiction, it may send its process, in the enforcement of its judgment, to the appellate court of the state, or to the inferior court whose judgment is reversed;"

The court will not disturb the judgment of a state court resting on federal and non-federal grounds if the latter are sufficient to sustain the decision; Berea College v. Kentucky, 211 U. S. 45, 29 Sup. Ct. 33, 53 L. Ed. 81; McQuade v. Trenton, 172 U. S. 636, 19 Sup. Ct. 292, 43 L. Ed. 581; White v. Leovy, 174 U. S. 91, 19 Sup. Ct. 604, 43 L. Ed. 907; Harrison v. Morton, 171 U. S. 38, 18 Sup. Ct. 742, 43 L. Ed. 63; Hammond v. Ins. Co., 150 U. S. 633, 14 Sup. Ct. 236, 37 L. Ed. 1206; nor where the decision is upon non-federal ground sufficient to sustain it; Waters-Pierce Oil Co. v. Texas, 212 U. S. 112, 29 Sup. Ct. 227, 53 L. Ed. 431; nor will it review the final judgment of the highest court of a state, even if it denied some title of right, privilege, or immunity of the unsuccessful party, unless it appear from the record that such right, privilege or immunity "was specially set up or claimed" in the state court by force of the constitution or some treaty, statute, commission or authority of the United States; and in order to comply with the condition that the right invoked must have been specially set up or claimed it must appear that such claim was made unmistakably; Union Mut. Life Ins. Co. v. Kirchoff, 169 U. S. 111, 18 Sup. Ct. 260, 42 L. Ed. 677; F. G. Oxley Stave Co. v. Butler County, 166 U. S. 648, 17 Sup. Ct. 709, 41 L. Ed. 1149; Capital Nat. Bank v. Bank, 172 U. S. 425, 19 Sup. Ct. 202, 43 L. Ed. 502.

The state courts are competent to decide federal questions arising before them and it is their duty to do so and there is a presumption that they will do what the constitution and laws require of them; if error intervenes the remedy is a writ of error to the state court, and the federal courts cannot be called on to interpose in a controversy properly pending in the state courts on the ground that the state court might so decide as to render their final action unconstitutional; Defiance Water Co. v. Defiance, 191 U. S. 184, 24 Sup. Ct. 63, 48 L. Ed. 140.

The jurisdiction of the supreme court to review a judgment of a state court depends upon the assertion of a right, privilege, or immunity under the federal constitution or laws set up and denied in state courts, and the latter are not amenable to review for the administration of the common law according to their own understanding and interpretation thereof; Pennsylvania R. Co. v. Hughes, 191 U. S. 477, 24 Sup. Ct. 132, 48 L. Ed. 268, affirming Hughes v. R. Co., 202 Pa. 222, 51 Atl. 990, 63 L. R. A. 513, 97 Am. St. Rep. 713. Although a federal right may not have been specially set up in the original petition or earlier proceedings, if it clearly and unmistakably appears from the opinion of the state court under review that a federal question was assumed by the highest court of the state to be in issue and was actually decided against the federal claim and such decision was essential to the judgment rendered, the decision is reviewable by the United States supreme court; Montana v. Rice, 204 U. S. 291, 27 Sup. Ct. 281, 51 L. Ed. 490. It has been held that federal questions are involved in suits brought by corporations created by acts of congress; Union Pac. Ry. Co. v. Myers, 115 U. S. 2, 5 Sup. Ct. 1113, 29 L. Ed. 319; Northern Pac. R. Co. v. Amato, 144 U. S. 465, 12 Sup. Ct. 740, 36 L. Ed. 506; to determine the validity of a railroad consolidation authorized by act of congress; Ames v. Kansas, 111 U. S. 449, 4 Sup. Ct. 437, 28 L. Ed. 482; to enjoin the erection of a bridge across a navigable river authorized by act of congress; Miller v. New York, 13 Blatch. 479, Fed. Cas. No. 9,585; whether full faith and credit were given to a judgment in another state; Huntington v. Attrill, 146 U. S. 657, 13 Sup. Ct. 224, 36 L. Ed. 1123; where the supreme court of a state failed to give proper effect to a decree of the circuit court of the United States; Dowell v. Applegate, 152 U. S. 327, 14 Sup. Ct. 611, 38 L. Ed. 463; where a federal officer is sued in trespass to real estate which he claims to have possession for and under authority of the United States; Stanley v. Schwalby, 147 U. S. 508, 13 Sup. Ct. 418, 37 L. Ed. 259. So, of course, are suits for infringement of patents and copyrights. (For a discussion of the jurisdiction in patent cases, see Henry v. A. B. Dick Co., 224 U. S. 1, 32 Sup. Ct. 364, 56 L. Ed. 645.) So also of cases in which it is claimed that a state law is invalid because in conflict with the constitution or laws of the United States or as depriving one of some right, privilege, or immunity thereby guaranteed, and criminal prosecutions for violations of federal laws.

A federal question arises in a case in which the correct decision depends upon the construction of a section of the federal constitution; New Orleans, M. & T. R. Co. v. Mississippi, 102 U. S. 135, 26 L. Ed. 96; New Orleans Water-Works Co. v. Water-Works Co., 14 Fed. 194; or where it is to be decided whether a judgment of the federal court was a lien on land when the state law was changed after the enactment of the federal law making such judgments liens in all cases where they were such by the laws of the state; Cooke v. Avery, 147 U. S. 375, 13 Sup. Ct. 340, 37 L. Ed. 209; or where on the whole record there is a controversy involving the construction of either the federal constitution or laws; Van Allen v. R. Co., 3 Fed. 545; Leonard v. City of Shreveport, 28 Fed. 257; or where the defence depends wholly on the federal constitution and laws; Hodgson v. Millward, 3 Grant Cas. 418, Fed. Cas. No. 6,568; and cases arising out of legislation of congress whether constituting a right or privilege, or claim or protection, or defence, in whole or in part, of the party by whom it is asserted; Ellis v. Norton, 16 Fed. 4; when the controversy turns upon the existence, effect or operation of a law of the United States, as a suit by a riparian owner to enjoin the construction of a bridge, upon the ground that the defendant was not authorized to build it by an act of congress under which it claimed the right; Hughes v. Ry. Co., 18 Fed. 106; whether by force of the Ordinance of 1787 and treaties with the Miami Indians certain lands were exempt from taxation; Wau-pe-man-qua v. Aldrich, 28 Fed. 489; an action to enforce the trusts of a will bequeathing property situated on a United States reservation at Fortress Monroe, where the question was whether the federal constitution and law had segregated the territory from the state of Virginia and conferred jurisdiction over it on the federal courts; Woodfin v. Phoebus, 30 Fed. 289; when the complainant invokes the protection of a federal law and the case depends on the construction of that law; Richards v. Town of Rock Rapids, 31 Fed. 505; where the case involves the validity of a state tax alleged to be in violation of the federal constitution; U. S. Exp. Co. v. Allen, 39 Fed. 712; whether the marshal's proceedings to enforce a lien under the state law, adopted by rule of the federal court under R. S. § 916, were in conformity with the rule; Sowles v. Witters, 46 Fed. 497; a claim for damages for conspiracy to disbar an attorney from practicing in the state court because he had filed a bill in the federal courts charging defendants with misconduct and corruption in certain litigations pending in the state courts; Green v. Rogers, 56 Fed. 220; a municipal ordinance attacked as unconstitutional because of unreasonable rates, even though their reasonableness cannot be decided from the inspection of the ordinance but needs extrinsic testimony; Capital City Gas Co. v. City of Des Moines, 72 Fed. 818; where the title in litigation involved an examination of the government survey of a lake whose meander line was a part thereof; French-Glenn Live Stock Co. v. Springer, 185 U. S. 47, 22 Sup. Ct. 563, 46 L. Ed. 800; where the bill set up a contract with the state in a railway charter and averred that it had been impaired by subsequent legislation; Illinois Cent. R. Co. v. Adams, 180 U. S. 28, 21 Sup. Ct. 251, 45 L. Ed. 410; where a state court denied the contention of the plaintiff in error that a state statute as applied to interstate commerce was in conflict with the commercial clause of the constitution; Adams Exp. Co. v. Kentucky, 214 U. S. 218, 29 Sup. Ct. 633, 53 L. Ed. 972; Western Turf Ass'n v. Greenberg, 204 U. S. 359, 27 Sup. Ct. 384, 51 L. Ed. 520; where the plaintiff in error claimed and set up a right under the constitution of the United States and the decision of the supreme court of the state was tantamount to a denial of that right; Detroit, Ft. W. & B. L. R. Co. v. Os- born, 189 U. S. 383, 23 Sup. Ct. 540, 47 L. Ed. 860; and where the answer in an action in the state court to enforce a lien created by a reassessment of taxes sets up that notice of the reassessment was insufficient and thereby property would have been taken without due process of law; Bellingham Bay & B. C. R. Co. v. New Whatcom, 172 U. S. 314, 19 Sup. Ct. 205, 43 L. Ed. 460.

Whether executors in one state of a testator there domiciled are bound by the decree of the court of another state against an administrator c. t. a. in a case submitted to arbitration before the testator's death under the full faith and credit clause is a federal question; Brown v. Fletcher's Estate, 210 U. S. 82, 28 Sup. Ct. 702, 52 L. Ed. 966; where it was held that they were not bound. Such question also exists where the state court expressly decides adversely to the contention of the plaintiff in error, that a United States statute does not preclude others from asserting rights against him but does preclude him from asserting rights against them; Hammond v. Whittredge, 204 U. S. 538, 27 Sup. Ct. 396, 51 L. Ed. 606; and where not only the scope and applicability of the doctrine of subrogation is involved, but also the extent to which a common carrier is protected by the laws of the United States in paying customs duties on goods in transit over its own lines; Wabash R. Co. v. Pearce, 192 U. S. 179, 24 Sup. Ct. 231, 48 L. Ed. 397.

Where a state court refuses to give effect to a judgment of a federal court which adjudicates that one of the parties has a contract within the protection of the federal constitution, it denies a right secured by the judgment of the federal court upon matters wherein its decision is final; Deposit Bank v. Frankfort, 191 U. S. 499, 24 Sup. Ct. 154, 48 L. Ed. 276.

It has been held that there was no federal question in cases involving questions of property rights established by the Ordinance of 1787 for the government of the Northwest Territory; Menard v. Aspasia, 5 Pet. 505, 8 L. Ed. 207; an action for damages for conspiracy to disbar an attorney from the state courts, his right to practice in the federal courts not being affected thereby; Green v. Elbert, 63 Fed. 308, 11 C. C. A. 207; an action to recover possession of an office from which plaintiff has been ejected after his title was established by election, except when the sole question as to title to office arises out of the denial to citizens of a right to vote on account of race, etc.; Johnson v. Jumel, 3 Woods, 69, Fed. Cas. No. 7,392; a creditor's bill to enforce the collection of an admiralty judgment in the district court; Winter v. Swinburne, 8 Fed. 49; whether the objectionable part of a state local option law having been separated, the rest may stand alone; Ex parte Kinnebrew, 35 Fed. 52; the liability for an assessment for the improvement of a street before the complainant became owner of abutting property; Murdock v. City of Cincinnati, 44 Fed. 726; the arrest by order of the president of a person not subject to military law is not warranted by law so far as to give federal courts jurisdiction of a case arising thereupon; Clark v. Storrs, 4 Barb. (N. Y.) 563; the question who is entitled to the alluvion caused by the recession of the Mississippi river; Sweringen v. St. Louis, 185 U. S. 38, 22 Sup. Ct. 569, 46 L. Ed. 795; an action for personal injuries in which it was sought to draw in question the question of the constitutionality of the act of congress incorporating the defendant; Northern Pac. R. Co. v. Amato, 144 U. S. 465, 12 Sup. Ct. 740, 36 L. Ed. 506; where the only question is the construction of a charter or contract and subsequent statutes which might have been, but were not, relied on as impairing its obligation; Yazoo & M. V. R. Co. v. Adams, 180 U. S. 41, 21 Sup. Ct. 256, 45 L. Ed. 415. The mere construction of a state statute does not itself present a federal question, nor is there one where the constitutionality of a state statute is admitted and only its applicability to the fact is denied; Knop v. Coke Co., 211 U. S. 485, 29 Sup. Ct. 188, 53 L. Ed. 294; nor when a state statute was assailed in the state court as invalid under the constitution of the state, upon grounds that might have been urged as to its validity under the United States constitution, where the latter objection was first stated on taking the writ of error; Osborne v. Clark, 204 U. S. 565, 27 Sup. Ct. 319, 51 L. Ed. 619.

The mere construction by a state court of a statute of another state and its operation elsewhere, without questioning its validity, does not necessarily involve a federal question or deny to the statute full faith and credit in order to give jurisdiction for a review by the United States supreme court; Allen v. Alleghany Co., 196 U. S. 463, 25 Sup. Ct. 311, 49 L. Ed. 551; nor does a mere contest over a state office depending for its solution exclusively upon the application of the constitution of the state or the construction of a state law; Elder v. Colorado ex rel. Badgley, 204 U. S. 85, 27 Sup. Ct. 223, 51 L. Ed. 381, where it was said that the fact that a state court has considered a federal question may serve to elucidate whether a federal issue properly arises, but that doctrine has no application where the controversy is inherently not federal and is incapable of presenting a federal question.

A quo warranto to forfeit the charter of a corporation for an abuse of its privileges involves no federal question; New Orleans Waterworks Co. v. Louisiana, 185 U. S. 336, 22 Sup. Ct. 691, 46 L. Ed. 936.

The amount of benefits resulting from an improvement and assessed under a state statute which the United States supreme court has declared to be constitutional, is a question of fact and a decision of the board making the assessment raises no federal question; Hibben v. Smith, 191 U. S. 310, 24 Sup. Ct. 88, 48 L. Ed. 195; and there is none in a suit for damages for the loss of a registered mail package wherein the plaintiff relied on the general law of negligence; Bankers' Mut. Casualty Co. v. Ry. Co., 192 U. S. 371, 24 Sup. Ct. 325, 48 L. Ed. 484.

Where the state court has construed a state statute so as to bring it into harmony with the federal and state constitutions, there is no power given to the supreme court to review the decision on the ground that the state court exercised legislative power in construing the statute in that manner and thereby violated that amendment; Londoner v. City & County of Denver, 210 U. S. 373, 28 Sup. Ct. 708, 52 L. Ed. 1103; and the construction of a state statute as to whether a contract is created by it and whether the statute is constitutional under the state constitution, is not, in the absence of any claim that the contract, if any, has been impaired by subsequent state action, a federal question; Mobile, J. & K. C. R. Co. v. Mississippi, 210 U. S. 187, 28 Sup. Ct. 650, 52 L. Ed. 1016. The right of the accused under the Missouri law to an endorsement of the names of witnesses against him on the indictment is not a common-law right, but rests on the state statute, and whether the provision is complied with is not a federal question; Barrington v. Missouri, 205 U. S. 483, 27 Sup. Ct. 582, 51 L. Ed. 890.

The federal courts cannot, on habeas corpus, inquire into the truth of an allegation presenting mixed questions of law and fact in the indictment on which the demand for the petitioner's interstate extradition is based; and quære whether it may inquire whether such indictment was or was not found in good faith; Pierce v. Creecy, 210 U. S. 387, 28 Sup. Ct. 714, 52 L. Ed. 1113.

Where the plaintiff claims on no federal right, a defence that the transaction was prohibited by federal law does not make a case of federal jurisdiction; Williams v. Bank, 216 U. S. 582, 30 Sup. Ct. 441, 54 L. Ed. 625; nor does the fact that the court of one state construes a statute of another raise a federal question; Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Melton, 218 U. S. 36, 30 Sup. Ct. 676, 54 L. Ed. 921; nor does one arise in an action against a receiver of a state corporation simply because he was appointed by a federal court; Gableman v. Ry. Co., 179 U. S. 335, 21 Sup. Ct. 171, 45 L. Ed. 220, where the subject of actions against receivers appointed by those courts is considered at large.

A federal question may have been so explicitly decided as to afford no basis for a writ of error from the supreme court to a state court; Leonard v. R. Co., 198 U. S. 416, 25 Sup. Ct. 750, 49 L. Ed. 1108; and the question must be a real and not a fictitious federal question; Millingar v. Hartuppee, 6 Wall. (U. S.) 258, 18 L. Ed. 829; New Or-

Where the questions raised are frivolous and without merit, assumption of jurisdiction by the supreme court will not be justified by the mere assertion of a federal right; American R. Co. v. Castro, 204 U. S. 453, 27 Sup. Ct. 466, 51 L. Ed. 564; Deming v. Packing Co., 226 U. S. 102, 33 Sup. Ct. 80, 57 L. Ed. 140; Gring v. Ives, 222 U. S. 365, 32 Sup. Ct. 167, 56 L. Ed. 235; nor by the mere fact that a constitutional question is alleged in order to secure a direct appeal from the lower federal court; Goodrich v. Ferris, 214 U. S. 71, 29 Sup. Ct. 580, 53 L. Ed. 914; Farrell v. O'Brien, 199 U. S. 100, 25 Sup. Ct. 727, 50 L. Ed. 101.

A merely colorable claim under a federal statute, or the necessity of referring to a federal statute to explain a contract or local law, does not give federal jurisdiction; St. Paul, M. & M. Ry. Co. v. R. Co., 68 Fed. 2, 15 C. C. A. 167; such a question cannot be raised in the supreme court if it did not arise below, and where no federal question is otherwise raised, and the only provision of the constitution referred to in the assignment of errors in the state court has no application, an averment of its violation creates no real federal question; Winous Point Shooting Club v. Caspersen, 193 U. S. 189, 24 Sup. Ct. 431, 48 L. Ed. 675; there is no original jurisdiction in the federal court in an action arising out of a contract or dealings of parties, although on the trial questions may arise respecting the construction of a law of the United States; Dowell v. Griswold, 5 Sawy. 39, Fed. Cas. No. 4041.

A circuit court has jurisdiction without regard to the citizenship of the parties; Fischer v. Neil, 6 Fed. 89; Crescent City Live Stock, Landing & Slaughter House Co. v. Slaughter House Co., 12 Fed. 225; Sawyer v. Parish of Concordia, 12 Fed. 754; where the federal questions raised by the bill are not merely colorable but are raised in good faith and not in a fraudulent attempt to give jurisdiction to the circuit court, that court has jurisdiction and can decide the case on local or state questions only, and it will not lose its jurisdiction of the case by omitting to decide the federal questions or deciding them adversely to the party claim-

A federal court should not, unless plainly required so to do by the constitution, assume a duty the exercise of which might lead to a miscarriage of justice prejudicial to the interest of a state; Pierce v. Creecy, 210 U. S. 387, 28 Sup. Ct. 714, 52 L. Ed. 1113.

Where judgment was given on a general demurrer entered for the defendant, and a motion was made to set aside the judgment on the ground that the ordinance of the state upon which it rested was unconstitutional as in conflict with the XIVth Amendment, the constitutional question so raised was set up in time and the supreme court had jurisdiction; Meyer v. Richmond, 172 U. S. 82, 93, 19 Sup. Ct. 106, 43 L. Ed. 374; where the cases are reviewed.

The jurisdiction of the supreme court in cases brought up by writ of error to a state court does not extend to questions of fact or of local laws, which are merely preliminary to or the possible basis of a federal question; Telluride Power Transmission Co. v. Ry. Co., 175 U. S. 639, 20 Sup. Ct. 245, 44 L. Ed. 305. Where rights based on a judgment obtained in one state are asserted in the courts of another under the full faith and credit clause, the power exists in the latter courts to look back of the judgment and ascertain whether the claim which had entered into it was one susceptible of being enforced in another state; Thompson v. Whitman, 18 Wall. (U. S.) 457, 21 L. Ed. 897; and where such rights are in due time asserted, the power to decide whether the federal question was raised was rightly disposed of in the court below exists in and involves the exercise of jurisdiction of the supreme court; Andrews v. Andrews, 188 U. S. 14, 23 Sup. Ct. 237, 47 L. Ed. 366. When the question of the validity of a state statute, with reference to the federal constitution, has been first raised in a federal court, that court has a right to decide it to the exclusion of all other courts; Ex parte Young, 209 U. S. 123, 28 Sup. Ct. 441, 52 L. Ed. 714, 13 L. R. A. (N. S.) 932, 14 Ann. Cas. 764.

See UNITED STATES COURTS.

FEE. A reward or wages given to one for the execution of his office, or for professional services, as those of a counsellor or physician. Cowell.

Fees differ from costs in this, that the former are, as above mentioned, a recompense to the officer for his services; and the latter, an indemnification to the party for money laid out and expended in his suit; Musser v. Good, 11 S. & R. (Pa.) 248. See Lyon v. McManus, 4 Binn. (Pa.) 167. Fees are synonymous with charges; McPheters v. Morrill, 66 Me. 124.

See CHAMPERTY; ETHICS, LEGAL; ATTORNEY.

That which is held of some superior on condition of rendering him services.

A fee is defined by Spelman (Feuds, c. 1) as the right which the tenant or vassal has to the use of lands while the absolute property remains in a superior. But this early and strict meaning of the word speedily passed into its modern signification of an estate of inheritance; 2 Bla. Com. 106; Cowell; Termes de la Ley; 1 Washb. R. P. 51; Co. Litt. 1 b; 1 Prest. Est. 420; 3 Kent 614. The term may be used of other property as well as lands; Old Nat. Brev. 41.

The term is generally used to denote as well the land itself so held, as the estate in the land, which seems to be its stricter meaning. Wright, Ten. 19, 49; Cowell. The word fee is explained to signify that the land or other subject of property belongs to its owner, and is transmissible, in the case of an individual, to those whom the law appoints to succeed him, under the appellation of heirs; and, in the case of corporate bodies, to those who are to take on themselves the corporate function, and, from the manner in which the body is to be continued, are denominated successors; 1 Co. Litt. 271 b; Wright, Ten. 147, 150; 2 Bla. Com. 104, 106.

The compass or circuit of a manor or lordship. Cowell.

A fee-simple is an estate limited to a man and his heirs absolutely. See FEE-SIMPLE.

A fee-tail is one limited to particular classes of heirs. See FEE-TAIL.

A determinable fee is one which is liable to be determined, but which may continue forever. See DETERMINABLE FEE.

A qualified fee is an interest given to a man and certain of his heirs at the time of its limitation. See QUALIFIED FEE; Kelso v. Stigar, 75 Md. 397, 24 Atl. 18.

A conditional fee includes one that is either to commence or determine on some condition: 10 Co. 95 b; Prest. Est. 476; Fearn, Cont. Rem. 9. See CONDITIONS; SHELLEY'S CASE, RULE IN.

FEE AND LIFE-RENT. In Scotch Law. Two estates in land—the first of which is the full right of proprietorship, the second the limited right of usufruct during life—may be held together, or may co-exist in different persons at the same time. See Bell, Prin. § 1712; Ersk. Prin. 420; FIAR.

FEE-BILL. A schedule of the fees to be charged by clerks of courts, sheriffs, or other officers, for each particular service in the line of their duties.

FEE EXPECTANT. A name sometimes applied to an estate created where lands are given to a man and his wife and the heirs of their bodies. See also FRANK MARRIAGE.

FEE-FARM. Land held of another in fee,—that is, in perpetuity by the tenant and his heirs at a yearly rent, without fealty, homage, or other services than such as are specially comprised in the feoffment. Cowell. Fealty, however, was incident to a holding in fee-farm, according to some authors. Spelman, Gloss.; Termes de la Ley.

Land held at a perpetual rent. 2 Bla. Com. 43.

"This term (fee-farm) has difficulties of its own, for it appears in many different guises. A feoffee is to hold in feofirma, in feustfirmam, in fei firmam, in feudo firmam, in feudo firma, ad firmam feodalem, but most commonly in feodi firma. The old English language had both of the words of which this term is compounded, both feoh (property) and feorm (rent). (But the latter seems to be derived from Low Latin, in which firma came to mean a fixed rent or tribute. Skeat, s. v. farm). So in the language of France, and in Norman documents, the term may be found in various shapes, firmam fedium, feudi firmam. But whatever may be the precise history of the phrase, to hold in fee-farm means to hold heritably at a rent. The fee, the inheritance, is let to farm. This term long struggled to maintain its place by the side of socage. The victory of the latter was not complete even in Bracton's day. The complete merger of fee-farm in socage may be due to a statute of Edward I., though the way for it had long been prepared." 1 P. & M. Hist. E. L. 293.

It appears as a separate tenure in Magna Carta and in Bracton and Britton; in the course of the 14th and 15th centuries it became merged in socage. 3 Holdsw. Hist. E. L. 46.

FEE-FARM RENT. The rent reserved on granting a fee-farm. It might be one-fourth the value of the land, according to Cowell; one-third, according to other authors. Spelman, Gloss.; Termes de la Ley.

FEE-SIMPLE. An estate of inheritance. Co. Litt. 1 b; 2 Bla. Com. 106. The word simple adds no meaning to the word fee standing by itself. But it excludes all qualification or restriction as to the persons who may inherit it as heirs, thus distinguishing it from a fee-tail, as well as from an estate which, though inheritable, is subject to conditions or collateral determination. 1 Washb. R. P. 51; Wright, Ten. 146; 1 Prest. Est. 420; Littleton § 1.

It is the largest possible estate which a man can have, being an absolute estate. It is where lands are given to a man and to his heirs absolutely, without any end or limitation put to the estate. Plowd. 557; 2 Bla. Com. 106; Chal. R. P. 191. See Brackett v. Ridlon, 54 Me. 426; Haynes v. Bourn, 42 Vt. 686.

Where the granting clause of a deed conveys an estate in fee-simple, a subsequent proviso that the grantee shall not convey without the consent of the grantor is void as a restriction or alienation, general as to time and person, and therefore repugnant to the estate created; Murray v. Green, 64 Cal. 363, 28 Pac. 118; Wilkins v. Norman, 139 N. C. 40, 51 S. E. 797, 111 Am. St. Rep. 767.

In modern estates the terms fee, fee-simple, and fee-simple absolute are substantially synonymous; Jecko v. Taussig, 45 Mo. 170.

The word "heirs" is necessary, in a conveyance, to the creation of a fee-simple, and no expression of intention, in substituted terms, will have an equivalent effect; Sisson v. Donnelly, 36 N. J. L. 434; Edwardsville R. Co. v. Sawyer, 92 Ill. 377; Merritt v. Disney, 48 Md. 344; but see Cole v. Woolen Mfg. Co., 54

N. H. 290; Cromwell v. Winchester, 2 Head (Tenn.) 389; but it is otherwise in a will; Hill v. Hill, 74 Pa. 173, 15 Am. Rep. 545; Arnold v. Brown, 7 R. I. 188.

In the absence of statute, a conveyance of property to a trustee, with power to sell and convey the fee, vests in such trustee an estate in fee-simple, without the use of the word "heirs;" Ewing v. Shannahan, 113 Mo. 188, 20 S. W. 1065. The common-law rule that a fee-simple cannot be conveyed without the word "heirs" does not apply to an exception, or an easement appurtenant to other land of the grantor or of the right to take profit in the soil; Engel v. Ayer, 85 Me. 448, 27 Atl. 352.

FEE-TAIL (Fr. tailler, to shorten). An inheritable estate which can descend to certain classes of heirs only. It is necessary that they should be heirs "of the body" of the ancestor, and these are proper words of limitation. It corresponds with the feudum talliatum of the feudal law. The estate itself is said to have been derived from the Roman system of restricting estates. 1 Spence, Eq. Jur. 21; 1 Washb. R. P. 66; 2 Bla. Com. 112, n. See, also, Co. 2d Inst. 333; Tudor, Lead. Cas. 607; 4 Kent 14; Chal. R. P. 259; and it is said to exist by virtue of the statute de donis; Crabb, R. P. § 971. See, generally, Wight v. Thayer, 1 Gray (Mass.) 286; Jewell v. Warner, 35 N. H. 176; Bone v. Tyrrell, 113 Mo. 175, 20 S. W. 796; Durant v. Muller, 88 Ga. 251, 14 S. E. 612; Brown v. Addison Gilbert Hospital, 155 Mass. 323, 29 N. E. 625; Ray v. Alexander, 146 Pa. 242, 23 Atl. 383.

An estate-tail may be general, i. e. limited to the heirs of the body merely; or special, i. e. limited to a special class of such heirs, e. g. heirs male or heirs female, or those begotten of a certain wife named; Newton v. Griffith, 1 H. & G. (Md.) 111. In the last case specified, if the wife died without issue, the husband was called tenant in tail after possibility of issue extinct.

The restrictions against alienation could be evaded at common law by levying a fine, suffering a recovery. In this country, an entail can generally be barred by deed.

In Pennsylvania, by statute, words which, at common law, would create a fee tail, are to be taken to create a fee simple.

FEED. This word is used in its ordinary sense with reference to cattle and hogs which are said to be made marketable by feeding. Brockway v. Rowley, 66 Ill. 102.

It is also used in the sense of lending additional strength or subsequent support, as "the estate which becomes vested feeds the estoppel;" 5 Man. & Ry. 202, 207; so a subsequent title acquired by the mortgagor is said "to feed the mortgage." See GRAFT.

It is also used in the phrase feeding of a cow by and on the land to signify from the land while there is food on it, and with hay by the owner of the land at other times; 2 Q. B. Div. 49.

FEGANGI. An escaping thief caught with stolen goods in his possession. Spel. Gloss.

FEHMGERICHTE. An irregular tribunal which existed and flourished in Westphalia during the thirteenth and fourteenth centuries.

From the close of the fourteenth century its importance rapidly diminished; and it was finally suppressed by Jerome Bonaparte in 1811. See Bork, Geschichte der Westphalischen Fehmgerichte; Paul Wigand, Das Fehmgericht Westphaleus.

FEIGNED ACTION. An action brought on a pretended right, when the plaintiff has no true cause of action, for some illegal purpose. In a feigned action the words of the writ are true; it differs from false action, in which case the words of the writ are false. Co. Litt. 361, § 689. See FICTITIOUS ACTIONS.

FEIGNED DISEASES. Simulated maladies. Diseases are generally feigned from one of three causes—fear, shame, or the hope of gain. Thus a man engaged in the military or naval service may pretend to be afflicted with various maladies, in order to escape the performance of military duty; the mendicant, to avoid labor and to impose on public or private beneficence; the criminal, to prevent the infliction of punishment. The spirit of revenge, and the hope of receiving exorbitant damages, have also induced some to magnify slight ailments into alarming illness. On this subject, Fodere (vol. ii, 452) observes, at the time when the conscription was in full force in France, "that it is at present brought to such perfection as to render it as difficult to detect a feigned disease as to cure a real one." Zacchias has given five rules for detecting feigned diseases. (1) Inquiry should be made of the relatives and friends of the suspected individual as to his physical and moral habits, and as to the state of his affairs and what may possibly be the motive for feigning disease, particularly whether he is not in immediate danger of some punishment, from which this sickness may excuse him. (2) Compare the disease under examination with the causes capable of producing it; such as the age, temperament, and mode of life of the patient. (3) The aversion of persons feigning disease to take proper remedies. This indeed will occur in real sickness; but it rarely happens when severe pain is present. (4) Particular attention should be paid to the symptoms present, and whether they necessarily belong to the disease. (5) Follow the course of the complaint, and attend to the circumstances which successively occur. Wharton.

FEIGNED ISSUE. An issue brought by consent of the parties, or by the direction of a court of equity, or of such courts as possess equitable powers, to determine before a jury some disputed matter of fact which the court has not the power or is unwilling to decide. A series of pleadings was arranged between the parties, as if an action had been commenced at common law upon a bet involving the fact in dispute. 3 Bla. Com. 452. This is still the practice in most of the states retaining the distinction between the procedure in law and in equity. Under the reformed codes of some states issues may be framed in certain exceptional cases. In England, the practice has been disused since the passing of the stat. 8 and 9 Vict. c. 109, s. 19, permitting any court to refer any question of fact to a jury in a direct form. The act 21 and 22 Vict. c. 27, provided for trial by jury in the court of chancery.

FELAGUS (Lat.). One bound for another by oath; a sworn brother. Du Cange. A friend bound in the decennary for the good behavior of another. One who took the place of the deceased. Thus, if a person was murdered, the recompense due from the murderer went to the father or mother of the deceased; if he had none, to the lord; if he had none, to his felagus, or sworn brother. Cunningham, Law Dict.; Cowell; Du Cange.

FELE. See FEAL.

FELLOW. A co-worker. A partaker or sharer of. A companion; associate; comrade. One united in a legal relation. An incorporated member of a college or collegiate foundation (whether in a university or otherwise).

FELLOW-HEIR. A co-heir.

FELLOW-SERVANTS. Those engaged in the same common pursuit, under the same general control. Cooley, Torts 541.

All who serve the same master, work under the same control, derive authority and compensation from the same common source, are engaged in the same general business, though it may be in different grades or departments of it, are fellow-servants who take the risk of each other's negligence. Thomp. Negl. 1026. As to the rights and liabilities growing out of this relation, see MASTER AND SERVANT; EMPLOYERS' LIABILITY.

FELO DE SE (Lat.). A felon of himself; a self-murderer. See SUICIDE.

FELON. One convicted and sentenced for a felony.

A felon is infamous, and cannot fill any office or become a witness in any case unless pardoned, except in cases of absolute necessity for his own preservation and defence: as, for example, an affidavit in relation to the irregularity of a judgment in a cause in which he is a party; 2 Stra. 1148; — v. Kimborough, 1 N. C. 25; Stark. Ev. pt. 2, tit. Infamy. A conviction in one state where the witness is offered in another does not affect his competency; see Com. v. Green, 17 Mass. 515; State v. Ridgely, 2 H. & McH. (Md.) 120,

1 Am. Dec. 372; Clark's Lessee v. Hall, 2 H. & McH. (Md.) 378; Cole's Lessee v. Cole, 1 Harr. & J. (Md.) 572.

A person who has committed a felony, been convicted, served his sentence, and been discharged, has been held to be no longer a felon; 3 Exch. Div. 352.

FELONIA (Lat.). Felony. The act or offence by which a vassal forfeited his fee. Spelman, Gloss.; Calvinus, Lex. Per feloniam, with a criminal intention. Co. Litt. 391.

Felonice was formerly used also in the sense of feloniously. Cunningham, Law Dict. See next title.

FELONICE. Feloniously. Cun. Dict. Anciently it was said that this word must be used in all indictments for felony; 4 Bla. Com. 407; and Lord Coke includes it among the voces artis,—words of art, which cannot be dispensed with by any periphrasis or circumlocution. 4 Coke 39; Co. Litt. 391a. See FELONIOUSLY.

FELONIOUS. Having the quality of a felony; malignant; malicious; villainous; perfidious. In a legal sense, done with intent to commit a crime, of the nature of a felony; done with deliberate purpose to commit a crime; in a felonious manner, with deliberate intention to commit a crime. State v. Bush, 47 Kan. 201, 27 Pac. 834, 13 L. R. A. 607.

FELONIOUS HOMICIDE. The killing of a human creature, of any age or sex, without justification or excuse. It may include killing oneself as well as any other person; 4 Bla. Com. 188. The mere intention to commit homicide was anciently held to be equally guilty with the commission of the act; Foster, Cr. L. 193; 1 Russ. Cr. 46, note; but it is said that in ancient law the mere attempt to commit a crime was not punishable; 2 Poll. & Maitl. 507. See HOMICIDE; ATTEMPT.

FELONIOUSLY. This is a technical word which at common law was essential to every indictment for a felony, charging the offence to have been committed feloniously; no other word nor any circumlocution could supply its place; Com. Dig. Indictment (G 6); Bac. Abr. Indictment (G 1); 2 Hale, Pl. Cr. 172, 184; 1 Ben. & H. Lead. Cr. Cas. 154. It is still necessary in describing a common-law felony, or where its use is prescribed by statute; Whart. Cr. Pl. § 260; Bowler v. State, 41 Miss. 570; Cain v. State, 18 Tex. 387; State v. Feaster, 25 Mo. 324; State v. Rucker, 68 N. C. 211; Carder v. State, 17 Ind. 307; State v. Gove, 34 N. H. 510. An indictment for burglary which does not allege that the breaking and entering was "feloniously and burglariously" done is bad, and the defect is not cured by verdict; State v. McClung, 35 W. Va. 280, 13 S. E. 654. In an indictment it is equivalent to purposely or unlawfully; State v. Bush, 47 Kan. 201, 27 Pac. 834, 13 L. R. A. 607.

FELONY. An offence which occasions a total forfeiture of either lands or goods, or both, at common law, to which capital or other punishment may be superadded, according to the degree of guilt. 4 Bla. Com. 94; 1 Russ. Cr. 78; Co. Litt. 391; 1 Hawk. Pl. Cr. c. 37; U. S. v. Smith, 5 Wheat. (U. S.) 153, 5 L. Ed. 57. The essential distinction between felony and misdemeanor is lost in England since the Felony Act of 1870. The distinction there is perfectly arbitrary. At the present day in this country it simply denotes the degree or class of crime committed; 1 Bish. New Cr. L. § 616.

Blackstone derives it from the Saxon feo or feoh, fee or feud, and the German lon, price, as being a crime punishable with the loss of the feud or benefice. 4 Com. 95. But it is observed that this Saxon word originally signified money or goods, and only in a translated sense feud or inheritance; Lye, Sax. Dict.; and another commentator remarks, "as in petit larceny the lands are not liable to escheat, and petit larceny has always been ranked among felonies, a later writer seems inclined to derive it from pölen in the sense of offending. 2 Wooddes. 510." Bac. Abr. Felony. In 2 Holdsw. Hist. E. L. 302, it is said to be derived, probably, from the Latin fell or fel, meaning gall—an offence which is venomous or poisonous, citing 2 Poll. & Maitl. 463. Pothier defines felony as an atrocious wrong committed by a vassal towards his lord, by which the former forfeited his fief to the latter.

In American law the word has no clearly defined meaning at common law, but includes offences of a considerable gravity; People v. Van Steenburgh, 1 Park. Cr. Rep. (N. Y.) 39; Matthews v. State, 4 Ohio St. 542. In general, what is felony under the English common law is such under ours; 1 Bish. Cr. L. § 617; Clark, Cr. L. 33. A crime is not a felony unless so declared by statute, or it was such at the common law; State v. Murphy, 17 R. I. 698, 24 Atl. 473, 16 L. R. A. 550. If a statute creates a non-capital offence, not declaring it to be felony, the law will give it the lower grade of misdemeanor; State v. Hill, 91 N. C. 561.

The United States Revised Statutes contain no definition of the word, and the meaning of § 4090, referring to "offences against the public peace amounting to felony under the laws of the United States," is not altogether clear. But in the United States Criminal Code, § 335, all offences punishable by death or by imprisonment for over one year are felonies; all other offenses are misdemeanors. It is defined by statute in many of the states, usually, in effect, that all offences punishable either by death or imprisonment in the state prison shall be felonies. People v. Hughes, 137 N. Y. 29, 32 N. E. 1105; Territory v. Godfrey, 6 Dak. 46, 50 N. W. 481; U. S. v. Coppersmith, 4 Fed. 198, 2 Flap. 551. Express words or necessary implication are required and doubtful words will not suffice; 1 Bish. New Cr. L. § 622. "When an act of congress makes punishable a crime which under the common law is felony, a fortiori when directly or by necessary implication, it declares a thing to be felony, it is felony; but where a national statute creates a non-capital offence, and is silent as to its grade, it is misdemeanor." 1 Bish. New Cr. L. § 671. See U. S. v. Wynn, 9 Fed. 886, which holds that common-law felonies are not within the purview of the constitution unless congress so enacts.

Where a statute permits a milder punishment than imprisonment or death, this discretion does not prevent the offence being felony; People v. War, 20 Cal. 117; State v. Melton, 117 Mo. 618, 23 S. W. 889. See Benton v. Com., 89 Va. 570, 16 S. E. 725; State v. Harr, 38 W. Va. 58, 17 S. E. 794; contra in Illinois; Lamkin v. People, 94 Ill. 501. It has also been held that common-law felonies, punishable less severely than the statutory standard, do not, therefore, cease to be felonies; Drennan v. People, 10 Mich. 169; Ward v. People, 3 Hill (N. Y.) 395; but see Carpenter v. Nixon, 5 Hill (N. Y.) 260; 1 Bish. Cr. L. § 620.

Receiving stolen goods was a felony so as to justify arrest without a warrant; Rohan v. Sawin, 5 Cush. (Mass.) 281; Wakely v. Hart, 6 Binn. (Pa.) 316, 2 Term 77. The following have been held not: Adultery; State v. Brunson, 2 Bail. (S. C.) 149; Anderson v. Com., 5 Rand. (Va.) 627, 16 Am. Dec. 776; State v. Cooper, 16 Vt. 551; assault with intent to murder; State v. Boyden, 35 N. C. 505; impeding an officer in the discharge of his duty; State v. Noyes, 25 Vt. 415; involuntary manslaughter by negligence; Shields v. Yonge, 15 Ga. 349, 60 Am. Dec. 698; Com. v. Gable, 7 S. & R. (Pa.) 423; mayhem; Adams v. Barrett, 5 Ga. 404; Com. v. Newell, 7 Mass. 245; perjury; A. v. B., 1 R. M. Charlt. (Ga.) 228; 5 Exch. 378; piracy; 1 Salk. 85; Manro v. Almeida, 10 Wheat. (U. S.) 495, 6 L. Ed. 369. In England none of the maritime crimes were felony; Story, Const. § 1162.

One may be guilty of misprision of felony, but not of a misdemeanor. In misdemeanor or treason one may commit the crime of a principal by procuring another to do the action in his absence; but in felony such person is only an accessory before the fact. A person against whose property a misdemeanor has been committed may sue the offender at once, but in case of felony he must by the better opinion first begin prosecution; 1 Bish. New Cr. L. § 609. Felonies cannot be prosecuted by information; U. S. v. Wynn, 9 Fed. 893. See COMPOUNDING A FELONY.

FELONY ACT. The stat. 33 & 34 Vict. c. 23, abolishing forfeitures for felony, and sanctioning the appointment of interim curators and administrators of the property of felons. 4 Steph. Com. 10, 459.

FEMALE. The sex which bears the young.

It is a general rule that the young of female animals which belong to us are ours; fœtus ventrem sequitur. Inst. 2. 1. 19; Dig. 6. 1. 5. 2. The rule was, in general, the same with regard to slaves; but when a female slave came into a free state, even without the consent of her master, and was there delivered of a child, the latter was free.

FEME COVERT. A married woman. See MARRIED WOMAN; COVERTURE.

FEME, FEMME. A woman.

FEME SOLE. A single woman, including those who have been married, but whose marriage has been dissolved by death or divorce, and, for most purposes, those women who are judicially separated from their husbands. 2 Steph. Com. 250.

FEME SOLE TRADER. A married woman, who, by the custom of London, trades on her own account, independently of her husband; so called, because, with respect to her trading, she is the same as a feme sole. Jacob, Dict.; 1 Cro. 63; 3 Keb. 902; 2 Bish. M. W. § 528. The custom was recognized as common law in South Carolina, but did not extend beyond trading in merchandise; McDaniel v. Cornwell, 1 Hill (S. C.) 429; Newbiggin v. Pillans, 2 Bay (S. C.) 164; under it a woman could not be a feme sole carrier; Ewart v. Nagel, 1 McMullan (S. C.) 50. By statute in several states a similar custom is recognized; thus in Pennsylvania, by act of Feb. 22, 1718, the wives of mariners who had gone to sea were recognized as feme sole traders when engaged in any work for their livelihood, and by act of May 4, 1855, the benefits of this act are extended to all those wives whose husbands, from drunkenness, profligacy, or other cause, neglect or refuse to provide for them, or desert them; 2 P. & L. Dig. 2895. By the latter act she may make application to the court of common pleas and obtain a decree and certificate that she is authorized to do business under said act; id. The act is remedial, and to be construed benignly; Black v. Tricker, 59 Pa. 13; People's Sav. Bank v. Denig, 131 Pa. 241, 18 Atl. 1083. She may convey her real estate by deed in which her husband does not join; Elsey v. McDaniel, 95 Pa. 472. The husband is liable for necessities. Actual residence with her husband does not take away her privileges under the act; Appeal of Ewing, 101 Pa. 371; and so in South Carolina; Newbiggin v. Pillans, 2 Bay 162.

In North Carolina the doctrine has been rejected; McKinnon v. McDonald, 57 N. C. 1, 72 Am. Dec. 574. In an appeal from the District of Columbia it was said that "the law seems to be settled that when a wife, left by her husband, without maintenance and support, has traded as a feme sole, and has obtained credit as such, she ought to be liable for her debts," whether the husband was banished for crime or abandoned her; but her deed of real estate acquired while a feme sole trader was held void; Rhea v. Rhenner, 1 Pet. (U. S.) 105, 7 L. Ed. 72. In California under a sole trader act, excluding from the benefits of the act a married woman carrying on business in her own name, but managed by her husband, it was held that she could not escape liability as sole trader on the ground that she permitted such management; Porter v. Gamba, 43 Cal. 105. See Swett v. Penrice, 24 Miss. 416.

A married woman, authorized by statute to carry on trade on her sole and separate account, is liable on a note given for property purchased for business purposes; the power to make contracts in such business implies the right to conduct it by the means usually employed; Bodine v. Killeen, 53 N. Y. 93; Frecking v. Rolland, id. 422; Noel v. Kinney, 106 N. Y. 74, 12 N. E. 351, 60 Am. Rep. 423.

See, generally, Husb. Married Women, c. xi.; 2 Bish. M. W. c. xlii.

FEMICIDE. The killing of a woman. One who kills a woman. See HOMICIDE.

FEMININE. Of or belonging to females.

When the feminine is used, it is generally confined to females; as, if a man bequeathed all his mares to his son, his horses would not pass. See State v. Dunnivant, 3 Brev. (S. C.) 9, 5 Am. Dec. 530.

FENATIO, or FEONATIC. In Forest Law. The fawning of deer; the fawning season. Spelm. Gloss.

FENCE. A building or erection between two contiguous estates, so as to divide them, or on the same estate, so as to divide one part from another. It may be of any material presenting a sufficient obstruction; Allen v. Tobias, 77 Ill. 169; and has been held to include a gate; Estes v. R. Co., 63 Me. 308. See 19 Can. L. J. 204.

Fences are regulated by local laws. At common law a landowner is not bound to fence against cattle; Collins v. Lundquist, 154 Mich. 658, 118 N. W. 596; Wood v. Snider, 187 N. Y. 28, 79 N. E. 858, 12 L. R. A. (N. S.) 912. In general fences on boundaries are to be built on the line, and the cost, when made no more expensively than is required by law, is borne equally between the parties; Norris v. Adams, 2 Miles (Pa.) 337; White v. Snyder, id. 395; Heath v. Ricker, 2 Greenl. (Me.) 72; Burrell v. Burrell, 11 Mass. 294; Holladay v. Marsh, 3 Wend. (N. Y.) 142, 20 Am. Dec. 678; Sharp v. Curtiss, 15 Conn. 526; Peschongs v. Mueller, 50 Ia. 237. For modifications of the rule, see Palmer v. Silverthorn, 32 Pa. 65; Climer v. Wallace, 28 Mo. 556, 75 Am. Dec. 135. One adjoining land-owner can compel another to contribute to the expense of maintaining a partition fence only when the fence completes an inclosure which contains no other lands than those of the latter; Kingman v. Williams, 50 Ohio St. 722, 36 N. E. 667; Alma Coal Co. v. Cozad, 79 Ohio St. 348, 87 N. E. 172, 20 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1092; Bouchereau v. Guilne, 116 La. 534, 40 South. 863. A partition fence is presumed to be the common property of both owners of the land; 8 B. & C. 257; McCor- mick v. Tate, 20 Ill. 334; Boenig v. Hornberg, 24 Minn. 307. When built upon the land of one of them it is his; but if it were built equally upon the land of both, at their joint expense, each would be the owner in severalty of the part standing on his own land; 5 Taunt. 20; 2 Greenl. Ev. § 617. See 2 Washb. R. P. 79.

It was held in Barger v. Barringer, 151 N. C. 433, 66 S. E. 439, 25 L. R. A. (N. S.) 831, 19 Ann. Cas. 472, and note, that maliciously to erect a fence on one's property to cut off light and air from his neighbor's property is actionable. The opinion of the court and a dissenting opinion discuss the subject on both sides very fully, the latter taking the ground that "malice disconnected with the infringement of a legal right is not actionable."

The same rule was laid down in Peek v. Roe, 110 Mich. 52, 67 N. W. 1080; and in Burke v. Smith, 69 Mich. 380, 37 N. W. 838, Campbell, J., dissenting. The contrary rule was sustained in Koblegard v. Hale, 60 W. Va. 37, 53 S. E. 793, 116 Am. St. Rep. 868, 9 Ann. Cas. 732; Giller v. West, 162 Ind. 17, 69 N. E. 548. The subject is regulated by statute in some states. See Horan v. Byrnes, 72 N. H. 93, 54 Atl. 945, 62 L. R. A. 602, 101 Am. St. Rep. 670; Healey v. Spaulding, 104 Me. 122, 71 Atl. 472; Lord v. Langdon, 91 Me. 221, 39 Atl. 552; Scott v. Wilson, 82 Conn. 289, 73 Atl. 781; Brostrom v. Lauppe, 179 Mass. 315, 60 N. E. 785; Rideout v. Knox, 148 Mass. 368, 19 N. E. 390, 2 L. R. A. 81, 12 Am. St. Rep. 560; Smith v. Morse, 148 Mass. 407, 19 N. E. 393. Under such statutes "malevolence must be the dominant motive"; Barger v. Barringer, 151 N. C. 433, 66 S. E. 439, 25 L. R. A. (N. S.) 831, 19 Ann. Cas. 472.

A class of cases has arisen in this country, regarding the responsibility of railroad companies for protecting their tracks by fences. In some cases they are required by statute to do so, but unless so required they are not under any obligation to do so, having no other duty than other land-owners; 3 Wood, R. R. 1843; Carper v. Receivers of Norfolk & W. R. Co., 78 Fed. 94, 23 C. C. A. 669, 35 L. R. A. 135. A railroad company, when not required by law to fence its tracks, in doing so only exercises extraordinary diligence to prevent danger to cattle, and is not liable if it fails to maintain such fence; Chicago, R. I. & P. Ry. Co. v. Woodworth, 1 Ind. T. 20, 35 S. W. 238. When the company is required by statute to fence its track, it is only bound to the exercise of reasonable care in maintaining it; Coe v. R. Co., 101 Minn. 12, 111 N. W. 651, 11 L. R. A. (N. S.) 228, 11 Ann. Cas. 429; Case v. R. Co., 75 Mo. 670; Hendrickson v. R. Co., 68 N. J. L. 612, 54 Atl. 831; a failure renders it liable to an employé for an injury caused thereby; Atchison, T. & S. F. R. Co. v. Reesman, 60 Fed. 370, 9 C. C. A. 20, 23 L. R. A. 768; and see 25 L. R. A. 320, note.

A statutory requirement to fence railroad tracks "to prevent the entrance of cattle upon the road" imposes no duty except as to adjoining owners; Byrnes v. R. Co., 181 Mass. 322, 63 N. E. 897. In New York Cent. & H. R. Co. v. Price, 159 Fed. 330, 86 C. C. A. 502, 16 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1103, it was held (following the last cited case) that in the absence of legislation there is no legal duty imposed on a railroad company to safeguard children trespassing on its land; and to the same effect, Nolan v. R. Co., 53 Conn. 461, 4 Atl. 106; Western & A. R. Co. v. Rogers, 104 Ga. 224, 30 S. E. 804; Lake Shore & M. S. Ry. Co. v. Liidtke, 69 Ohio St. 384, 69 N. E. 653; McCabe v. Woolen Co., 124 Fed. 287. That such a statute is for the protection of persons as well as live stock is held in some jurisdictions; Rosse v. Ry. Co., 68 Minn. 216, 71 N. W. 20, 37 L. R. A. 591, 64 Am. St. Rep. 472; Nickolson v. Ry. Co., 80 Minn. 508, 83 N. W. 454, where it is said, as the duty to fence is absolute, a violation of such duty is evidence of negligence; Hayes v. R. Co., 111 U. S. 228, 4 Sup. Ct. 369, 28 L. Ed. 410.

That a landowner must fence his land, if he has reason to think that children may trespass thereon and be injured, is not an established rule of general law to be applied by federal courts, or at the discretion of a jury in such courts, even when sitting in a district where such rule of law prevails; New York Cent. & H. R. R. Co. v. Price, 159 Fed. 330, 86 C. C. A. 502, 16 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1103.

The Virginia fence act was held to impose a duty only to the owners of stock and not to the railroad's employes; and the violation of the act was held no ground of recovery for the death of an employé, killed by the derailling of his train by cattle which came upon the track at a place where the right of way was not fenced. Carper v. R. Co., 78 Fed. 94, 23 C. C. A. 669, 35 L. R. A. 135. The court distinguished the cases of Briggs v. Ry. Co., 111 Mo. 173, 20 S. W. 32; Dickson v. R. Co., 124 Mo. 140, 27 S. W. 476, 25 L. R. A. 320, 46 Am. St. Rep. 429; Donnegan v. Erhardt, 119 N. Y. 468, 23 N. E. 1051, 7 L. R. A. 527, as arising under a special statute.

Mandamus is the proper remedy to compel the performance of the statutory duty; 12 L. R. A. 180, note.

The power of the states to require such fencing by statute is fully sustained; Gulf, C. & S. F. Ry. Co. v. Rowland, 70 Tex. 298, 7 S. W. 718; 35 Am. & Eng. R. R. Cas. 286; and the extent and manner of it are within the legislative discretion; Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co. v. Dumser, 109 Ill. 402; such statutes are valid under the police power; Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co. v. Dumser, 109 Ill. 402; Peoria, D. & E. Ry. Co. v. Duggan, 109 Ill. 537, 50 Am. Rep. 619; Chicago & N. W. Ry. Co. v. City of Chicago, 140 Ill. 309, 29 N. E. 1109; Emmons v. Ry. Co., 35 Minn. 503, 29 N. W. 202; Kansas Pac. Ry. Co. v. Mower, 16 Kan. 573; Pennsylvania R. Co. v. Riblet, 66 Pa. 164, 5 Am. Rep. 360; Gorman v. R. R., 26 Mo. 441, 72 Am. Dec. 220; (a leading case collecting authorities and approving Thorpe v. R. Co., 27 Vt. 141, 62 Am. Dec. 625;) and are not unconstitutional as imposing expense on one for the sole benefit of another; Barnett v. R. Co., 68 Mo. 56, 30 Am. Rep. 773.

As a means of compelling railroads to fence their tracks statutes have been enacted in many states making them absolutely liable in damages for killing stock, by analogy to the similar statutes respecting damage by fires from locomotives (q. v.); but such statutes have generally been construed to require only that railroad companies should use reasonable care; Antisdel v. Ry. Co., 26 Wis. 145, 7 Am. Rep. 44; Murray v. R. Co., 3 Abb. App. Dec. (N. Y.) 339; Coe v. Ry. Co., 101 Minn. 12, 111 N. W. 651, 11 L. R. A. (N. S.) 228, 11 Ann. Cas. 429; Zeigler v. R. R. Co., 58 Ala. 594; Jensen v. Ry. Co., 6 Utah 253, 21 Pac. 994, 4 L. R. A. 724; Bielenberg v. Ry. Co., 8 Mont. 271, 20 Pac. 314, 2 L. R. A. 813; Thompson v. R. Co., 8 Mont. 279, 21 Pac. 25; State v. Divine, 98 N. C. 778, 4 S. E. 477; Wadsworth v. Ry. Co., 18 Colo. 600, 33 Pac. 515, 23 L. R. A. 812, 36 Am. St. Rep. 309; Kansas Pac. Ry. Co. v. Mower, 16 Kan. 573; Oregon Ry. & Nav. Co. v. Smalley, 1 Wash. 206, 23 Pac. 1008, 22 Am. St. Rep. 143, 25 L. R. A. 320, note.

In some states the common law requiring the owner of cattle to keep them within a sufficient enclosure is held not to be in force; Buford v. Houtz, 133 U. S. 320, 10 Sup. Ct. 305, 33 L. Ed. 618; and in such case a railroad company, while not required to fence, and fully authorized to transact its lawful business on its track, must exercise reasonable care to avoid injuring cattle which have wandered on their premises, and is liable for accidents which by ordinary care could have been prevented; New Orleans, J. & G. N. R. Co. v. Field, 46 Miss. 573; Alabama G. S. Ry. Co. v. McAlpine, 71 Ala. 545; Isbell v. R. Co., 27 Conn. 393, 71 Am. Dec. 78; Western Maryland R. Co. v. Carter, 59 Md. 306; Trow v. R. Co., 24 Vt. 487, 58 Am. Dec. 191; Donovan v. R. Co., 89 Mo. 147, 1 S. W. 232. Where it is the duty of the company, arising out of the contract, to fence its track, a failure to comply with the terms of such contract renders the company liable for all injuries to animals consequent thereon. See DEPOT GROUNDS.

See, generally, as to fencing railroads; 3 Wood, R. R. §§ 417, 421, where the cases are collected; 5 L. R. A. 737, note, and 8 L. R. A. 135, note, both citing statutes and decisions; 11 L. R. A. 427, note (Missouri statutes and decisions); Whart. Negl. 892; Parker v. Ry. Co., 93 Mich. 607, 53 N. W. 834; Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co. v. Finch, 42 Ill. App. 90; Donnegan v. Erhardt, 119 N. Y. 468, 23 N. E. 1051, 7 L. R. A. 527; Dickson v. R. Co., 124 Mo. 140, 27 S. W. 476, 25 L. R. A. 320, 46 Am. St. Rep. 429.

It is held that one is not necessarily negligent in using a barbed wire fence, but it should be so used and cared for as not to endanger persons and property, and the use of such fences imposes upon those who use them care reasonably proportionate to their danger; Sisk v. Crump, 112 Ind. 504, 14 N. E. 381, 2 Am. St. Rep. 213; a railroad company using barbed fences must use due diligence in running its trains, not only to avoid killing stock, but to avoid precipitating them by fright against the fence to be mangled or bruised; Atlanta & W. P. R. Co. v. Hudson, 62 Ga. 680. On his own land one may maintain such a fence, and it is not illegal; Worthington v. Wade, 82 Tex. 26, 17 S. W. 520, affirming Davis v. Davis, 70 Tex. 123, 7 S. W. 826; and expressly disapproving Williams v. Mudgett, 2 Tex. Unrep. Cas. 254; s. c. 2 Tex. L. Rev. 338 (commented on, 29 Alb. L. J. 23), in which it was held that "such fences are dangerous unless constructed with planks in connection with the wire." But this case was also reviewed with all analogous cases in 8 Ont. H. B. Div. 583; where it was held that it was not negligence per se to maintain such fences and they were not a nuisance. The owner is bound to keep the wires properly stretched and not hanging loose; Loveland v. Gardner, 79 Cal. 317, 21 Pac. 766, 4 L. R. A. 395; Sisk v. Crump, 112 Ind. 504, 14 N. E. 381, 2 Am. St. Rep. 213. See 10 N. J. L. J. 43. One who has allowed the use of his land by the public before stretching a barbed wire fence across the way is bound to give notice, in order to escape liability for injury resulting from ignorance of the obstruction; Carskaddon v. Mills, 5 Ind. App. 22, 31 N. E. 559. If it was negligence to maintain such a fence near a private road, it would be negligence in a person riding a horse difficult to control, to approach it; Worthington v. Wade, 82 Tex. 26, 17 S. W. 520. See ANIMAL.

In Scotch Law. To hedge in or protect by certain forms. To fence a court, to open in due form. Pitcairn, Cr. Law, pt. 1, p. 75.

FENCE-MONTH. A month in which it is forbidden to hunt in the forest. It begins fifteen days before midsummer and ends fifteen days after. Manw. For. Laws, c. 23. There were also fence-months for fish. Called, also defence-month, because the deer are then defended from "scare or harm." Cowell; Spelman, Gloss.

FENDER. A guard or protection against danger. Cape May, D. B. & S. P. R. Co. v. Cape May, 59 N. J. L. 396, 36 Atl. 696, 36 L. R. A. 653. To require their use on electric cars is within the powers conferred on a city council. id. See MUNICIPAL ORDINANCE.

FENERATION. The action or practice of lending on interest; usury. In some modern dictionaries, applied to interest on money lent. See Colebrook, Dig. Hindu Law, I. 7.

FENGELD (Sax.). A tribute exacted for repelling enemies. Spelman, Gloss.

FEOD. Said to be compounded of the two Saxon words feoh (stipend) and odh (property); by others, to be composed of feoh (stipend) and hod (condition). 2 Bla. Com. 45; Spelman, Gloss. See FEE; FEUD.

FEODAL. Belonging to a fee or feud; feudal. More commonly used by the old writers than feudal.

FEODAL ACTIONS. Real actions. 3 Bla. Com. 117.

FEODAL LAW. Feodal system. See FEUDAL LAW.

FEODALITY. Fidelity or fealty. Cowell. See FEALTY.

FEODARUM, or FEUDARAM CONSUE-TUDINES. See FEUDAL LAWS.

FEODARY. An officer in the court of wards, appointed by the master of that court, by virtue of the statute 32 Hen. VIII. c. 46, to be present with the escheator at the finding offices and to give in evidence for the king as to value and tenure. He was also to survey and receive rents of the ward-lands and assign dower to the king's widows. The office was abolished by stat. 12 Car. II. c. 24; Kennett, Gloss.; Cowell.

FEODATORY, or FEUDATORY. The grantee of a feud or fee. The tenant or vassal who held an estate by feudal service. Termes de la Ley; 2 Bla. Com. 46.

FEODI FIRMA (L. Lat.). Fee-farm, which see.

FEODUM. The form in use by the old English law-writers instead of feudum, and having the same meaning. Feudum is used generally by the more modern writers and by the feudal law-writers. Littleton § 1; Spelman, Gloss. There were various classes of feoda. See FEUDUM.

FEOFFAMENTUM. A feoffment. 2 Bla. Com. 310.

FEOFFARE. To bestow a fee. 1 Reeve, Hist. Eng. Law 91.

FEOFFATOR. A feoffor; he who gives or grants a fee, or who makes a feoffment. Bract. fols. 12 b, 81.

FEOFFATUS. A feoffee; one to whom a fee is given or a feoffment made. Bract. fols. 17 b, 44 b.

FEOFFEE. He to whom a fee is conveyed. Littleton § 1; 2 Bla. Com. 20.

FEOFFEE TO USES. A person to whom land was conveyed for the use of a third party. One holding the same position with reference to a use that a trustee does to a trust. 1 Greenl. Cruise, Dig. 333. He answers to the hæres fiduciarius of the Roman law. See FEOFFMENT TO USE.

FEOFFMENT. A gift of any corporeal hereditaments to another. It operates by transmutation of possession; and it is essential to its completion that the seisin be passed. Watk. Conv. 183.

The conveyance of a corporeal hereditament either by investiture or by livery of seisin. 1 Sullivan, Lect. 143; 1 Washb. R. P. 33; Chal. R. P. 363.

A gift of a freehold interest in land accompanied by livery of seisin. In mediæval days it was the normal mode of transferring a freehold interest in land of free tenure. The essential part is the livery of seisin. 3 Holdsw. Hist. E. L. 187.

The instrument or deed by which such hereditament is conveyed.

This was one of the earliest modes of conveyance used in the common law. It signified originally the grant of a fee or feud; but it came in time to signify the grant of a free inheritance in fee, respect being had rather to the perpetuity of the estate granted, than to the feudal tenure; 1 Reeve, Hist. Eng. Law 90. The feoffment was likewise accompanied by livery of seisin; 1 Washb. R. P. 33. The conveyance by feoffment with livery of seisin has become infrequent, if not obsolete, in England, and in this country has not been used in practice; Dane, Abr. c. 104; Stearn, Real Act. 2; Green v. Liter, 8 Cra. (U. S.) 229, 3 L. Ed. 545.

Formerly the use of writing was the exception; after the Conquest it became more frequent. Writing was not required until the statute of frauds; 3 Holdsw. Hist. E. L. 187.

FEOFFMENT TO USE. A feoffment of lands made to one person for the benefit or to the use of another. In such case the feoffee was bound in conscience to hold the lands according to the use, and could himself derive no benefit. Sometimes such feoffments were made to the use of the feoffer. The effect of such conveyance was entirely changed by the statute of uses. See Wms. R. P. (6th ed.) 155; Use. Since that statute, a feoffment directed to operate to the use of any other person than the feoffee, though it be a common-law conveyance, so far as it conveys the land to the feoffee, derives its effect from the statute of uses, so far as the use is limited by it to the person or persons in whose favor it is declared. Thus, if A be desirous to convey to B in fee, he may do so by enfeoffing a third person, C, to hold to him and his heirs to the use of B and his heirs, the effect of which will be to convey the legal estate in fee-simple to B. For since the statute of uses, the legal estate passes to the feoffee by means of the livery as it would have done before; but no sooner has this taken place than the limitation to uses begins to operate, and C thereby becomes seised to the use defined or limited, the consequence of which is that by force of the legislative enactment the legal estate is co instanti taken out of him, and vests in B, for the like interest as was limited in the use. B thus becomes the legal tenant as effectually as if the feoffment had been made to himself, and without the intervention of a trustee. This method is not much practised in consequence of the livery of seisin, which has become obsolete. See 2 Sand. Us. 13; Watk. Conv. 288; FEOFFMENT.

FEOFFOR. He who makes a feoffment. 2 Bla. Com. 20; Litt. § 1.

FEON (Sax.). A reward; wages; a fee. The word was in common use in these senses. Spelman, Feuds.

FEORME. A certain portion of the produce of the land due by the grantee to the lord according to the terms of the charter. Spelman, Feuds c. 7.

FERÆ BESTIÆ. Wild beasts.

FERÆ NATURÆ (Lat. of a wild nature; untamed). A term used to designate animals not usually tamed, or not regarded as reclaimed so as to become the subject of property.

Such animals belong to the person who has captured them only while they are in his power; for if they regain their liberty his property in them instantly ceases, unless they have animus revertendi, which is to be known only by their habit of returning; 2 Bla. Com. 386; Wallis v. Mease, 3 Binn. (Pa.) 546; Brooke. Abr. Propertie 37; Com. Dig. Bicns. F; 7 Co. 17 b; Inst. 2. 1. 15; [1896] 1 Q. B. 166.

Property in animals feræ naturæ is not acquired by hunting them and pursuing them; if, therefore, another person kills such animal in the sight of the pursuer, he has a right to appropriate it to his own use; Pierson v. Post, 3 Cal. (N. Y.) 175, 2 Am. Dec. 264. But if the pursuer brings the animal within his own control, as by entrapping it or wounding it mortally, so as to render escape impossible, it then belongs to him; id.; though if he abandons it another person may afterwards acquire property in the animal; Buster v. Newkirk, 20 Johns. (N. Y.) 75. The owner of land has a qualified property in animals feræ naturæ when, in consequence of their inability and youth, they cannot go away. See Year B, 12 Hen. VIII. (9 B, 10 A); 2 Bla. Com. 394; Bacon, Abr. Game.

A Louisiana statute was held constitutional which prescribed that dogs are only to be regarded as personal property when recorded on assessment rolls. The court said: "The very fact that they are without protection of the criminal laws shows that property in dogs is an imperfect or qualified nature, and that they stand, as it were, between animals feræ naturæ, in which until subdued there is no property, and domestic animals, in which the right of property is complete." Sentell

v. R. Co., 166 U. S. 698, 17 Sup. Ct. 693, 41 L. Ed. 1169. See GAME; ANIMALS.

FERDINGUS. Apparently a freeman of the lowest class, being named after the cotsecti. Anc. Inst. Eng.

FERDWITE. An acquittance of manslaughter committed in the army; also a fine imposed on persons for not going forth on a military expedition. Cowell.

FERIA (Lat.). In Old English Law. A week-day; a holiday; a day on which process may not be served; a fair; a ferry. Du Cange; Spelman, Gloss.; Cowell; 4 Reeve, Hist. Eng. Law 17.

FERIÆ (Lat.). In Civil Law. Holidays. Numerous festivals were called by this name in the early Roman empire. In the later Roman empire the single days occurring at intervals of a week apart, commencing with the seventh day of the ecclesiastical year, were so called. Du Cange.

All feriæ were dies nefasti. They were divided into two classes,—"feriæ publicæ" and "feriæ privatz." The latter were only observed by single families or individuals in commemoration of some particular event which had been of importance to them or their ancestors. Smith, Dict. Antiq.

FERIAL DAYS. Originally and properly, days free from labor and pleading. In statute 27 Hen. VI. c. 5, working-days. Cowell.

FERLING. In English Law. The fourth part of a penny; also, the quarter of a ward in a borough.

FERLINGATA. A fourth part of a yard-land.

FERLINGUS, or FERLINGUM. A fur-long. Co. Litt. 5 b.

FERM, or FEARM. A house or land, or both, let by lease. Cowell.

FERME (Sax.). A farm; a rent; a lease; a house or land, or both, taken by indenture or lease. Plowd. 195; Vicat, Voc. Jur.; Cowell. See FARM.

FERMER, FERMOR. A lessee; a farmer. One who holds a term, whether of lands or an incorporeal right, such as customs or revenue.

FERMIER. In French Law. One who farms any public revenue.

FERMISONA. The winter season for killing deer.

FERNIGO. In English Law. A waste ground or place where ferns grow. Cowell.

FERRATOR. A farrier (q. v.).

FERRIAGE. The toll or price paid for the transportation of persons and property across a ferry. People v. R. Co., 35 Cal. 606.

FERRUERE. The shoeing of horses. Kelham.

FERRY. A liberty to have a boat upon a river for the transportation of men, horses, and carriages with their contents, for a reasonable toll. State v. Wilson, 42 Me. 9; State v. Freeholders of Hudson County, 23 N. J. L. 206; Woolr. Ways 217. The term is also used to designate the place where such liberty is exercised; Chapelle v. Wells, 4 Mart. La. (N. S.) 426. Ferry properly means a place of transit across a river or arm of the sea; but in law it is treated as a franchise, and defined as the exclusive right to carry passengers across a river, or arm of the sea, from one vill to another, or to connect a continuous line of road leading from one township or vill to another. It is not a servitude or easement. It is wholly unconnected with the ownership or occupation of land, so much so that the owner of the ferry need not have any property in the soil adjacent on either side. 12 C. B. N. S. 32.

In a strict sense a ferry is a continuation of a highway from one side of the water to the other and is for the transportation of passengers, vehicles and other property; Mayor, etc., of New York v. Starin, 106 N. Y. 11, 12 N. E. 631; Broadnax v. Baker, 94 N. C. 675, 55 Am. Rep. 633. A boat equipped with tracks for railroad cars and exclusively used for their transportation as a part of a through railroad line is not an ordinary ferry, but is essentially a part of interstate commerce; St. Clair County v. Transfer Co., 192 U. S. 454, 24 Sup. Ct. 300, 48 L. Ed. 518.

The point of departure was held to be the home of the ferry where it crossed the river which was the boundary between Ohio and West Virginia, although the jurisdiction of West Virginia extended to low-water mark on the Ohio side; State v. Faudre, 54 W. Va. 122, 46 S. E. 269, 63 L. R. A. 877, 102 Am. St. Rep. 927, 1 Ann. Cas. 104.

An exclusive right of ferry exists where one acquires the sole and exclusive privilege of taking tolls for such service. The element of receiving payment is essential, as one may lawfully transport his own goods in a boat, where an exclusive right of ferry is held by another; Alexandria, W. & K. Ferry Co. v. Wisch, 73 Mo. 655, 39 Am. Rep. 535.

In England, ferries are established by royal grant or by prescription, which is an implied grant; in the United States, by legislative authority, exercised either directly or by a delegation of powers to courts, commissioners, or municipalities; Proprietors of Charles River Bridge v. Proprietors of Warren Bridge, 7 Pick. (Mass.) 344; id., 11 Pet. (U. S.) 420, 9 L. Ed. 773; Wethersfield v. Humphrey, 20 Conn. 218; Day v. Stetson, 8 Greenl. (Me.) 365; Cloyes v. Keatts, 18 Ark. 19. Without such authority no one, though he may be the owner of both banks of the river, has the right to keep a public ferry;

Stark v. Miller, 3 Mo. 470; Trustees of Schools v. Tatman, 13 Ill. 27; Young v. Harrison, 6 Ga. 130; Charles River Bridge v. Warren Bridge, 11 Pet. (U. S.) 420, 9 L. Ed. 773; Willes 508; though after twenty years' uninterrupted use such authority will be presumed to have been granted; Pipkin v. Wynns, 13 N. C. 402; Stark v. McGowen, 1 N. & McC. (S. C.) 389; Mills v. St. Clair County Com'rs, 3 Scam. (Ill.) 53; Williams v. Turner, 7 Ga. 348; but see Scott v. Wilson, 11 S. W. 303, 10 Ky. L. Rep. 940. The franchise of a ferry will, in preference, be granted to the owner of the soil, but may be granted to another; and by virtue of the right of eminent domain the soil of another may be condemned to the use of the ferry, upon making just compensation; 6 B. & C. 703; Allen v. Farnsworth, 5 Yerg. (Tenn.) 189; Sparks v. White, 7 Humph. (Tenn.) 86; Pipkin v. Wynns, 13 N. C. 403; Harrison v. Young, 9 Ga. 359; Harvie v. Cammack, 6 Dana (Ky.) 242; Warner v. Mfg. Co., 123 Ky. 103, 93 S. W. 650, 12 L. R. A. (N. S.) 667; Day v. Stetson, 8 Greenl. (Me.) 365; In re Hanson, 2 Cal. 262. If the termini of the ferry be a highway, the owner of the fee will not be entitled to compensation; 3 Kent 421; Chosen Freeholders of Hudson County v. State, 24 N. J. L. 718; Somerville v. Wimbish, 7 Gratt. (Va.) 205; though in Pennsylvania and other states a different doctrine prevails; Cooper v. Smith, 9 S. & R. (Pa.) 31, 11 Am. Dec. 658; Chess v. Manown, 3 Watts (Pa.) 219; Pearsall v. Post, 20 Wend. (N. Y.) 111; 4 Am. L. Reg. N. S. 520; Corporation of Memphis v. Overton, 3 Yerg. (Tenn.) 387. See EMINENT DOMAIN.

One state has the right to establish ferries over a navigable river separating it from another state or from a foreign territory, though its jurisdiction may extend only to the middle of such river; and the exercise of this right does not conflict with the provision in the constitution of the United States conferring upon congress the power "to regulate commerce with foreign nations and among the several states," nor with any law of congress upon that subject; Corporation of Memphis v. Overton, 3 Yerg. (Tenn.) 387; State v. Freeholders of Hudson County, 23 N. J. L. 206; Mills v. County of St. Clair, 2 Gilm. (Ill.) 197; Tugwell v. Ferry Co., 74 Tex. 480, 9 S. W. 120, 13 S. W. 654. In Conway v. Taylor, 1 Black (U. S.) 603, 17 L. Ed. 191, a ferry franchise on the Ohio was held to be grantable under the laws of Kentucky to a citizen of that state who was a riparian owner on the Kentucky side. It was said not to be necessary to the validity of the grant that the grantee should have the right of landing on the other side. In Wiggins Ferry Co. v. East St. Louis, 107 U. S. 365, 2 Sup. Ct. 257, 27 L. Ed. 419, a state was held to have the power to impose a license fee upon ferry keepers living in the state for boats which they owned and used in conveying from a landing in the state passengers and goods across a navigable river to another state, and this was not a regulation of commerce; but a tax upon persons owning and running tow boats from the Gulf of Mexico to New Orleans was held void as a regulation of commerce; Moran v. New Orleans, 112 U. S. 69, 5 Sup. Ct. 38, 28 L. Ed. 653. In Gloucester Ferry Co. v. Pennsylvania, 114 U. S. 196, 5 Sup. Ct. 826, 29 L. Ed. 158, Pennsylvania attempted to tax the capital stock of a corporation the business of which was the ferrying of passengers and freight across the Delaware river to New Jersey. The ferry boats were registered in New Jersey and were taxable there. The court held it to be an interference with interstate commerce. In Louisville & J. Ferry Co. v. Kentucky, 188 U. S. 385, 23 Sup. Ct. 463, 47 L. Ed. 513, a Kentucky corporation operating a ferry across the Ohio river was held to be deprived of its property without due process of law by the action of Kentucky in including for purposes of taxation in the valuation of the franchise derived by the corporation from Kentucky the value of an Indiana franchise for a ferry from the Indiana to the Kentucky shore, which such corporation had acquired. No portion of the business of a ferry which is part of an interstate railway is under the control of the state; the state authorities have no power to regulate the fares of passengers whether railroad passengers or not; New York Cent. & H. R. Co. v. Board of Freeholders, 227 U. S. 248, 33 Sup. Ct. 269, 57 L. Ed. —, reversing New York Cent. & H. R. Co. v. Board of Freeholders, 76 N. J. L. 664, 74 Atl. 954, 16 Ann. Cas. 858. The granting of a temporary license to operate a ferry within the city limits, is valid; Carroll v. Campbell, 108 Mo. 550, 17 S. W. 884. A state may at its pleasure erect a new ferry so near an older ferry as to impair or destroy the value of the latter by drawing away its custom, unless the older franchise be protected by the terms of its grant; In re Fay, 15 Pick. (Mass.) 243; Carter v. Kalfus, 6 Dana (Ky.) 43; Shorter v. Smith, 9 Ga. 517; West River Bridge Co. v. Dix, 6 How. (U. S.) 507, 12 L. Ed. 535; Fanning v. Gregoire, 16 How. (U. S.) 524, 14 L. Ed. 1043; Mills v. St. Clair County, 2 Gil. (Ill.) 197; Green v. Ivey, 45 Fla. 338, 33 South. 711; Davis v. Police Jury, 1 La. Ann. 288; Mayor, etc., of City of Columbus v. Rodgers, 10 Ala. 37; Costar v. Brush, 25 Wend. (N. Y.) 628. See Bridge-water Ferry Co. v. Bridge Co., 145 Pa. 404, 22 Atl. 1039; Wheeling & B. Bridge Co. v. Bridge Co., 138 U. S. 287, 11 Sup. Ct. 301, 34 L. Ed. 967.

A ferry franchise is not infringed by the grant of a bridge franchise, though the bridge diverts the travel from an ancient ferry; [1908] 1 Ch. 41. But if an individual, without authority from the state, erect a new ferry so near an older ferry, lawfully established, as to draw away the custom of the latter, such individual will be liable to an action on the case for damages, or to a suit in equity for an injunction in favor of the owner of the latter; 6 M. & W. 234; Nixon v. Reid, 8 S. D. 507, 67 N. W. 57, 32 L. R. A. 315; Harrell v. Ellsworth, 17 Ala. 584; City of Newport v. Taylor's Ex'rs, 16 B. Monr. (Ky.) 699; Taylor v. R. Co., 49 N. C. 277; Long v. Beard, 7 N. C. 57; but he may transport his own goods in his own boats where another has an exclusive right of ferry; Alexandria, W. & K. Ferry Co. v. Wisch, 73 Mo. 655, 39 Am. Rep. 535; Capital City Ferry Co. v. Transp. Co., 51 Mo. App. 228; Tugwell v. Ferry Co., 74 Tex. 480, 9 S. W. 120, 13 S. W. 654. He may not, however, offer the free use of his boats to his customers as an inducement to secure their trade where he thereby diverts their patronage from a lawfully established ferry; Inhabitants of Peru & Dixfield v. Barrett, 100 Me. 213, 60 Atl. 968, 70 L. R. A. 567, 109 Am. St. Rep. 494. The grant to a city by the legislature of the right of licensing ferries, does not empower the city to grant exclusive ferry privileges; Carroll v. Campbell, 108 Mo. 550, 17 S. W. 884.

The franchise of a ferry is an incorporeal hereditament, and as such it descends to heirs, is subject to dower, may be leased, sold, and assigned; 5 Com. Dig. 291; 12 East 334; Bowman v. Wathen, 2 McLean, 376, Fed. Cas. No. 1,740; Stark v. Miller, 3 Mo. 470; Garrett v. Ricketts, 9 Ala. 529; Capital City Ferry Co. v. Transp. Co., 51 Mo. App. 228; McCearly v. Swayze, 65 Miss. 351, 3 South. 657; and when created by act of the legislature can be conveyed only by deed; Gunterman v. People, 138 Ill. 518, 28 N. E. 1067; but, nevertheless, being a franchise in which the public have rights and interests, it is subject to legislative regulation for the enforcement and protection of such rights and interests; Cooley, Const. Lim. 732; Benson v. Mayor, etc., 10 Barb. (N. Y.) 223; Chosen Freeholders of Hudson Co. v. State, 24 N. J. L. 718; City of New Newport v. Taylor's Heirs, 11 B. Monr. (Ky.) 361.

The owners of ferries are common carriers, and liable as such for the carriage of the goods and persons which they receive upon their boats. They are bound to have their ferries furnished with suitable boats, and to be in readiness at all proper times to transport all who apply for a passage; Ang. High. 437; Wallen v. McHenry, 3 Humphr. (Tenn.) 245; Pomeroy v. Donaldson, 5 Mo. 36; Fisher v. Clisbee, 12 Ill. 344; May v. Hanson, 5 Cal. 360, 63 Am. Dec. 135; 10 M. & W. 161; Evans v. Rudy, 34 Ark. 383; Koretke v. Irwin, 100 Ala. 323, 13 South. 943, 21 L. R. A. 787. They must have their flats so made and so guarded with railings that all drivers with horses and carriages may safely enter thereon; and as soon as the carriage and horses are fairly on the drops or slips of the flat, and during their transportation, although driven by the owner or his servant, they are in the possession of the ferryman, and the owners of the ferry are answerable for the loss or injury of the same unless occasioned by the fault of the driver; Cohen v. Hume, 1 McCord (S. C.) 439; 16 E. L. & Eq. 437; Albright v. Penn, 14 Tex. 290; Richards v. Fuqua's Adm'rs, 28 Miss. 792, 64 Am. Dec. 121; Wilson v. Hamilton, 4 Ohio St. 722; White v. Winnisimmet Co., 7 Cush. (Mass.) 155; they are not required to have railings at the end of their boats when not in actual use, so as to prevent runaway teams from entering and passing over the same to the river; Evans v. Goodrich, 46 Minn. 388, 49 N. W. 188; see NEGLIGENCE; but it is also well settled that if the owner retains control of the property himself and does not surrender the charge to the ferryman, such strict liability does not attach, and he is only responsible for actual negligence; Harvey v. Rose, 26 Ark. 3, 7 Am. Rep. 595; Wyckoff v. Ferry Co., 52 N. Y. 32, 11 Am. Rep. 650; 10 M. & W. 546; 36 Am. Rep. 504, n. See Printup v. Patton, 91 Ga. 422, 18 S. E. 311. If the ferry be rented, the tenant and not the owner is subject to these liabilities, because such tenant is pro hac vice the owner; Biggs v. Ferrell, 34 N. C. 1; Norton v. Wiswall, 26 Barb. See COMMERCE; TAXATION; RATES.

FERRYMAN. One employed in taking persons across a river or other stream, in boats or other contrivances, at a ferry. Covington Ferry Co. v. Moore, 8 Dana (Ky.) 158.

FERTILIZERS. The manufacture of fertilizer is a lawful business. The materials necessary to its composition, though objectionable and unwholesome, are property. So long as a municipal corporation allows such an industry within its limits, it cannot forbid the importation of materials requisite for its production; Fulton v. Norteman, 60 W. Va. 562, 55 S. E. 658, 9 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1196. But a board of health may forbid the use of certain materials for fertilizing purposes, if injurious to the public health; Naccari v. Rappelet, 119 La. 272, 44 South. 13, 13 L. R. A. (N. S.) 640.

FESTA IN CAPPIS. In Old English Law. Grand holidays, on which choirs were accustomed to wear caps. Jac. L. Dict.

FESTING-MAN. A bondsman; a surety; a pledge; a frank-pledge. It was one privilege of monasteries that they should be free from festing-men, which Cowell explains to mean not to be bound for any man's forthcoming who should transgress the law. Cowell.

FESTING-PENNY. Earnest (q. v.) given to servants when hired or retained. The same as arles-penny. Cowell.

FESTINUM REMEDIUM (Lat. a speedy remedy). A term applied to those cases where the remedy for the redress of an injury is given without any unnecessary delay. Bacon, Abr. Assise, A. The action of dower is festinum remedium, and so is that of assise.

FESTUCA. In Frankish Law. A rod or staff or (as described by other writers) a stick, on which imprecatory runs were cut, which was used as a gage or pledge of good faith by a party to a contract, or for symbolic delivery in the conveyance or quit-claim of land, before a court of law, anterior to the introduction of written documents by the Romans. 2 Poll. & Maitl. 86, 184, 190; Maitl. Domesday Book and Beyond 323.

FESTUM (Lat.). A feast, a holiday, a festival.

FETTERS. A sort of iron put on the limbs of a malefactor or a person accused of crime.

When a prisoner is brought into court to plead, he shall not be put in fetters; Co. 2d Inst. 315; Co. 3d Inst. 34; 2 Hale, Pl. Cr. 119; Kel. 10; 1 Chitty, Cr. Law 417; 4 Bla. Com. 322; it is usual to remove them at the trial; Faire v. State, 58 Ala. 74; State v. Lewis, 19 Kan. 260, 27 Am. Rep. 113; to retain them is justifiable only where a reasonable necessity exists; 59 J. P. 393, per Russell, C. J.; or where it is necessary to prevent an escape; 4 B. & C. 596. In commenting on these cases, it is said that it is justified only with a prisoner of notoriously bad character, or dangerous, or the offense is grave, or there is an attempt to escape; 29 Chi. L. News 88.

In the first case in this country in which the old common-law doctrine was considered and enforced, the court held that to try a prisoner in shackles was to deprive him of his rights, and that a conviction, under such circumstances, would be reversed; People v. Harrington, 42 Cal. 165, 10 Am. Rep. 296, followed in State v. Kring, 64 Mo. 591 (affirming State v. Kring, 1 Mo. App. 438). A single expression on this subject seems to be opposed to these cases. An English writer, commenting on the action of a barrister who withdrew and refused to proceed with a case because the judge ordered his client fettered during the trial, considers the removal of fetters to be a mere matter of courtesy, being designed to relieve the prisoner, so far as is practicable, from all that might enlist prejudice against him or disturb his self-possession, and that such removal cannot be considered a matter of right; 43 L. T. 390.

An officer having arrested a defendant on a civil suit, or a person accused of a crime, has no right to handcuff him unless it is necessary or he has attempted to make his escape: 4 B. & C. 596. It is not conclusive on a question of escape that the arresting officer did not handcuff the prisoner; State v. Hunter, 94 N. C. 820. See PRISONER.

FEU. In Scotch Law. A holding or tenure where the vassal in place of military service makes his return in grain or money. Distinguished from wardholding, which is the military tenure of the country. Bell, Dict.; Erskine, Inst. lib. ii. tit. 3, § 7.

FEU ANNUALS. In Scotch Law. The reddendo, or annual return from the vassal to a superior in a feu holding. Wharton, Dict., 2d Lond. ed.

FEU ET LIEU (Fr.). In Old French Canadian Law. Hearth and home, meaning actual settlement by a tenant on the land.

FEU HOLDING. A holding by tenure of rendering grain or money in place of military service. Bell, Dict.

FEUAR. In Scotch Law. The tenant or vassal of a feu. Bell, Dict.

FEUD. Land held of a superior on condition of rendering him services. 2 Bla. Com. 106.

A hereditary right to use lands, rendering services therefor to the lord, while the property in the land itself remains in the lord. Spelman, Feuds c. 1.

The same as feod, fief, and fee. 1 Sullivan, Lect. 128; 1 Spence, Eq. Jur. 34; Dalrymple, Feud. Pr. 99; 1 Washb. R. P. 18; Mitch. R. P. 80.

In Scotland and the north of England, a combination of all the kin to revenge the death of any of the blood upon the slayer and all his race. Termes de la Ley; Whishaw. See FEUDUM.

FEUDA. Fees.

FEUDAL ACTIONS. See FEODAL ACTIONS.

FEUDAL COURTS. In the 12th century a lord qua lord, had the right to hold a court for his tenants; in the 13th century, they became of less importance and for three reasons: The feudal principle would have led to a series of courts one above the other, and the dominions of the large landowners were usually scattered, so that great feudal courts became impossible. The growth of the jurisdiction of the king's court removed the necessity for feudal courts. All the incidents of the feudal system came to be regarded in a commercial spirit—as property. Its jurisdiction became merely appendant to landowning. 1 Holdsw. Hist. E. L. 64.

FEUDAL LAW, FEODAL LAW. A system of tenures of real property which prevailed in the countries of western Europe during the Middle Ages, arising from the peculiar political condition of those countries, and radically affecting the law of personal rights and of movable property.

Although the feudal system has never obtained in this country, and is long since extinct throughout the greater part of Europe, some understanding of the theory of the system is essential to an accurate knowledge of the English constitution, and of the doctrines of the common law in respect to real property. The feudal tenure was a right to lands on the condition of performing services and rendering allegiance to a superior lord. It had its origin in the military immigrations of the Northmen, who overran the falling Roman empire. Many writers have sought to trace the beginning of the system in earlier periods, and resemblances more or less distinct have been found in the tenures prevailing in the Roman republic and empire, in Turkey, in Hindustan, in ancient Tuscany, as well as in the system of Celtic clanship. Hallam, Mid. Ag. vol. 1; Stuart, Soc. in Europe; Robertson, Hist. of Charles V.; Pinkerton, Diss. on the Goths; Montesquieu, Esp. des Lois, livre xxx. c. 2; Meyer, Esprit, Origine et Progrès des Inst. judiciaires, tom. 1, p. 4.

But the origin of the feudal system is so obvious in the circumstances under which it arose, that perhaps there is no other connection between it and these earlier systems than that all are the outgrowth of political conditions somewhat similar. It has been said that the system is nothing more than the natural fruit of conquest; but the fact that the conquest was by immigrants, and that the conquerors made the acquired country their permanent abode, is an important element in the case, and in so far as other conquests have fallen short of this, the military tenures resulting have fallen short of the feudal system. The military chieftains of the northern nations allotted the lands of the countries they occupied among themselves and their followers, with a view at once to strengthen their own power and ascendancy and to provide for their followers.

Some lands were allotted to individuals as their own proper estates, and these were termed allodial; but, for the most part, those lands which were not retained by the chieftain he assigned to his comites, or knights, to be held by his permission, in return for which they assured him of their allegiance and undertook for him military service.

It resulted that there was a general dismemberment of the political power into many petty nations and petty sovereignties. The violence and disorders of the times rendered it necessary both for the strong to seek followers and for the weak to seek a protecting allegiance; and this operated on the one hand to lead the vassals to divide again among their immediate retainers the lands which they had received from the paramount lord, upon similar terms, and by this subinfeudation the number of fiefs was largely increased; and the same circumstances operated on the other hand to absorb the allodial estates by inducing allodial proprietors to surrender their lands to some neighboring chieftain and receive them again from him under feudal tenure. Every one who held lands upon a feudal tenure was bound, when called upon by his benefactor or immediate lord, to defend him, and such lord was, in turn, subordinate to his superior, and bound to defend him, and so on upwards to the paramount lord or king, who in theory of the law was the ultimate owner of all the lands of the realm. The services which the vassals were bound to render to their lords were chiefly military; but many other benefits were required, such as the power of the lord or the good will of the tenant would sanction.

This system came to its height upon the continent in the empire of Charlemagne and his successors. It was completely established in England in the time of William the Norman and William Rufus, his son; and the system thus established may be said to be the foundation of the English law of real property and the position of the landed aristocracy, and of the civil constitution of the realm. And when we reflect that in the Middle Ages real property had a relative importance far beyond that of movable property, it is not surprising that the system should have left its traces for a long time upon the law of personal relations and personal property. The feudal tenures were originally temporary, at the will of the lord, or from year to year; afterwards they came more commonly to be held for the life of the vassal; and gradually they acquired an inheritable quality, the lord recognizing the heir of the vassal as the vassal's successor in his service.

The chief incidents of the tenure by military service were: Aids,—a pecuniary tribute required by the lord in an emergency, e. g. a ransom for his person if taken prisoner, or money to make his son a knight or to marry his daughter. Reliefs,—the consideration which the lord demanded upon the death of a vassal for allowing the vassal's heir to succeed to the possession; and connected with this may be mentioned primer seisin, which was the compensation that the lord demanded for having entered upon the land and protected the possession until the heir appeared to claim it. Fines upon alienation,—a consideration exacted by the lord for giving his consent that the vassal should transfer the estate to another, who should stand in his place in respect to the services owed. Escheat.—Where on the death of the vassal there was no heir, the land reverted to the lord; also, where the vassal was guilty of treason; for the guilt of the vassal was deemed to taint the blood, and the lord would no longer recognize him or his heirs. Wardship and Marriage.—Where the heir was a minor, the lord, as a condition of permitting the estate to descend to one who could not render military service, assumed the guardianship of the heir, and, as such, exercised custody both of his person and of the property, without accounting for the profits, until the heir, if a male, was twenty-one and could undertake the military services, or, if a female, until she was of a marriageable age, when on her marriage her husband might render the services. The lord claimed, in virtue of his guardianship, to make a suitable match for his ward, and if wards refused to comply they were mulcted in damages.

As a system of government, feudalism was doomed from the day of the Great Assize of Henry II., and only dragged out a lingering existence till the legislation of Edward I. dealt it a final blow. Green, 1 Sel. Essays in Anglo-Amer. L. H. 131.

Feudal tenures were abolished in England by the statute 12 Car. II. c. 24; but the principles of the system still remain at the foundation of the English and American law of real property. Although in many of the states all lands are held to be allodial (see ALOD), it is the theory of the law that the ultimate right of property is in the state; and in most of the states escheat is regulated by statute. "The principles of the feudal system are so interwoven with every part of our jurisprudence," says Ch. J. Tilghman, "that to attempt to eradicate them would be to destroy the whole." Dunwoodie v. Reed, 3 S. & R. (Pa.) 447; Lyle v. Richards, 9 S. & R. (Pa.) 333. "Though our property is allodial," says Ch. J. Gibson, "yet feudal tenures may be said to exist among us in their consequences and the qualities which they originally imparted to estates; as, for instance, in precluding every limitation founded on an abeyance of the fee." McCall v. Neely, 3 Watts (Pa.) 71; Ingersoll v. Sergeant, 1 Whart. (Pa.) 337; Huble v. Vanhorne, 7 S. & R. (Pa.) 188.

Many of these incidents are rapidly disappearing, however, by legislative changes of the law.

The principles of the feudal law will be found in Littleton's Ten.; Wright's Tenures; 2 Bla. Com. c. 5; Dalrymple's Hist. of Feudal Property; Sullivan's Lectures; Book of Fiefs; Spelman's Treatise of Feuds and Tenures; Cruise's Digest; Le Grand Coutumier; the Sallie Laws; the Capitularies; Les Établissements de St. Louis; Assise de Jérusalem; Pothier, des Fiefs; Merlin, Rép. Féodalité; Dalloz, Dict. Féodalité; Guizot, Essais sur l'Histoire de France, Essai 5ème; Introduction to Robertson's Charles V.; Poll. & Maitl. Hist. Eng. Law; Stubbs, Const. Hist.; Round, Feudal England; Encycl. Dr.; Holdsworth, History of English Law; VILLENAGE.

The principal original collection of the feudal law of continental Europe is a digest compiled at Milan in the twelfth century, Feudorum Consuetudines, which is the foundation of many of the subsequent compilations. The American student will perhaps find no more convenient source of information than Blackstone's Commentaries, Sharswood's ed., vol. 2, 43, and Greenleaf's Cruise, Dig. Intro.

FEUDARY. A tenant who holds by feudal tenure. Held by feudal service. Relating to feuds or feudal tenures. See FEODARY.

FEUDBOTE. A recompense for engaging in a feud, and the damages consequent, it having been the custom in ancient times for all the kindred to engage in their kinsman's quarrel. Jac. L. Dict.

FEUDE, or DEADLY FEUD. A German word, signifying implacable hatred, not to be satisfied but with the death of the enemy. Such was that among the people in Scotland and in the northern part of England, which was a combination of all the kindred to revenge the death of any of the blood upon the slayer and all his race. Termes de la Ley. See BLOOD-FEUD.

FEUDIST. A writer on feuds, as Cujacius. Spel. Gloss.

FEUDO. In Spanish Law. Feud or fee. White, New Recop. b. 2, tit. 2, c. 2.

FEUDORUM LIBRI. The Books of Feuds published during the reign of Henry III., about the year 1152. The particular customs of Lombardy as to feuds began about that time to be the standard of authority to other nations, by reason of the greater refinement with which that branch of learning had been there cultivated. This compilation was probably known in England, but does not appear to have had any other effect than to influence English lawyers to the more critical study of their own tenures, and to induce them to extend the learning of real property so as to embrace more curious matter of similar kind. "Thus, tenures in England continued a peculiar species of feuds, partaking of certain qualities in common with others; but when once established here, growing up with a strength and figure entirely their own. While most of the nations of Europe referred to the Books of Feuds as the grand code of law by which to correct and amend the imperfections in their own tenures, there is not in English law books any allusion that intimates the existence of such a body of constitutions." 2 Reeves, Hist. Eng. Law 55.

FEUDUM. A feud, fief, or fee. A right of using and enjoying forever the lands of another, which the lord grants on condition that the tenant shall render fealty, military duty, and other services. Spelman, Gloss. It is not properly the land, but a right in the land. This form of the word is used by the feudal writers. The earlier English writers generally prefer the form feodum; but the meaning is the same. There was an older word feum.

Its use by the Normans is exceedingly obscure. "Feudal" was not in their vocabulary. Usually it denoted a stretch of land, rarely a tenure or mass of rights. It came to be applied to every person who had heritable rights in land. Maitl. Domesday Book and Beyond 152.

Feudum antiquum. A fee descended from the tenant's ancestors. 2 Bla. Com. 212. One which has been possessed by the relations of the tenant for four generations. Spelman, Gloss.

Feudum apertum. A fee which the lord might enter upon and resume either through failure of issue of the tenant or any crime or legal cause on his part. Spelman, Gloss. 2 Bla. Com. 245.

Feudum francum. A free feud. One which was noble and free from talliage and other subsidies to which the plebeia feuda (vulgar feuds) were subject. Spelman, Gloss.

Feudum hauberticum. A fee held on the military service of appearing fully armed at the ban and arrière ban. Spelman, Gloss.

Feudum improprium. A derivative fee.

Feudum individuum. A fee which could descend to the eldest son alone. 2 Bla. Com. 215.

Feudum laicum. A lay fee.

Feudum ligium. A liege fee. One where the tenant owed fealty to his lord against all other persons. Spelman, Gloss.; 1 Bla. Com. 367.

Feudum maternum. A fee descending from the mother's side. 2 Bla. Com. 212.

Feudum militare. A knight's fee, held by knight service and esteemed the most honorable species of tenure. 2 Bla. Com. 62.

Feudum nobile. A fee for which the tenant did guard and owed fealty and homage. Spelman, Gloss.

Feudum novum. One which began with the person of the feudatory, and did not come to him by descent.

Feudum novum ut antiquum. A new fee held with the qualities and incidents of an ancient one. 2 Bla. Com. 212; Wms. R. P. 126.

Feudum paternum. A fee which the paternal ancestors had held for four generations. Calvinus, Lex.; Spelman, Gloss. One descendible to heirs on the paternal side only. 2 Bla. Com. 223. One which might be held by males only. Du Cange.

Feudum proprium. A genuine original feud or fee, of a military nature, in the hands of a military person. 2 Sharsw. Bla. Com. 57.

Feudum talliatum. A restricted fee. One limited to descend to certain classes of heirs. 2 Bla. Com. 112, n.; 1 Washb. R. P. 66; Spelman, Gloss.

The distinction between feudum antiquum and feudum novum has had an important bearing upon the law of descent with respect to the admission or collaterals and the exclusion of ascendants. The theory of Blackstone, which is characterized by both Christian and Pollock & Maitland as "ingenious," will be found fully stated in 2 Com. 211, while for a criticism of it and other theories on the subject, see 2 Poll. & Maitl. 285.

FEUM. An older form of feudum, Maitl. Domesday Book and Beyond 152.

FEW. An indefinite expression for a small or limited number. In cases where exact description is required, the use of the word will not answer; Butts v. Town of Stowe, 53 Vt. 603; 2 Car. & P. 300; Black, L. Dict.

FIANCER. To pledge one's faith. Kellham.

FIANZA (Span.) Surety. The contract by which one person engages to pay the debt or fulfil the obligations of another if the latter should fail to do so.

FIAR. In Scotch Law. One whose property is charged with a life-rent. Where a right is taken to a husband and wife in conjunct fee and life-rent, the husband, as the persona dignior, is the only fiar. Ersk. Prin. 421.

FIAT. An order of a judge or of an officer whose authority, to be signified by his signature, is necessary to authenticate the particular acts. A short order or warrant of the judge, commanding that something shall be done. See 1 Tidd, Pr. 100.

FIAT IN BANKRUPTCY. An order of the lord chancellor that a commission of bankruptcy shall issue. 1 Deac. Bank. 106.

Fiats are abolished by 12 & 13 Vict. c. 116.

FIAUNT. An order; command. See FIAT.

FICTION. The legal assumption that something which is or may be false is true.

The expedient of fictions is sometimes resorted to in law for the furtherance of justice. Corkran Oil & Development Co. v. Arnaudet, 199 U. S. 194, 26 Sup. Ct. 41, 50 L. Ed. 143. The law-making power has no need to resort to fictions: it may establish its rules with simple reference to the truth; but the courts, which are confined to the administration of existing rules, and which lack the power to change those rules, even in hard cases, have frequently avoided the injustice that their application to the actual facts might cause, by assuming, in behalf of justice, that the actual facts are different from what they really are. Thus, in English law, where the administration of criminal justice is by prosecution at suit of the crown, the courts, rather than disregard the rules under which all other parties stand in respect to their neglect to appear and prosecute their suits, adopt the fiction that the king is legally ubiquitous and always in court, so that he can never be non-suited. The employment of fictions is a singular illustration of the justice of the common law, which did not hesitate to conceal or affect to conceal the fact, that a rule of law has undergone alteration, its letter remaining unchanged.

Fictio in the old Roman law was properly a term of pleading and signified a false averment on the part of the plaintiff which the defendant was not allowed to traverse; as that the plaintiff was a Roman citizen, when in truth he was a foreigner. The object of the fiction was to give the court jurisdiction; Maine, Anc. Law 25.

Fictions are to be distinguished on the one hand from presumptions of law, and on the other hand from estoppels. A presumption is a rule of law prescribed for the purpose of getting at a certain conclusion, though arbitrary, where the subject is intrinsically liable to doubt from the remoteness, discrepancy, or actual defect of proofs.

Thus, an infant under the age of seven years is conclusively presumed to be without discretion. Proof that he had discretion the court will not listen to. In the nature of the subject, there must be a limit, which it is better should be a general though arbitrary one than be fluctuating and uncertain in each case. An estoppel, on the other hand, is the rule by which a person is precluded from asserting a fact by previous conduct inconsistent therewith on his own part or the part of those under whom he claims, or by an adjudication upon his rights which he cannot be allowed to question.

This distinction is thus expressed by a Scotch writer: A factio juris differs from a presumption. Things are presumed which are likely to be true; but a fiction of law assumes for truth what is either false, or at least is as probably false as true. Thus, an heir is feigned or considered in law as the same person with his ancestor; thus, also, writings against which certification is obtained in a reduction-improbation are judged to be false fictione juris, though the most convincing proof shall be brought that they once existed and were genuine. Fictions of law must in all their effects be always limited to the special purpose of equity for which they were introduced. Ersk. Prin. 531.

The familiar fictions of the civil law and of the earlier common law were very numerous; but the more useful of them have either been superseded by authorized changes in the law or have gradually grown as it were into distinct principles, forming exceptions or modifications of those principles to evade which they were at first contrived. As there is no just reason for resorting to indirection to do that which might be done directly, fictions are rapidly disappearing before the increasing harmony of our jurisprudence. See 4 Benth. Ev. 300; 2 Pothier, Obl., Evans' ed. 43. But they have doubtless been of great utility in conducting to the gradual amelioration of the law; and, in this view, fiction, equity, and legislation have been named together as the three instrumentalities in the improvement of the law. They have been employed historically in the order here given. Sometimes two of them will be seen operating together, and there are legal systems which have escaped the influence of one or the other of them. But there is no instance in which the order of their appearance has been changed or inverted. Maine, Anc. Law 24.

Theoretical writers have classified fictions as of five sorts: abeyance, when the fee of land is supposed to exist for a time without any particular owner during an outstanding freehold estate; 2 Bla. Com. 107; 1 Cruise, Dig. 67; 1 Com. Dig. 175; 1 Viner, Abr. 104; the doctrine of remitter, by which a party who has been disseised of his freehold, and afterwards acquires a defective title, is remitted to his former good title; that one thing done to-day is considered as done at a preceding time by the doctrine of relation; that, because one thing is proved, another shall be presumed to be true, which is the case in all presumptions; that the heir, executor, or administrator stand by representation in place of the deceased.

Again, they have been classified as of three kinds: positive, when a fact which does not exist is assumed; negative, when a fact which does exist is ignored; and fictions by relation, when the act of one person is taken as if it were the act of a different person,—

e. g., that of a servant as the act of his master; when an act at one time or place is treated as if performed at a different time or place; and when an act in relation to a certain thing is treated as if it were done in relation to another thing which the former represents,—e. g., where delivery of a portion of goods sold is treated as giving possession of the whole; Best, Pres. 27. Fictions being resorted to simply for the furtherance of justice; Co. Litt. 150; 10 Co. 42; 1 Cowp. 177; several maxims are fundamental to them. First, that that which is impossible shall not be feigned; D'Aguesseau, Œuvres, tome iv. pp. 427, 447 c, Plaidoyer; 2 Rolle 502. Second, that no fiction shall be allowed to work an injury; 3 Bla. Com. 43; Low v. Little, 17 Johns. (N. Y.) 348. Third, a fiction is not to be carried further than the reasons which introduced it necessarily require; 1 Lilly, Abr. 610; 2 Hawk. Pl. Cr. 320; Best, Pres. § 20.

Consult Dalloz, Dict.; Burg. Ins. 139; Ferguson, Moral Phil. pt. 5, c. 10, § 3; 1 Toullier 171, n. 203; 2 id. 217, n. 203; 11 id. 10, n. 2; Maine, Anc. Law; Benth. Jud. Ev.; 1 Poll. & Maitl. 469.

FICTITIOUS ACTION. A suit brought on pretence of a controversy when no such controversy in truth exists. Such actions have usually been brought on a pretended wager, for the purpose of obtaining the opinion of the court on a point of law. Courts of justice are not bound to answer impertinent questions which persons think proper to ask them in the form of an action on a wager; 12 East 248. Such an attempt has been held to be a contempt of court; and Lord Hardwicke in such a case committed the parties and their attorneys; Rep. t. Hardw. 237. A court will not consider itself bound to entertain a case stated for its opinion when there is reason to believe that the action is not brought in good faith for the purpose of determining a matter in controversy between the parties; 6 C. B. 100; or where the decision is sought upon a fictitious interest created for the express purpose of obtaining a decision; 4 Ch. D. 169. Where a contract was made between a county and a bidder to enter a feigned suit to determine the validity of the bonds prior to their issue, it was held void as against public policy, the court saying that "the practice is in every point of view vicious. It involves . . . a conspiracy to deceive the courts, by presenting cases for decision involving no real controversy;" Van Horn v. Kittitas County, 112 Fed. 1. The practice of bringing such suits has been severely condemned by the courts; Lord v. Veazie, 8 How. (U. S.) 251, 12 L. Ed. 1067; Connolly v. Cunningham, 2 Wash. T. 242, 5 Pac. 473.

See, also, Comb. 425; 1 Co. 83; Fletcher v. Peck, 6 Cra. (U. S.) 147, 3 L. Ed. 162; FEIGNED ACTIONS; MOOT CASES.

FICTITIOUS PARTY. Where a suit is brought in the name of one who is not in being, or of one who is ignorant of the suit and has not authorized it, it is said to be brought in the name of a fictitious plaintiff. To bring such a suit is deemed a contempt of court; 4 Bla. Com. 133.

FICTITIOUS PAYEE. When a contract, such as negotiable paper, is drawn in favor of a fictitious person, and has been indorsed in such name, it is deemed payable to bearer as against all parties who are privy to the transaction; and a holder in good faith may recover on it against them; Pars. Bills & N. 591, n.; 2 H. Bla. 178, 288; 19 Ves. 311; Tittle v. Thomas, 30 Miss. 122, 64 Am. Dec. 154; Hunter v. Blodgett, 2 Yeates (Pa.) 480.

The maker of such a note, by negotiating it, transfers title to it without indorsement, and it is presumed that the note came into the possession of the holder with the names of all the indorsers on it, and prima facie he is treated as a holder for value; Plets v. Johnson, 3 Hill (N. Y.) 112; provided that the acceptor or indorser be ignorant of the fact that the payee is fictitious; Forbes v. Espy, 21 Ohio St. 483; 1 Camp. 130; and to entitle the holder of such a note to a recovery it must appear affirmatively that he was ignorant of the fact that the payee was a fictitious person; Maniort v. Roberts, 4 E. D. Sm. (N. Y.) 83. As between the original parties who put it into circulation with a knowledge of the fiction, it might be held void as an inoperative instrument, but if money from the holder actually gets into the hands of the acceptor it may be recovered back as money had and received; 1 Camp. 130. See also Sto. Prom. Notes 39. In the hands of a bona fide holder the note or bill is good against the maker; Irving National Bank v. Alley, 79 N. Y. 536; Lane v. Krekle, 22 Ia. 404; Farnsworth v. Drake, 11 Ind. 103; Blodgett v. Jackson, 40 N. H. 21.

A bona fide holder for a valuable consideration of a bill drawn payable to a fictitious person and indorsed in that name by the drawer may recover the amount of it in an action against the acceptor for money paid or money had and received, upon the idea that there was an appropriation of so much money to be paid to the person who should become the holder of the bill; 3 Term 174; and the mere fact of the acceptance of such a bill is evidence that the value has been received for it; id. 182; in this case three judges thought that the bill was to be considered as payable to bearer, and in the leading case of Minet v. Gibson that view was taken and it was held that a recovery from the acceptor may be had upon a count upon a bill payable to bearer, where such acceptor is aware that the payee is a fictitious person; 3 Term 481. This judgment was affirmed by the House of Lords, though with a dissent by Eyre, C. B., and Heath, J., with whom Lord Thurlow concurred; 1 H. Bla. 569; s. c. 6 Bro. P. C. 235. The case has been termed "anomalous" by a text writer who quotes the dissenting opinion of Eyre, C. B., as one "whose reasoning, it is conceived, has never been refuted;" 2 Ames, Bills & Notes 864. But the same writer admits that "the doctrine of the case has been generally adopted." In an action on such a bill, to show that the acceptor is aware that the payee is a fictitious person, evidence is admissible to show the circumstances under which he had received other bills payable to fictitious persons; 2 H. Bla. 187, 288. See also 18 C. B. N. S. 694; L. R. 1 C. P. 463.

When a note is made payable to the name of some person not having any interest, and not intended to become a party to the transaction, whether a person of such a name is or is not known to exist, the payee may be deemed fictitious; Foster v. Shattuck, 2 N. H. 446; [1891] A. C. 107; [1908] 1 K. B. 13; Jordan Marsh Co. v. Bank, 201 Mass. 397, 87 N. E. 740, 22 L. R. A. (N. S.) 250; Phillips v. Bank, 140 N. Y. 556, 35 N. E. 982, 23 L. R. A. 584, 37 Am. St. Rep. 596; Snyder v. Bank, 221 Pa. 599, 70 Atl. 876, 128 Am. St. Rep. 780.

If the maker did not know that the payee was a fictitious or non-existent person, and did not intend to make the paper payable to such person, the instrument cannot be treated as payable to bearer, for the intention of the maker or drawer is the test; Shipman v. Bank, 126 N. Y. 318, 27 N. E. 371, 12 L. R. A. 791, 22 Am. St. Rep. 821; Armstrong v. Bank, 46 Ohio St. 512, 22 N. E. 866, 6 L. R. A. 625, 15 Am. St. Rep. 655; Jordan Marsh Co. v. Bank, 201 Mass. 397, 87 N. E. 740, 22 L. R. A. (N. S.) 250. In Kohn v. Watkins, 26 Kan. 691, 40 Am. Rep. 336, it was held that the drawer's belief that the person named was the real payee will prevent the application of the rule that an order to a fictitious payee is an order to bearer. If a check is drawn to an existing person intended by the drawer to be the payee, the latter is not "fictitious" within the Bills of Exchange act, no matter how much the drawer may have been deceived; [1906] 2 K. B. 718, affirmed [1908] 1 K. B. 13, where it is said: "The word 'fictitious' implies that the name has been inserted by the person who has put it in for some dishonest purpose, without any intention that the check should be paid to that person only."

The Uniform Negotiable Instruments act provides that where the drawee is a fictitious person, the holder of the instrument may treat it either as a bill or note.

A note payable to a company or firm having no existence legal or de facto, has been held to be such a note; Farnsworth v. Drake, 11 Ind. 101; Blodgett v. Jackson, 40 N. H. 21; Maniort v. Roberts, 4 E. D. Smith (N. Y.) 83; Stevens v. Strang, 2 Sandf. (N. Y.) 138; one made payable to the estate of a deceased person; Scott v. Parker, 5 N. Y. Supp. 753; checks drawn to the order of an existing person, whose indorsement is forged; Jordan Marsh Co. v. Bank, 201 Mass. 397, 87 N. E. 740, 22 L. R. A. (N. S.) 250. See Douglass v. Wilkeson, 6 Wend. (N. Y.) 637; Byles, Bills, Wood's ed. 383.

FICTITIOUS PERSON. A United States patent for land to a fictitious person is void; and a bona fide purchaser is not protected; Hyde v. Shine, 199 U. S. 62, 25 Sup. Ct. 760, 50 L. Ed. 90.

FIDE-JUBERE. In Civil Law. To become fide-jussor; to pledge one's self; to act as surety for another. Among the words designated as words of obligation or forms of stipulation. Fide-jubes? do you make yourself fide-jussor? Fide-jubeo, I do make myself fide-jussor. Inst. 3. 15. 1.

FIDE-JUSSIO. An act by which any one binds himself as an additional security for another. This giving security does not destroy the liability of the principal, but adds to the security of the surety. Vicat, Voc. Jur.; Hallifax, Annals, b. 2, c. 16, n. 10.

FIDE-JUSSOR. In Civil Law. One who becomes security for the debt of another, promising to pay it in case the principal does not do so. 3 Bla. Com. 108. 291.

He differs from a co-obligor in this, that the latter is equally bound to a debtor, with his principal, while the former is not liable till the principal has failed to fulfil his engagement; Dig. 12. 4. 4; 16. 1. 13; 24. 3. 64; 38. 1. 37; 50. 17. 110; 6. 14. 20; Hall, Pr. 33; Dunl. Adm. Pr. 300; Clerke, Prax. tit. 63.

The obligation of the fide-jussor was an accessory contract; for, if the principal obligation was not previously contracted, his engagement then took the name of mandate. Lec. Elém. § 572; Code Nap. 2012.

FIDE-PROMISSOR. See FIDE-JUSSOR.

FIDEI-COMMISSARIUS (L. Lat.). In Civil Law. One who has a beneficial interest in an estate which, for a time, is committed to the faith or trust of another. This term has nearly the same meaning as cestui que trust has in the common law. 1 Greenl. Cruise, Dig. 295; Story, Eq. Jur. § 966.

Fidei-commissary and fide-commissary, anglicized forms of this term, have been proposed to take place of the phrase cestui que trust, but do not seem to have met with any favor.

According to Du Cange, the term was sometimes used to denote the executor of a will.

FIDEI-COMMISSUM (L. Lat.). In Civil Law. A trust. A devise was made to some person (hæres fiduciarius), and a request annexed that he should give the property to some one who was incapable of taking directly under the will. Inst. 2. 23. 1; 1 Greenl. Cruise, Dig. 295; McDonogh v. Murdoch, 15 How. (U. S.) 367, 407, 409, 14 L. Ed. 732. A gift which a man makes to another through the agency of a third person, who is requested to perform the will of the giver. The Louisiana civil code prohibits fidei-commissa; Ducloslange v. Ross, 3 La. Ann. 432; thus abolishing express trusts, but not affecting implied trusts; Gaines v. Chew, 2 How. (U. S.) 619, 11 L. Ed. 402.

The rights of the beneficiary were merely rights in curtesy, to be obtained by entreaty or request. Under Augustus, however, a system was commenced, which was completed by Justinian, for enforcing such trusts. The trustee or executor was called hæres fiduciarius, and sometimes fide-jussor. The beneficial heir was called hæres fidei-commissarius.

The uses of the common law are said to have been borrowed from the Roman fidei-commissa; 1 Greenl. Cruise 295; Bacon, Read. 19; see Bisph. Eq. 50; 1 Madd. 446; Story, Eq. Jur. § 966. The fidei-commissa are supposed to have been the origin of the common-law system of entails; 1 Spence, Eq. Jur. 21; 1 Washb. R. P. 60. This has been doubted by others. See SUBSTITUTION.

FIDELITAS. Fealty; fidelity.

FIDELITY INSURANCE. See INSURANCE.

FIDEM MENTIRI (Lat.). To break faith. Used when a tenant does not keep that fealty which he has sworn to the lord. Leg. Hen. I. c. 53.

FIDES. Faith; honesty; confidence. See GOOD FAITH.

FIDES FACTA. Among the Franks and Lombards undertakings were guaranteed by "making one's faith"—fides facta. This was symbolized by such formal acts as the giving of a rod; in suretyship giving the "festuca" or "vadium." 2 Holdsw. Hist. E. L. 73.

FIDUCIA (Lat.). In Civil Law. A contract by which we sell a thing to some one—that is, transmit to him the property of the thing, with the solemn forms of emancipation—on condition that he will sell it back to us. This species of contract took place in the emancipation of children, in testaments, and in pledges. Pothier, Pand.

FIDUCIARIUS TUTOR. See PUPIL; TUTOR.

FIDUCIARY. This term is borrowed from the civil law. The Roman laws called a fiduciary heir the person who was instituted heir, and who was charged to deliver the succession to a person designated by the testament. Merlin, Répert. But Pothier, Pand. vol. 22, says that fiduciarius hæres properly signifies the person to whom a testator has sold his inheritance under the condition that he should sell it to another. Fiduciary may be defined in trust, in confidence.

The law forbids one standing in such a position making any profit at the expense of the party whose interests he is bound to protect, without full disclosure; Bisph. Eq. § 238; 10 H. L. Cas. 26, 31. 45. What constitutes a fiduciary relation is often a subject of controversy. It has been held to apply to all persons who occupy a position of peculiar confidence towards others, such as a trustee, executor, or administrator, director of a corporation or society; Carpenter v. Danforth, 52 Barb. (N. Y.) 581; Appeal of Watts, 78 Pa. 302; agent; Barrow v. Rhinelander, 1 Johns. Ch. (N. Y.) 550; medical or religious adviser; In re Greenfield's Estate, 24 Pa. 232; article in 10 Jur. N. S. 91; husband and wife; Appeal of Darlington, 86 Pa. 512, 27 Am. Rep. 726; or a son; 13 Ch. Div. 338. See L. R. 3 Eq. 461; Hill, Trustees 547. Many cases have arisen in New York under the laws allowing arrest for debts incurred in a fiduciary capacity. The term seems to refer rather to the good faith than the ability of the party; Stoll v. King, 8 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 298. See Burhans v. Casey, 4 Sandf. (N. Y.) 707; Holbrook v. Homer, 6 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 86; Turner v. Thompson, 2 Abb. Pr. (N. Y.) 444; Ostell v. Brough, 24 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 274; Warner v. Transp. Co., 5 Rob. (N. Y.) 502. Under the bankrupt laws of 1841, and March 2, 1867, § 33, providing that debts contracted in a fiduciary capacity should not be barred by a discharge, the following cases fall within the act; an agent who appropriates money put into his hands for a specific purpose of investment; 1 Edm. 206; collector of city taxes who retains money officially collected; Morse v. City of Lowell, 7 Metc. (Mass.) 152; one who receives a note or other security for collection; White v. Platt, 5 Denio (N. Y.) 269; commission merchant; Meador v. Sharpe, 54 Ga. 125; and it does not alter the rule that the debt has been reduced to judgment before the discharge; Wade v. Clark, 52 Ia. 158, 2 N. W. 1039, 35 Am. Rep. 262. This exception in bankruptcy relates to technical trusts, not merely such as the law implies from the contract, but those actually and expressly constituted; Mulock v. Byrnes, 129 N. Y. 23, 29 N. E. 244. In the following cases the debt has been held not a fiduciary one; a factor who retains the money of his principal; Chapman v. Forsyth, 2 How. (U. S.) 202, 208, 11 L. Ed. 236; Commercial Bank of Manchester v. Buckner, 2 La. Ann. 1023; Cronan v. Cotting, 104 Mass. 245, 6 Am. Rep. 232; an agent under an agreement to account and pay over monthly; Grover & Baker Sewing Mach. Co. v. Clinton, 5 Biss. 324, Fed. Cas. No. 5,845; one with whom a general deposit of money is made; Hervey v. Devereux, 72 N. C. 463; a debt created by a person acting as an attorney in fact; Woodward v. Towne, 127 Mass. 41, 34 Am. Rep. 337; Desobry v. Tete, 31 La. Ann. 809, 33 Am. Rep. 232; Treadwell v. Holloway, 46 Cal. 547. See, also, Com'rs of Wilkes County v. Staley, 82 N. C. 395; Green v. Chilton, 57

Miss. 598, 34 Am. Rep. 483; Pierce v. Shippee, 90 Ill. 371.

FIDUCIARY CONTRACT. An agreement by which a person delivers a thing to another on the condition that he will restore it to him. The following formula was employed: Ut inter bonos agier oportet et sine fraudatione. Cicero, de Offic. lib. 3, cap. 17; Leg. du Dr. Civ. Rom. § 237. See Chapman v. Forsyth, 2 How. (U. S.) 202, 11 L. Ed. 236; Fisk v. Sarber, 6 W. & S. (Pa.) 18; McGinn v. Shaeffer, 7 Watts (Pa.) 415.

FIEF. A fee, feud, or feud.

FIEF D'HAUBERK. A fee held on the military tenure of appearing fully armed on the ban and arrière-ban. Feudum hauberticum. Spelman, Gloss.; Calvinus, Lex.; Du Cange. A knight's fee. 2 Bla. Com. 62.

FIEF TENANT. The holder of a fief or fee.

FIEL. In Spanish Law. An officer who keeps possession of a thing deposited under authority of law. Las Partidas, pt. 3, tit. 9, l. 1.

FIELD. A cultivated tract of land. State v. McMinn, 81 N. C. 585; Com. v. Josselyn, 97 Mass. 412; but not a one-acre lot used for cultivating vegetables; Simons v. Lovell, 7 Heisk. (Tenn.) 510.

FIELD-ALE, or FILKDALE. The drinking of ale by bailiffs and other officers in the field, at the expense of the hundred; an old English custom long since prohibited. Toml.

FIELDAD. In Spanish Law. Sequestration. This is allowed in six cases by the Spanish law where the title to property is in dispute. Las Partidas, pt. 3, tit. 3, l. 1.

FIERDING COURTS. Ancient Gothic courts "in the lowest instance;" so called because four were instituted within every superior district or hundred. Their jurisdiction was limited within forty shillings, or three marks; 3 Steph. Com. 393; 3 Bla. Com. 34; Stiernhook, De Jure Goth. i. 1, c. 2.

FIERI FACIAS (Lat. that you cause to be made). A writ directing the sheriff to cause to be made of the goods and chattels of the judgment-debtor the sum or debt recovered.

It receives its name from the Latin words in the writ (quod fieri facias de bonis et catallis, that you cause to be made of the goods and chattels). It is the form of execution in common use in levying upon the judgment-debtor's personal property.

The foundation of this writ is a judgment for debt or damages; and the party who has recovered such a judgment is generally entitled to it, unless he is delayed by a stay of execution which the law allows in certain cases after the rendition of the judgment, or by proceedings in error.

The execution, being founded on the judgment, must, of course, follow and be warranted by it; 2 Saund. 72 h, k; Bingh. Judg. 186; Oakley v. Becker, 2 Cow. (N. Y.) 454.

Hence, where there is more than one plaintiff or defendant, it must be in the name of all the plaintiffs against all the defendants; 6 Term 525. It is either for the plaintiff or the defendant. When it is against an executor or administrator for a liability of the testator or intestate, it is conformable to the judgment, and must be only against the goods of the deceased, unless the defendant has made himself personally liable by his false pleading, in which case the judgment is de bonis testatoris, et si non, de bonis propriis; Todd v. Todd's Ex'rs, 1 S. & R. (Pa.) 453; Swearingin's Ex'r v. Pendleton's Ex'r, 4 S. & R. (Pa.) 394; Lansing v. Lansing's Ex'x, 18 Johns. (N. Y.) 502; Burnside v. Green, 3 N. C. 112.

At common law, the writ bound the goods of the defendant or party against whom it was issued, from the teste day; by which is to be understood that the writ bound the property against the party himself, and all claiming by assignment from or by representation under him; 4 East 538; so that a sale by the defendant of his goods to a bona fide purchaser did not protect them from a feri facias tested before, although not issued or delivered to the sheriff till after the sale; Cro. Eliz. 174; Cro. Jac. 451; 1 Sid. 271; but by the statute of frauds, 29 Car. II. c. 3, § 16, it was enacted "that no writ or feri facias, or other writ of execution, shall bind the property of the goods of the party against whom such writ of execution issued forth, but from the time that such writ shall be delivered to the sheriff," etc., who must "indorse upon the back thereof the day of the month and year whereon he or they received the same;" and the same or similar provisions have been enacted in most of the states; Lewis v. Smith, 2 S. & R. (Pa.) 157; Beals v. Guernsey, 8 Johns. (N. Y.) 446, 5 Am. Dec. 348; Layton v. Steel, 3 Harr. (Del.) 512; State v. Blundin, 32 Mo. 387. The property in the goods is not altered, but remains in the defendant until the actual execution of the writ; Wats. Sher. 176.

The execution of the writ is made by levying upon the goods and chattels of the defendant or party against whom it is issued; and, in general, seizing a part of the goods in the name of the whole on the premises is a good seizure of the whole; 1 Ld. Raym. 725; Bullitt's Ex'rs v. Winston, 1 Munf. (Va.) 269; Van Wyck v. Pine, 2 Hill (N. Y.) 666; Barham v. Massey, 27 N. C. 192; Cobb v. Cage, 7 Ala. 619. But see Burdard v. Rees, 1 Whart. (Pa.) 377; Lloyd v. Wyckoff, 11 N. J. L. 218. It may be executed at any time before and on the return-day; Towns v. Harris, 13 Tex. 507; but not on Sunday, where it is forbidden by statute (29 Car. II. c. 7, which has been substantially followed in the United States); Watson, Sher. 173; 5 Co. 92; Com. Dig. Execution, C 5. After the death of the defendant, the sheriff may execute a fi. fa. tested in his lifetime, and under it seize his goods in the hands of his executor or administrator; Wats. Sher. 173.

The sheriff cannot break the outer door of a house for the purpose of executing a feri facias; 5 Co. 92; nor unlatch an outer door; Curtis v. Hubbard, 4 Hill (N. Y.) 437, 40 Am. Dec. 292; nor can a window be broken for this purpose; W. Jones 429. He may, however, enter the house, if it be open, and, being once lawfully entered, he may break open an inner door or chest to seize the goods of the defendant, even without any request to open them; 4 Taunt. 619; 3 B. & P. 223; Cowp. 1; Troub. & H. Pr. 1116. Although the sheriff is authorized to enter the house of the party to search for goods, he cannot enter that of a stranger for that purpose, without being guilty of a trespass, unless the defendant's goods are actually in the house; Comyns, Dig. Execution (C 5). The sheriff may break the outer door of a barn; 1 Sid. 186; 1 Kebl. 689; or of a store disconnected with the dwelling-house and forming no part of the curtilage; Haggerty v. Wilbur, 16 Johns. (N. Y.) 287, 8 Am. Dec. 321. See 1 Sm. L. Cas., 9th Am. ed. 228, with note on the subject; BREAKING.

At common law a fi. fa. did not authorize a sheriff to seize bank-bills, checks, or promissory notes; but it is otherwise now, by stat. 1 & 2 Vict. c. 110, § 12, and 3 & 4 Vict. c. 82; and this is now the law of many of the states; Steele v. Brown, 2 Va. Cas. 246; Means v. Vance, 1 Bailey (S. C.) 39; Reno v. Wilson, Hempst. 91, Fed. Cas. No. 11,700a; Spencer v. Blaisdell, 4 N. H. 198, 17 Am. Dec. 412; Appeal of Herron, 29 Pa. 240. So money may be taken; Means v. Vance, 1 Bailey (S. C.) 39; Turner v. Fendall, 1 Cra. (U. S.) 117, 2 L. Ed. 53; Handy v. Dobbin, 12 Johns. (N. Y.) 220. The writ applies generally to goods and chattels, but the common-law rules as to what may be taken are very much extended.

For the form of the writ, see 3 Sharsw. Bla. Com. App. xxvii.; as to proceeding in equity in aid of executions at law, see CREDITORS' BILL. See, generally, Murfree; Freeman, Executions, ch. X; Watson, Sheriff; EXECUTION; LEVY; SHERIFF.

FIERI FECI (L. Lat.). In Practice. The return which the sheriff or other proper officer makes to certain writs, signifying, "I have caused to be made."

When the officer has made this return, a rule may be obtained upon him after the return-day, to pay the money into court, and, if he withholds payment, an action of debt may be had on the return, or assumpsit for money had and received may be sustained against him; Dumond's Adm'rs v. Carpenter, 3 Johns. (N. Y.) 183.

FIFTEENTHS. An aid; aid granted from time to time to the crown by parliament, consisting of a fifteenth part of the personal property in every township, borough, and city in the kingdom. In the eighth year of Edward III. the valuation of the kingdom was fixed and a record made in the exchequer of the amount (twenty-nine thousand pounds). This valuation was not increased as the property in the kingdom increased in value; whence the name came in time to be a great misnomer. Co. 2d Inst. 77; 1 Poll. & Maitl. 604; 2 Bla. Com. 309; Cowell.

FIFTY DECISIONS. Ordinances of Justinian (529-532) upon the authority of which all moot points were settled in the preparation of the second edition of the Code. Taylor, Science of Jurispr. 144.

FIGHT. Does not necessarily imply that both parties should give and take blows. It is sufficient that they voluntarily put their bodies in position with that intent; State v. Gladden, 73 N. C. 155; Tate v. State, 46 Ga. 148. See PRIZE-FIGHT.

FIGHTWITE (Sax.). A mulct or fine for making a quarrel to the disturbance of the peace. Called also by Cowell forisfactura pugne. The amount was one hundred and twenty shillings. Cowell.

A payment to a lord possessing soc over a place where a wrong was done. 2 Holdsw. Hist. E. L. 35.

FIGURES. Numerals. They are either Roman, made with letters of the alphabet: for example, MDCCCLXXVI; or they are Arabic, as follows: 1776.

Roman figures may be used in contracts and law proceedings, and they will be held valid; but Arabic figures, probably owing to the ease with which they may be counterfeited or altered, have been holden not to be sufficient to express the sum due on a contract; but it seems that if the amount payable and due on a promissory note be expressed in figures or ciphers, it will be valid. Story, Bills § 42, note; Story, Pr. Notes § 21.

Figures to express numbers are not allowable in indictments; but all numbers must be expressed in words at length, except in setting forth a copy of a written instrument. And complaints are governed by the same rule in cases over which magistrates have final jurisdiction. But the decisions on this point are not uniform. And in most of them the proper distinction between the use of figures in the caption and in the body of an indictment has not been observed. In America, perhaps the weight of authority is contrary to the law as above stated. But, at all events, a contrary practice is unclerical, uncertain, and liable to alteration; and the courts which have sustained such practice have uniformly cautioned against it. See 13 Viner, Abr. 210; 1 Chitty 319; State v. Tuller, 34 Conn. 280; State v. Reed, 35 Me. 489, 58 Am. Dec. 727.

Bills of exchange, promissory notes, checks, and agreements of every description are usually dated with Arabic figures: it is, however, better to date deeds and other formal instruments by writing the words at length. See 5 Toullier, n. 336; Jackson v. Schoonmaker, 2 Johns. (N. Y.) 233; Serpentine v. State, 1 How. (Miss.) 256; Finch v. State, 6 Blackf. (Ind.) 533; President, etc., of Middlebury College v. Cheney, 1 Vt. 336.

FILACER. An officer of the common pleas, king's bench, and exchequer, whose duty it was to file the writs on which he made process. There were fourteen of them; and it was their duty to make out all original process. Cowell; Blount; Jacob L. Dict. It is used in 8 Mod. 284. The office was abolished in 1837.

FILARE. In Old English Practice. To file. Townsh. Pl. 67.

FILE (Lat. Filum). A thread, string, or wire upon which writs and other exhibits in courts and offices are fastened or filed for the more safe-keeping and ready turning to the same. Spelman, Gloss.; Cowell; Tomlin, Law Dict. Papers put together and tied in bundles. A paper is said also to be filed when it is delivered to the proper officer, and by him received to be kept on file. 13 Viner, Abr. 211; 1 Littleton 113; 1 Hawk. Pl. Cr. 7, 207. See where filed by a wife as agent; Reed v. Inhabitants of Acton, 120 Mass. 130.

The origin of the term indicates very clearly that the filing of a paper can only be effected by bringing it to the notice of the officer, who anciently put it upon the string or wire; Phillips v. Beene's Adm'r, 38 Ala. 248.

Filing a paper, in modern usage, consists in placing it in the custody of the proper official by the party charged with the duty, and the making of the proper indorsement by the officer. Stone v. Crow, 2 S. Dak. 525, 51 N. W. 335. In the sense of a statute requiring the filing of a paper or document, it is filed when delivered to and received by the proper officer to be kept on file. The word carries with it the idea of permanent preservation of the thing so delivered and received; that it may become a part of the public record. It is not synonymous with deposited; People v. Peck, 67 Hun 560, 22 N. Y. Supp. 576. The "file" in a cause includes original subpoenas and all papers belonging thereto. Jackson v. Mobley, 157 Ala. 408, 47 South. 590.

FILIATE. To declare whose child a bastard is. 2 W. Bla. 1017.

FILIATION. In Civil Law. The descent of son or daughter, with regard to his or her father, mother, and their ancestors.

Nature always points out the mother by evident signs, and, whether married or not, she is always certain: mater semper certa est, etiamsi vulgo conceperit. There is not the same certainty with regard to the father, and the mother may not know or may feign ignorance as to the paternity; the law has therefore established a legal presumption to serve as a foundation for paternity and filiation.

When the mother is or has been married, her husband is presumed to be the father of the children born during the coverture, or within a competent time afterwards, whether they were conceived during the coverture or not: pater is est quem nuptiæ demonstrant.

This rule is founded on two presumptions: one on the cohabitation before the birth of the child; and the other that the mother has faithfully observed the vow she made to her husband.

This presumption may, however, be rebutted by showing either that there has been no cohabitation, or some physical or other impossibility that the husband could be the father. See ACCESS; BASTARD; GESTATION; NATURAL CHILDREN; PATERNITY; PUTATIVE FATHER.

FILICETUM. In English Law. A ferny or brackly ground; a place where fern grows. Co. Litt. 4 b; Shep. Touch. 95.

FILIOUS. In Old Records. A godson. Spel. Glos.

FILIUS (Lat.). A son. A child.

As distinguished from heir filius is a term of nature, hærcs a term of law. 1 Powell, Dev. 311. In the civil law the term was used to denote a child generally. Calvinus, Lex.; Vicat, Voc. Jur. Its use in the phrase nullius filius would seem to indicate a use in the sense of legitimate son, a bastard being the legitimate son of nobody; though the word is usually rendered a son, whether legitimate or illegitimate. Vicat, Voc. Jur.

FILIUS FAMILIAS (Lat.). A son who is under the control and power of his father. Story, Conf. Laws § 61; Vicat, Voc. Jur.

FILIUS MULIERATUS (Lat.). The first legitimate son born to a woman who has had a bastard son by her husband before her marriage. Called, also, mulier, mulier puisné. 2 Bla. Com. 248.

FILIUS NULLIUS (Lat. son of nobody). A bastard. Called, also, filius populi (son of the people). 1 Bla. Com. 459; 6 Co. 65 a.

FILIUS POPULI. A son of the people; a natural child.

FILL. To occupy the whole capacity or extent of, so as to leave no space vacant.

To possess and discharge the duties of an office. The election of a person to an office constitutes the essence of his appointment, but the office cannot be considered as actually filled until his acceptance, either expressed or implied; Johnston v. Wilson, 2 N. H. 202, 9 Am. Dec. 50.

In a subscription for shares in a corporation, the word "fill" amounts to a promise to pay assessments; Bangor Bridge Co. v. McMahon, 10 Me. 478. As to the use of the word in connection with a doctor's prescription, see Ray v. Burbank, 61 Ga. 505, 34 Am. Rep. 103; DRUGGIST.

FILLY. A young mare; a female colt. An indictment charging the theft of a "filly" is not sustained by proof of the larceny of a "mare;" Lunsford v. State, 1 Tex. App. 448, 28 Am. Rep. 414.

FILTRATION. Where its franchise requires a water company to furnish filtered water, a neglect or refusal to do so entitles the municipality to a decree compelling it to comply with such requirement; City of Burlington v. Water Co., 86 Ia. 266, 53 N. W. 246; or it may annul the franchise; City of St. Cloud v. Water, Light & Power Co., 88 Minn. 329, 92 N. W. 1112; or may refuse to pay hydrant rentals until the filtering process shall be provided; Illinois Trust & Savings Bank v. City of Pontiac, 212 Ill. 326, 72 N. E. 411. Where the contract was to furnish pure water, and the company had erected filtering appliances, it was required to filter it to a reasonable degree of purity; Brace Bros. v. Water Co., 7 Pa. Dist. R. 71. But where the source of supply was furnished by the municipality, and such source of supply became impure without the fault of the company, it was held the company could not be compelled to go to the additional expense of furnishing a filtering plant, the contract being silent on that subject; City of Georgetown v. Water Co., 134 Ky. 608, 121 S. W. 428, 24 L. R. A. (N. S.) 303.

FILUM AQUÆ (Lat. a thread of water). This may mean either the middle line or the outer line. Altum filum denotes high-water mark. Blount. Filum is, however, used almost universally in connection with aquæ to denote the middle line of a stream. Medium filum is sometimes used with no additional meaning. The common-law rule was that conveyances of land bounded on streams, above tide water, extend usque ad filum aquæ. See RIVER; WATER-COURSE.

FILUM FORESTÆ (Lat.). The border of the forest. 2 Bla. Com. 419; 4 Inst. 303; Manw. Purlieu.

FILUM VIÆ (Lat.). The middle line of a road; a term used to indicate the middle line or thread of a street or road. 2 Sm. L. Cas. 98. See Peck v. Denniston, 121 Mass. 18; Motley v. Sargent, 119 Mass. 231; Spackman v. Steidel, 88 Pa. 453; Hannibal Bridge Co. v. Schaubacher, 57 Mo. 582; City of Chicago v. Rumsey, 87 Ill. 348. Where a description of land gives a street or road as a boundary, it is presumed that the title passes ad medium filum viæ; Cox v. Freedley, 33 Pa. 124, 75 Am. Dec. 584. See BOUNDARY; HIGHWAY; STREET.

FIN. End; limit; period of limitation.

FIN DE NON RECEVOIR. In French Law. An exception or plea founded on law, which without entering into the merits of the action shows that the plaintiff has no right to bring it, either because the time during which it ought to have been brought has elapsed, which is called prescription, or that there has been a compromise, accord, and satisfaction, or any other cause which has destroyed the right of action which once subsisted. Pothier, Proc. Civ. pt. 1, c. 2, s. 2, art. 2; Story, Contl. Laws § 580.

FINAL. Last; conclusive; pertaining to the end. In law it is usually employed in contrast with interlocutory (q. v.) with respect to pendency of suits.

FINAL COSTS. Such costs as are to be paid at the end of the suit; costs, the liability for which depends upon the final result of the litigation.

FINAL DECISION. One from which no appeal or writ of error can be taken. Moore v. Mayfield, 47 Ill. 167; 6 El. & Bl. 408.

FINAL DECREE. See DECREE.

FINAL DISPOSITION. Such a conclusive determination of the subject-matter embraced in a submission to arbitrators, that after the award is made nothing further remains to fix the rights and obligations of the parties, and no further controversy or litigation can arise thereon.

Such an award that the party against whom it is given may perform it without any further ascertainment of rights or obligation. See Colcord v. Fletcher, 50 Me. 401.

FINAL HEARING. The trial of an equity case upon the merits, as distinguished from the hearing of any preliminary questions arising in the cause, which are termed interlocutory. Akerly v. Vilas, 24 Wis. 171, 1 Am. Rep. 166.

FINAL JUDGMENT. See JUDGMENT.

FINAL PASSAGE. The vote on a passage of a bill or resolution in either house of the legislature after it has received the prescribed number of readings and has been subjected to such action as is required by the fundamental law governing the body or its own rule. See State v. Buckley, 54 Ala. 613.

FINAL PROCESS. Writs of execution. So called to distinguish them from mesne process, which includes all process issuing before judgment rendered. 3 Steph. Com. 489.

FINAL RECOVERY. The ultimate judgment of a court. Hunt v. Taft, 100 Mass. 91. It has also been construed as referring to the verdict, as distinguished from the judgment. Joannes v. Pangborn, 6 Allen (Mass.) 243. See DECREE.

FINAL SENTENCE. One which puts an end to a case. Distinguished from interlocutory. See SENTENCE.

FINAL SETTLEMENT. The final account of an executor or administrator closing the business of the estate, with the order of the court thereon approving it and discharging the accountant. Roberts v. Spencer, 112 Ind. 85, 13 N. E. 131; Bartels v. Gove, 4 Wash. 632, 30 Pac. 675; Stevens v. Tucker, 87 Ind. 114; Sims v. Waters, 65 Ala. 442.

FINALIS CONCORDIA (Lat.). A decisive agreement. A fine. A final agreement.

A final agreement entered by the parties by permission of court in a suit actually brought for lands. Subsequently, the bringing suit, entry of agreement, etc., became merely formal, but its entry upon record gave a firm title to the plaintiff; 1 Washb. R. P. 70; 1 Spence, Eq. Jur. 143; Tudor, Lead. Cas. 689.

Finis est amicitia compositio et finalis concordia ex consensu et concordia domini regis vel justiciarum (a fine is an amicable settlement and decisive agreement by consent and agreement of our lord the king or his justices). Glanville, lib. 8, c. 1.

Talis concordia finalis dicitur eo quod finem imposuit negotio, adeo ut neutra pars litigantium ab eo de cetero poterit recidere (such concord is called final because it puts an end to the business, so that neither of the litigants can afterwards recede from it). Glanville, lib. 9, c. 3; Cunningham, Law Dict.

FINANCES. The public revenue or resources of a government or state. The income or means of an individual or corporation. It is somewhat like the fiscus of the Romans. The word is generally used in the plural.

Money resources generally. The state of the finances of an individual or corporation, being his condition in a monetary point of view. The cash he has on hand, and that which he expects to receive, as compared with the engagements he has made to pay.

FINANCIER. One who manages the finances or public revenue. Persons skilled in matters appertaining to the judicious management of money affairs.

FIND. See FINDER; FINDING.

FINDER. One who lawfully comes to the possession of another's personal property, which was then lost.

The finder of lost property at common law had a valid claim to the same against all the world except the true owner; 1 Stra. 504; Lawrence v. Buck, 62 Me. 275; Mathews v. Harsell, 1 E. D. Sm. (N. Y.) 393; Durfee v. Jones, 11 R. I. 588, 23 Am. Rep. 528; Tancil v. Seaton, 28 Gratt. (Va.) 601, 26 Am. Rep. 380; Sovern v. Yoran, 16 Or. 269, 20 Pac. 100, 8 Am. St. Rep. 293. Generally the place in which the property is found creates no exception to the general rule; Hoagland v. Amusement Co., 170 Mo. 335, 70 S. W. 878, 94 Am. St. Rep. 740; Weeks v. Hackett, 104 Me. 264, 71 Atl. 858, 19 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1201, 129 Am. St. Rep. 390, 15 Ann. Cas. 1156; money or property found on the premises of another has been held, in the case of a servant in a hotel, as against the proprietor, to belong to the finder; Hamaker v. Blanchard, 90 Pa. 377, 35 Am. Rep. 664; to the same effect; Danielson v. Roberts, 44 Or. 108, 74 Pac. 913, 65 L. R. A. 526, 102 Am. St. Rep. 627, where an employee found money hidden and abandoned on his employer's premises. So a stranger who finds money in a shop may retain it as against the shop-owner; 21 L. J. Q. B. 75; unless it has been simply laid aside and left by mistake; McAvoy v. Medina, 11 Allen (Mass.) 548, 87 Am. Dec. 733; Loucks v. Gallogly, 1 Misc. 22, 23 N. Y. Supp. 126; or a conductor who finds money on the cars may retain it as against the company; New York & H. R. Co. v. Haws, 56 N. Y. 175; or an employé in a mill, who finds bank-notes among old papers bought to be manufactured over; Bowen v. Sullivan, 62 Ind. 281, 30 Am. Rep. 172. Drift-logs found on the banks of a river may be rightfully retained by the finder as against the riparian owner; Deadrick v. Oulds, 86 Tenn. 14, 5 S. W. 487, 6 Am. St. Rep. 812; but an aerolite which buries itself in the ground belongs rather to the owner of the soil on which it falls than to one who observes it and digs it out; Godard v. Winchell, 86 Ia. 71, 52 N. W. 1124, 17 L. R. A. 788, 41 Am. St. Rep. 481. So gold-bearing quartz found buried in the earth, where it was placed by some unknown person, belongs to the owner of the soil as against the finder; Ferguson v. Ray, 44 Or. 557, 77 Pac. 600, 1 L. R. A. (N. S.) 477, 102 Am. St. Rep. 648, 1 Ann. Cas. 1. A prehistoric boat found by a gas company while excavating on land leased by it belongs to the lessor; 33 Ch. D. 566. Chattels lying upon private lands are, prima facie, in the possession of the owner of the land; [1896] 2 Q. B. 44. Money found in furniture belonging to the estate of a deceased person belongs to the administrator as against the finder; Kuykendall v. Fisher, 61 W. Va. 87, 56 S. E. 48, 8 L. R. A. (N. S.) 94, 11 Ann. Cas. 700; that the finder of a thing in a private place has no title against the owner of the place, see 39 Am. L. Rev. 922 and cases cited.

Where a workman employed by a corporation to clear out a pool on its land found two rings in the mud at the bottom of the pool, the corporation was held entitled to recover the rings in an action of detinue; [1896] 2 Q. B. 44. In that case Lord Russell, C. J., put the decision on the ground that the possession of land carried with it everything attached to it, or under it, and he expressly distinguished the last English case above cited, which, he said, stood by itself on the special ground that the notes being dropped in the public part of the shop were never in the custody of the shopkeeper; accordingly he says: "It is somewhat strange that there is no more direct authority on the question; but the general principle seems to me to be that where a person has possession of house or land, with a manifest intention to exercise control over it and the things which may be upon or in it, then, if something is found on that land, whether by an employé of the owner or by a stranger, the presumption is that the possession of that thing is in the owner of the locus in quo."

A commentator upon these cases says: "This language applies to land with respect to which the public has no easement, which differentiates the case from findings in shops and other public places. The real distinction, however, is this, that those things belong to the owner of the premises in which they are found, which, either from their nature, or from the circumstances attending the loss, become practically part and parcel of the freehold, such as the rings, covered by the water and mud, which undoubtedly belonged to the owner of the land, and the aerolite which buried itself in the ground to the depth of three feet; or, to use the language of some of the cases, those things belong to the owner which may be regarded as accretions to his land, such as the aerolite, the rings, or drift-logs; though the latter may be pursued and taken by a former finder, from whom they have escaped." 36 Am. L. Reg. N. S. 588; Ferguson v. Ray, 44 Or. 557, 77 Pac. 600, 1 L. R. A. (N. S.) 477, 102 Am. St. Rep. 648, 1 Ann. Cas. 1. The contrary view is taken by some courts, which hold that the owner of the soil acquires no title to treasure trove by virtue of his ownership; Weeks v. Hackett, 104 Me. 264, 71 Atl. 858, 19 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1201, 120 Am. St. Rep. 390, 15 Ann. Cas. 1156 (coins found buried in the earth); Danielson v. Roberts, 44 Or. 108, 74 Pac. 913, 65 L. R. A. 526, 102 Am. St. Rep. 627 (coins secreted in an old building).

Where a man buys a chattel which, unknown to himself and the vendor, contains valuable property, he will, as to that, be considered merely as a finder. When a person purchased at a public auction a bureau, and appropriated to his own use a purse containing money, found in a secret drawer, the existence of which at the time of the sale was not known to any one, it was held that there was a delivery of the bureau but not of the purse and money, and it was a simple case of finding and subject to the law in such cases; 7 M. & W. 623. See Br. Leg. Max. 8th Am. ed. 807.

The finder is entitled to certain rights, and liable to duties which he is obliged to perform. This is a species of deposit, which, as it does not arise ex contractu, may be called a quasi deposit; and it is governed by the same general rules as common deposits. The finder is required to take the same reasonable care of the property found as any voluntary depository ex contractu; Doctor & Stud. Dial. 2, c. 38; 2 Bulstr. 306, 312; 1 Rolle 125.

The finder is not bound to take the goods he finds; yet, when he does undertake the custody, he is required to exercise reasonable diligence in preserving the property; and he will be responsible as a bailee for gross negligence. Some of the old authorities laid down that "if a man find butter, and by his negligent keeping it putrefy, or if a man find garments, and by his negligent keeping they be moth-eaten, no action lies." So it is if a man find goods and then lose them again. Bacon, Abr. Bailment, D; and in support of this position, Leon. 123, 223; Ow. 141; 2 Bulstr. 21, are cited. But these cases, if carefully examined, will not, perhaps, be found to decide the point as broadly as it is stated in Bacon. A finder would be held responsible for gross negligence, or fraud; Story, Bailm. § 85.

On the other hand, the finder of an article is entitled to recover all expenses which have necessarily occurred in preserving the thing found; Domat, l. 2, t. 9, s. 2, n. 2. But unlike salvors by water, he can claim nothing beyond this; 2 H. Bla. 254; Marvin v. Treat, 37 Conn. 96, 9 Am. Rep. 307; Trustees of Millcreek Tp. v. Brighton Stock Yards Co., 27 Ohio St. 435; Shoul. Bailm. 28.

Where money was found upon a body floating in the water and paid into the admiralty court by the salvors, they were awarded half of the amount as salvage, and the public administrator of the county in which the court was located was held entitled to the balance as against the finders, or the United States, claiming under its prerogative rights of a sovereign; Gardner v. Ninety-Nine Gold Coins, 111 Fed. 552. The public administrator was considered to represent the true owner in like manner as would an ordinary administrator.

When the owner does not reclaim the goods lost, they belong to the finder; 1 Bla. Com. 296; 2 id. 9; 2 Kent 290; and should there be several finders, they share in common; Keron v. Cashman (N. J.) 33 Atl. 1055, 19 N. J. L. J. 54. The acquisition of treasure by the finder is evidently founded on the rule that what belongs to none naturally becomes the property of the first occupant: res nullius naturaliter fit primi occupantis. Money or goods that are lost are the only kind that can be said to be found. It is property that the owner has involuntarily parted with, and not property that he has intentionally concealed in the earth for safekeeping; Sovern v. Yoran, 16 Or. 269, 20 Pac. 100, 8 Am. St. Rep. 293.

To the same effect when property is found concealed in other property, such as bureaus, safes, machinery, stoves, etc. It is held in many cases not to be lost in the sense of abandoned, unless it appears to have been casually or accidentally placed there; Duffee v. Jones, 11 R. I. 588, 23 Am. Rep. 528; Huthmacher v. Harris's Adm'rs, 38 Pa. 491, 80 Am. Dec. 502; Warren v. Ulrich, 130 Pa. 413, 18 Atl. 618. Money found under such conditions is held to constitute treasure trove; Livermore v. White, 74 Me. 456, 43 Am. Rep. 600; Sovern v. Yoran, 16 Or. 269, 20 Pac. 100, 8 Am. St. Rep. 293; Kuykendall v. Fisher, 61 W. Va. 87, 56 S. E. 48, 8 L. R. A. (N. S.) 94, 11 Ann. Cas. 700. Money left on a desk in a bank, provided for the use of the depositors, is not lost so as to entitle the finder to the same as against the bank; Loucks v. Gallogly, 1 Misc. (N. Y.) 22, 23 N. Y. Supp. 126. It seems that the title of the owner to property lying at the bottom of the sea is not divested, however long it may remain there, and no other person can acquire such title except by condemnation and sale in admiralty; Murphy v. Dunham, 38 Fed. 503. One who finds property at sea is only a salvor. When a ship was almost becalmed in high seas a floating chest was found and with but little trouble taken on board. It contained 70 doubloons. It was held that the finders were not entitled to the whole property, though no claims or marks of ownership, but should be compensated by a moiety as for salvage services. The other moiety was directed to be paid into court; Hollingsworth v. Seventy Doubloons, etc., Fed. Cas. No. 6,620. And to the same effect, Gardner v. Ninety-Nine Gold Coins, 111 Fed. 552, where money was found on a dead body floating in the water. See supra.

In a German case a woman, eating an oyster in a restaurant, found a pearl in it, which it was held belonged to her escort, who paid for the food; 39 Am. L. Rev. 443.

As to the criminal responsibility of the finder, the result of the authorities is that if a man finds goods that have been actually lost, or are reasonably supposed by him to have been lost, and appropriates them, with intent to take the entire dominion over them, really believing when he takes them that the owner cannot be found, it is not larceny; but if he takes them with the like intent, though lost or reasonably supposed to be lost, but reasonably believing that the owner can be found, it is larceny; Baker v. State, 29 Ohio St. 184, 23 Am. Rep. 731; 2 C. & K. 841; Wolfington v. State, 53 Ind. 343; Flemister v. State, 121 Ga. 146, 48 S. E. 910; State v. Stevens, 2 Pennewill (Del.) 486, 49 Atl. 174; State v. Hoshaw, 89 Minn. 307, 94 N. W. 873.

If a finder attempts to retain lost property as against the owner, or converts it to his own use, when he knows the owner, he will be guilty of larceny; Lawrence v. State, 1 Humph. (Tenn.) 228, 34 Am. Dec. 644; Pritchett v. State, 2 Sneed. (Tenn.) 285, 62 Am. Dec.

468. See as to this rule and its qualification Broom, Com., 4th ed. 955; Porter v. State, Mart. & Y. (Tenn.) 226. There must be a felonious intent; Com. v. Titus, 116 Mass. 42, 17 Am. Rep. 138, and note. Though it is the duty of the finder to seek out the owner and restore the property with due diligence; State v. Hoshaw, 89 Minn. 307, 94 N. W. 873; Pen. Code N. Y. § 539; yet the want of promptness on the part of the finder does not prove felonious intent in keeping the property; Peters v. Bourneau, 22 Ill. App. 177. The question is, whether the finder, when he came into possession, believed the owner could be found; 2 Green, Cr. L. Rep. 35. In Regina v. Thurborn, Parke, B., observes that it cannot be doubted that if, at this day, the punishment of death was assigned to theft and usually carried into effect, the misappropriation of lost goods would never be held to constitute that offence. Whart. Cr. L. § 901. See LARCENY; BAILMENT; SALVAGE; TREASURE TROVE.

FINDING. The result of the deliberations of a jury or a court. Todd v. Potter, 1 Day (Conn.) 238; Denslow v. Moore, 2 Day (Conn.) 12; U. S. v. Moller, 16 Blatchf. 65, Fed. Cas. No. 15,794.

The word find or finding does not always imply the same thing in legal proceedings. Where a cause is tried by the court, the finding means the fact which the court considers the evidence establishes, but find, as used in a statute in respect to the truth of a complaint for the revocation of a license, implies that the board is satisfied from the evidence, and the conclusion may be informally expressed. State v. Beloit, 74 Wis. 267, 42 N. W. 110.

Under the Act of March 3, 1865, R. S. § 649, it was provided that issues of fact in civil cases might be tried and determined by the court without the intervention of a jury upon the filing by the parties of a stipulation in writing waiving a jury, and that the finding of the court upon the facts might be either general or special and should have the same effect as the verdict of the jury; 1 Comp. Stat. (1901) 525. This provision seems to be undisturbed by the enactment of the judicial code, and it is omitted from the list of sections of the Revised Statutes repealed by it. The supreme court, in construing the statute above cited, lays down the following principles with respect to findings as being settled (citing a number of cases to each proposition): "1. The facts found by the court below are conclusive; that the bill of exceptions cannot be used to bring up the evidence for a review of these findings; that the only rulings, upon which we are authorized to pass, are such as might be presented by a bill of exceptions prepared as in actions at law; and that the findings have practically the same effect as the special verdict of a jury. 2. That it is only the ultimate facts which the court is bound to find; and that this court will not take notice of a refusal to find the mere incidental facts, which only amount to evidence from which the ultimate fact is to be obtained. 3. If the court below neglects or refuses to make a finding one way or the other, as to the existence of a material fact, which has been established by uncontradicted evidence, or if it finds such a fact when not supported by any evidence whatever, and an exception be taken, the question may be brought up for review in that particular. In the one case, the refusal to find would be equivalent to finding that the fact was immaterial; and, in the other, that there was some evidence to prove what is found, when in truth there was none. Both of these are questions of law, and proper subjects for review in an appellate court." The City of New York, 147 U. S. 76, 13 Sup. Ct. 211, 37 L. Ed. 84.

As to the findings of a master, see MASTER IN CHANCERY.

Where a case is tried by a court without a jury, its findings upon questions of fact are conclusive, in the United States supreme court; Stanley v. Albany County, 121 U. S. 535, 7 Sup. Ct. 1234, 30 L. Ed. 1000; Allen v. Bank, 120 U. S. 20, 7 Sup. Ct. 460, 30 L. Ed. 373. Errors in the findings of fact by the court are not subject to revision if there is any evidence upon which such findings could be made; Hathaway v. Bank, 134 U. S. 494, 10 Sup. Ct. 608, 33 L. Ed. 1004.

A finding without evidence is arbitrary and useless, and an act of congress authorizing any body to make such finding would be inconsistent with justice, and an exercise of arbitrary power; Interstate Commerce Commission v. R. Co., 227 U. S. 88, 33 Sup. Ct. 185, 57 L. Ed. —.

FINE. In Conveyancing. An amicable composition or agreement of a suit, either actual or fictitious, by leave of the court, by which the lands in question become, or are acknowledged to be, the right of one of the parties. Co. Litt. 120; 2 Bla. Com. 349; Bacon, Abr. Fines and Recoveries. Fines were abolished in England by stat. 3 & 4 Wm. IV. c. 74. Their use was not unknown in the United States, but has been either expressly abolished or become obsolete. See 1 Steph. Com. 514.

A fine is so called because it puts an end not only to the suit thus commenced, but also to all other suits and controversies concerning the same matter. Such concords, says Doderidge (Eng. Lawyer 84), have been in use in the civil law, and are called transactions, whereof they say thus: Transactiones sunt de eis quæ in controversia sunt, a lite futura aut pendente ad certam compositionem reducuntur, dando aliquid vel accipiendo. Or shorter, thus: Transactio est de re dubia et lite ancipite ne dum ad finem ducta, non gratuita pactio. It is commonly defined an assurance by matter of record, and is founded upon a supposed previously existing right, and upon a writ requiring the party to perform his covenant; although a fine may be levied upon any writ by which lands may be demanded, charged, or bound. It has also been defined an acknowledgment on record of a previous gift or feoffment, and prima facie carries a fee, although it may be limited to an estate for life or in fee-tail. Prest. Conv. 200, 202, 268, 269; 2 Bla. Com. 348.

The stat. 18 Edw. I., called modus levandi fines, declares and regulates the manner in which they should be levied and carried on; and that is as follows: The party to whom the land is conveyed or assured commences an action at law against the other, generally an action of covenant, by suing out a writ of precipe, called a writ of covenant, that the one shall convey the lands to the other, on the breach of which agreement the action is brought. The suit being thus commenced, then follows the licentia concordandi, or leave to compromise the suit. The concord, or agreement itself, after leave obtained by the court: this is usually an acknowledgment from the deforciant that the lands in question are the lands of the complainants. The note of the fine, which is only an abstract of the writ of covenant and the concord; naming the parties, the parcels of land, and the agreement. The foot of the fine, or the conclusion of it, which includes the whole matter, reciting the parties, day, year, and place, and before whom it was acknowledged or levied. See Cruise, Fines; Bacon, Abr. Fines and Recoveries; Comyns, Dig. Fine.

In Criminal Law. Pecuniary punishment imposed by a lawful tribunal upon a person convicted of crime or misdemeanor. See Shepp. Touchst. 2; Bacon, Abr. Fines and Amercements; 1 Bish. Cr. L. § 940. It may include a forfeiture or penalty recoverable in a civil action; Hanscomb v. Russell, 11 Gray (Mass.) 373; Atchison & N. R. Co. v. Baty, 6 Neb. 37, 29 Am. Rep. 356. A fine abates if unpaid at the death of the offender; U. S. v. Mitchell, 163 Fed. 1014.

The amount of the fine is frequently left to the discretion of the court, who ought to proportion the fine to the offence. To prevent the abuse of excessive fines, the constitution of the United States directs that "excessive bail shall not be required, nor excessive fines imposed." VIIIth Amendment; Cooley, Const. Lim. 377. This applies to national and not to state legislation; Pervear v. Massachusetts, 5 Wall. (U. S.) 480, 18 L. Ed. 608. The supreme court cannot, on habeas corpus, revise the sentence of an inferior court on the ground that the fine was excessive; In re Watkins, 7 Pet. (U. S.) 568, 8 L. Ed. 786.

The power to fine reposed in a court of last resort is not unlimited, but is limited by the obligation not to impose excessive fines; Standard Oil Co. of Indiana v. State of Missouri, 224 U. S. 271, 32 Sup. Ct. 406, 56 L. Ed. 760.

FINE AND RECOVERY ACT. The statute 3 & 4 Will. IV. c. 74. This act abolished fines and recoveries. 2 Sharsw. Bla. Com. 364, n.; 1 Steph. Com. 514. See FINE.

FINE CAPIENDO PRO TERRIS. An obsolete writ which lay for a person who, upon conviction by jury, had his lands and goods taken, and his body imprisoned, to be remitted his imprisonment, and have his lands and goods redelivered to him, on obtaining favor of a sum of money, etc. Reg. Orig. 142.

FINE FOR ALIENATION. A sum of money which a tenant by knight's service, or a tenant in capite by socage tenure, paid to his lord for permission to alienate his right in the estate he held to another, and by that means to substitute a new tenant for himself. 2 Bla. Com. 71, 89; De Peyster v. Michael, 6 N. Y. 467, 495, 57 Am. Dec. 470. These fines are now abolished.

FINE FOR ENDOWMENT. A fine anciently payable to the lord by the widow of a tenant without which she could not be endowed of her husband's lands. Abolished under Henry I., and by Magna Carta. Moz. & W.

FINE NON CAPIENDO PRO PULCHRE PLACITANDO. An obsolete writ to prohibit officers of court from taking fines for fair pleading.

FINE PRO REDISSEISINA CAPIENDO. An old writ which lay for the release of one imprisoned for a redisseisin, on payment of a reasonable fine. Reg. Orig. 222.

FINE ROLLS. See OBLATE ROLLS.

FINE SUR COGNIZANCE DE DROIT COME CEO QUE IL AD DE SON DONE. A fine upon acknowledgment of the right of the cognizee as that which he hath of the gift of the cognizor. By this the deforciant acknowledges in court a former feoffment or gift in possession to have been made by him to the plaintiff. 2 Bla. Com. 352; Cunningham. L. Dict.; Shepp. Touchst. c. 2; Com., Dig. Fine.

FINE SUR COGNIZANCE DE DROIT TANTUM. A fine upon acknowledgment of the right merely. Generally used to pass a reversionary interest which is in the cognizor. 2 Bla. Com. 351; Jacob, Law Dict.; Com., Dig.

FINE SUR CONCESSIT. A fine granted where the cognizor, in order to make an end of disputes, though he acknowledges no precedent right, yet grants to the consignee an estate de novo, usually for life or years, by way of a supposed composition. 2 Bla. Com. 353; Shepp. Touchst. c. 2.

FINE SUR DONE, GRANT ET RENDER. A double fine, comprehending the fine sur cognizance de droit come ceo and the fine sur concessit. It may be used to convey particular limitations of estates and to persons who are strangers or not named in the writ of covenant; whereas the fine sur cognizance de droit come ceo, etc., conveys nothing but an absolute estate, either of inheritance, or at least freehold. Salk. 340. In this last species of fines the cognizee, after the right is acknowledged to be in him, grants back again or renders to the cognizor, or perhaps to a stranger, some other estate in the premises. 2 Bla. Com. 353; Viner, Abr. Fine; Comyns, Dig. Fine; 1 Washb. R. P. 33.

FINE-FORCE. An absolute necessity or inevitable constraint. Old N. B. 78; Plowd. 94; 6 Co. 11; Cowell.

FINEM FACERE (Lat.). To make or pay a fine. Bracton 106; Skene.

FINES LE ROY. In Old English Law. A sum of money which any one is to pay the king for any contempt or offence; which fine any one that commits any trespass, or is convict that he falsely denies his own deed, or did anything in contempt of the law, shall pay to the king. Termes de la Ley; Cunningham, Law Dict.

FINGER PRINTS. See ANTHROPOMETRY.

FINIRE. In English Law. To fine, or pay a fine. Cowell. To end or finish a matter.

FINIS. End; conclusion; limit.

FINITIO. An ending; death as the end of life. Blount; Cowell.

FINIUM REGUNDORUM ACTIO. In Civil Law. An action for regulating boundaries. 1 Mackelvey, Civ. Law § 271.

FINORS. Those that purify gold and silver, and part them by fire and water from coarser metals; and therefore in the statute of Hen. VII. c. 2, they are also called "parters." Termes de la Ley.

FIRDFARE. In English Law. A summoning forth to a military expedition (indictio ad projectionem militarem). Spelman, Gloss.

FIRDSOCNE (Sax.). Exemption from military service. Spelman, Gloss.

FIRDWITE (Sax.). A mulct or penalty imposed on military tenants for their default in not appearing in arms or coming to an expedition. Cowell. A penalty imposed for murder committed in the army. Cowell.

FIRE. The effect of combustion. Webster, Dict.

The legal sense of the word is the same as the popular. 1 Pars. Marit. Law 231.

Where an insurance policy excluded liability for damages caused by explosions, unless fire ensues, a lighted match causing an explosion is not a fire; Mitchell v. Ins. Co., 183 U. S. 42, 22 Sup. Ct. 22, 46 L. Ed. 74; nor is a lighted lamp; United Life, Fire & Marine Ins. Co. v. Foote, 22 Ohio St. 340, 10 Am. Rep. 735; and to the same effect, Transatlantic Fire Ins. Co. v. Dorsey, 56 Md. 70, 40 Am. Rep. 403; Briggs v. Ins. Co., 53 N. Y. 446.

Fire is not a peril of the sea. In Scotch law, however, fire is an inevitable accident. Bell, Dict.

The ordinary meaning of the word as used in an insurance policy includes the idea of visible heat or light. Damage to wool by spontaneous combustion with smoke and great heat, but without any visible flame or glow, is held not to be fire. The "fire is always caused by combustion, but combustion does not always cause fire." Western Woolen Mill Co. v. Assurance Co., 139 Fed. 637, 72 C. C. A. 1.

When a fire becomes uncontrollable and dangerous to the public, the destruction of a house is justified for the protection of the neighborhood; for the maxim salus populi est suprema lex applies in such case; 11 Co. 13. See ACCIDENT; EMINENT DOMAIN; 3 Wms. Saund. 422 a, note 2; 3 Co. Litt. 57 a, n. 1; 1 Cruise, Dig. 151, 152; 1 Rolle, Abr. 1; Bacon, Abr. Action on the Case, F; 2 Lois des Bâtim. 124; 1 Term 310; 6 id. 489; Ambl. 619.

When real estate is let, and the tenant covenants to pay the rent during the term, unless there are proper exceptions to such covenants, and the premises are afterwards destroyed by fire during the term, the rent must be paid although there be no enjoyment; for the common rule prevails, res perit domino. The tenant, by the accident, loses his term; the landlord, the residence; Story, Eq. Jur. § 102; Woodf. L. & T. 408.

The owner of property may kindle and have a fire on his own premises for any lawful purpose, such as burning waste in husbandry, without liability for injury to the property of another, if it is done with due care as to time, manner, and circumstances, and with respect to casual fires, also having due regard to the conditions of weather, wind, and proximity of inflammable material; Thomas, Negl. 640; Webb, Poll. Torts 616, and note. Even in the extreme case of one who had been warned of the danger that his haystack would take fire and endanger others, the contention that the question should have been put to the jury whether he had acted bona fide, to the best of his judgment, and that the standard of ordinary prudence was too uncertain as a criterion, was unsuccessfully pressed, and the care of a prudent man was held to be the proper measure of duty; 3 Bing. N. C. 468.

Very early in England, the duty of every man to safely keep his own fire was a stringent "custom of the realm," i. e. at common law; Y. B. 2 Hen. IV. 18, pl. 5; and this, it is said, may be founded on ancient German custom, when a man carries fire more than nine feet from his hearth, only at his peril; Ll. Langob. cc. 147, 148 (A. D. 643); Poll. Torts 616. The rule applied as well to out-door fires, and in "a case grounded upon the common custom of the realm for negligently keeping his fire"; 1 Ld. Raym. 264; s. c. 1 Salk. 13. Liability for domestic fires begun accidentally and without accident is removed in England by stats. of Anne and Geo. III.; 11 Q. B. 347. The rule of modern times is affected by the increase of uses to which fire is applied, such as for mills, railroads, and the like, and in England the leading case of Rylands v. Fletcher, L. R. 3 H. L. 330 (which itself concerned a reservoir, but the application of which has passed far beyond the class of facts on which it was determined), laid down the rule "that the person who, for his own purposes, brings on his lands, and collects and keeps there, anything likely to do mischief if it escapes, must keep it in at his peril, and, if he does not do so, is prima facie answerable for all the damage which is the natural consequence of its escape." This principle was expressly applied to railroads; L. R. 3 Q. B. 733; and to an engine brought on a highway; 5 Q. B. Div. 597.

It may be safely asserted as a rule that "a man who negligently sets fire on his own land, and keeps it negligently, is liable to an action at common law for any injury done by the spreading or communication of the fire directly from his own land to the property of another, whether through the air or along the ground and whether he might or might not have reasonably anticipated the particular manner and direction in which it is actually communicated;" Higgins v. Dewey, 107 Mass. 494, 90 Am. Rep. 63; Hays v. Miller, 70 N. Y. 112; Krippner v. Biebl, 28 Minn. 139, 9 N. W. 671; Jespersion v. Phillips, 46 Minn. 147, 48 N. W. 770; Needham v. King, 95 Mich. 303, 54 N. W. 891; Cleland v. Thornton, 43 Cal. 437. Where one negligently allows fire to escape from his premises and in an action for damages, for loss resulting therefrom, asserts that a sudden shift of the wind caused the fire to spread, he must show that it was extraordinary; Mahaffey v. Lumber Co., 61 W. Va. 571, 56 S. E. 893, 8 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1263. One accidentally but not negligently firing his house is not liable for the spread of the fire by wind; Pennsylvania Co. v. Whitlock, 99 Ind. 16, 50 Am. Rep. 71; Beckham v. Ry. Co., 127 Ga. 550, 56 S. E. 638, 12 L. R. A. (N. S.) 476. The spreading of a fire does not raise a presumption of negligence; Catron v. Nichols, 81 Mo. 80, 51 Am. Rep. 222; if there was none in starting it; Merchants' Wharfb-boat Ass'n v. Wm. Wood & Co., 64 Miss. 661, 2 South. 76, 60 Am. Rep. 76; Read v. R. Co., 44 N. J. L. 280. As to setting fire and restraining it, the rule is that ordinary prudence, honest motives, in the one, and due diligence as to the other, exempt one from liability; Hanlon v. Ingram, 3 Ia. 81; and the burden of proof is on the plaintiff; Bachelor v. Heagan, 18 Me. 32.

The owner of a threshing machine is bound to use the safest spark arrester and not merely one in common use; Martin v. McCrary, 115 Tenn. 316, 89 S. W. 324, 1 L. R. A. (N. S.) 530.

The right to operate a railroad includes the use of fire in locomotives; Philadelphia & R. Co. v. Schultz, 93 Pa. 341; Babcock v. R. Co., 140 N. Y. 308, 35 N. E. 596; and, if every reasonable precaution has been observed to prevent injury, the railroad company will not be liable; Baltimore & S. R. Co. v. Woodruff, 4 Md. 242, 59 Am. Dec. 72; yet it must show the absence of negligence on its part, at least so far as concerns safety of construction and care in the operation of its locomotives, and the freedom of the track from combustibles (see infra); Webb, Poll. Torts 561, n.; Eddy v. Lafayette, 49 Fed. 807, 1 C. C. A. 441; Jefferis v. R. Co., 3 Houst. (Del.) 447; Edrington v. Ry. Co., 41 La. Ann. 96, 6 South. 19; *Hagan v. R. Dec. 656; in other states the plaintiff must fix upon defendant both the origin of the fire, and negligence in one of the points referred to; Garrett v. Ry. Co., 36 Ia. 121; Indianapolis & C. R. Co. v. Paramore, 31 Ind. 143; Flinn v. R. Co., 142 N. Y. 11, 36 N. E. 1046; Grand Trunk R. Co. v. Richardson, 91 U. S. 454, 23 L. Ed. 356. But the owner is, in the absence of statute, held to the duty of ordinary care, and his negligence will defeat recovery; Marquette, H. & O. R. Co. v. Spear, 44 Mich. 169, 6 N. W. 202, 38 Am. Rep. 242; or if the spreading of the fire was due to the negligence of the servants of the owner there is no liability; Illinois Cent. R. Co. v. McKay, 69 Miss. 139, 12 South. 447. It has been held that the fact that fire has been communicated by a passing locomotive is prima facie evidence of negligence; Wise v. R. Co., 85 Mo. 178; Union Pac. R. Co. v. Keller, 36 Neb. 189, 54 N. W. 420; Mobile & O. R. Co. v. Gray, 62 Miss. 383; Wabash R. Co. v. Smith, 42 Ill. App. 527; Niskern v. R. Co., 22 Fed. 811. See 11 L. R. A. 506, note. The company must exercise as great a degree of care to protect the public from injury by fire as is required in favor of its patrons; Babcock v. R. Co., 67 Hun (N. Y.) 469, 22 N. Y. Supp. 449; and the failure to provide the best appliances to prevent injury to property by fire is want of ordinary care; Watt v. R. Co., 23 Nev. 154, 44 Pac. 423, 46 Pac. 52, 726, 62 Am. W. 846, where it was held that the rule is that the company is only bound to exercise due care with respect to providing the best appliances. See Babcock v. R. Co., 140 N. Y. 308, 35 N. E. 596; Flinn v. R. Co., 142 N. Y. 11, 36 N. E. 1046; where it was held that compliance with a statute requiring a guard against the emission of sparks, except during certain months, does not exempt the company from the exercise of that care to which they are bound in law, to avoid injuring the property of their neighbor; T. & O. C. Ry. Co. v. Wickenden, 11 Ohio Cir. Ct. 378.

A question, the settlement of which has caused much litigation, was whether a railroad company was liable for damage to property not adjoining the track, nor set on fire directly from the locomotive, but by the spreading of the fire from the property first ignited. The rule now firmly established is that the company is liable for such injury naturally and by the ordinary course of events resulting from the fire started by the locomotive; Hooksett v. R. R., 38 N. H. 242; Martin v. R. Co., 62 Conn. 331, 25 Atl. 239; Pratt v. R. Co., 42 Me. 579; Perley v. R. Co., 98 Mass. 414, 96 Am. Dec. 645; even where the property was at a considerable distance from the track; C. P. 98; s. c. 6 id. 14; Hoyt v. Jeffers, 30 Mich. 181; or if several owners intervene; Hart v. Western R. Corp., 13 Metc. (Mass.) 99, 46 Am. Dec. 719; Mahaffey v. Lumber Co., 61 W. Va. 571, 56 S. E. 893, 8 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1263.

The stubborn resistance to the establishment of this rule and its extended discussion by the courts of so many jurisdictions is accounted for by the fact that early decisions in New York and Pennsylvania were made the basis of strong contention against it in every state when the question first arose. Ryan v. N. Y. C. R. Co., 35 N. Y. 210, 91 Am. Dec. 49, and Pennsylvania R. Co. v. Kerr, 62 Pa. 353, 1 Am. Rep. 431, where the cases sustained the position that where the fire communicated from the sparks to a house near the track, and thence extended to another at a distance, the company was not liable for the loss of the latter, notwithstanding its negligence in allowing the sparks to escape. In the New York case it was determined that the negligence was too remote, and the injury not the natural and probable result; but later in the same court, in an action against a railroad company for fire, resulting from the ignition of a tie by coal from a locomotive, an effort was made to distinguish the case, and it was held that the question of proximate cause was properly left to the jury; Webb v. R. Co., 49 N. Y. 420, 10 Am. Rep. 389. It was further shaken (usually upon the idea of distinguishing it), in Lowery v. Ry. Co., 99 N. Y. 158, 1 N. E. 608, 52 Am. Rep. 12; and its weight as authority practically ended by O'Neill v. Ry. Co., 115 N. Y. 579, 22 N. E. 217, 5 L. R. A. 591; and Read v. Nichols, 118 N. Y. 224, 23 N. E. 468, 7 L. R. A. 130.

The Pennsylvania case was also "distinguished" in a case in which the same court held that where sparks from an engine fired a railroad tie and it resulted in burning two fields and fences, the proximity of the cause is a question for the jury, who must determine whether the facts constituted a continuous succession of events so linked as to be a natural whole, or whether the chain is so broken as to become independent, and the final result cannot be said to be the natural and probable consequence of the negligence of the defendants, and that it might and ought to have been foreseen under the circumstances; Pennsylvania R. Co. v. Hope, 80 Pa. 373, 21 Am. Rep. 100; but Pa. R. Co. v. Kerr was expressly approved and followed in a later case in which damage by a fire, spread by burning oil carried by a running stream, was held too remote, and the stream was considered to be an intervening agent; in this case the court said that the facts were ascertained and there was nothing to put to the jury, and on this theory it was distinguished from the case in 80 Pa. This case had what the chancellor of New Jersey termed substantially its counterpart in that state, in a claim for damages against a receiver operating a railroad, and strong disapproval of the Pennsylvania case and the earlier case in New York was expressed. The stream was considered similar to other material forces, and a natural link in the chain of causation, and the receiver was held liable, the rule as applied being thus stated: "When a fire originates in the negligence of a defendant, and is carried by a material force, whether it be the wind, the law of gravitation, combustible matter existing in a state of nature, or other means, to the plaintiff's property and destroys it, and it appears that no object intervened between the point where the fire started and the injury, which would have prevented the injury, if due care had been taken, the defendant is legally answerable for the loss;" Kuhn v. Jewett, 32 N. J. Eq. 647. The only point which suggested difficulty in applying to this class of cases the general doctrine of liability for the result of negligence is brought out with distinctness in the different views taken by the Pennsylvania and New Jersey courts of cases precisely similar as to the facts, and that difference may be considered as concerning rather the doctrine of proximate cause than as having special relation to fires from locomotives.

The cases of Ryan v. R. Co., 35 N. Y. 214, 91 Am. Dec. 49, and Pennsylvania R. Co. v. Kerr, 62 Pa. 353, 1 Am. Rep. 431, are said to "stand alone" and to be "in conflict with every English or American case as yet reported"; Fent v. Ry. Co., 59 Ill. 349, 14 Am. Rep. 13; "much shaken" and "each qualified and explained in its own jurisdiction, by later decisions so as to take from its weight"; Martin v. R. Co., 62 Conn. 331, 25 Atl. 239; and finally the United States supreme court, speaking through a Pennsylvania justice says of the two cases: "Those cases have been the subject of much criticism since they were decided; and it may, perhaps, be doubted whether they have always been understood. If they were intended to assert the doctrine that when a building has been set on fire through the negligence of a party, and a second building has been fired from the first, it is a conclusion of law that the owner of the second has no recourse to the negligent wrong-doer, they have not been accepted as authority for such doctrine, even in the states where the decisions were made." Strong, J., in Milwaukee & St. P. Ry. Co. v. Kellogg, 94 U. S. 469, 474, 24 L. Ed. 256, citing Webb v. R. Co., 49 N. Y. 420, 10 Am. Rep. 389, and Pennsylvania R. Co. v. Hope, 80 Pa. 373, 21 Am. Rep. 100; and cases contra of other states.

The result is to settle the rule as stated that, whether the fire is traceable to its negligence directly or indirectly, the company is liable when the fire started by its locomotive was the proximate cause of the injury complained of, and this applies as well to the class of cases hereafter noted in this title. The application of the doctrine is illustrated by a case which held that when the fire negligently set was carried by moderately high wind, though not unusual, the wind was not the proximate cause, and the company was liable; Union Pac. Ry. Co. v. McCollum, 2 Kan. App. 319, 43 Pac. 97. When the fire is communicated indirectly, the question as to what is the proximate cause of the injury is ordinarily not one of science or of legal knowledge, but of fact for the jury to determine, in view of the accompanying circumstances; Milwaukee & St. P. Ry. Co. v. Kellogg, 94 U. S. 469, 24 L. Ed. 256; Fent v. Ry. Co., 59 Ill. 349, 14 Am. Rep. 13; Toledo, W. & W. Ry. Co. v. Muthersbaugh, 71 Ill. 572; Annapolis & E. R. Co. v. Gantt, 39 Md. 115; Perry v. R. Co., 50 Cal. 578; Clemens v. R. Co., 53 Mo. 366, 14 Am. Rep. 460; Atchison, T. & S. F. R. Co. v. Bales, 16 Kan. 252; and, notwithstanding the earlier cases discussed supra, Trace v. R. Co., 143 N. Y. 182, 38 N. E. 102; and Lehigh Val. R. Co. v. McKeen, 90 Pa. 122, 35 Am. Rep. 644.

A railroad company has the right to keep its right of way free from combustibles by burning off grass, etc., but in such case it is bound at its peril to keep such fire within bounds; Indiana, B. & W. Ry. Co. v. Overman, 110 Ind. 538, 10 N. E. 575. See 11 L. R. A. 506, note.

Indeed, though not an insurer, the railroad company must keep its track reasonably clear of such danger; Briant v. R. Co., 104 Mich. 307, 62 N. W. 365; Gulf, C. & S. F. Ry. Co. v. Rowland (Tex.), 23 S. W. 421; St. Johns & H. R. Co. v. Ransom, 33 Fla. 406, 14 South. 892; Pierce v. R. Co., 105 Mass. 199 (but see Union Pac. Ry. Co. v. Gilland, 4 Wyo. 395, 34 Pac. 953); and is liable for damages from fire, caused by its negligence with respect to a fire which spreads from the track; Black v. R. Co., 115 N. C. 667, 20 S. E. 713, 909; and the care exercised in constructing and operating the engine is no defence; Toledo, P. & W. R. Co. v. Endres, 57 Ill. App. 69; Stacy v. R. Co., 85 Wis. 225, 54 N. W. 779; New York, P. & N. R. Co. v. Thomas, 92 Va. 606, 24 S. E. 264; nor is the diligence of the company in attempting to quench the fire; Austin v. R. Co., 93 Wis. 496, 67 N. W. 1129; it is for the jury to determine the question of negligence or care with respect to allowing weeds to grow on the right of way; Richmond & D. R. Co. v. Medley, 75 Va. 499, 40 Am. Rep. 734; Gibbons v. R. Co., 58 Wis. 335, 17 N. W. 132; or the time and manner of setting and guarding the fire; Cole v. R. Co., 105 Mich. 549, 63 N. W. 647; or whether fire was started by sparks from a locomotive; Marande v. R. Co., 184 U. S. 173, 22 Sup. Ct. 340, 46 L. Ed. 487; the company must exercise ordinary care which is proportioned to, and measured by, the amount of danger, and is liable for the want of it; Martin v. R. Co., 87 Tex. 117, 26 S. W. 1052; such fire if started for a lawful purpose is itself no evidence of negligence, which must be proved by the person complaining; Mattoon v. R. Co., 6 S. D. 301, 60 N. W. 69; nor is unlawful speed of a train unless the fire would not otherwise have occurred; Bennett v. R. Co., 11 Tex. Civ. App. 423, 32 S. W. 834.

It has been held that when a fire is caused by the sparks of a locomotive, communicating with dried grass which a railroad company has permitted to accumulate in the line of its track, and thence spreading to the property of an adjacent land-owner, it is a question for a jury whether the company was guilty of negligence, irrespective of any question as to negligence or omission of duty on the part of the land-owner; Kellogg v. R. Co., 26 Wis. 223, 7 Am. Rep. 69; Flynn v. R. Co., 40 Cal. 14, 6 Am. Rep. 695; contra, Chicago & N. W. R. Co. v. Simonson, 54 Ill. 504, 5 Am. Rep. 155; Snyder v. R. Co., 11 W. Va. 14; Mississippi Home Ins. Co. v. R. Co., 70 Miss. 119, 12 South. 156. Direct evidence of the accumulation of such inflammable material was held sufficient evidence of defendant's liability; Siblerud v. R. Co., 29 Minn. 58, 11 N. W. 146; Troxler v. R. Co., 74 N. C. 377; Ohio & M. R. Co. v. Porter, 92 Ill. 437; but allowing such accumulation is not negligence per se, unless such as a prudent man having regard to the same hazard would not permit; Kesee v. R. Co., 30 Ia. 78, 6 Am. Rep. 643; Louisville, N. A. & C. R. Co. v. Stevens, 87 Ind. 198; and there must be a connection between the negligence and the injury and no intervening cause (such as in this case a high wind carrying a burning brand over a ridge to a marsh adjoining plaintiff's); Marvin v. Ry. Co., 79 Wis. 140, 47 N. W. 1123, 11 L. R. A. 506. As to how far a properly equipped locomotive will set fire by sparks is a proper subject for expert evidence; Kansas City, F. S. & M. R. Co. v. Blaker, 68 Kan. 244, 75 Pac. 71, 64 L. R. A. 81, 1 Ann. Cas. 883; Babbitt v. R. Co., 108 App. Div. 74, 95 N. Y. Supp. 429.

Generally the accumulation of inflammable material near the track by the plaintiff is contributory negligence; Omaha Fair & Exposition Ass'n v. R. Co., 42 Neb. 105, 60 N. W. 330; T. & P. Ry. Co. v. Tankersley, 63 Tex. 57; but it is not so to permit the natural growth of stubble and grass to remain; Patton v. Ry. Co., 87 Mo. 117, 56 Am. Rep. 446; nor to deposit wood near the track under a contract with the company; Pittsburgh, C. & St. L. R. Co. v. Nelson, 51 Ind. 150; but if the defendant permits inflammable rubbish to accumulate and remain on its right of way it is negligence; Hawley v. Ry. Co., 49 Or. 509, 90 Pac. 1106, 12 L. R. A. (N. S.) 526; erecting a wooden building near a railroad track is not negligence per se; Cincinnati, N. O. & T. P. R. Co. v. Barker, 94 Ky. 71, 21 S. W. 347; but the owner assumes the risks incident thereto, and cannot recover if it is burned without fault on the part of the company; Briant v. R. Co., 104 Mich. 307, 62 N. W. 365. The storage of cotton, on a platform for that purpose, near the depot of a railroad company, is not an assumption of risk by its owner, if the company is using an engine with a defective spark arrester; Texas & P. Ry. Co. v. Watson, 190 U. S. 287, 23 Sup. Ct. 681, 47 L. Ed. 1057, affirming id., 112 Fed. 402, 50 C. C. A. 230.

In Indiana a plaintiff must not only aver freedom from fault but absence on his part of contributory negligence; Wabash, St. L. & P. Ry. Co. v. Johnson, 96 Ind. 40; id., 96 Ind. 62. Formerly the Illinois negligence rule was: Where fire is ignited on the right of way of a railroad, by reason of an accumulation of grass left there, and communicated to the adjoining field by the negligence of the owner in not keeping it free from combustible materials, the owner cannot recover for the injury thereby occasioned, unless the negligence of the company is greater than his own; Chicago & N. W. Ry. Co. v. Simonson, 54 Ill. 504, 5 Am. Rep. 155. But later cases in that state overrule this doctrine, and a statute provides that it shall not be considered negligence on the part of the owner of property, injured by fire originating from the operation of a railroad, that he uses the same in the manner it would have been used had no railroad passed through or near the property so injured; American Strawboard Co. v. R. Co., 177 Ill. 513, 53 N. E. 97; Cleveland, C. & St. L. Ry. Co. v. Stephens, 173 Ill. 430, 51 N. E. 69; Cleveland, C. & St. L. Ry. Co. v. Tate, 104 Ill. App. 615.

In many states statutes have been passed making railroad companies absolutely liable for damage caused by fires from locomotives, and such statutes have been almost uniformly held to be constitutional; Pierce v. R. Co., 105 Mass. 199; Bassett v. R. Co., 145 Mass. 129, 13 N. E. 370, 1 Am. St. Rep. 443; Chapman v. R. R. Co., 37 Me. 92; Thatcher v. R. Co., 85 Me. 502, 27 Atl. 519; Grissell v. R. Co., 54 Conn. 447, 9 Atl. 137, 1 Am. St. Rep. 138. Such a statute does not violate the constitution of the United States; St. Louis & S. F. Ry. Co. v. Mathews, 165 U. S. 1, 17 Sup. Ct. 243, 41 L. Ed. 611; Atchison, T. & S. F. R. Co. v. Matthews, 174 U. S. 96, 19 Sup. Ct. 609, 43 L. Ed. 909. Such statutes apply to property not adjoining the right of way, if set on fire by intervening property ignited by the locomotive; Hunter v. R. R. Co., 41 S. C. 86, 19 S. E. 197; Union Pac. Ry. Co. v. Arthur, 2 Colo. App. 159, 29 Pac. 1031; and are not void as interfering with the federal jurisdiction over interstate commerce; Smith v. R. R., 63 N. H. 25; McCandless v. R. Co., 38 S. C. 103, 16 S. E. 429, 18 L. R. A. 440. Under such a statute it was held that the company was prima facie liable; Small v. R. Co., 50 Ia. 340; and that contributory negligence on the part of the plaintiff is no defense to such an action; West v. Ry. Co., 77 Ia. 654, 35 N. W. 479, 42 N. W. 512; to the same effect; Mathews v. Ry. Co., 121 Mo. 298, 24 S. W. 591, 25 L. R. A. 161, affirmed St. Louis & S. F. Ry. Co. v. Mathews, 165 U. S. 1, 17 Sup. Ct. 243, 41 L. Ed. 611. Where, however, a railroad company leased land on its right of way to a cold storage company, stipulating that it would not be liable for fires, it was held such a contract was not against public policy, though in contravention of the state statute; Hartford Fire Ins. Co. v. Ry. Co., 175 U. S. 91, 20 Sup. Ct. 33, 44 L. Ed. 84; and the company is liable for the spreading of the fire even when the person whose property was first set on fire requested the railroad men to let it burn, as he wished to burn up the bogs; Simmonds v. R. Co., 52 Conn. 264, 52 Am. Rep. 587.

As to liability for damages from fires by reason of the failure to furnish water to extinguish them, see WATER COMPANIES.

See 1 L. R. A. 625, note; 21 id. 255, note; NEGLIGENCE; RAILROAD.

As to the right of a city to order the destruction of property to prevent the spread of fire, see EMINENT DOMAIN.

FIRE AND SWORD. Letters of fire and sword were the ancient means for dispossessing a tenant who retained possession contrary to the order of the judge and diligence of the law. They were directed to the sheriff, and ordered him to call the assistance of the county to dispossess the tenant. Bell, Dict.; Erskine, Inst. lib. iv. tit. 3, § 17.

FIRE-ARM. An instrument used in the propulsion of shot, shell, or bullets by the action of gunpowder exploded within it.

In 1637 a royal charter was granted to the gun-makers of London empowering them to search for, prove, and mark hand guns, pistols, etc., and by the statutes of 1818 and 1855 the proving of all fire-arms was made compulsory. These statutes have been superseded by the gun-barrel proof act 31 and 32 Vict., which regulates the duties and powers of the London and Birmingham proof-houses, and which makes the forging or counterfeiting of proof-marks or stamps, and the selling, or having in possession for the purpose of sale, of fire-arms bearing such forged or counterfeited mark or stamp, a misdemeanor.

As to what constitutes a fire-arm, the decisions have been somewhat conflicting. A pistol so dilapidated that it could not be discharged by the trigger has been held to be a fire-arm and a deadly weapon; Atwood v. State, 53 Ala. 508; so where the mainspring was so disabled as not to allow it to be discharged in the regular way; Williams v. State, 61 Ga. 417, 34 Am. Rep. 102; but not so where the weapon could not be discharged by a cap on the tube; Evins v. State, 46 Ala. 88. The separate parts of a pistol found on the offender's person were held a fire-arm;

Hutchinson v. State, 62 Ala. 3, 34 Am. Rep. 1. See ARMS; WEAPON.

FIRE DEPARTMENT. A city is not liable to an employee of the fire department for the negligence of those in charge of that department in furnishing vicious horses, where such employee without knowledge of such viciousness is injured by the horse; Lynch v. City of North Yakima, 37 Wash. 657, 80 Pac. 79, 12 L. R. A. (N. S.) 261; nor for injuries to an engineer of a fire engine due to the gross negligence and incompetency of the driver; Shanewerk v. City of Ft. Worth, 11 Tex. Civ. App. 271, 32 S. W. 918; nor in such a case for injury to one on the street; Higgins v. Superior, 134 Wis. 264, 114 N. W. 490, 13 L. R. A. (N. S.) 994; nor for injuries to an employee caused by negligence in permitting the hose reel on which he was required to ride to get out of repair; Peterson v. Wilmington, 130 N. C. 76, 40 S. E. 853, 56 L. R. A. 959; nor for the negligence of an employee of the department who, in recklessly moving scales used in weighing coal, injured the plaintiff; Manske v. Milwaukee, 123 Wis. 172, 101 N. W. 377; or of one who caused injuries whilst practicing with the water tower in the public streets; Frederick v. Columbus, 58 Ohio St. 538, 51 N. E. 35; or by negligently leaving a ladder truck standing so that a ladder projected across the sidewalk; Dodge v. Granger, 17 R. I. 664, 24 Atl. 100, 15 L. R. A. 781, 33 Am. St. Rep. 901; or for frightening a horse by negligently ringing a bell; Saunders v. Ft. Madison, 111 Ia. 102, 82 N. W. 428; or for damaging a stock of goods by water negligently thrown by firemen; Davis v. City of Lebanon, 108 Ky. 688, 57 S. W. 471.

FIRE-ESCAPE. An apparatus constructed to afford a safe and convenient method of escape from a burning building.

Regulations have been enacted in most of the states, often by municipal ordinances, providing that all factories, hotels, schools, buildings, theatres, hospitals, public buildings, and flat or tenement houses shall be equipped with safe and suitable means of escape in case of fire. Such regulations are of a highly penal character, and are to be strictly construed; Schott v. Harvey, 105 Pa. 222, 51 Am. Rep. 201; Keely v. O'Conner, 106 Pa. 321; Maker v. Mill & Power Co., 15 R. I. 112, 23 Atl. 63. They are not of such a character as to interfere with the use and enjoyment of private property; Fire Department of New York v. Chapman, 10 Daly (N. Y.) 377. They are the subject of a proper police regulation; Roumfort Co. v. Delaney, 230 Pa. 374, 79 Atl. 653.

The original duty to provide fire-escapes rests with the owner or proprietor; Willy v. Mulledy, 78 N. Y. 310, 34 Am. Rep. 536; and the fact that he has erected them in compliance with the statute will not exempt him from providing additional ones when ordered so to do; Fire Department of New York v. Chapman, 10 Daly (N. Y.) 377; but in some states it has been held that when the owner has leased his premises the tenant in actual occupancy and possession, who places his operatives in a position of danger and enjoys the benefit of their services, becomes responsible under the law; Schott v. Harvey, 105 Pa. 222, 51 Am. Rep. 201; Keely v. O'Conner, 106 Pa. 321; Lee v. Smith, 42 Ohio St. 458, 51 Am. Rep. 839; (contra, Abreyan v. Bank, 16 N. Y. St. Rep. 750.) But these cases seem to place the question of liability more on the ground of the relation of master and servant, it being held that as an absolute duty is laid upon the owner by statute, a servant sustaining an injury by breach of such duty may maintain an action; McAlpin v. Powell, 70 N. Y. 126, 26 Am. Rep. 555; Williams v. Tripp, 11 R. I. 451. A building becomes a public nuisance if not supplied with such appliances as required by statute; 16 Abb. 195. And the mere relation of landlord and tenant will not bar the action; Willy v. Mulledy, 78 N. Y. 310, 34 Am. Rep. 536. It is not the duty of the tenant to search for defects and report them to the owner; id.; nor will the owner be permitted to wait until he is officially directed to provide fire-escapes; id.; McLaughlin v. Armfield, 58 Hun 376, 12 N. Y. Supp. 164; although no such obligation existed at common law; Pauley v. Lantern Co., 131 N. Y. 90, 29 N. E. 999, 15 L. R. A. 194; Jones v. Granite Mills, 126 Mass. 84, 30 Am. Rep. 661.

They must be reasonably secure, although they need not be the best that can be devised; Pauley v. Lantern Co., 131 N. Y. 90, 29 N. E. 999, 15 L. R. A. 194; and the number required depends on the size of the building, the number of employees, and the inflammable character of the materials there used; Pauley v. Lantern Co., 61 Hun 254, 16 N. Y. Supp. 820; having erected a reasonably safe fire-escape, the owner is not responsible if a fire cuts off access to it; Keely v. O'Conner, 106 Pa. 321. See Thomas, Negl. 772; Ray, Neg. Imp. Dut. 660; NEGLIGENCE.

FIRE INSURANCE. See INSURANCE.

FIRE ORDEAL. See ORDEAL.

FIRE POLICY. See INSURANCE; POLICY.

FIRE-PROOF. Incombustible; not in danger from the action of fire.

A statement that a building is fire-proof necessarily excludes the idea that it is of wood, and necessarily implies that it is constructed of some substance fitted for the erection of fire-proof buildings. The characterization of one portion of a building as fire-proof suggests a comparison with other portions of the same building, and warrants the conclusion that the specified portion is different from the remainder; Hickey v. Morrell, 102 N. Y. 459, 7 N. E. 321, 55 Am. Rep. 824.

In an insurance policy, a condition that books be kept in a fire-proof safe is complied with if the safe be of the kind commonly regarded as fire-proof; Knoxville Fire Ins. Co. v. Hird, 4 Tex. Civ. App. 82, 23 S. W. 393. The insured does not by this clause warrant his safe to preserve the books; id. Such a clause, commonly called the iron-safe clause, is a warranty the breach of which avoids the policy; Standard Fire Ins. Co. of Kansas City v. Willock (Tex.) 29 S. W. 218; Home Ins. Co. of New Orleans v. Cary, 10 Tex. Civ. App. 300, 31 S. W. 321. See INSURANCE.

FIRE RAISING. In Scotch Law. The wilfully setting on fire buildings, growing or stored cereals, growing wood, or coalheughs. Ersk. Pr. 577. See ARSON.

FIRE-WORKS. A contrivance of inflammable and explosive materials combined of various proportions for the purpose of producing in combustion beautiful or amusing scenic effects, or to be used as a night signal on land or sea, or for various purposes in war. Cent. Dict.

Percussion caps for signalling railway trains are held to be explosive preparations, although the court considered they were not "fireworks" as the latter term is known to commerce; 3 B. & S. 128. Under a clause in an insurance policy forbidding the keeping of gunpowder, fireworks are not prohibited; Tischler v. Ins. Co., 66 Cal. 178, 4 Pac. 1169. Where a display of fireworks was made by private persons, under a permit given by the mayor, the city was held liable for injuries on the ground that it consented to a nuisance; Speir v. City of Brooklyn, 139 N. Y. 6, 34 N. E. 727, 21 L. R. A. 641, 36 Am. St. Rep. 664; followed Landau v. City of New York, 180 N. Y. 48, 72 N. E. 631, 105 Am. St. Rep. 709. The liability of the town for such injuries has been denied, however, on the ground that the act was a simple violation of an ordinance; Ball v. Town of Woodbine, 61 Ia. 83, 15 N. W. 846, 47 Am. Rep. 805; Aron v. City of Wausau, 98 Wis. 592, 74 N. W. 354, 40 L. R. A. 733; and a borough would not be liable for the negligence of its police officers in permitting unlawful acts; Borough of Norristown v. Fitzpatrick, 94 Pa. 121, 39 Am. Rep. 771; Morehead Banking Co. v. Morehead, 116 N. C. 413, 21 S. E. 191; Bartlett v. Town of Clarksburg, 45 W. Va. 393, 31 S. E. 918, 43 L. R. A. 295, 72 Am. St. Rep. 817.

It is not contributory negligence to be present at exhibitions of fireworks; Mullins v. Blaise, 37 La. Ann. 92; Bradley v. Andrews, 51 Vt. 530; contra, Frost v. Josselyn, 180 Mass. 389, 62 N. E. 469.

See INSURANCE; RISKS AND PERILS; CAUSA PROXIMA NON REMOTA SPECTATUR.

FIREBOTE. An allowance of wood or estovers to maintain competent firing for the tenant. A sufficient allowance of wood to burn in a house. 1 Washb. R. P. 99. Tenant for life or years is entitled to it; 2 Bla. Com. 35. Cutting more than is needed for present use is waste; 3 Dane, Abr. 238; Sackett v. Sackett, 8 Pick. (Mass.) 312; Cro. Eliz. 593; 7 Bingh. 640. The rules in England and in this country are different in relation to the kind of trees which the tenant may cut; Padelford v. Padelford, 7 Pick. (Mass.) 152; Jackson v. Brownson, 7 Johns. (N. Y.) 227, 5 Am. Dec. 258; Kidd v. Dennison, 6 Barb. (N. Y.) 9; Morehouse v. Cothel, 22 N. J. L. 521; Crockett v. Crockett, 2 Ohio St. 180; McCullough v. Irvine's Ex'rs, 13 Pa. 438; 3 Leon. 16.

FIRKIN. A measure of capacity, equal to nine gallons. The word firkin is also used to designate a weight, used for butter and cheese, of fifty-six pounds avoirdupois.

FIRLOT. A Scotch measure of capacity containing two gallons and a pint. Spelman.

FIRM. The persons composing a partnership, taken collectively.

The name or title under which the members of a partnership transact business.

The word is used as synonymous with partnership. The words "house," "concern," and "company" are also used in the same sense. This name is in point of law conventional, and applicable only to the persons who, on each particular occasion when the name is used, are members of the firm. A firm is usually described, in legal proceedings, as certain persons trading or carrying on business under and using the name, style, and firm of, etc. See 9 Q. B. 361; 9 M. & W. 347; 1 Chitty, Bailm. 49.

As to the nature and characteristics of firms and firm names and the law of the subject, see PARTNERSHIP.

FIRM NAME. The name or title of a firm in business. See PARTNERSHIP.

FIRMA (L. Lat.). A farm or rent reserved on letting lands, anciently frequently reserved in provisions. Spelman, Gloss.; Cunningham, Law Dict.

A banquet; supper; provisions for the table. Du Cange.

A tribute or custom paid towards entertaining the king for one night. Domesday; Cowell.

A rent reserved to be paid in money, called then alba firma (white rents, money rents). Spelman, Gloss.

A lease. A letting. Ad firmam tradidi (I have farm let). Spelman, Gloss.

A messuage with the house, garden, or lands, etc., connected therewith. Co. Litt. 5 a; Shepp. Touchst. 93. See FARM.

FIRMA BURGI. The right, in mediæval days, to take the profits of a borough, paying for them a fixed sum to the crown or other lord of the borough. 2 Holdsw. Hist. E. L. 276.

FIRMA FEODI (L. Lat.). Fee-farm. See FEODI-FIRMA.

FIRMAN. A passport granted by the Great Mogul to captains of foreign vessels to trade within the territories over which he has jurisdiction; a permit.

FIRMARATIO. The right of a tenant to his lands and tenements. Cowell.

FIRMARIUS (L. Lat.). A fermor. A lessee of a term. Firmarii comprehend all such as hold by lease for life or lives or for year, by deed or without deed. Co. 2d Inst. 144, 145; 1 Washb. R. P. 107; Sackett v. Sackett, 8 Pick. (Mass.) 312; 7 Ad. & E. 637.

FIRMITAS. In English Law. An assurance of some privilege, by deed or charter.

FIRMLY. Where a statute requires an affidavit that an appellant from an award of a board of arbitrators "firmly believes injustice has been done," it is not sufficient to express belief, omitting the word firmly. The word is a strong expression intended to put the affiant on his guard. It cannot be dispensed with without substituting something equal to it in substance; as to what shall be so considered, there may be liberal construction. Verily is as strong a word as firmly, and is sufficient; Thompson v. White, 4 S. & R. (Pa.) 135.

FIRMURA. Liberty to scour and repair a mill-dam, and carry away the soil, etc. Blount.

FIRST. In a will the word "first" may not import precedence of one bequest over another. Everett v. Carr, 59 Me. 330; Swasey v. American Bible Society, 57 Me. 523.

FIRST-CLASS. Occupying the highest standing in a particular classification. In a contract for "first-class" work, it is for the jury to decide as to whether the terms were substantially complied with; Boughton v. Smith, 67 Hun 652, 22 N. Y. Supp. 148. A stipulation in a contract that the title of the vendor shall be first-class means simply that it shall be marketable; Vought v. Williams, 120 N. Y. 253, 24 N. E. 195, 8 L. R. A. 591, 17 Am. St. Rep. 634.

FIRST-CLASS MATTER. Matter received at the United States post-offices, in writing or sealed against inspection.

FIRST-CLASS MISDEMEANANT. Under the Prisons Act (28 & 29 Vict. c. 126, s. 67) prisoners in the county, city, and borough prisons convicted of misdemeanor and not sentenced to hard labor, are divided into two classes, one of which is called the first division; and it is in the discretion of the court to order that such a prisoner be treated as a misdemeanant of the first division, usually called "first-class misdemeanor," and as such not to be deemed a criminal prisoner, i. e. a prisoner convicted of a crime.

FIRST FRUITS. The first year's whole profits of the spiritual preferments. There were three valuations (valor beneficiorum) at different times, according to which these first fruits were estimated, made in 1253, 1288, and 1318. A final valuation was made by the 26 Hen. VIII. c. 3.

They now form a perpetual fund, called Queen Anne's bounty, the income of which is used for the augmentation of poor livings. 1 Sharsw. Bla. Com. 284, and notes; 2 Burn, Eccl. Law 260.

FIRST IMPRESSION (Lat. primæ impressionis). First examination. First presentation to a court for examination or decision. A cause which presents a new question for the first time, and for which, consequently, there is no precedent applicable in all respects, is said to be a case of the first impression. Austin, Jur. sect. xxv. ad fin. See JUDGE-MADE LAW.

FIRST INSTANCE. See COURT OF FIRST INSTANCE.

FIRST PURCHASER. In the English law of descent, the first purchaser was he who first acquired an estate in a family which still owns it. A purchase of this kind signifies any mode of acquiring an estate, except by descent. 2 Bla. Com. 220.

FISCAL. Belonging to the fisc, or public treasury. A fiscal agent does not necessarily imply a depositary of the public funds, so as, by the simple use of it in a statute without any directions in this respect to make it the duty of the state treasurer to deposit with him any moneys in the treasury; State v. Dubuclet, 27 La. Ann. 29.

FISCUS. In Civil Law. The treasury of a prince; the public treasury. 1 Low C. 361. In France, fisc.

Hence, to confiscate a thing is to appropriate it to the fisc. Paillet, Droit Public, 21, n., says that fiscus, in the Roman law, signified the treasury of the prince, and æarium the treasury of the state. This distinction was not observed in France. In course of time the fiscus absorbed the æarium and became the treasury of the state. Gray, Nature and Sources of Law 58. See Law 10, ff. De jure Fiscis.

FISH. An animal which inhabits the water, breathes by means of gills, swims by the aid of fins, and is oviparous.

Fishes in rivers and in the sea are considered as animals feræ naturæ; consequently, no one has any property in them until they have been captured; Percy Summer Club v. Welch, 66 N. H. 180, 23 Atl. 22; Lincoln v. Davis, 53 Mich. 375, 19 N. W. 103, 51 Am. Rep. 116; Gentile v. State, 29 Ind. 409; and, like other wild animals, if, having been taken, they escape and regain their liberty, the captor loses his property in them. See FISH-ERY.

FISH COMMISSIONER.

The Act of February 9, 1871, provides for the appointment of a commissioner of fish and fisheries, with all necessary powers looking to the preservation and increase of food fishes throughout the country. U. S. Rev. Stat. § 4395.

FISH ROYAL. A whale, porpoise, or sturgeon thrown ashore on the coast of England belonged to the king as a branch of his prerogative. Hence these fish are termed royal fish. Hale, De Jure Mar. pt. 1, c. 7; 1 Sharsw. Bla. Com. 290; Plowd. 305; Bracton, l. 3, c. 3.

FISHERIES ARBITRATION. The right of the United States to fish upon the coastal waters of the British colonies on the Atlantic had been a subject of negotiation from the Treaty of Peace between the two countries in 1783 down to the year 1910, when the long standing dispute between them was finally settled by arbitration. By the Treaty of Peace with England, in 1783, the United States obtained the "right" to fish on the banks of Newfoundland and the "liberty" to fish on the coasts, bays, and creeks of the British Dominions in America. In 1814, when the Treaty of Peace was being signed at Ghent, Great Britain refused to re-concede the privilege granted by the Treaty of 1783. In 1815, the United States maintained that the general provisions of the Treaty of 1783 were of a character not to be annulled by a subsequent war, whereas England declared that what was described as a "liberty" in the Treaty of 1783 was terminated by the war of 1812. By the Treaty of 1818 the United States obtained the right to fish on certain specified coasts of British America without reference to the distance from shore, while as to all other coasts, they were excluded from fishing within three marine miles from the shore. The Treaty of Washington, of 1871, removed the restrictions upon inshore fisheries. Art. XIX. yields a corresponding right to all British subjects as to the Atlantic coasts of the United States north of the 39th parallel, and concedes to each nation the right to import, free of duty, fish and fish oils into the ports of the other. The treaty was to continue in operation for ten years, and further until two years' notice from either party. In Art. XXII. it is stated that the British government asserts that these provisions of the treaty would work to her disadvantage. Provision was accordingly made, by the same article, for the appointment of a commission, which was known as the Fisheries Commission, to determine the amount of compensation to be paid by the United States. The tribunal, consisting of three members, met at Halifax, N. S., June 15, 1877, and awarded the sum of $5,500,000 to Great Britain.

In 1883 the United States gave notice of the termination, after two years, of the articles of the Treaty of 1871 relating to fisheries. Disputes had arisen as to the following points: What were the "bays" intended by the Treaty of 1818; were the three miles to be measured from sinuosities of the coast, or from a line drawn from headland to headland; and how far could American vessels traffic in their catch when putting into the harbor?

In 1898 the fisheries question was considered by the Quebec Commission, but without result. Finally, on January 27, 1909, an agreement was signed by the two countries referring the matter to arbitration by the Permanent Court at The Hague. On five of the seven questions presented to the court, the award was favorable to the United States. For the future the reasonableness of the regulations defining the seasons when fish may be taken on the treaty coasts, and the methods and instruments to be used, shall be determined by a Mixed Commission appointed by the two countries.

FISHERY. A place prepared for catching fish with nets or hooks. This is commonly applied to the place of drawing a seine or net. Hart v. Hill, 1 Whart. (Pa.) 131.

A common of fishery is not an exclusive right, but one enjoyed in common with certain other persons. 3 Kent 329.

A free fishery is said to be a franchise in the hands of a subject, existing by grant or prescription, distinct from an ownership in the soil. It is an exclusive right, and applies to a public navigable river, without any right in the soil. 3 Kent 329.

A several fishery is one by which the party claiming it has the right of fishing, independently of all other, so that no person can have a coextensive right with him in the object claimed; but a partial and independent right in another, or a limited liberty, does not derogate from the right of the owner. 5 Burr. 2814.

A distinction has been made between a common fishery (commune piscarium), which may mean for all mankind, as in the sea, and a common of fishery (communium piscariæ), which is a right, in common with certain other persons, in a particular stream. 8 Taunt. 183. Angell seems to think that common of fishery and free fishery are convertible terms. Law of Watercourses, c. 6, ss. 3, 4.

Woolrych says that sometimes a free fishery is confounded with a several, sometimes it is said to be synonymous with common, and again it is treated as distinct from either. Law of Waters, etc., 97.

A several fishery, as its name imports, is an exclusive property; this, however, is not to be understood as depriving the territorial owner of his right to a several fishery when he grants to another person permission to fish; for he would continue to be the several proprietor, although he should suffer a stranger to hold a coextensive right with himself. Woolr. Wat. 96.

These distinctions in relation to several, free, and common of fishery are not strongly marked, and the lines are sometimes scarcely perceptible. "Instead of going into the black-letter books to learn what was a fishery, and a free fishery, and a several fishery," says Huston, J., "I am disposed to regard our own acts, even though differing from old feudal law." Hart v. Hill, 1 Whart. (Pa.) 132.

The right of fishery is to be considered with reference to navigable waters and to waters not navigable; meaning, by the former, those in which the tide ebbs and flows; by the latter, those in which it does not. By the common law of England the fisheries in all the navigable waters of the realm belong to the crown by prerogative, in such way, nevertheless, as to be common to all the subjects: so that an individual claiming an exclusive fishery in such waters must show it strictly by grant or prescription. Such a grantee may not use a right of fishery in such a manner as to interfere with navigation, which belongs to all the subjects of the realm; 20 C. B. N. S. 1. In that country navigable waters meant tide-waters; [1891] 2 Ch. 681; but different conditions in this country have resulted in the application of the rule cessat ratio cessat lex, and while the same principle is recognized that navigable waters belong to the state and non-navigable ones to the riparian proprietor, the recognition of tide-water as the test of navigability is abandoned.

By Magna Carta, c. 16, "no river banks shall be guarded from henceforth, but such as were in defence at the time of King Henry, our grandfather, by the same places and in the same bounds as they were wont to be in his time." That this chapter limited the right of the crown to grant several fisheries was contended by Coke; 2 Inst. 30. Lord Hale, however, construed it to apply only to the custom of putting fresh as well as salt rivers in defence for the king's recreation, and to limit the right of the crown to the use of such rivers as were in defence in the time of Henry II. De Jure Mar. c. 2. That the Great Charter restrained the king from granting exclusive rights of fishery in navigable waters is held in some cases; Lowndes v. Dickerson, 34 Barb. (N. Y.) 586; 23 L. T. N. S. 732; Arnold v. Mundy, 6 N. J. L. 4, 10 Am. Dec. 356; Gough v. Bell, 21 N. J. L. 156; Tinicum Fishing Co. v. Carter, 61 Pa. 21, 100 Am. Dec. 597. That the crown may grant exclusive rights of fishery in tide-waters is held in Rogers v. Jones, 1 Wend. (N. Y.) 237, 19 Am. Dec. 493. That Magna Carta was only intended to restrain the king from granting exclusive rights of fishery disconnected with the soil, in disregard of the rights of the owner of the soil, was held in Trustees of Brookhaven v. Strong, 60 N. Y. 56 (followed in Robins v. Ackerly, 91 N. Y. 99). In Martin v. Waddell, 16 Pet. (U. S.) 367, 10 L. Ed. 997, it was said, following Lord Hale's construction, "The true rule on the subject is that prima facie a fishery in a navigable river is common, and he who sets up an exclusive right must show title either by grant or prescription," and that this is the doctrine of the King's Bench in England in the case in 4 Burr. 2163.

See NAVIGABLE WATERS.

In rivers not navigable the fisheries belong to the owners of the soil or to the riparian proprietors; 2 Bla. Com. 39; Gould, Wat. 42, 48; Hale, De Jure Mar. c. 4; 4 Burr. 2162; Dav. 155; 7 Co. 16 a; Plowd. 154 a. In such rivers the owner of the adjoining soil has an exclusive right of fishery in front of his land to the thread of the river, except so far as this right has been qualified by legislative regulation; but this right is limited to the taking of fish, and does not carry with it the right to prevent the passage of fish to lakes and ponds for breeding purpose; Com. v. Chapin, 5 Pick. (Mass.) 199, 16 Am. Dec. 386. The common-law doctrine accepting the tide-water test of navigability has been declared to be the law in several of the United States; People v. Platt, 17 Johns. (N. Y.) 195, 8 Am. Dec. 382; Hooker v. Cummings, 20 Johns. (N. Y.) 90, 11 Am. Dec. 249; Com. v. Chapin, 5 Pick. (Mass.) 199, 16 Am. Dec. 386; Lay v. King, 5 Day (Conn.) 72; Bennett v. Boggs, 1 Baldw. 60, Fed. Cas. No. 1,319; Smith v. Miller, 5 Mas. 191, Fed. Cas. No. 13,080; Adams v. Pease, 2 Conn. 481; Com. v. Vincent, 108 Mass. 446, 447; Moulton v. Libbey, 37 Me. 472, 59 Am. Dec. 57. But in some states the right of fishery in the great rivers of those states, though not tide-waters, is held to be vested in the state and open to all the world; Shrunk v. Nav. Co., 14 S. & R. (Pa.) 71; Tinicum Fishing Co. v. Carter, 61 Pa. 21, 100 Am. Dec. 597; Collins v. Benbury, 25 N. C. 277, 38 Am. Dec. 722; Sloan v. Biemiller, 34 Ohio St. 492; See Harvey v. Vandegrift, 89 Pa. 346; People v. Doxtater, 75 Hun 472, 27 N. Y. Supp. 481. This modification of the common-law doctrine has been applied not to the abandonment of the distinction between the public and private rights of fisheries as affected by navigability, but to the establishment of a different test of navigability, made necessary by the difference of physical conditions in the two countries already alluded to. So in the leading Pennsylvania case the point of the decision was that neither the quality of fresh or salt water, nor the flux or reflux of the tide, would determine whether a river should be considered navigable or not; Carson v. Blazer, 2 Binn. (Pa.) 475, 4 Am. Dec. 463. After changing the test of navigability, these cases applied the rule of the public character of streams actually navigable which had been in England determined by the mere test of tide water. Stover v. Jack, 60 Pa. 339, 100 Am. Dec. 566.

It is for the states to determine the question of the title to the beds of navigable non-tidal waters between the state and the riparian owner; Barney v. Keokuk, 94 U. S. 324, 24 L. Ed. 224. Each state has the exclusive control of fisheries in the tide-waters and beds of tide-waters within its jurisdiction, subject to the paramount right of navigation; Manchester v. Massachusetts, 139 U. S. 240, 11 Sup. Ct. 559, 35 L. Ed. 159. The jurisdiction of a state is coextensive with its territory, coextensive with its legislative powers, and, within what are generally recognized as the territorial limits of a state, by the law of nations, a state can define its boundaries on the sea and the boundaries of its counties; U. S. v. Bevans, 3 Wheat. (U. S.) 386, 4 L. Ed. 404.

In the control of fisheries within a state, the state government is supreme; U. S. v.

Packer's Ass'n, 79 Fed. 152; Martin v. Waddell, 16 Pet. (U. S.) 369, 10 L. Ed. 997; Marsh v. Colby, 39 Mich. 626, 33 Am. Rep. 439. It may regulate public rights of fishing; Daniels v. Homer, 139 N. C. 219, 51 S. E. 992, 3 L. R. A. (N. S.) 997; Lawton v. Steele, 152 U. S. 133, 14 Sup. Ct. 499, 38 L. Ed. 385; or make grants of exclusive rights which do not impair any private rights already vested; Smith v. Look, 108 Mass. 141; Com. v. Hilton, 174 Mass. 29, 54 N. E. 362, 45 L. R. A. 475; it may prohibit the taking of fish during certain seasons of the year or with certain implements; Duncan v. Sylvester, 24 Me. 482, 41 Am. Dec. 400; Matthews v. Treat, 75 Me. 597; Donnell v. Joy, 85 Me. 118, 26 Atl. 1017; even on the part of private individuals from waters in which as riparian owners they have the exclusive right of fishing, if such waters connect with the public waters of the state; People v. Bridges, 142 Ill. 30, 31 N. E. 115, 16 L. R. A. 684; People v. Lumber Co., 116 Cal. 397, 48 Pac. 374, 39 L. R. A. 581, 58 Am. St. Rep. 183; Barrows v. McDermott, 73 Me. 441; or a state may prohibit all such acts as would render the public right less valuable or destroy it altogether; Smith v. Maryland, 18 How. (U. S.) 71, 15 L. Ed. 269. It may prohibit the taking of oysters and shell fish in its public waters by the citizens of other states, without infringing on the privileges and immunities of citizens of other states; State v. Medbury, 3 R. I. 138; New England Oyster Co. v. McGarvey, 12 R. I. 385; Corfield v. Coryell, 4 Wash. C. C. 371, Fed. Cas. No. 3,230; or without discrimination against them; State v. Tower, 84 Me. 444, 24 Atl. 898; People v. Lowndes, 130 N. Y. 455, 29 N. E. 751. The rights, privileges and immunities secured by the constitution of the United States to the inhabitants of the several states do not include, in favor of the inhabitants of any state, right in the common property of the inhabitants of the other states; Com. v. Hilton, 174 Mass. 29, 54 N. E. 362, 45 L. R. A. 475. No rights under the commerce clause of the federal constitution are infringed by a state act under which a conviction may be had for using a dredge in tidal waters of a state for the purpose of catching oysters upon lands leased by another person; Lee v. New Jersey, 207 U. S. 67, 28 Sup. Ct. 22, 52 L. Ed. 106. A state may require a license fee from all persons engaged in fishing for profit in the navigable waters of Lake Erie; State v. Hanlon, 77 Ohio St. 19, 82 N. E. 662, 13 L. R. A. (N. S.) 539, 122 Am. St. Rep. 472. It may provide for forfeiture of a vessel violating the fishing laws; Boggs v. Com., 76 Va. 959; Haney v. Compton, 36 N. J. L. 507; Smith v. Maryland, 18 How. (U. S.) 71, 15 L. Ed. 269. It may confiscate nets used in illegal fishing; Daniels v. Homer, 139 N. C. 219, 51 S. E. 992, 3 L. R. A. (N. S.) 997; Lawton v. Steele, 152 U. S. 133, 14 Sup. Ct. 499, 38 L. Ed. 385, affirming id., 119 N. Y. 226, 23 N. E. 878, 7 L. R. A. 134, 16 Am. St.

Rep. 813. It extends to the preservation of fish not used as food for human beings, but as food for other fish; Com. v. Manchester, 152 Mass. 230, 25 N. E. 113, 9 L. R. A. 236, 23 Am. St. Rep. 820. The states, by surrendering to the federal government the right to regulate commerce, did not part with the ownership of the fish in the tidal waters within their borders, or with the right to regulate and control their taking; State v. Corson, 67 N. J. L. 178, 50 Atl. 780; nor did the mere grant of admiralty and maritime jurisdiction to the judicial branch of the government surrender to the United States the power, vested in the several states before the adoption of the constitution, to regulate the fisheries belonging to them and to punish those who should transgress their regulations; Corfield v. Coryell, 4 Wash. C. C. 371, Fed. Cas. No. 3,230. The assumption by a state of control over fisheries within the bays leading from the ocean is not in contravention of the authority of the United States; State v. Thompson, 85 Me. 189, 27 Atl. 97. That congress never assumed control over fisheries is persuasive evidence that the right to control them remained in the states; Manchester v. Massachusetts, 139 U. S. 240, 11 Sup. Ct. 559, 35 L. Ed. 159.

A club may not enjoin members of the public from fishing on navigable waters; Bodi v. Shooting Club, 57 Ohio St. 226, 48 N. E. 944.

One driving stakes in a navigable river may not enjoin their removal by persons injured thereby; Hettrick v. Page, 82 N. C. 65; but those engaged in fishing in such waters may enjoin one from driving stakes which interfere with their fishing; Skinner v. Hettrick, 73 N. C. 53; Cherry Point Fish Co. v. Nelson, 25 Wash. 558; Morris v. Graham, 16 Wash. 343, 47 Pac. 752, 58 Am. St. Rep. 33.

The control of fisheries to the extent of at least a marine league from the shore belongs to the nation on whose coast the fisheries are prosecuted. Bays wholly within the territory of a nation, not exceeding two marine leagues in width at the mouth, are within its territorial jurisdiction; Manchester v. Massachusetts, 139 U. S. 240, 11 Sup. Ct. 559, 35 L. Ed. 159.

By the award of the arbitrators under the treaty with Great Britain (27 Stat. L. 948), it was settled that the United States had no exclusive jurisdiction in Behring Sea outside the ordinary three-mile limit, and no right of property in, or protection over, the fur seals frequenting the islands of the United States when found outside of such three-mile limit. Therefore the act of March 2, 1889, declaring that R. S. sec. 1956, which forbids the killing of fur-bearing animals in Alaska and the waters thereof, shall apply to "all the dominion of the United States in the waters of Behring Sea," must be construed to mean the waters within three miles of the shores of Alaska; Whitelaw v. U. S., 75 Fed. 513, 21 C. C. A. 434.

The right to take fur seals under a so-called lease from the government, which is expressly subject to such regulations of the business as the United States may make, does not entitle the lessee to any damages for a reduction of the catch allowed by the regulations, for which a deduction of rental is provided; North American Com. Co. v. U. S., 171 U. S. 110, 18 Sup. Ct. 817, 43 L. Ed. 98.

The right of private fishery may exist not only in the riparian proprietor, but also in another who has acquired it by grant or otherwise; Co. Litt. 122 a, n. 7; Ang. Waterc. 184; Cobb v. Davenport, 33 N. J. L. 223, 97 Am. Dec. 718. But see 2 Salk. 637. Such a right is held subject to the use of the waters as a highway; Ang. Tide-Wat. 80; Post v. Munn, 4 N. J. L. 67, 7 Am. Dec. 570; Lewis v. Keeling, 46 N. C. 299, 62 Am. Dec. 168; 1 Campb. 516; Hart v. Hill, 1 Whart. (Pa.) 136; and to the free passage of the fish; 7 East 195; Boatwright v. Bookman, 1 Rice (S. C.) 447; Com. v. Chapin, 5 Pick. (Mass.) 199, 16 Am. Dec. 386; Shaw v. Crawford, 10 Johns. (N. Y.) 236; Hyde v. Russell, 2 Cush. (Mass.) 251. See as to right of fishery; 9 L. R. A. 236, 807, notes, 60 L. R. A. 486, note.

A definite "fishing right in the adjoining sea," described in the granting clause of a royal patent as "attached to this land" and which right is of a sort long recognized by the Hawaiian laws as private property, is included in the grant, although the habendum is to have and to hold "the above granted land," which, standing alone, might not include a fishing right; Damon v. Hawaii, 194 U. S. 154, 24 Sup. Ct. 617, 48 L. Ed. 916. In Hawaii the land was formerly an incident to the fishery, and though the right claimed was different from those recognized by the common law, it was regarded as an easement or profit à prendre. A later case also held that the grantees of land in Hawaii under a royal patent were entitled to a fishery right in the adjoining sea which they and their predecessors in title had enjoyed from time immemorial; Carter v. Hawaii, 200 U. S. 255, 26 Sup. Ct. 248, 50 L. Ed. 470. Where fishing rights were secured to the Yakima Indians on the Columbia river by the treaty of 1859, such rights were held paramount to the powers acquired by the state of Washington on its admission to the Union in and over the shore lands; U. S. v. Winans, 198 U. S. 371, 25 Sup. Ct. 662, 49 L. Ed. 1089. The treaty was held not a grant of rights to the Indians, but a grant of rights from them—a reservation of those not granted. It imposed a servitude upon the land. See, as to prescriptive rights of fishery, 14 L. R. A. (N. S.) 386, note.

The free right of fishery in navigable waters extends to the taking of shell-fish between high and low water-mark; 2 B. & P. 472; Peck v. Lockwood, 5 Day (Conn.) 22; Moulton v. Libbey, 37 Me. 472, 50 Am. Dec. 57; Proctor v. Wells, 103 Mass. 217.

FISHGARTH. A dam or weir in a river for taking fish. Cowell.

FISHING BANKS. A fishing ground of comparative shoal water in the sea. Parker v. Thomson, 21 Or. 523, 28 Pac. 502.

FISHING-BILL. A term used in equity for a bill that seeks a discovery upon general, loose, and vague allegations. Story, Eq. Pl. § 325; on that ground alone, such a bill will be at once dismissed; In re Pacific Ry. Commission, 32 Fed. 263.

FISK. In Scotch Law. The revenue of the crown. Generally used of the personal estate of a rebel which has been forfeited to the crown. Bell, Dict.

FISTUCA. See FESTUCA.

FIT. Suitable; appropriate; conformable to a duty. Fit for cultivation refers to that condition of soil which will enable a farmer with a reasonable amount of skill to raise regularly and annually, by tillage, grain or other staple crops; Keeran v. Griffith, 34 Cal. 581; State v. Allen, 35 N. C. 37; Barrett v. Nelson, 29 Kan. 596.

FIVE MILE ACT. An act of parliament passed in 1665, forbidding nonconformists who refused to take the oath of non-resistance to come within five miles of any corporation in which they had preached since the passing of the act of oblivion in 1660, nullified by act of 1689.

FIX. To determine; to settle. Bunn v. Kingsbury County, 3 S. D. 87, 52 N. W. 673. A constitutional provision to the effect that the general assembly shall fix the compensation of officers, means that it shall prescribe the rule by which such compensation is to be determined. Goodin v. State, 18 Ohio 9.

FIXING BAIL. Rendering absolute the liability of special bail.

The bail are fixed upon the issue of a ca. sa. (capias ad satisfaciendum) against the defendant; Broader v. Welsh, 2 N. & McC. 569; Gillespie v. White, 16 Johns. (N. Y.) 117; Drake v. Cochrane, 18 N. J. L. 9; and a return of non est thereto by the sheriff; Collins v. Cook, 4 Day (Conn.) 1; Saunders v. Bobo, 2 Bail. (S. C.) 492; Rosenberg v. McKain, 3 Rich. (S. C.) 145; Howe v. Ranson, 1 Vt. 276; Branch v. Webb, 7 Leigh (Va.) 371; made on the return-day; Rowland v. Seymour, 2 Metc. (Mass.) 590; Ancrum v. Sloan, 1 Rich. (S. C.) 421; unless the defendant be surrendered within the time allowed ex gratia by the practice of the court; Edwards v. Gunn, 3 Conn. 316; McClurg v. Bowers, 9 S. & R. (Pa.) 24; Brownlow v. Forbes, 2 Johns. (N. Y.) 101; Dick v. Stoker, 12 N. C. 91; Dunbar v. Conway, 11 Gill & J. (Md.) 92; Allen

v. Breslauer, 8 Cal. 552; Shannon v. Hyde, 17 Ga. 88.

In New Hampshire; Hamilton v. Dunklee, 1 N. H. 172; Massachusetts; Champion v. Noyes, 2 Mass. 485; Missouri; State v. Millsaps, 69 Mo. 359; Tennessee; White v. State, 5 Yerg. 183; and Texas; Pearson v. State, 7 Tex. App. 279; bail is not fixed till judgment on a sci. fa. is obtained against them, except on the death of the defendant after a return of non est to an execution against him.

The death of the defendant after a return of non est by the sheriff prevents a surrender, and fixes the bail inevitably; Boggs v. Teackle, 5 Binn. (Pa.) 332; Olcott v. Lilly, 4 Johns. (N. Y.) 407; Gordon v. Liepman's Adm'r, 3 McCord (S. C.) 49; Bradford v. Earle, 4 Pick. (Mass.) 120; Goodwin v. Smith, 4 N. H. 29; Davidson v. Taylor, 12 Wheat. (U. S.) 604, 6 L. Ed. 743. See White's Ex'rs v. Cummins, 1 Ov. (Tenn.) 224; Bank of Mt. Pleasant v. Pollock's Adm'rs, 1 Ohio 35; Griffin v. Moore, 2 Ga. 331.

In Georgia and North Carolina, bail are not fixed till judgment is obtained against them; Granberry v. Pool, 14 N. C. 155; Rich v. Colquitt, 61 Ga. 197. See BAIL.

FIXTURES. Personal chattels affixed to real estate, which may be severed and removed by the party who has affixed them, or by his personal representative, against the will of the owner of the freehold. There is much dispute among the authorities as to what is a proper definition. Bro. Fixt. 1; Tyler's Fixt. 35; 6 Am. L. Rev. 412, where various definitions are reviewed. A "fixture" formerly meant any chattel which on becoming affixed to the soil became a part of the realty. It now means those things which formed an exception to that rule and can be removed by the person who affixed them to the soil; L. R. 4 Ex. 328.

Anything fixed or attached to a building, and used in connection with it, movable or immovable. Whenever the appendage is of such a nature that it is not part and parcel of the building, but may be removed without injury to the building, then it is a movable fixture and does not pass with a conveyance of the freehold. If, however, it be so connected with the building, that it cannot be severed from it without injury to the building, then it is part of the realty and passes with the conveyance of the soil; Capital City Ins. Co. v. Caldwell, 95 Ala. 77, 10 South. 355.

To entitle a tenant to the value of trade fixtures attached by him to property, it is not necessary that they can be removed without injury to the fixtures. The true test is that they can be removed without injury to the freehold; In re City of New York, 192 N. Y. 295, 84 N. E. 1105, 18 L. R. A. (N. S.) 423, 127 Am. St. Rep. 903.

The annexation may be actual or constructive. 1st, By actual annexation is understood every mode by which a chattel can be joined or united to the freehold. The article must not be merely laid upon the ground; it must be fastened, fixed, or set into the land, or into some such erection as is unquestionably a part of the realty; otherwise it is in no sense a fixture; Bull. N. P. 34; 3 East 38; Walker v. Sherman, 20 Wend. (N. Y.) 636; Taffe v. Warnick, 3 Blackf. (Ind.) 111, 23 Am. Dec. 383. Locks, iron stoves set in brickwork, posts, window-blinds, and a mirror firmly attached to the chimney breast by molding, afford examples of actual annexation; see Pillow v. Love, 5 Hayw. (Tenn.) 109; Holmes v. Tremper, 20 Johns. (N. Y.) 29, 11 Am. Dec. 238; Kirwan v. Latour, 1 Harr. & J. (Md.) 289, 2 Am. Dec. 519; McClintock v. Graham, 3 McCord (S. C.) 553; Swift v. Thompson, 9 Conn. 63, 21 Am. Dec. 718; Goddard v. Chase, 7 Mass. 432; McFadden v. Crawford, 36 W. Va. 671, 15 S. E. 408, 32 Am. St. Rep. 894; Spinney v. Barbe, 43 Ill. App. 585.

Machinery in a planing mill, securely fastened, belongs to the realty; Kansas City Southern R. Co. v. Anderson, 88 Ark. 129, 113 S. W. 1030, 16 Ann. Cas. 784; lace looms bolted to the floor and fastened by iron stays to the roof; 5 F. Ct. Sess. 214; electric light fittings in a hotel; Canning v. Owen, 22 R. I. 624, 48 Atl. 1033, 84 Am. St. Rep. 858; and metallic gutters attached to the roof of a house with water pipes laid under ground; Wright v. Du Bignon, 114 Ga. 765, 40 S. E. 747, 57 L. R. A. 669.

2d, by constructive annexation. Some things have been held to be parcel of the realty, which are annexed or fastened to it; for example, deeds or chattels which relate to the title of the inheritance and go to the heir; Shep. Touch. 469; Beardsley v. Bank, 31 Barb. (N. Y.) 632; Wadleigh v. Janvrin, 41 N. H. 503, 77 Am. Dec. 780. Cars used in connection with a drier in a brickyard, and which are indispensable to the use of the drier, are part of the realty, and a mechanic's lien will attach thereto; Curran v. Smith, 37 Ill. App. 69. So wires and insulators used in forming and completing the connection between an electric light and power plant and the places supplied with light and heat by such plant; Hughes v. Power Co., 53 N. J. Eq. 435, 32 Atl. 69; Badger Lumber Co. v. Light & Power Co., 48 Kan. 182, 29 Pac. 476, 15 L. R. A. 652, 30 Am. St. Rep. 301; gas burners, chandeliers, and the like; Keeler v. Keeler, 31 N. J. Eq. 181; Johnson's Ex'r v. Wiseman's Ex'r, 4 Metc. (Ky.) 357, 83 Am. Dec. 475; 18 L. T. N. S. 300.

Doors, mantels, and other building materials which have been purchased for an unfinished building and placed therein, but not attached, are not part of the realty; Blue v. Gunn, 114 Tenn. 414, 87 S. W. 408, 69 L. R. A. 892, 108 Am. St. Rep. 912, 4 Ann. Cas. 1157; the main belt of a mill connecting a drive wheel with the main shaft is realty; Friedly v. Giddings, 119 Fed. 438; where the owner replaced the ordinary fixed grate in the house with others, which were not physically attached to the main structure, it was held they were realty, since they were placed to improve the inheritance; [1901] 1 Q. B. 205.

Tubs, vats, and casks placed in a brewery with a design of permanent use therein and which are too large to pass out of any existing opening are part of the realty; Equitable Trust Co. v. Christ, 47 Fed. 756; and a gasoline engine on a stone foundation in a permanent building; State Security Bank v. Hoskins, 130 Ia. 339, 106 N. W. 764, 8 L. R. A. (N. S.) 376. So deer in a park, fish in a pond, and doves in a dove-house, go to the heir, and not to the executor, being, like keys and heirlooms, constructively annexed to the inheritance; Shep. Touch. 90; Pothier, Traité des Choses § 1. But loose, movable machinery used in prosecuting any business to which the freehold is adapted cannot be considered part of the real estate nor in any way appurtenant to it; Despatch Line of Packets v. Bellamy Mfg. Co., 12 N. H. 205, 37 Am. Dec. 503; 6 Exch. 295; McLaughlin v. Nash, 14 Allen (Mass.) 136, 92 Am. Dec. 741; Brown v. Power Co., 55 Fed. 229. See, however, Voorhis v. Freeman, 2 W. & S. (Pa.) 116, 37 Am. Dec. 490; Pyle v. Pennock, 2 W. & S. (Pa.) 390, 37 Am. Dec. 517.

Chairs hired for use in a hippodrome and screwed to the floor do not cease to be chattels; [1903] 2 K. B. 135; boilers, engines, shafts and heating apparatus placed in a building for business purposes and easily removable are not part of the realty; Bergh v. Safe Co., 136 Fed. 368, 69 C. C. A. 212, 70 L. R. A. 756; electric fixtures installed by a tenant for his personal comfort and convenience are domestic fixtures, if they can be readily detached without injury to the premises; Raymond v. Strickland, 124 Ga. 504, 52 S. E. 619, 3 L. R. A. (N. S.) 69; a gas stove is not realty; Hook v. Bolton, 199 Mass. 244, 85 N. E. 175, 17 L. R. A. (N. S.) 699, 127 Am. St. Rep. 487.

The criterion of an irremovable fixture is the united application of three requisites: (1) real or constructive annexation of the article in question to the freehold; (2) appropriation or adaptation to the use or purpose of that part of the realty with which it is connected; (3) the intention of the party making the annexation to make the article a permanent accession to the freehold; Binkley v. Forkner, 117 Ind. 176, 19 N. E. 753, 3 L. R. A. 33; Atchison, T. & S. F. R. Co. v. Morgan, 42 Kan. 23, 21 Pac. 809, 4 L. R. A. 284, 16 Am. St. Rep. 471.

The general rule is, that fixtures once annexed to the freehold become part of the realty. But to this rule there are exceptions: as, first, where there is a manifest intention to use the fixture in some employment distinct from that of the occupant of the real estate; second, where it has been annexed merely for the purpose of carrying on a trade; 3 East 88; Lemar v. Miles, 4 Watts (Pa.) 330; for the fact that it was put up for such a purpose indicates an intention that the thing should not become part of the freehold. See 1 H. Bla. 260. Buildings may, by agreement of parties, be erected upon land without becoming affixed thereto; Kinthead v. U. S., 150 U. S. 483, 14 Sup. Ct. 172, 37 L. Ed. 1152. But if there is a clear intention that the thing should be permanently annexed to the realty, its being used for purposes of trade would not, perhaps, bring the case within one of the exceptions; 1 H. Bla. 260. The tendency of modern authorities is to make the intention of the parties the general rule for deciding whether an article is realty or personalty; L. R. 7 C. P. 328; Snedeker v. Warring, 12 N. Y. 170; 17 Am. Dec. 690, note; Langston v. State, 96 Ala. 44, 11 South. 334. But the intention must be definitely expressed by words or acts; mere unexpressed mental intention is of no avail; Cook v. Whiting, 16 Ill. 480; Burnside v. Twitchell, 43 N. H. 390. See Morrison v. Berry, 42 Mich. 389, 4 N. W. 731, 36 Am. Rep. 446, and note. This intention will prevail except as against innocent purchasers; Binkley v. Forkner, 117 Ind. 176, 19 N. E. 753, 3 L. R. A. 33.

Machinery used in a manufacturing plant and intended to be used for the benefit of the realty is realty as between mortgagor and mortgagee; In re Eagle Horseshoe Co., 163 Fed. 699, 90 C. C. A. 283; but where a person placed a frame factory upon the land of another with his consent, and there was no agreement respecting the ownership of the factory, the presumption is that the building is still the property of the party annexing it, and is removable by him; King v. Morris, 74 N. J. L. 810, 68 Atl. 162, 14 L. R. A. (N. S.) 439, 12 Ann. Cas. 1086.

With respect to the different classes of persons who claim the right to remove a fixture, it has been held that where the question arises between an executor and the heir at law the rule is strict that whatever belongs to the estate to which the fixture appertains will go to the heir; but if the ancestor manifested an intention (which it is said may be inferred from circumstances) that the things affixed should be considered personalty, they will be so treated, and will go to the executor. See Bac. Abr. Executor, Administrator; 1 P. Wms. 94; Bull. N. P. 34; 12 Cl. & F. 312; Morrison v. Berry, 42 Mich. 389, 4 N. W. 731, 36 Am. Rep. 446.

As between a vendor and a vendee the same strictness applies as between an executor and an heir at law; for all fixtures which belong to the premises at the time of the sale, or which have been erected by the vendor, whether for purposes of trade or manufacture or not, as potash-kettles for manufacturing ashes, and the like, chandeliers and gas-brackets, pass to the vendee of the land, unless they have been expressly reserved by the terms of the contract; Miller v. Plumb, 6 Cow. (N. Y.) 665, 16 Am. Dec. 456; Holmes v. Tremper, 20 Johns. (N. Y.) 29, 11 Am. Dec. 238; Ewell, Fixt. 271; Tyler, Fixt. 519 (see also Shaw v. Lenke, 1 Daly [N. Y.] 487; Montague v. Dent, 10 Rich. L. [S. C.] 135, 67 Am. Dec. 572); a faucet attached to a hot-water boiler and a rosebush in the yard pass by deed of the realty; Kirchman v. Lapp, 19 N. Y. Supp. 831; but a filter capable of delivering 105 gallons of water per minute, resting loosely on a factory floor, is a fixture; Sayles v. Purifying Co., 62 Hun 618, 16 N. Y. Supp. 555.

Where the vendee under a contract for the purchase of land is in possession and allows a third party to erect thereon a small building, agreeing that it should be personalty, and subsequently the contract for the purchase of land is rescinded, the building may still be removed by the third party; Brannon v. Vaughan, 66 Ark. 87, 48 S. W. 909.

The same rule applies as between mortgagor and mortgagee; Southbridge Sav. Bank v. Mason, 147 Mass. 500, 18 N. E. 406, 1 L. R. A. 350; 1 Atk. 477; Preston v. Briggs, 16 Vt. 124; Despatch Line of Packets v. Manuf'g Co., 12 N. H. 205, 37 Am. Dec. 203; Ewell, Fixt. 271. The same rule as to ownership of property in chattels annexed to realty prevails between a mortgagor and mortgagee as between a grantor and grantee; and in either case it operates more strongly in favor of the mortgagee or grantee than the landlord where his title is assailed by a lessee; Kinnear v. Railways Co., 223 Pa. 390, 72 Atl. 808.

Wires for conducting an electrical current to lamps pass as fixtures under a mortgage of the electric light plant; Fechet v. Drake, 2 Ariz. 239, 12 Pac. 694; and the annunciator and all the wires of an electric-bell system are part of the realty of a hotel and pass as fixtures under a mortgage; Capehart v. Foster, 61 Minn. 132, 63 N. W. 257, 52 Am. St. Rep. 582; in which case steam radiators and an office-desk attached to the building were held to be fixtures, while gas-burners and chandeliers were held not to pass as such to the mortgagee; contra, as to the last point; Manning v. Ogden, 70 Hun 399, 24 N. Y. Supp. 70; and in National Bank of Catsauqua v. North, 160 Pa. 303, 28 Atl. 694, it was held that steam radiators and valves were not annexed to the realty, but, being exactly analogous to gas fixtures were severable from the realty.

Where chattels are sold under conditional sale and annexed to the realty, the seller may assert his title as against a subsequent mortgagee of the land; Adams Mach. Co. v. Ass'n, 119 Ala. 97, 24 South. 857; Davis v. Bliss, 187 N. Y. 77, 79 N. E. 851, 10 L. R. A. (N. S.) 458; and so where the owner of a greenhouse leased the land and sold the greenhouse and subsequently mortgaged the land, the mortgagee was not entitled to the greenhouse; Royce v. Latshaw, 15 Colo. App. 420, 62 Pac. 627; but where a furnace was sold and installed under similar circumstances, and the premises were bought in under a foreclosure sale under a prior mortgage, it was held that the furnace passed with the realty; Fuller-Warren Co. v. Harter, 110 Wis. 80, 85 N. W. 698, 53 L. R. A. 603, 84 Am. St. Rep. 867; in England, machines bought on conditional sale and attached to the floor become part of the realty; [1903] 1 K. B. 87, affirmed [1904] App. Cas. 466; but where the mortgagee is only an equitable mortgagee, it was held that the vendor of the machine had a prior equitable interest which could not be defeated; [1907] 1 Ch. 575.

The question whether ranges, hot-water boilers, sinks, and wash-tubs are fixtures under a mortgage depends on when and how they are attached to the house; Manning v. Ogden, 70 Hun 399, 24 N. Y. Supp. 70; and as between a devisee and the executor, things permanently annexed to the realty at the time of the testator's death pass to the devisee,—his right to fixtures being similar to that of a vendee; 2 B. & C. 80; Ferrard, Fixt. 246. Tapestry which has been cut and pieced so as to cover the walls of a room and the space left by the doors and mantelpiece, and was nailed to wooden buttons let into the plaster and nailed to the brick work, passed as a fixture under the devise of the mansion-house; [1896] 2 Ch. 497; see also 3 L. R. Eq. 382, where, under a will, tapestry, pictures, and frames filled with satin and attached to the walls, and also statues, figures, vases, and stone garden seats set in place by the testator who was tenant for life, which were essentially part of the house or the architectural designs of the building or grounds, however fastened, were fixtures, and could not be removed, but glasses and pictures not in panels, not being part of the building, were not fixtures.

Tapestries fixed by a tenant for life to the walls of a house and easily removable therefrom do not pass to the remainderman; [1901] 1 Ch. 523, affirmed [1902] App. Cas. 157; where a life tenant leases the premises and covenants with his tenant to purchase all additional machinery added thereto, which he does, at the expiration of the term for years, on his death, his widow is entitled to the machinery as against the remainderman; [1905] 1 Ch. 406.

Where a husband, managing his wife's property as her agent, voluntarily, at his own expense, places thereon a boiler, engine, and connections for furnishing power, and subsequently joins his wife in executing a mortgage on the land, the boiler and engine are not trade fixtures, and the husband, as against the purchasers at sheriff's sale on proceeding, under the mortgage, has no right to remove them; Albert v. Uhrich, 180 Pa. 283, 36 Atl. 745.

But as between a landlord and his tenant the strictness of the ancient rule has been much relaxed. The rule here is understood to be that a tenant, whether for life, for years, or at will, may sever at any time before the expiration of his tenancy, and carry away all such fixtures of a chattel nature as he has himself erected upon the demised premises for the purposes of ornament, domestic convenience, or to carry on trade; provided, always, that the removal can be effected without material injury to the freehold; Beers v. St. John, 16 Day (Conn.) 322; Pemberton v. King, 13 N. C. 376; Fairis v. Walker, 1 Bail. (S. Car.) 541; Ombony v. Jones, 19 N. Y. 234; Harkey v. Cain, 69 Tex. 146, 6 S. W. 637; Atchison, T. & S. F. R. Co. v. Morgan, 42 Kan. 23, 21 Pac. 809, 4 L. R. A. 284, 16 Am. St. Rep. 471; Powell v. Bergner, 47 Ill. App. 33; and this is so whether it be made of wood or brick; Wiggins Ferry Co. v. R. Co., 142 U. S. 396, 12 Sup. Ct. 188, 35 L. Ed. 1055. There have been adjudications to this effect with respect to bakers' ovens; salt pans; carding-machines; cider mills and furnaces; steam-engines; soap-boilers' vats and copper stills; mill-stones; Dutch barns standing on a foundation of brick-work set into the ground; a varnish-house built upon a similar foundation, with a chimney; and to a ball-room, erected by the lessee of an inn, resting upon stone posts slightly imbedded in the soil; and also in regard to things ornamental or for domestic convenience: as, furnaces; stoves; cupboards and shelves; bells and bell-pulls; gas-fixtures; portable hot-air furnace; Towne v. Fiske, 127 Mass. 125, 34 Am. Rep. 353; Heysham v. Dettre, 89 Pa. 506; Brown v. Power Co., 55 Fed. 229; pier and chimney-glasses, although attached to the wall with screws; marble chimney-pieces; grates; window-blinds and curtains. The decisions, however, are adverse to the removal of hearth-stones, doors, windows, locks and keys; because such things are peculiarly adapted to the house in which they are affixed; also, to all such substantial additions to the premises as conservatories, greenhouses (except those of a professional gardener), stable, pig-styes and other out-houses, shrubbery and flowers planted in a garden. Nor has the privilege been extended to erections for agricultural purposes; though it is difficult to perceive why such fixtures should stand upon a less favored basis than trade fixtures, when the relative importance of the two arts is considered; Tayl. Landl. & Ten. § 544; 3 East 38; McCullough v. Irvine's Ex'rs, 13 Pa. 438. But some American authorities question the correctness of the doctrine; Van Ness v. Pacard, 2 Pet. (U. S.) 137, 7 L. Ed. 374; Holmes v. Tremper, 20 Johns. (N. Y.) 29, 11 Am. Dec. 238; 2 Ferard, Fixt. 60. A railroad company, occupying land under an agreement, on the termination of such, may remove the rails which have been laid; Wiggins Ferry Co. v. R. Co., 142 U. S. 396, 12 Sup. Ct. 188, 35 L. Ed. 1055.

Ordinary trade fixtures removable without material injury do not pass to the landlord by act of renewing the term; Smusch v. Kohn, 22 Misc. 344, 49 N. Y. Supp. 176; Bernheimer v. Adams, 70 App. Div. 114, 73 N. Y. Supp. 93; contra, Ogden v. Garrison, 82 Neb. 302, 117 N. W. 714, 17 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1135; Precht v. Howard, 187 N. Y. 136, 79 N. E. 847, 9 L. R. A. (N. S.) 483; Wadman v. Burke, 147 Cal. 351, 81 Pac. 1012, 1 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1192, 3 Ann. Cas. 330, where the tenant renewed without expressly reserving to himself the right to the fixtures installed by him. When the lessee is in bankruptcy, the trade fixtures ordinarily go to his trustee as against the lessor; Montello Brick Co. v. Trexler, 167 Fed. 482, 93 C. C. A. 118.

The time for exercising the right of removal is a matter of some importance. A tenant for years may remove them at any time during his term and afterwards, if he is in possession and holding over rightfully; 7 M. & W. 14; Merritt v. Judd, 14 Cal. 59; Allen v. Kennedy, 40 Ind. 142; Brown v. Power Co., 55 Fed. 229. But tenants for life or at will, having uncertain interests in the land, have, after the determination of their estates not occasioned by their own fault, a reasonable time within which to remove their fixtures; 3 Atk. 13; Ombony & Dain v. Jones, 19 N. Y. 238; Antoni v. Belknap, 102 Mass. 193; but a tenant at will whose tenancy can only be terminated after reasonable notice, has not this privilege; Erickson v. Jones, 37 Minn. 459, 35 N. W. 267.

If a tenant quits possession of the land without removing such fixtures as he is entitled to, the property in them immediately vests in the landlord, and though they are subsequently severed, the tenant's right to them does not revive; 1 B. & Ad. 394; 2 M. & W. 450; Childs v. Hurd, 32 W. Va. 66, 9 S. E. 362; L. R. 8 Eq. 626; but it is said that a person claiming under a tenant may apparently have more time for removal than the tenant; see [1904] 1 Ch. 819. The rights of parties with respect to particular articles are sometimes regulated by local customs, especially as between outgoing and incoming tenants; and in cases of this kind it becomes a proper criterion by which to determine the character of the article, and whether it is a fixture or not.

FLAG. A symbol of nationality carried by soldiers, ships, etc., and used in many places where such a symbol is necessary or proper.

Nationality is determined by the flag when all other requisites are complied with; 5 East 398; 3 B. & P. 201; 1 C. Rob. Adm. 1; 1 Dodds. Adm. 81, 131; The Nereide, 9 Cra. (U. S.) 388, 3 L. Ed. 769.

A ship navigating under the flag and pass of a foreign country is to be considered as bearing the national character of the country under whose flag she sails; Wheat. Int. L., 3d Eng. ed. § 340.

A cargo documented as foreign property in the same manner as the ship by which it is carried, and covered by a foreign flag, is not, under the English rule, the subject of capture; 5 Rob. Rep. 2; id. 5, note. In that country, although the ship is held to be bound by the character imposed upon it by the authority of the government from which all the documents issue, yet goods which have no dependence upon the authority of the state may be differently considered; and if the goods be laden in time of peace, though sailing under a foreign flag, they are not subjects of capture; id.; but these licenses are construed with great liberality in the British courts of admiralty; Stew. Vice. Adm. 360.

The doctrine of the courts in this country has been very strict as to this point, and it has been frequently decided that sailing under the license and passport of protection of the enemy in furtherance of his views and interests was, without regard to the object of the voyage or the port of destination, such an act of illegality as subjected both ship and cargo to confiscation as prize of war; The Julia, 8 Cra. (U. S.) 181, 3 L. Ed. 528; The Aurora, 8 Cra. (U. S.) 203, 3 L. Ed. 536; The Hiram, 8 Cra. (U. S.) 444, 3 L. Ed. 619; The Ariadne, 2 Wheat. (U. S.) 143, 4 L. Ed. 205; The Sybil, 4 Wheat. (U. S.) 100, 4 L. Ed. 522. These decisions placed the objection to such licenses on the ground of pacific dealing with an enemy and as amounting to a contract that the party to whom the license is given should, for that voyage, withdraw himself from the war and enjoy the repose and blessings of peace. The illegality of such intercourse was strongly condemned; and it was held that, the moment a vessel sailed on a voyage with an enemy's license on board, the offence was irrevocably committed and consummated, and that the delictum was not done away even by the termination of the voyage, but the vessel and cargo might be seized after arrival in a port of the United States and condemned as lawful prize. See 1 Kent 85, 164; Wheat. Int. L. (3d Eng. ed.) 340.

By the rules of the United States Navy the use of a foreign flag to deceive an enemy is permissible, but it must be hauled down before a shot is fired, and under no circumstances will it be allowable to commence an action or to fight a battle without the display of the national flag; Snow, Int. L. 96.

Law of the Flag. An expression applied to the municipal law of the country to which a ship belongs of which the flag is the symbol, when that law is resorted to in preference to the lex loci contractus for the construction and effect of a contract or the determination of a liability affecting the ship or her cargo.

The law of the flag is "to regulate the liabilities and regulations which arise among the parties to the agreement, be it of affreightment or by hypothecation, upon this principle, that the ship-owner who sends his vessel into a foreign port gives a notice by his flag to all who enter into contracts with the shipmaster, that he intends the law of that flag to regulate those contracts, and that they must either submit to its operation or not contract with him or his agent at all;" Foote, Priv. Int. L. 408; and in England this rule is usually followed, the tendency being that, in the absence of indication of the intention of the parties, the presumption is in favor of the law of the ship's flag; Scrutton, Chart. Part. 11; but in 3 Moo. P. C. N. S. 272; Liverpool & G. W. S. Co. v. Ins. Co., 129 U. S. 397, 9 Sup. Ct. 469, 32 L. Ed. 788; 12 Q. B. D. 589; 10 id. 540, it was held that the lex loci contractus must prevail. In his treatise on merchant shipping (3d ed. 170) MacLachlin thus states the rule as to the effect of the law of the flag on the authority of the master. "The agency of the master is devolved upon him by the law of the flag. The same law that confers his authority, ascertains its limits, and the flag at the mast-head is notice to all the world of the extent of such power to bind the owners or freighters by his act. The foreigner who deals with this agent has notice of that law, and, if he be bound by it, there is no injustice. His notice is the national flag which is hoisted on every sea and under which the master sails into every port, and every circumstance that connects him with the vessel isolates that vessel in the eyes of the world, and demonstrates his relation to the owners and freighters as their agent for a specific purpose and with power well defined under the national maritime law;" id.; this was suggested by the author quoted as a possible explanation of the apparently anomalous exception of bottomry bonds from the general rule that the lex loci contractus prevails.

This rule was followed in Lloyd v. Guibert, where the question was as to the master's authority to bind the ship-owner; L. R. 1 Q. B. 115; s. c. 6 B. & S. 100, and 33 L. J. Q. B. 245; s. c. on appeal 35 id. 74; 6 B. & S. 120.

In this case, in the Queen's Bench, Blackburn, J., in language almost exactly following that above quoted, applied the law of the flag (French), which did not recognize a personal liability of the owner in a bottomry bond, as against the lex loci contractus (Danish), or the laws of the place of performance (English), or those of the place when the cargo was loaded (Haytien). The court, after noting the "singular absence of authority," said that two American cases had been cited; Arayo v. Currel, 1 La. 528, 20 Am. Dec. 286, and Pope v. Nickerson, 3 Sto. 465, Fed. Cas. No. 11,274, adding that "neither of these decisions is binding on us, but we have derived very great assistance from them." As to the last of these cases there follows this comment: "The very learned judgment of Mr. Justice Story just referred to affords a complete answer to a plausible argument in which was suggested that the general maritime law clothed the master with power to bind his owners absolutely, and that the municipal law of the owner's country was analogous to secret restrictions in the ostensible authority of a partner or other agent clothed with general power." In the Exchequer Chamber, where the judgment was affirmed, Willes, J., said: "The general rule, that where the contract of affreightment does not provide otherwise, there, as between the parties to such contract, in respect of sea damage and its incidents, the law of the ship should govern, seems to be not only in accordance with the probable intention of the parties, but also most consistent and intelligible, and therefore most convenient to those engaged in commerce." The same doctrine was applied by the English Court of Appeal to the master's control over the cargo as well as the ship, by Brett, L. J., in L. R. 7 P. D. 137; by Dr. Lushington in Br. & L. 38, and in a later case by Sir J. Hannen, who sustained a sale of part of a damaged cargo, where it was shown by the result to have been unnecessary, such sale being authorized by the law of the flag; [1891] Prob. 328. But see Malpica v. McKown, 1 La. 249, 20 Am. Dec. 279; Arayo v. Currel, 1 La. 528, 20 Am. Dec. 286, where the lex loci contractus was held to prevail.

In Pope v. Nickerson, 3 Sto. 465, Fed. Cas. No. 11,274, although the law of the flag was, in fact, enforced, the decision cannot be said to have followed the rule laid down by MacLachlin, as in that case the particular point decided was as to liability of the owner to the freighter, when the former was a citizen of a state the laws of which did not recognize such liabilities, while by the law of the state in which the freighter resided and also of the foreign port where the cargo was shipped, such a liability existed, and the lex domicilii of the ship-owners was held to govern the contract. See also The Virgin v. Vythius, 8 Pet. (U. S.) 8 L. Ed. 1036; BOTTOMRY.

As to the effect of the law of the flag upon the construction of a contract of af-freightment, the decisions in this country as a rule are usually governed by the lex loci contractus. In The Brantford City (S. D. of N. Y.) 29 Fed. 373, 383, Brown, J., thus stated this rule: "The 'law of the flag' . . . does not embody any rule of legal construction. Literally, it is but a concise phrase to express a simple fact, namely, the law of the country to which the ship belongs, and whose flag she bears, whether it accords with the general maritime law or not. In so far, however, as the law of the flag does not represent the general maritime law, it is but the municipal law of the ship's home. It has, therefore, no force abroad, except by comity. But foreign law is not adopted by comity, unless some good reason appear in the particular case why it should be preferred to the law of the former. The most frequent and controlling reasons are the actual or presumed intent of the parties or the evident justice of the case arising from its special circumstances."

On this ground, the law of the ship's home is applied by comity, to regulate the mutual relations of the ship, her owner, master, and crew, as among themselves; their liens for wages, and modes of discipline; 1 W. Rob. 35; The Enterprise, 1 Low. 455, Fed. Cas. No. 4,498; Covert v. The Wexford, 3 Fed. 577; The J. L. Pendergast, 29 Fed. 127. For the same reason it is also applied, by comity, to torts on the high seas, as between vessels of the same nation, or vessels of different nations subject to similar laws, though not if they are subject to different laws; The Scotland, 105 U. S. 24, 26 L. Ed. 1001. Independently of the intent of the parties, the law of the flag has no application to cases of tort, as between ships or persons of different nationalities and conflicting laws; and federal law, by which stipulations of a common carrier exempting him from the consequence of his own negligence are held to be against public policy and void, is controlling in suits brought here upon shipments made here on board foreign ships under bills of lading signed by foreign masters, though such stipulations be valid by the law of the ship's flag. The Brantford City, 29 Fed. 373.

This case is expressly approved by the supreme court in a case upon the same point, which is the leading American case upon this branch of the subject; Liverpool & G. W. S. Co. v. Ins. Co., 129 U. S. 397, 461, 9 Sup. Ct. 469, 32 L. Ed. 788. See comments on this case by the circuit court of appeals; Phinney v. Ins. Co., 67 Fed. 493. The contrary view, under almost identical circumstances, was held in the case of The Missouri and the doctrine of Lloyd v. Guibert was held to extend to this particular point; 41 Ch. Div. 321. Where both the law of the flag and the lex loci contractus were British, the law of England was held to govern the contract; The Carib Prince, 63 Fed. 266; The Majestic, 60 Fed. 627, 9 C. C. A. 161, 23 L. R. A. 746, affirming 56 Fed. 247. In a shipment of goods in England, in an English vessel, on an ordinary bill of lading, the liability of the vessel is to be determined according to the law of the place of shipment, as the law of the flag; The Titania, 19 Fed. 101. So also where the bill of lading was made expressly subject to "a live stock contract," and there was an express provision in that contract that all questions relating to the bill of lading should be determined by British law; The Oranmore, 24 Fed. 922. But the circuit court of appeals, in a similar case, where the bill of lading contained the "so-called flag clause" (that liability should be determined by the law of England, but there was no reference to this in the charter, made in this country), held it no evidence to modify the latter and that it was ineffective to substitute the law of the flag for the lex loci contractus with respect to the stipulation for exemption from liability for negligence; The Energia, 66 Fed. 607, 13 C. C. A. 653, affirming 56 Fed. 126.

Generally it may be said that the doctrine of The Missouri is in conflict with the current of authority in England, it being usually held in that country that as to such stipulations in the bill of lading, the lex loci contractus prevails; 9 Q. B. D. 118; 10 id. 521, 540; 12 id. 596; 3 Moo. P. C. N. S. 272; and to the same effect and under precisely similar circumstances is a judgment of the court of cassation in France, imperfectly stated in a note to the case last cited and fully reported in 75 Journal du Palais (1864) 225, and see 1 Dalloz 449. This question, it may be remarked, is as yet scarcely to be considered as settled by any hard-and-fast rule of law, and the only certain guide, says Bowen, L. J. (12 Q. B. D. 589), "is to be found in applying sound ideas of business, convenience, and sense to the language of the contract itself with a view to discovering from it the true intention of the parties."

Although each party has the right to send such a flag, there is no obligation on the commander of the enemy's forces to receive it; Snow, Int. L. 96; although it is usual to do so except in very exceptional cases; Davis, Int. L. 238; but if he receive the flag he may take all reasonable precautions to protect himself from any injury that may result from the presence of an enemy within his lines; he may detain the messenger at the outposts or may cause him to be blindfolded, but such messenger is entitled, if the bearer of a bona fide message, to complete inviolability of person; but during an engagement, firing is not necessarily to cease on the appearance of a flag of truce, unless it be made clear that it is exhibited as a token of submission; Snow, Int. L. 97. The rules of war justly forbid the sending of flags of truce for the purpose of obtaining information either directly or indirectly, and a messenger forfeits his inviolability of person and may be detained and subjected to punishment as a spy if he take advantage of his mission to abet an act of treachery. The more important of the foregoing rules have now been embodied in Articles 32, 33, 34 of the Convention Concerning the Laws and Customs of War on Land, adopted by The Hague Peace-Conference in 1907, which were substantially a re-statement of the rules laid down in the Draft of an International Declaration Concerning the Laws and Customs of War, signed by the delegates to the Brussels Convention of 1874, but never ratified by their governments. II Opp. 278-282.

In naval operations the senior officer alone is authorized to dispatch or admit flags of truce. The firing of a gun from the senior officer's vessel is generally understood as a warning to approach no nearer. The flag of truce should be met at a suitable distance by a boat or vessel in charge of a commissioned officer having a white flag plainly displayed from the time of leaving until her return, and the same precautions must be observed in dispatching such a flag; Snow, Int. L. 97.

FLAG OF THE UNITED STATES. By the act entitled "An act to establish the flag of the United States," passed April 4, 1818, 3 Story, U. S. Laws 1667, it is enacted—

§ 1. That from and after the fourth day of July next, the flag of the United States be thirteen horizontal stripes, alternate red and white; that the union be twenty stars, white in a blue field.

§ 2. That, on the admission of every new state into the Union, one star be added to the union of the flag; and that such addition shall take effect on the fourth day of July then next succeeding such admission. See Preble, Hist. of Amer. Flag.

It has been held in an unreported case in Illinois that a statute requiring the national flag to be floated over every school-house during school hours is unconstitutional, on the ground that it transcended the police power of the state, Wright, J., contending that the legislature could not enact a statute with penal sanctions unless it had for its object "the maintenance of the police authority of the state, the morals of the state, or the health of the state. The question that arose in this case was whether, in a group of college buildings, each building was compelled to display a separate flag, and the decision that one flag floated from a flagstaff for the group of buildings, was not a compliance with the law is severely criticised in 30 Am. L. Rev. 746.

A state statute (Nebraska), punishing the desecration of the flag and its use for advertising purposes, is not invalid although it excepts periodicals, etc., in which it is used unconnected with advertising matter; Halter v. Nebraska, 205 U. S. 34, 27 Sup. Ct. 419, 51 L. Ed. 696. But in Rubstrat v. People, 185 Ill. 133, 57 N. E. 41, 49 L. R. A. 181, 76 Am. St. Rep. 30, a like statute was held invalid as not being a proper exercise of the police power. In People v. Van De Carr, 178 N. Y. 423, 70 N. E. 965, 66 L. R. A. 189, 102 Am. St. Rep. 516, a flag act was held invalid as applied to property in existence when it went into effect. The act of congress of Feb. 20, 1905, forbids the grant of a trademark bearing the simulation of the United States flag.

FLAGELLAT. Whipped; scourged. An entry on old Scotch records. 1 Pitt. Crim. Tr. pt. 1, p. 7.

FLAGRANS (Lat.). Burning; raging; in actual perpetration. Flagrante bello, while war is actually in progress. Flagrant necessity, an urgent and immediate peril or emergency which will excuse an act under other circumstances unlawful.

FLAGRANS CRIMEN. In Roman Law. A term denoting that a crime is being or has just been committed: for example, when a crime has just been committed and the corpus delictum is publicly exposed, or if a mob take place, or if a house be feloniously burned, these are severally flagrans crimen.

The term used in France is flagrant délit. The Code of Criminal Instruction gives the following concise definition of it, art. 41: "Le délit qui se commet actuellement ou qui vient de se commettre, est un flagrant délit."

FLAGRANTE DELICTO (Lat.). In the very act of committing the crime. 4 Bla. Com. 307.

FLAT. When used as a description of anything respecting an arm of the sea, it means a level place over which the water stands or flows. Church v. Meeker, 34 Conn. 424.

A floor or separate division of a floor, fitted for housekeeping and designed to be occupied by a single family. Cent. Dict.

A building, the various floors of which are fitted up as flats, either residential or business.

A flat is in law a house, though in fact only a part of one in the ordinary sense; L. R. 8 Q. B. D. 423; and the contract between the owner and the occupier is classed among "contracts for permissive use." Holland, Jur. 254.

The owner of a building who rents flats therein retains control of all portions not actually demised to tenants; [1893] Q. B. 177; Inhabitants of Milford v. Holbrook, 9 Allen (Mass.) 17, 85 Am. Dec. 735; he is bound to keep such portions in a reasonable state of repair, and a failure so to do renders him liable in damages; Quinn v. Perham, 151 Mass. 162, 23 N. E. 735; Sawyer v. McGilleuddy, 81 Me. 318, 17 Atl. 124, 3 L. R. A. 458, 10 Am. St. Rep. 260; Dollard v. Roberts, 130 N. Y. 269, 29 N. E. 104, 14 L. R. A. 238; 3 C. P. 326; but the owner is not an insurer, and when he has constructed his roofs, pipes, or drains with the reasonable foresight commonly exercised by prudent men, he will not be responsible for a latent defect or an unusual stress of circumstances; L. R. 6 Ex. 217; Fitch v. Armour, 14 N. Y. Supp. 319; 5 Q. B. D. 602. Where the upper rooms only are leased, a covenant is implied on the part of the lessor to give such rooms the necessary support; Graves v. Berdan, 26 N. Y. 498; Ward v. Fagan, 28 Mo. App. 116; and he is under a negative duty to do nothing to lessen or decrease such support, or to render it insecure; Judd v. Cushing, 50 Hun 181, 2 N. Y. Supp. 836; Butler v. Cushing, 46 Hun (N. Y.) 521.

As to elevator service, see ELEVATOR.

As regards the furnishing of artificial light in halls and passage-ways, it has been held that in the absence of contractual obligation there is no legal duty on the part of the owner to furnish such light; Hilsenbeck v. Guhring, 131 N. Y. 674, 30 N. E. 580; contra, Marwedel v. Cook, 154 Mass. 235, 28 N. E. 140.

The janitor, being controlled by the owner, is, when engaged in the discharge of his general duties, the landlord's servant. Any particular tenant may sue the owner for damages, if the general services so contracted for are not rendered, but when a janitor is engaged by a tenant on some special service, such tenant becomes dominus pro tempore, and as such he incurs a liability similar to the landlord's; so when he attempts to interfere with or assume the direction of the janitor when the latter is discharging any general duty. See [1893] 1 Ch. 1. In either case his duties and liabilities are regulated by the general principles of the law of Master and Servant.

The distinction between the tenants of flats and lodgers and guests at a hotel is, that while the latter may have the exclusive enjoyment of their lodgings or rooms, they have not, as have the tenants of flats, the exclusive possession; 30 L. J. M. C. 74.

See, generally, APARTMENT; LEASE; LANDLORD AND TENANT.

FLAVIANUM JUS (Lat.). A treatise on civil law, which takes its name from its author, Cneius Flavius. It contains forms of actions. Vicat, Voc. Jur.

FLEDUTE. A discharge or freedom from amercements where one having been an outlawed fugitive cometh to the place of our lord of his own accord. Termes de la Ley.

The liberty to hold court and take up the amercements for beating and striking. Cowell.

The fine set on a fugitive as the price of obtaining the king's freedom. Spelman, Gloss.

FLEDWITE. A discharge from amercements where one having been a fugitive came to peace with the king of own accord or with license. Termes de la Ley; Cun. L. Dict. But some authorities add to this definition a quære whether it is not rather a fine set upon a fugitive to be allowed to return to the king's place. Cowell; Holthouse.

FLEE FROM JUSTICE. To leave one's home, residence, or known place of abode, or to conceal one's self therein, with intent in either case to avoid detection or punishment for some public offence. State v. Washburn, 48 Mo. 240; U. S. v. O'Brian, 3 Dill. 381, Fed. Cas. No. 15,908.

FLEET. A place of running water where the tide or float comes up.

A famous prison in London, so called from a river or ditch which was formerly there, on the side of which it stood. It was used especially for debtors and bankrupts, and persons charged with contempt of the courts of chancery, exchequer, and common pleas. Abolished in 1842 and pulled down in 1845. Such persons as had been sent there were thereafter sent to the Marshalsea. Moz. & W.; Hayden's Dict. Dates.

FLEET MARRIAGES. There were in the neighborhood of the Fleet prison about sixty marriage houses, some of which were public houses and others not. They were known by having a sign-board, with joined hands, in addition to the public house sign. At the doors of these houses persons called Pliers solicited the passers-by to come in and be married, and in these houses persons who were, or pretended to be, clergymen performed the marriage ceremony and made entries in registers that were kept at the respective houses. There is little doubt that many entries had false dates, that persons who were married personated others, and that women who wished to plead a plea of coverture or hide their shame were married to men who, for a trifling gratuity, married any woman who would pay them, though they had previously married others. Such marriages also took place in the neighborhood of the King's Bench prison, at the Savoy, in the Mint, in the Borough, and at the Mayfair Chapel.

It is said in 1 Peake N. P. C. 303, that a marriage in the Fleet was considered at that time good and legal. In 8 Carr. & P. 581 (34 E. C. L. R.), Patteson, J., said: "I shall not receive the Fleet Registry in evidence for any purpose whatever." They were refused in 1 Peake N. P. C. 303. A collection of over a thousand Fleet registers have been deposited in the Registry of the Bishop of London.

See extracts from these registers and a historical note in 34 E. C. L. R. 534; Burns, Fleet Registers.

FLEM. A fugitive bondman or villein. Spelman. The possession of the goods of such fugitives was called Flemeswite. Fleta, lib. 1, c. 147.

FLET. A house or home. Cowell.

FLETA. The title of an ancient lawbook, supposed to have been written by a judge while confined in the Fleet Prison; written about 1290.

It is written in Latin, and is divided into six books. The author lived in the reigns of Edward II. and Edward III. See lib. 2, cap. 66, § Item quod nullus; lib. 1, cap. 20, § que caperunt; 10 Coke, pref. Edward II. was crowned A. D. 1306. Edward III. was crowned 1326, and reigned till A. D. 1377. During this period the English law was greatly improved, and the lawyers and judges were very learned. Hale, Hist. Comm. Law 162; 4 Bla. Com. 427, says of this work "that it was for the most part law until the alteration of tenures took place." The same remark he applies to Britton and Hengham. "It is little better than an ill-arranged epitome." 1 Poll. & M. Hist. Engl. Law 188. "The nebulous Fleta." 21 L. Q. R. 393.

FLICHWITE. A fine on account of brawls or quarrels. Spel. Gloss.

FLIGHT. The evading the course of justice by a man's voluntarily withdrawing himself. Formerly, if the jury found that the party fled for it, whether he were found guilty or not of the principal charge, he forfeited his goods and chattels. 4 Bla. Com. 387. Evidence of the flight of an accused person has a tendency to establish guilt; Allen v. U. S., 164 U. S. 492, 17 Sup. Ct. 154, 41 L. Ed. 528. See FUGITIVE FROM JUSTICE; EXTRADITION.

FLIGHTWITE. The same as FLEDWITE (q. v.).

FLOAT. A certificate authorizing the party possessing it to enter a certain amount of public land. Marks v. Dickson, 20 How. (U. S.) 504, 15 L. Ed. 1002.

A Mexican grant of quantity, as of a certain number of leagues of land lying within a larger tract, whose boundaries are given, is a float, subject to location within the tract by the government before it can attach to any specific lands; Carr v. Quigley, 149 U. S. 652, 13 Sup. Ct. 961, 37 L. Ed. 885; U. S. v. McLaughlin, 127 U. S. 428, 8 Sup. Ct. 1177, 32 L. Ed. 213.

FLOATABLE. A stream capable of floating logs, etc., is said to be floatable. Moore v. Sanborne, 2 Mich. 519, 59 Am. Dec. 209.

FLOATING CAPITAL. Capital retained for the purpose of meeting current expenditure.

It includes raw materials destined for fabrication, such as wool and flax products in the warehouses of merchants or manufacturers; such as cloth or linen and money for wages and stores. De Laveleye, Pol. Ec.

FLOATING DEBT. That mass of lawful and valid claims against a corporation, for the payment of which there is no money in the corporate treasury specifically designed, nor any system of taxation or other means of providing money to pay, particularly provided. People v. Wood, 71 N. Y. 374.

FLODEMARK. High-tide mark. Blount. The mark which the sea at highest tides makes upon the shore. And. 189; Cunningham.

FLOGGING. Thrashing or beating with a whip or lash. This system of punishment was abolished in the army by act of Aug. 5, 1861; U. S. Rev. Stat. § 1342; in the navy June 6, 1872; id. § 1642. See WHIPPING.

FLOOD. An inundation of water over land not usually covered by it. Such an accident is an Act of God. McHenry v. R. Co., 4 Harr. (Del.) 449. See ACT OF GOD.

FLOOR. The section of a building between horizontal planes. Lowell v. Strahan, 145 Mass. 8, 12 N. E. 401, 1 Am. St. Rep. 422. In a lease the words "first floor" are equivalent to the "first story" of a building and include the walls unless other words control the meaning; Lowell v. Strahan, 145 Mass. 8, 12 N. E. 401, 1 Am. St. Rep. 422.

FLORENTINE PANDECTS. A name applied to a copy of the Pandects erroneously said to have been discovered at Amalfi, Italy, but afterwards removed to Florence. See CIVIL LAW.

FLORIDA. The name of one of the states of the United States of America, being the fourteenth admitted to the Union. It was discovered by Ponce de Leon in 1513; settled by Huguenots in 1562, and permanently settled by Spaniards at St. Augustine in 1565; and ceded to Great Britain in 1763, to Spain in 1783, and to United States in 1819. The Americans took possession in 1821.

It was admitted into the Union in 1845 by virtue of the act of congress entitled: "An act for the admission of the states of Iowa and Florida into the Union," approved March 3, 1845, and the present constitution was adopted Feb. 25, 1868, and amended in 1896.

July 1, 1911, Article XIX amended, prohibiting sale and manufacture of intoxicating liquors.

FLORIN (called also Guilder). A coin, originally made at Florence.

The name formerly applied to coins, both of gold and silver, of different values in different countries. In many parts of Germany, the florin, which is still the integer or money-unit in those countries, was formerly a gold piece, value about two dollars and forty-two cents. It afterwards became a silver coin, variously rated at from forty to fifty-six cents, according to locality; but by the German conventions of 1837 and 1838 the rate of nine-tenths fine and one hundred and sixty-three and seven-tenths grains troy per piece was adopted, making the value forty-one cents. This standard is the only one now used in Germany; and the florin or guilder of the Netherlands is, also, coined at nearly the same standard (weight, one hundred and sixty-six grains; fineness, eight hundred and ninety-six thousandths), the value being the same. The florin of Tuscany is only twenty-seven cents in value.

FLOTAGES. Things which float by accident on the sea or great rivers. Blount.

The commissions of water-bailiffs. Cunningham, Law Dict.

FLOTSAM, FLOTSAN. A name for the goods which float upon the sea when cast overboard for the safety of the ship, or when a ship is sunk. Distinguished from Jetsam and Ligan. Bracton, lib. 2, c. 5; 5 Co. 106; Comyns, Dig. Wreck, A; Bacon, Abr. Court of Admiralty, B; 1 Bla. Com. 292. See JERTISON; LIGAN.

FLOOD-MARKE. Flode-mark, which see.

FLOWAGE. The natural flowage of water from an upper estate to a lower one is a servitude which the owner of the latter must bear, though the flowage be not in a natural watercourse with well defined banks; Leidlein v. Meyer, 95 Mich. 586, 55 N. W. 367; Ogburn v. Connor, 46 Cal. 346, 13 Am. Rep. 213; Gray v. McWilliams, 98 Cal. 157, 32 Pac. 976, 21 L. R. A. 593, 35 Am. St. Rep. 163. Where one drains water from his land into the highway, causing another's crops to be damaged by flowage through a drain connected with the highway, he is liable; Larkin v. Lamping, 44 Ill. App. 649. See EMINENT DOMAIN; RIPARIAN RIGHTS; WATER; WATERCOURSE.

FLOWING LANDS. Raising and settling back water on another's land by a dam placed across a stream or watercourse which is the natural drain and outlet for the surplus water on such land. Call v. Com'rs of Middlesex County, 2 Gray (Mass.) 235. See EMINENT DOMAIN; WATER; WATERCOURSE.

FLUCTUS. Flood; flood tide. Bracton fol. 255.

FLUMEN (L. Lat.). In Civil Law. The name of a servitude which consists in the right of turning the rain-water, gathered in a spout, on another's land. Erskine, Inst. b. 2, t. 9, n. 9; Vicat, Voc. Jur. See STILLICIDIUM.

FLUMINÆ VOLUCRES. Wild fowl; water fowl. 11 East 571.

FLUVIOUS. A public river; flood tide.

FLY FOR IT. Anciently, it was the custom in a criminal trial to inquire after a verdict, "Did he fly for it?" After the verdict, even if not guilty, forfeiture of goods followed conviction upon such inquiry. Abolished by 7 & 8 Geo. IV. c. 28. Wharton.

FLYING SWITCH. This is made by uncoupling the cars from the locomotive while in motion, and throwing the cars on to the side track, by turning the switch, after the engine has passed it, upon the main track. Greenleaf v. R. Co., 29 Ia. 39, 4 Am. Rep. 181. See RAILROAD.

FLYMA. One escaped from justice; a fugitive. Anc. Inst. Flyman Frymith, was the offence of harboring a fugitive; id.

FOCAGE. Housebote; firebote. Cowell.

FOCALE (L. Lat.). In Old English Law. Firewood. The right of taking wood for the fire. Fire-bote. Cunningham, Law Dict.

FODERTORIUM. Provisions to be paid by custom to the royal purveyors. Cowell.

FODERUM (L. Lat.). Food for horses or other cattle. Cowell.

In feudal law, fodder and supplies provided as a part of the king's prerogative for use in his wars or other expeditions. Cowell.

FŒDUS (Lat.). A league; a compact.

FŒMINA VERO CO-OPERTA. A feme covert.

FŒNERATION. See FENERATION.

FŒNUS NAUTICUM (Lat.). The name given to marine interest.

The amount of such interest is not limited by law, because the lender runs so great a risk of losing his principal. Erskine, Inst. b. 4, t. 4, n. 76. See MARINE INTEREST.

FŒSA. Herbage; grass. Cowell

FŒTICIDE. In Medical Jurisprudence. Of late years this term has been applied to designate the act by which criminal abortion is produced. 1 Beck, Med. Jur. 288; Guy, Med. Jur. 133. See INFANTICIDE.

FŒTURA (L. Lat.). In Civil Law. The produce of animals, and the fruit of other property, which are acquired to the owner of such animals and property by virtue of his right. Bowyer, Mod. C. L. c. 14, p. 81.

FŒTUS (Lat.). In Medical Jurisprudence. An unborn child. An infant in ventre sa mère.

An arbitrary distinction is made by some writers between fœtus and embryo, the latter term being used for the product of conception up to the fourth month of gestation and the former term after the fourth month.

Although it is often important to know the age of the fœtus, there is great difficulty in ascertaining the fact with the precision required in courts of law.

The great difference between children at birth, as regards their weight and size, is an indication of their condition while within the womb, and is a sufficient evidence of the difficulty as to the age of the fœtus by its weight and size at different periods of its existence.

Thousands of healthy infants have been weighed immediately after birth, and the extremes have been found to be two and eighteen pounds. It is very rare indeed to find any weighing as little as two pounds, but by no means uncommon to find them weighing four pounds. So it is with the length, which varies as much as that of the adult does from the average height of the race.

Neither can anything positive be learned from the progress of development; for although the condition of the bones, cartilages, and other parts will generally mark with tolerable accuracy the age of a healthy fœtus, yet an uncertainty will arise when it is found to be unhealthy. It has been clearly proved, by numerous dissections of new-born children, that the fœtus is subject to diseases which interfere with the proper formation of parts, exhibiting traces of previous departure from health, which had interfered with the proper formation of parts and arrested the process of development.

Interesting as the different periods of development may be to the philosophical inquirer, they cannot be of much value in legal inquiries from their extreme uncertainty in denoting precisely the age of the fœtus by unerring conditions.

FOG. Every vessel must, in a fog, mist, falling snow, or heavy rain storm, go at a moderate speed, having careful regard to the existing circumstances and conditions; The Nacôochee, 137 U. S. 330, 11 Sup. Ct. 122, 34 L. Ed. 687. A speed of six miles per hour is excessive for a steamer in a dense fog, where she is emerging from New York harbor and is likely to meet vessels from many points of the compass; The Martello, 153 U. S. 64, 14 Sup. Ct. 723, 38 L. Ed. 637.

The owner of a sailing vessel cannot substitute for the fog-horn which she is required by the sailing regulations to carry, an instrument blown by steam, and in their opinion more efficient than the fog-horn; The Parthian, 55 Fed. 426, 5 C. C. A. 171, 5 U. S. App. 314. See The Martello, 153 U. S. 64, 14 Sup. Ct. 723, 38 L. Ed. 637. A vessel is not properly equipped at sea which has no spare mechanical fog-horn; The Trave, 55 Fed. 117.

A steamer failing to slack its speed in a fog is at fault in case of collision; 5 U. S. App. 314; 1 id. 614; The Lawrence, 54 Fed. 542, 4 C. C. A. 501; The Fulda, 52 Fed. 400; [1892] Prob. 105. See COLLISION.

FOI. In French Feudal Law. Faith; fealty. Guyot, Inst. Feod. c. 2.

FOINISUM. The fawning of deer. Spel. Gloss.

FOITERERS. Vagabonds. Blount.

FOLC-GEMOTE (spelled, also, folk mote, folcmote, folkgemote; from folc, people, and gemote, an assembly).

A general assembly of the people in a town, burgh, or shire.

During the time at which the separate tribal nations of Britain were under the control or supremacy of the kingdoms of Northumbria, York, and West Saxony successively, the term was applied to the concilium of the freeholders of each village. Tacitus calls it the nation assembled in arms. Their meetings were held each fortnight, and the members bound themselves reciprocally to the peaceable behavior of themselves, their families, and their dependents; 2 Burke, Abr. Eng. Hist. ch. 7. They chose their rulers, the folc kings, at this tribal moot, settled matters of unjust trading, the common tillage and pasturage, and all things that concerned the common householder; 1 Soc. Eng. 125, 136. The conqueror so far as possible endeavored to preserve the customs of the people, but with the growth of the royal power the most important questions were referred to the councillors of the king, comprising the bishops, abbots, and eorlmen who succeeded the folc kings in the folks or shires and designated the witenagemote or council of the wise men; this in turn dissolved into the curia regis; Inderwick, King's Peace. About this period the spelling of the word changes from folc-moot to folk-moot. The meeting of the folk-moot was then transferred to London, and was held thrice a year, and the principal duties that devolved upon it were to hear royal proclamations and statutes, to choose mayors and burgesses, and to pronounce upon offenders the sentence of outlawry; 1 Poll. and Maitl. 642. The folk-moot and the witenagemote are said to have been the foundation of the English Parliament. See Stubbs, Sel. Chars. 10-13; Inderwick, King's Peace; Bagehot, Physics and Politics; Manwood, For. Laws; Spelman, Gloss.; De Brady, Gloss.; PARLIAMENT; WITENA-GEMOTE.

FOLC-RIGHT. The common right of all the people. A law common to all the realm, mentioned by King Edward the elder. It is doubtless in the same sense that the phrase common law originated. 1 Bla. Com. 65, 67.

FOLCLAND (Sax.). Land of the people. Spelman, Gloss.

The subject of land-tenure among the Anglo-Saxons is very obscure. Doubtless all land was originally held in common by the tribe or kingdom, and out of this after a time portions of it were disposed of to individuals. Individual ownership was generally designated by the term alod, which comprised original allotments which had the name ethel, and those which were carved out of the common lands by grant or charter. The tenure of the latter was designated by the term bocland, which is described as "land which is held under a book, under a privilege, modelled on Roman precedents, expressed in Latin words, armed with ecclesiastical sanctions, and making for alienation and individualism." 3 Eng. Hist. Rev. 1-17. The folcland which was not granted as bocland could be let out for temporary occupation as laenland. A late theory maintained, in the review quoted, by Dr. Vinogradoff is that folcland indicated an estate, not belonging to the folk, but held by folk-right or customary law, and not subject to disposition of the holder. id.; Medley, Eng. Const. Hist. 16. On this theory the modern copy-holders are termed the historical successors of the owners of folcland; id. 36; Pollock, Land Laws 48. Nothing is certain except that the terms referred to were used, but their precise scope is the merest speculation, and successive writers invent new theories with the freedom which is invited by the lack of definite historical or documentary information. The subject affords ample scope for theorizing, as most of what is written upon the subject is of this character, and it is said that the word folcland is only found technically used three times in Anglo-Saxon documents.

The theory of Vinogradoff above stated is earnestly supported by Maitland (Domesday Book and Beyond). He says, referring to the author cited: "His argument has convinced us: but as it is still new we will take leave to repeat it with some few additions of our own." The subject of book-land and folk-land is elaborately discussed and the three documents in which the latter word occurs, as above stated, are fully described. The conclusion is thus stated: "Land, it would seem, is either book-land or folk-land. Book-land is land held by book, by a royal and ecclesiastical privilege. Folk-land is land held without book, by unwritten title, by the folk-law. 'Folk-land,' is the term which modern historians have rejected in favour of the outlandish alod. The holder of folk-land is a free land owner, though at an early date the king discovers that over him and his land there exists an alienable superiority. Partly by alienations of this superiority, partly perhaps by gifts of land of which the king is himself the owner, book-land is created. Edward's law speaks as though it were dealing with two different kinds of land. But really it is dealing with two different kinds of title . . . the same land might be both book-land and folk-land, the book-land of the minster, the folk-land of the free men who were holding, not indeed 'of' but still 'under' the minster. They or their ancestors had held under the king, but the king had booked their land (which also in a certain sense was his land) to a church. . . . 'Bookland' is a briefer term than 'land held by book-right'; 'folk-land' is a briefer term than 'land held by folk-right.' The same piece of land may be held by book-right and by folk-right; it may be book-land and folk-land too."

FOLD-COURSE. In English Law. Land used as a sheep-walk.

Land to which the sole right of folding the cattle of others is appurtenant: sometimes it means merely such right of folding. The right of folding on another's land, which is called common foldage. Co. Litt. 6 a, note 1; W. Jones 375; Cro. Car. 432; 2 Vent. 139.

FOLD-SOKE. A feudal service which consisted in the obligation of the tenant not to have a fold of his own but to have his sheep lie in the lord's fold. He was said to be consuetus ad foldum, tied to his lord's fold. The basis of this service is thus expressed by a recent writer: "It is manure that the lord wants; the demand for manure has played a large part in the history of the human race." Maitland, Domesday Book 76. In East Anglia the peasants had sheep enough to make this an important social institution; id. 442.

FOLDAGE. A privilege possessed in some places by the lord of a manor, which consists in the right of having his tenants' sheep to feed on his fields, so as to manure the land. The name of foldage is also given in parts of Norfolk to the customary fee paid to the lord for exemption at certain times from this duty. Elton, Com. 45, 46. See FOLD-SOKE.

FOLGARII. Menial servants; followers. Bract.

FOLGERE. In Old English Law. A free-man who has no house or dwelling of his own, but is the follower or retainer of another (heorthfaest), for whom he performs certain predial services. Anc. Inst. Eng.

FOLGERS. Menial servants or followers. Cowell.

FOLGOTH. Official dignity.

FOLIO. A leaf. The references to the writings of the older law-authors are usually made by citing the folio, as it was the ancient custom to number the folio instead of the page, as is done in modern books.

A certain number of words specified by statute as a folio. Wharton. Originating, undoubtedly, in some estimate of the number of words which a folio ought to contain.

In Michigan it has been held that a legal folio is one hundred words; Thornton v. Village of Sturgis, 38 Mich. 639; and that number is generally made a folio by statute; U. S. R. S. § 828.

FOLK-LAND. See FOLC-LAND.

FOLK-MOOT. See FOLC-GEMOTE; WIT-ENA-GEMOTE.

FOLLOWING BASIS. An agreement that an adjustment in general average shall be made on the "following basis," followed by a statement of the amount to be contributed for the valuation of the ship after collision, and the valuation of the freight and the cargo, does not mean that the freight shall be assessed on its gross valuation, but merely that the valuation shall be taken as the foundation upon which the adjustment shall be made according to law; and if the law applicable prescribes that the freight shall be assessed at one half its gross value, as in California, this will prevail. Minor v. Assur. Co., 58 Fed. 801.

FONDS PERDUS. In French Law. Capital is said to be invested à fonds perdus when it is stipulated that in consideration of the payment of an amount as interest, higher than the normal rate, the lender shall be repaid his capital in this manner. The borrower, after having paid the interest during the period determined, is free as regards the capital itself. Arg. Fr. Merc. Law 560.

FOOD AND DRUG ACTS. It is an indictable offence at common law to expose for sale unwholesome provisions; State v. Snyder, 44 Mo. App. 429; and also for a baker to furnish bread in which alum is known by him to have been mixed; Rex v. Dixon, 3 M. & S. 11. Pure food acts, in the interest of public health, are a valid exercise of the police power and are not obnoxious to the XIVth Amendment; Powell v. Com., 114 Pa. 265, 7 Atl. 913, 60 Am. St. Rep. 534, it was held that the use of a harmless preservative cannot be forbidden, and that an act prohibiting the sale of butter containing a preservative, except in certain cases, cannot be sustained as a health regulation, since it does not purport to be such, but is apparently directed against fraudulent practices. The regulation of this subject is generally within the legislative control; Powell v. Com., supra; but it is held that an act forbidding the sale of a harmless article (oleomargarine) is invalid; People v. Marx, 99 N. Y. 386, 2 N. E. 29, 52 Am. Rep. 34; and that if the prohibited article is universally conceded to be so wholesome and innocuous that the courts may take judicial notice of the fact, its sale cannot be prohibited, but if that fact is in dispute, the legislature can regulate or prohibit its sale; City of St. Louis v. Liessing, 190 Mo. 464, 89 S. W. 611, 1 L. R. A. (N. S.) 918, 109 Am. St. Rep. 774, 4 Ann. Cas. 112. An ordinance is valid prohibiting the sale of cream containing less than twenty per cent. of butter fat; State v. Crescent Creamery Co., 83 Minn. 284, 86 N. W. 107, 54 L. R. A. 466, 85 Am. Acts intended to prevent fraud in the sale of impure milk, so far as they prevent the sale of milk offered as pure which does not conform to the prescribed standards, are constitutional; People v. Bowen, 182 N. Y. 1, 74 N. E. 489. No state statute which even affects incidentally interstate commerce is valid if it is repugnant to the federal Food and Drugs Act; Savage v. Jones, 225 U. S. 501, 32 Sup. Ct. 715, 56 L. Ed. 1182.

The principal purpose of the United States Food and Drugs Act of June 30, 1906, is to prohibit adulteration and misbranding. It applies to the introduction into any state or territory or the District of Columbia from any other state or territory or the District of Columbia, or from any foreign country, or shipment to any foreign country, of adulterated or misbranded drugs. It makes the act an offence. No article is included when packed for export to any foreign country according to the specifications or directions of the foreign purchaser, when no substance is used in the preparation or packing thereof in conflict with the laws of the foreign country. Specimens are examined in the bureau of chemistry of the department of agriculture; if found obnoxious to the act, notice is given to the party from whom the sample was obtained, who is given an opportunity to be heard; if it appears that the act has been violated, the secretary of agriculture certifies the fact to the proper United States district attorney, who shall proceed in the federal court to enforce the penalties.

The term "drug," as used in the act, includes "all medicines and preparations recognized in the United States Pharmacopœia or National Formulary for internal or external use, and any substance or mixture of substances intended to be used for the cure, mitigation or prevention of disease of either man or other animals." The term "food" means "all articles used for food, drink, confectionery, or condiment by man or other animals, whether simple, mixed or compound."

What is adulteration is specified at great length in the act. No dealer shall be prosecuted when he can establish a guarantee signed by the wholesaler, jobber or manufacturer or other party residing in the United States, from whom he purchased the articles, to the effect that the article is not adulterated or misbranded. Obnoxious articles, when transported or in unbroken packages, are liable to proceedings and confiscation in the court of the district where found. The articles may be destroyed or may be sold and the proceeds, less costs, paid into the treasury of the United States. The proceedings are by libel conformably as near as may be to those in admiralty, but either party may demand a jury trial.

The act went into effect January 1, 1907. It extends to food for man and all other animals; U. S. v. One Car Load, etc., 188 Fed. 453.

This act is not an exercise of the police power, but is a proper regulation of interstate commerce; Shawnee Milling Co. v. Temple, 179 Fed. 517; U. S. v. 420 Sacks of Flour, 180 Fed. 518. That is the only ground of federal control; U. S. v. J. L. Hopkins & Co., 199 Fed. 649.

This statute, making it a criminal offence to sell articles so misbranded, was held valid as to one who sold and delivered such goods within the state, since it enabled an innocent purchaser, relying on the false certificate, to sell the same in interstate commerce; U. S. v. Specialty Co., 175 Fed. 299.

The act is not void for uncertainty because no standard of quality is prescribed, but the determination of the standard is left to the courts; U. S. v. 420 Sacks of Flour, 180 Fed. 518.

There can be no seizure by a private person and no seizure prior to the institution of proceedings; U. S. v. Two Barrels of Desiccated Eggs, 185 Fed. 302.

Such misbranded goods may be confiscated after they have reached their destination, while they are in the original unbroken packages; Hipolite Egg Co. v. U. S., 220 U. S. 45, 31 Sup. Ct. 364, 55 L. Ed. 364.

The preliminary examination by the department of agriculture of a food or drug product is not a necessary condition precedent for the filing of a libel for the condemnation thereof; U. S. v. 50 Barrels of Whisky, 165 Fed. 966; U. S. v. Morgan, 222 U. S. 274, 32 Sup. Ct. 81, 56 L. Ed. 198.

Proceedings are by libel in the district court, the practice conforming as nearly as may be to admiralty practice; the review is by writ of error; Four Hundred and Forty-Three Cans of Frozen Egg Product v. U. S., 226 U. S. 172, 33 Sup. Ct. 50, 57 L. Ed. 174.

As to the definition of original packages, the following have been held to be such under other acts: Single bottles of beer and whiskey sealed in pasteboard or wooden boxes; In re Beine, 42 Fed. 546; Guckenheimer v. Sellers, 81 Fed. 997. These instances are given as perhaps the minimum; more elaborate packages might therefore be held within the definition. See ORIGINAL PACKAGE.

In U. S. v. Johnson, 221 U. S. 488, 31 Sup. Ct. 627, 55 L. Ed. 823, it was held under the act of 1906 that the act was aimed at false statements as to identity, possibly including strength, quality and purity, and not at statements as to curative effect (cancer), even if misleading. Upon the decision in this case the act of August 23, 1912, was passed to cover statements as to curative effects.

The act of March 3, 1913, provided that, if goods be in package form, the contents must be "plainly and conspicuously marked on the outside of the package in terms of weight, measure, or numerical count," but that reasonable variations be permitted, etc. In Lexington Mill & Elevator Co. v. U. S., 202 Fed. 615, 121 C. C. A. 23, it was held that the addition to an article of food of an ingredient which, in sufficient quantity, is poisonous, is not an adulteration unless the quantity used is sufficient to render the article "injurious to health"; this judgment was affirmed in the supreme court on Feb. 24, 1914, 34 Sup. Ct. 337, 232 U. S. 383, 58 L. Ed. —.

See Thornton, Pure Food and Drugs (1912), containing the regulations and rulings of the department of agriculture, and the opinion of President Taft on blended whisky.

FOOT. A measure of length, containing one-third of a yard, or twelve inches. See ELL. Figuratively it signifies the conclusion, the end; as, the foot of the fine, the foot of the account. See Williston v. Morse, 10 Metc. (Mass.) 26; Charge to Grand Jury, 5 McLean, 306, Fed. Cas. No. 18,267.

FOOT OF THE FINE. The fifth part or the conclusion of a fine. It includes the whole matter, reciting the names of the parties, day, year, and place, and before whom it was acknowledged or levied. 2 Bla. Com. 351.

FOOTGELD. An amercement for not cutting out the ball or cutting off the claws of a dog's feet (expediting him). To be quit of footgeld is to have the privilege of keeping dogs in the forest unlawed without punishment or control. Manw. For. FOOTPRINTS. Impressions made by the feet of persons, or their shoes, boots, or other covering for the feet, on the ground, snow, or other surface. In the same category are also impressions of shoemarks, patches, abrasions, or other peculiarities therein. When found at or near the scene of a crime they often lead to the identification of guilty parties.

"The presumption founded on these circumstances has been appealed to by mankind in all ages, and in inquiries of every kind, and it is so obviously the dictate of reason, if not of instinct, that it would be superfluous to dwell upon its importance." Wills, Circ. Ev. 194. It is said that evidence of footprints and their correspondence with defendant's feet may be proved even when his agency is disputed, not as alone convincing, or indeed, available, but as tending to establish a case; Whart. Cr. Ev. § 795; even where the defendant's proof tended to establish an alibi; Williams v. State, 33 Tex. Cr. R. 128, 25 S. W. 629, 28 S. W. 958, 47 Am. St. Rep. 21. Evidence of footprints alone has been held insufficient to convict; 1 F. & F. 354; State v. Johnson, 19 Ia. 230; Green v. State, 17 Fla. 669; and unless the measurement is careful and accurate, or there is some peculiarity shown, the probative force is slight; Whetston v. State, 31 Fla. 240, 12 South. 661; People v. Newton, 3 N. Y. Cr. Rep. 406; Shannon v. State, 57 Ga. 482; State v. Reed, 89 Mo. 168, 1 S. W. 225; but in many cases such peculiarities have been shown and evidence of the footprints admitted; Preston v. State, 8 Tex. App. 30; Schoolcraft v. People, 117 Ill. 271, 7 N. E. 649; Griggs v. State, 59 Ga. 738; State v. Grebe, 17 Kan. 458; 10 Crim. L. Mag. 890; but a conviction on such evidence will be reversed for refusal to admit proof for the defendant that he has never worn a shoe which would make such a print; Stone v. State, 12 Tex. App. 219; the discovery and comparison should be prompt with relation to the crime; McDaniel v. State, 53 Ga. 253; and the measurement should be accurate; Stone v. State, 12 Tex. App. 219; Bouldin v. State, 8 Tex. App. 332; though it need not be immediate, the question of time going to the weight of the evidence, not to its competency; People v. McCurdy, 68 Cal. 576, 10 Pac. 207.

The identification of such tracks is a matter of common observation, which does not require expert testimony; Murphy v. People, 63 N. Y. 590; Young v. State, 68 Ala. 569; State v. Morris, 84 N. C. 756; and only the peculiarity of the tracks and the facts of identification may be proved, but not the opinion of the witness whether they were made by the defendant; Clough v. State, 7 Neb. 320; Hodge v. State, 98 Ala. 10, 13 South. 385, 39 Am. St. Rep. 17; but a witness has been permitted to prove the measurement of the tracks and their exact correspondence with the shoe of the defendant; McLain v. State, 30 Tex. App. 482, 17 S. W. 1092, 28 Am. St. Rep. 934; the examination and the comparison need not be made in the presence of the defendant; State v. Morris, 84 N. C. 756; nor can he be compelled to put his foot in the track to make evidence against himself; Day v. State, 63 Ga. 667; but where he was compelled to do so the evidence was admitted; State v. Graham, 74 N. C. 646, 21 Am. Rep. 493; and tracks have been voluntarily made by the accused before the jury for comparison with those proved; Gregory v. State, 80 Ga. 269, 7 S. E. 222. Comparison of the shoes with the footmarks should be made before the former are put in the marks; 1 Lew. C. C. 116; and where this was not done the evidence on the subject was rejected; id.

Such evidence, even if established beyond doubt, is liable, as in all cases of circumstantial evidence, to be the subject of fabrication, or erroneous inference; see the case of Mayenc, Gabriel 403, where the shoes of another person were put on by one committing a crime; and the celebrated case of Thornton, fully reported in Wills, Circ. Ev. 286, where an alibi was successfully proved after apparently conclusive circumstantial evidence, including footprints.

Proof may be made by horse-tracks corresponding with those made by a horse of defendant; Goldsmith v. State, 32 Tex. Cr. R. 112, 22 S. W. 405; or that shoes taken from such horse fitted the tracks; Campbell v. State, 23 Ala. 44; and when the prisoner had reversed the shoes of his horse after reaching the house, to give the impression that two persons had been there, the artifice led to his detection by the discovery of recent nail-marks in the horse's hoof; Spooner's Case, 2 Chand. Am. Cr. Tr.; but horse-tracks alone are not sufficient to convict; State v. Melick, 65 Ia. 614, 22 N. W. 895; and see Bouldin v. State, 8 Tex. App. 332.

For a full discussion of the subject, see Wills, Circ. Ev. 194. See EVIDENCE; INCRIMINATION.

FOR. In place of or in front of. Ready v. Sommer, 37 Wis. 265. Because or on account of; by reason of; as agent for; in behalf of. Strong v. Ins. Co., 31 N. Y. 103, 88 Am. Dec. 242; see AGENT. Used in connection with a period it means "during," where publication is required for at least thirty days, one publication thirty days before the sale would not be a compliance. Lawson v. Gibson, 18 Neb. 139. And see Craig's Adm'x v. Fox, 16 Ohio 563; Whitaker v. Beach, 12 Kan. 493. It may, if necessary, be inserted in a statute by judicial construction; King v. Kelly, 25 Minn. 522.

In a contract it implies a condition precedent; Hob. 41; 5 M. & S. 187. See also 12 Mod. 455.

In French Law. A tribunal. Le for intérieur, the interior forum; the tribunal of conscience. Poth. Obl. pt. 1, c. 11, art. 3.

FOR ACCOUNT OF. A phrase used in an order, draft, or memorandum to designate the person against whom, or account against which, the thing or sum is to be charged.

FOR AT LEAST. As applied to a number of days required for notice this phrase includes either the first or last day, but not both. Stroud v. Water Co., 56 N. J. L. 422, 28 Atl. 578. See TIME.

FOR COLLECTION. See INDORSEMENT.

FOR DEPOSIT TO THE CREDIT OF. See INDORSEMENT.

FOR GOOD CAUSE. A statute authorizing a continuance "for good cause" in the absence of a party is satisfied by proof of the illness of plaintiff in another state, and the ignorance of his attorney of the names of the witnesses and the details of the case. Tynan v. Walker, 35 Cal. 636, 95 Am. Dec. 152.

FOR THAT. In Pleading. Words used to introduce the allegations of a declaration. "For that" is a positive allegation; "For that whereas" is a recital. Hamm. N. P. 9.

FOR THAT WHEREAS. Introductory words in pleading. See Hamm. N. P. 9. These words are used in the introduction of the statement of the plaintiff's case as a recital in the declaration in all actions except trespass, in which there being no recital the expression was "For that." 1 Burr. Inst. Cler. 170.

FOR THE ACCOUNT. A stock exchange term. A broker having an order to buy or sell may contract for the specific amount of stock ordered to be bought or sold, or may include such order with other orders, or in quantities to suit his convenience. Clews v. Jamieson, 182 U. S. 487, 21 Sup. Ct. 845, 45 L. Ed. 1183, citing Dos Passos, St. Bro. 276.

FOR USE. Words used to describe a suit, judgment, or decree in which the nominal plaintiff sues for the benefit or advantage of another. This is necessary in some cases where an assignee is obliged to sue in the name of the assignor. The style of the suit is "for (or to the) use of A. v. B."

Loans for use are distinguished from loans for consumption; the former being those in which the article bailed is to be used and returned and the latter those in which it may be consumed and returned in kind.

FOR WHOM IT MAY CONCERN. A general clause in a policy of insurance, intended to apply to all persons who have any insurable interest. 1 Phill. Ins. 152. This phrase, or some similar one, must be inserted, to give any one but the party named as the insured rights under the policy. See 1 B. & P. 316, 345; 2 Maule & S. 485; Davis v. Boardman, 12 Mass. 80.

FORAGE. Hay and straw for horses, particularly in the army. Jac.

FORAGIUM. Straw when the corn is threshed out. Cowell.

FORAKER ACT. A name usually given to the act of congress of April 12, 1900, 31 Stat. L. 77, c. 191, which provided civil government for Porto Rico. See a synopsis of it by Harlan, J., in Downes v. Bidwell, 182 U. S. 244, 390, 21 Sup. Ct. 770, 45 L. Ed. 1088. See Porto Rico.

FORANEUS. One from without; a foreigner; a stranger. Calv. Lex.

FORATHE. One who can take oath for another who is accused of one of the lesser crimes. Manw. For. Laws 3; Cowell.

FORBALCA. In Old Records. A forebalk; a balk (that is, an unplowed piece of ground) lying forward or next the highway. Cowell.

FORBARRE. To deprive one of a thing forever. Cowell.

FORBATUDUS. The aggressor slain in combat. Jac.

FORBEARANCE. A delay in enforcing rights. The act by which a creditor waits for the payment of a debt due him by the debtor after it has become due. It is sufficient consideration to support assumpsit.

An agreement to forbear bringing a suit for a debt due, although for an indefinite time, and even although it cannot be construed to be an agreement for a perpetual forbearance, if followed by actual forbearance for a reasonable time, is a good consideration for a promise; Howe v. Taggart, 133 Mass. 287.

See ASSUMPSIT; CONSIDERATION.

FORCE. Restraining power; validity; binding effect.

A law may be said to be in force when it is not repealed, or, more loosely, when it can be carried into practical effect. An agreement is in force when the parties to it may be compelled to act, or are acting, under its terms and stipulations.

Strength applied. Active power. Power put in motion.

Actual force is where strength is actually applied or the means of applying it are at hand. Thus, if one break open a gate by violence, it is lawful to oppose force to force.

See 2 Salk. 641; 8 Term 78, 357. See BATTERY.

Implied force is that which is implied by law from the commission of an unlawful act. Every trespass quare clausum fregit is committed with implied force. Co. Litt. 57 b, 161 b, 162 a; 1 Saund. 81, 140, n. 4; 5 Term 361; Bac. Abr. Trespass; 3 Wills. 18; Fitzh. N. B. 890; 5 B. & P. 365, 454.

Mere nonfeasance cannot be considered as force, generally; 2 Saund. 47; Co. Litt. 161.

If a person with force break a door or gate for an illegal purpose, it is lawful to oppose force to force; and if one enter the close of another vi et armis, he may be expelled immediately, without a previous request; for there is no time to make a request; 2 Salk. 641; 8 Term 78, 357. When it is necessary to rely upon actual force in pleading, as in the case of a forcible entry, the words "manu forti," or "with a strong hand," should be adopted; 8 Term 357; Com. v. Shattuck, 4 Cush. (Mass.) 141. But in other cases the words "vi et armis," or "with force and arms," are sufficient. See those titles.

Municipal officers seizing private property under an order condemning it for a street, are not guilty of forcible trespass if they use no more force than necessary, even though the owner be present forbidding them; State v. Lyle, 100 N. C. 497, 6 S. E. 379.

FORCE AND ARMS. A phrase used in declarations of trespass and in indictments, but now unnecessary in declarations, to denote that the act complained of was done with violence. 2 Chitty, Pl. 846, 850; 2 Steph. Com. 364. See FORCE; VI ET ARMIS; TRESPASS.

FORCE AND FEAR, called also "vi metuque," means that any contract or act extorted under the pressure of force (vis) or under the influence of fear (metus) is voidable on that ground, provided, of course, that the force or the fear was such as influenced the party. Brown.

FORCE MAJEURE (Fr.). Superior or irresistible force. Emerig. Tr. des Ass. c. 12. See VIS MAJOR.

FORCED HEIRS. In Louisiana. Those persons whom the testator or donor cannot deprive of the portion of his estate reserved for them by law, except in cases where he has a just cause to disinherit them. La. Civ. Code. As to the portion of the estate they are entitled to, see LEGITIME. The causes for which forced heirs may be deprived of this right must be stated in the testament and also established by proof by the other heirs; id.

FORCED OUT. Where a license to a corporation was to cease if the licensor was "forced out of the company," and one who had acquired all the stock, except that held by the licensor, procured from the company an assignment of all its property, and induced it to cease doing business, it was held that the licensor was "forced out of the company." Havana Press Drill Co. v. Ashurst, 148 Ill. 115, 35 N. E. 873.

FORCED SALE. A sale made at the time and in the manner prescribed by law, in virtue of execution issued on a judgment already rendered by a court of competent jurisdiction; a sale made under the process of the court, and in the mode prescribed by law. Sampson v. Williamson, 6 Tex. 110, 55 Am. Dec. 762.

A forced sale is a sale against the consent of the owner. The term should not be deemed to embrace a sale under power in a mortgage. Patterson v. Taylor, 15 Fla. 336.

FORCES. The military and naval resources of a country.

FORCHEAPUM. Pre-emption. Blount.

FORCIBLE ENTRY OR DETAINER. A forcible entry or detainer consists in violently taking or keeping possession of lands or tenements, by means of threats, force, or arms, and without authority of law. Comyns, Dig.; Woodf. Landl. & Ten. 973; 2 Bish. Cr. L. 489.

Such an entry as is made with strong hand, with unusual weapons, and unusual number of servants or attendants, or with menace of life or limb; an entry which only amounts in law to a trespass is not within statutes relating thereto. Smith v. Reeder, 21 Or. 541, 28 Pac. 890, 15 L. R. A. 172.

To make an entry forcible, there must be such acts of violence, or such threats, menaces, or gestures, as may give reason to apprehend personal injury or danger in standing in defence of the possession. But the force made use of must be more than is implied in any mere trespass; 8 Term 357; Com. v. Dudley, 10 Mass. 409; Pennsylvania v. Robison, 1 Add. (Pa.) 14; Tayl. Landl. & Ten. § 786.

Driving the tenant from the premises by deadly weapons and an array of numbers is a forcible entry; State v. Smith, 100 N. C. 466, 6 S. E. 84. But it is sufficient that it was made against the will of the individual when in peaceable possession, without actual force; Oakes v. Aldridge, 46 Mo. App. 11; Meriwether v. Howe, 48 Mo. App. 148; Wylie v. Waddell, 52 Mo. App. 226.

Proceedings in case of a forcible entry or detainer are regulated by the statutes of the several states, and relate to a restitution of the property, if the individual who complains has been dispossessed, as well as to the punishment of the offender for a breach of the public peace. And the plea of ownership is no justification for the party complained of; for no man may enter even upon his own lands in any other than a peaceable manner. Nor will he be excused if he entered to make a distress or to enforce a lawful claim, nor if possession was ultimately obtained by entreaty; Woodf. L. & T. 741, n.; Langdon v. Potter, 3 Mass. 215; State v. Johnson, 18 N.

C. 324; 8 Term 361; but, contra, it has been held, that an intruder in quiet possession of land may be forcibly expelled by the owner; Smith v. Reeder, 21 Or. 541, 28 Pac. 890, 15 L. R. A. 172; Canavan v. Gray, 64 Cal. 5, 27 Pac. 788. If the owner is guilty of a breach and trespass on the person of the intruder in taking possession of his land, he is liable for that, but his possession is lawful, and an action of trespass quare clausum is not maintainable against him; Overdeer v. Lewis, 1 W. & S. (Pa.) 90, 37 Am. Dec. 440; Rich v. Keyser, 54 Pa. 86. This follows the English doctrine as expressed by Parke, B., that, where a breach of the peace has been committed by a freeholder who, in order to get possession of his land, assaults a person wrongfully holding possession of it, although the freeholder may be responsible to the public for a forcible entry, he is not liable to the other party; and in an action brought against him, it is a sufficient justification that the tenant was in possession against the will of the owner; 14 M. & W. 437. See 4 Am. Law Rev. 429. A lessee never in possession cannot maintain unlawful detainer against the lessor, either at common law or statute; Long v. Noe, 49 Mo. App. 19. A change of possession pending a suit for forcible entry and detainer does not affect the right of recovery; Daggitt v. Mensch, 141 Ill. 395, 31 N. E. 153.

Upon an indictment for this offence at common law, the entry must appear to have been accompanied by a public breach of the peace; and, upon a conviction for either a forcible entry or detainer, the court will award restitution of the premises in the same manner as a judge in a civil court, under a statutory proceeding, is authorized to do upon a verdict rendered before him; 1 Ld. Raym. 512; 8 Term 360; Cro. Jac. 151; Al. 50.

Neither title nor right of possession is at issue, or can be made an issue, in an action of forcible entry and detainer; Sheehy v. Flaherty, 8 Mont. 365, 20 Pac. 687.

FORDA. In Old Records. A ford or shallow, made by damming or penning up the water. Cowell.

FORDAL (Sax.). A butt or headband. A piece.

FORDANNO. A first assailant. Spel. Gloss.

FORDIKA. In Old Records. Grass or herbage growing on the edge or bank of dykes or ditches. Cowell.

FORE (Sax.). Before. (Fr.) Out. Kelham.

FORE-MATRON. In a jury of women this word corresponds to the foreman of a jury. She was sworn in separately; 8 Carr. & P. 264.

FORE-OATH. Before the Norman Conquest, an oath required of the complainant in the first instance (in the absence of manifest facts) as a security against frivolous suits.

Pollock, 1 Sel. Essays Anglo-Amer. Leg. Hist. 93.

FORECLOSE. To shut out; to bar. Used of the process of destroying an equity of redemption. 1 Washb. R. P. 589; Dan. Ch. Pr. 1204; Coote, Mortg. 511; Lansing v. Goelet, 9 Cow. (N. Y.) 382.

FORECLOSURE. A proceeding in chancery by which the mortgagor's right of redemption of the mortgaged premises is barred or closed forever.

The modern significance of the term, as applied to mortgages, is that of a sale under a judgment of foreclosure, and not the judgment itself; Sichler v. Look, 93 Cal. 600, 29 Pac. 220.

This takes place when the mortgagor has forfeited his estate by non-payment of the money due on the mortgage at the time appointed, but still retains the equity of redemption; in such case, the mortgagee may file a bill calling on the mortgagor, in a court of equity, to redeem his estate presently, or, in default thereof, to be forever closed or barred from any right of redemption.

In some cases, however, the mortgagee obtains a decree for a sale of the land under the direction of an officer of the court, in which case the proceeds are applied to the discharge of incumbrances, according to their priority. See Hart v. Ten Eyck, 2 Johns. Ch. (N. Y.) 100; Palmer's Adm'rs v. Mead, 7 Conn. 152; Gilman v. Hidden, 5 N. H. 30; Anonymous, 2 N. C. 482; Higgins v. West, 5 Ohio 554; Quint v. Little, 4 Greenl. (Me.) 495; 1 Washb. R. P. 589; Dan. Ch. Pr. 1204.

In an action to foreclose a mortgage, there is no occasion for an entry for breach of condition; Cook v. Bartholomew; 60 Conn. 24, 22 Atl. 444, 13 L. R. A. 452. Where, before beginning suit to foreclose for default in paying interest, the defaulted interest was paid and accepted, such acceptance is a waiver of any claim of forfeiture on account of the default; Smalley v. Ranken, 85 Ia. 612, 52 N. W. 507.

Strict Foreclosure. When the property is of less value than the mortgage debt and the mortgagee is willing to take it for his debt, the court may decree a strict foreclosure, unless there are other encumbrancers, purchasers of the equity of redemption or creditors to object; Farrell v. Parlier, 50 Ill. 274; Flagg v. Walker, 113 U. S. 659, 5 Sup. Ct. 697, 28 L. Ed. 1072; if the mortgagor is insolvent and there are no other encumbrancers; Hollis v. Smith, 9 Ill. App. 109. See note in 19 L. Ed. 354; 20 L. R. A. 370. Such a decree must find the amount due and allow time for payment and redemption; it cannot be final in the first instance; Clark v. Reyburn, 8 Wall. (U. S.) 318, 19 L. Ed. 354.

Strict foreclosure is usually by a bill in equity praying the foreclosure, by which the court, through a master, ascertains the amount due upon the mortgage and then decrees that unless the owner of the equity of redemption shall within a prescribed time pay that sum and redeem the property, he shall be forever barred; 4 Kent 180; 2 Washb. R. P. 248. It has been spoken of as a harsh remedy; Bolles v. Duff, 43 N. Y. 469.

It can only be resorted to under peculiar circumstances; Jefferson v. Cbleman, 110 Ind. 515, 11 N. E. 465. It would not generally be allowed without the mortgagor's consent; Cauffman v. Sayre, 2 B. Mon. (Ky.) 202. It exists in Maryland; Dorsey v. Dorsey, 30 Md. 522, 96 Am. Dec. 617; Wisconsin; Kimball v. Darling, 32 Wis. 675; and New Jersey; Parker v. Child, 25 N. J. Eq. 41; it is said to be unusual in North Carolina; Green v. Crockett, 22 N. C. 390. It is held that the mortgagor's equity of redemption can only be barred by his own agreement, by estoppel, or by judicial sale; Appeal of Winton, 87 Pa. 77. That it is not recognized as a practice, see Browne v. Browne, 17 Fla. 607, 35 Am. Rep. 96; Gamut v. Gregg, 37 Ia. 573; Davis v. Holmes, 55 Mo. 349; First Nat. Bank v. Min. Co., 8 Mont. 32, 19 Pac. 403; Kyger v. Ryley, 2 Neb. 20; in some of these states the subject is regulated by code. In Massachusetts the practice is usually by way of entry in possession, or by writ of entry, or under the powers contained in the mortgage. Usually a considerable period is allowed for redemption. In Maine there is proceeding by writ of entry and the mortgagor has three years for redemption.

A strict foreclosure will not be granted to cut off the right of a second mortgagee where he was not a party; Moulton v. Cornish, 138 N. Y. 133, 33 N. E. 842, 20 L. R. A. 370; but the decree may direct that, unless within a prescribed time he shall notify the purchaser of his intention to redeem, he shall be barred; Moulton v. Cornish, 138 N. Y. 133, 33 N. E. 842, 20 L. R. A. 370.

See Horr v. Herrington, 22 Okl. 590, 98 Pac. 443, 20 L. R. A. (N. S.) 47 and note, 132 Am. St. Rep. 648.

As to the subject generally, and also as to Railway Foreclosure, see MORTGAGE.

FOREGIFT. A premium paid by a lessee for his lease, separate and distinguished from the rent. A payment in advance.

FOREGOERS. Royal purveyors. 26 Edw. III. c. 5.

FOREHAND RENT. In English Law. A species of rent which is a premium given by the tenant at the time of taking the lease, as on the renewal of leases by ecclesiastical corporations, which is considered in the nature of an improved rent. 3 Atk. Ch. 473; Crabb, R. P. § 155.

FOREIGN. That which belongs to another country; that which is strange. Spratt v. Spratt, 1 Pet. (U. S.) 343, 7 L. Ed. 171.

Every nation is foreign to all the rest; and the several states of the American Union are foreign to each other with respect to their municipal laws; Byrne v. Holt, 2 Wash.

C. C. 282, Fed. Cas. No. 2,272; Brackett v. Norton, 4 Conn. 517, 10 Am. Dec. 179; Packard v. Hill, 2 Wend. (N. Y.) 411; Kean v. Rice, 12 S. & R. (Pa.) 203; Taylor v. Bank, 7 T. B. Monr. (Ky.) 585; Taylor's Adm'r v. Bank, 5 Leigh (Va.) 471; Inhabitants of Kaynham v. Inhabitants of Canton, 3 Pick. (Mass.) 293; The Lulu, 10 Wall. (U. S.) 192, 19 L. Ed. 906; Negus v. Simpson, 99 Mass. 388.

But the reciprocal relations between the national government and the several states are not considered as foreign, but domestic; Hinde v. Vattier, 5 Pet. (U. S.) 398, 8 L. Ed. 168; Leland v. Wilkinson, 6 Pet. (U. S.) 317, 8 L. Ed. 412; Owings v. Hull, 9 Pet. (U. S.) 607, 9 L. Ed. 246; Young v. Bank, 4 Cra. (U. S.) 384, 2 L. Ed. 655; Chesapeake & O. Canal Co. v. R. Co., 4 Gill & J. (Md.) 1, 63.

FOREIGN ANSWER. An answer not triable in the county where it is made. Stat. 15 Hen. VI. c. 5; Blount.

FOREIGN APPOSER. An officer in the exchequer who examines the sheriff's estreats, comparing them with the records, and apposeth (interrogates) the sheriff what he says to each particular sum therein. Coke, 4th Inst. 107; Blount; Cowell, Foreignc. The word is written opposer, opposeth, by Lord Coke; and this signification corresponds very well to the meaning given by Blount, of examiner (interrogator) of the sheriff's accounts.

FOREIGN ASSIGNMENT. An assignment made in a foreign country or in another state. 2 Kent 405. See ASSIGNMENT.

FOREIGN ATTACHMENT. A process by virtue of which the property of an absent and non-resident debtor is seized for the purpose of compelling an appearance, and, in default of that, to pay the claim of the plaintiff. See ATTACHMENT.

FOREIGN BILL OF EXCHANGE. A bill drawn in one country and made payable in another.

A bill drawn in one state by a resident thereof upon a resident of another state and payable there is a foreign bill; Ocean National Bank v. Williams, 102 Mass. 141; Amsinck v. Rogers, 189 N. Y. 252, 82 N. E. 134, 12 L. R. A. (N. S.) 875, 121 Am. St. Rep. 858, 12 Ann. Cas. 450; Knickerbocker Life Ins Co. v. Pendleton, 112 U. S. 696, 5 Sup. Ct. 314, 28 L. Ed. 866.

See BILL OF EXCHANGE.

FOREIGN BOUGHT AND SOLD. A custom in London, which, being found prejudicial to sellers of cattle in Smithfield, was abolished. Wharton.

FOREIGN CHARITY. One created or endowed to be administered in a state or country foreign to that of the domicile of the benefactor.

A bequest by a testator in one state establishing a charitable use to be administered by a corporation created in another state, all the trustees (thirteen in number) except two being non-residents of the state of domicile of the testator, is a foreign charity. The court of chancery of New Jersey will not administer such a charity, but when it is valid by the law of both states, and the trustees have the legal capacity to carry out the charity, the court will order its payment to them, leaving it to the courts of the other state to see to its administration; Taylor's Ex'rs v. Trustees of Bryn Mawr College, 34 N. J. Eq. 101. Such is the general rule; Boyle on Char. 134; Perry, Tr. § 741; Tudor, Char. Tr. 259; Hill, Trust. 468; Sto. Eq. Jur. § 1184; 19 Beav. 597. See CHARITABLE USE.

FOREIGN COINS. Coins issued by the authority of a foreign government.

There were formerly several acts of Congress passed which rendered certain foreign gold and silver coins a legal tender in payment of debts upon certain prescribed conditions as to the fineness and weight, but by the act of Feb. 21, 1857, it was provided: That all former acts authorizing the currency of foreign gold or silver coins, and declaring the same a legal tender in payment for debts, are repealed; but it shall be the duty of the director of the mint to cause assays to be made from time to time of such foreign coins as may be known to our commerce, to determine their average weight, fineness, and value, and to embrace in his annual report a statement of the results thereof.

The value of foreign coin as expressed in the money of account of the United States shall be that of the pure metal of such coin of standard value; and the values of the standard coins in circulation of the various nations of the world shall be estimated annually by the director of the mint, and be proclaimed by the secretary of the treasury; R. S. § 3564; Collector v. Richards, 23 Wall. (U. S.) 246, 23 L. Ed. 95.

The value of foreign coins as ascertained by the estimate of the director of the mint and proclaimed by the secretary of the treasury is conclusive upon custom-house officers and importers; Hadden v. Merritt, 115 U. S. 25, 6 Sup. Ct. 1169, 29 L. Ed. 333.

FOREIGN COMMERCE. "Commerce which in some sense is necessarily connected with these nations, transactions which either immediately or at some stage of their progress must be extra-territorial. The phrase can never be applied to transactions wholly internal." . . . "Nor . . . because the products of domestic enterprise in agriculture or manufactures, or in the arts, may ultimately become the subjects of foreign commerce, that the control of the means or the encouragements by which enterprise is fostered and protected is legitimately within the import of the phrase foreign commerce." Veazie v. Moor, 14 How. (U. S.) 568, 573, 14 L. Ed. 545.

FOREIGN CORPORATION. One created by or under the laws of any other state or government.

A corporation is a person in most senses and for most purposes of legal administration, and for the purposes of determining the jurisdiction of the federal courts it is a citizen, but it is not such in the sense that a natural person is one, and hence for most purposes corporations are "foreign" as between the states. As to whether they are citizens or persons, see those titles.

"A corporation can have no legal existence out of the boundaries of the sovereignty by which it is created. It exists only in contemplation of law, and by force of the law, and where that law ceases to operate, and is no longer obligatory, the corporation can have no existence. It must dwell in the place of its creation, and cannot migrate to another sovereignty;" Taney, C. J., in Bank of Augusta v. Earle, 13 Pet. (U. S.) 519, 10 L. Ed. 274; Rece v. Newport News Co., 32 W. Va. 164, 9 S. E. 212, 3 L. R. A. 572. It may contract in other states within the scope of its own powers and subject to the laws of the lex loci contractus or the lex loci solutionis, as the case may be, as natural persons may contract where they do not reside. "And what greater objection can there be to the capacity of an artificial person, by its agents, to make a contract within the scope of its limited powers, in a sovereignty in which it does not reside, provided such contracts are permissible by the law of the place?" Bank of Kentucky v. Bank, 1 Pars. Eq. Cas. (Pa.) 180, 225. See Bard v. Poole, 12 N. Y. 495; Connecticut Mut. Life Ins. Co. v. Cross, 18 Wis. 109. In the absence of proof, the validity of such contracts is presumed; Boulware v. Davis, 90 Ala. 207, 8 South. 84, 9 L. R. A. 601; Wood Hydraulic Hose Min. Co. v. King, 45 Ga. 34; New York Floating Derrick Co. v. Oil Co., 3 Duer (N. Y.) 648. Unless expressly forbidden to do so a corporation may acquire rights of contract and property in a foreign jurisdiction; Mulford Co. v. Curry, 163 Cal. 276, 125 Pac. 236; private corporations will be permitted to transact in other states the business authorized by the state of their creation; State v. Water Co., 61 Kan. 547, 60 Pac. 337; subject to any limitations imposed by express legislation; Chicago Title & Trust Co. v. Bashford, 120 Wis. 281, 97 N. W. 940; American Waterworks Co. v. Trust Co., 73 Fed. 956, 20 C. C. A. 133; or to the laws and policy of the state in which it does business; Hyde v. Scott, 75 Misc. 487, 133 N. Y. Supp. 904.

"Every power, however, which a corporation exercises in another state, depends for its validity upon the laws of the sovereignty in which it is exercised, and a corporation can make no valid contract without their sanction, express or implied;" Taney, C. J., in Bank of Augusta v. Earle, 13 Pet. (U. S.) 519, 588, 10 L. Ed. 274; any other exercise of power by it rests absolutely upon the doctrine of comity; id.; State v. Packing Co., 110 La. 180, 34 South. 368, 98 Am. St. Rep. 459; State v. Telephone & Telegraph Co., 114 Tenn. 194, 86 S. W. 390; Chapman v. Cash Register Co., 32 Tex. Civ. App. 76, 73 S. W. 969; In re Willmer's Estate, 153 App. Div. 804, 138 N. Y. Supp. 649; Model Heating Co. v. Magarity, 1 Boyce (Del.) 240, 75 Atl. 614; and is subject to the laws and regulations, process and remedial jurisdiction of the state of business or temporary domicile; Clark v. R. Co., 81 Mo. 477, 17 Atl. 497; Austin v. R. Co., 25 N. J. L. 381; Riddle v. R. Co., 39 Fed. 290; Attorney General v. Min. Co., 99 Mass. 148, 96 Am. Dec. 717; People v. R. R. of New Jersey, 48 Barb. (N. Y.) 478; this comity stops short of permission to exercise any powers in excess either of the powers of domestic corporations of the same class; Demarest v. Flack, 128 N. Y. 205, 28 N. E. 645, 13 L. R. A. 854; Clarke v. Banking Co. of Georgia, 50 Fed. 338, 15 L. R. A. 683; 33 Am. & Eng. Corp. Cas. 15, 16; or of the powers authorized by its own charter; Talmadge v. Transp. Co., 3 Head. (Tenn.) 337; Diamond Match Co. v. Reg. of Deeds, 51 Mich. 145, 16 N. W. 314. Whatever limitations a state statute may impose upon a foreign corporation's liberty of contracting, whatever its discriminations, they become conditions of the permission to do business in the state and such conditions were accepted with the permit; Waters-Pierce Oil Co. v. Texas, 177 U. S. 28, 20 Sup. Ct. 518, 44 L. Ed. 657; New York Life Ins. Co. v. Cravens, 178 U. S. 389, 20 Sup. Ct. 962, 44 L. Ed. 1116; Orient Ins. Co. v. Daggs, 172 U. S. 557, 19 Sup. Ct. 281, 43 L. Ed. 552, affirming Morse v. City of Westport, 136 Mo. 282, 37 S. W. 932. So a telegraph company incorporated in Maryland, whose operations were by its charter limited to that state was refused, by the Delaware courts, a mandamus to compel a telephone company to furnish to it a telephone in aid of its business in Delaware; Baltimore & O. Telegraph Co. of Baltimore City v. Telegraph & Telephone Co., 7 Houst. (Del.) 269, 31 Atl. 714.

Foreign corporations are sometimes by the legislation of a state made domestic corporations for certain purposes, as for jurisdiction; Baltimore & O. R. Co. v. Harris, 12 Wall. (U. S.) 65, 20 L. Ed. 354; James v. R. Co., 46 Fed. 47; Memphis & C. R. Co. v. Alabama, 107 U. S. 581, 2 Sup. Ct. 432, 27 L. Ed. 518; and to determine when this is so is sometimes a matter of great difficulty; 6 Thomp. Corp. § 7891; but where, by the concurrent action of two states, a railroad company is chartered or consolidated for police and jurisdictional purposes, it is as a whole treated as a domestic corporation of each state; id.; Ohio & M. R. Co. v. Wheeler, 1 Black (U. S.) 286, 17 L. Ed. 130; Burger v. R. Co., 22 Fed. 561; Central Trust Co. v. R. Co., 41 Fed. 551; State v. R. Co., 18 Md. 193; Sprague v. R. Co., 5 R. I. 233; Baltimore & O. R. Co. v. Harris, 12 Wall. (U. S.) 65, 20 L. Ed. 354; State v. R. Co., 25 Neb. 156, 41 N. W. 125, 2 L. R. A. 564; State v. R. Co., 25 Neb. 164, 41 N. W. 127. A state may impose such terms for the admission of foreign corporations as it may deem best; Cyclone Min. Co. v. Baker L. & P. Co., 165 Fed. 996; or may exclude them, and this power extends to a single one already within its jurisdiction, if the act does not deprive it of property without due process of law, and the mere right to extend its business into a state is not property in this sense; National Council v. State Council, 203 U. S. 151, 27 Sup. Ct. 46, 51 L. Ed. 132. Such statutes do not constitute a contract between the state and such foreign corporation which is impaired by subsequent legislation; Connecticut Mut. Life Ins. Co. v. Spratley, 172 U. S. 602, 19 Sup. Ct. 308, 43 L. Ed. 569. They do not avoid the contracts made in the state by unregistered foreign corporations, but merely suspend civil remedies in that state; suit may be brought in another state; Allen v. Allegheny Co., 196 U. S. 458, 25 Sup. Ct. 311, 49 L. Ed. 551. The right of a state to prevent foreign corporations from continuing to do business within its borders is a correlative of the right to exclude them therefrom, and as this power is plenary, the state, so long as no contract is impaired, may exercise it in consideration of acts done in another jurisdiction; Hammond Packing Co. v. Arkansas, 212 U. S. 322, 29 Sup. Ct. 370, 53 L. Ed. 530, 15 Ann. Cas. 645; Cable v. U. S. Life Ins. Co., 191 U. S. 288, 24 Sup. Ct. 74, 48 L. Ed. 188.

The right of federal control of interstate commerce results in certain restraints upon the power of the states to regulate and tax foreign corporations so far as their business is held to be foreign or interstate commerce within the meaning of the federal constitution. The only limitation, however, on the powers of a state to exclude or exact conditions from a foreign corporation arises when the corporation is in the employ of the federal government; Pembina Consol. Silver Min. & Mill. Co. v. Pennsylvania, 125 U. S. 181, 8 Sup. Ct. 737, 31 L. Ed. 650; Horn Silver Min. Co. v. New York, 143 U. S. 305, 12 Sup. Ct. 403, 36 L. Ed. 164; or its business is strictly commerce, interstate or foreign; Pembina Consol. Min. & Mill. Co. v. Pennsylvania, 125 U. S. 181, 8 Sup. Ct. 737, 31 L. Ed. 650; Butler Bros. Shoe Co. v. Rubber Co., 156 Fed. 1, 84 C. C. A. 167. If empowered to engage in interstate commerce by its own state, it may carry on interstate commerce in every state in the Union; Missouri, K. & T. Trust Co. v. Krumseig, 172 U. S. 351, 19 Sup. Ct. 179, 43 L. Ed. 474; Caldwell v. North Carolina, 187 U. S. 622, 23 Sup. Ct. 229, 47 L. Ed. 336. And corporations possess the same rights as citizens with respect to freedom from state regulation of interstate commerce; La Moine Lumber & Trading Co. v. Kesterson, 171 Fed. 980; and a state law requiring a foreign corporation to file a copy of its charter and pay a small fee as a condition of doing business in the state does not interfere unlawfully with interstate commerce; Diamond Glue Co. v. U. S. Glue Co., 187 U. S. 611, 23 Sup. Ct. 206, 47 L. Ed. 328. Such commerce receives the same protection when carried on by corporations or by individuals; Gloucester Ferry Co. v. Pennsylvania, 141 U. S. 196, 5 Sup. Ct. 826, 29 L. Ed. 158; and includes transportation; Philadelphia & R. R. Co. v. Pennsylvania, 15 Wall. (U. S.) 232, 21 L. Ed. 146; Bowman v. Ry. Co., 125 U. S. 465, 8 Sup. Ct. 689, 1062, 31 L. Ed. 700; telegraph lines; Leloup v. Port of Mobile, 127 U. S. 640, 8 Sup. Ct. 1383, 32 L. Ed. 311 (which are also subject to federal regulation under acts of congress authorizing their location under certain conditions, on post roads; U. S. Rev. Stat. § 1977; Pensacola Telegraph Co. v. Telegraph Co., 96 U. S. 11, 24 L. Ed. 708; Western Union Tel. Co. v. Texas, 105 U. S. 460, 26 L. Ed. 1067); the sale of merchandise by a corporation of one state whether made without the state or by commercial travellers, to a resident of another; Ware v. Shoe Co., 92 Ala. 145, 9 South. 136; Gunn v. Mach. Co., 57 Ark. 24, 20 S. W. 591, 18 L. R. A. 206, 38 Am. St. Rep. 223; the sale of patented or copyrighted articles or books; Ex parte Robinson, 2 Biss. 309, Fed. Cas. No. 11,932; Grover & Baker Sewing Mach. Co. v. Butler, 53 Ind. 454, 21 Am. Rep. 200; the right to vend them anywhere within the United States being secured by the constitution and patent and copyright laws; Const. U. S. art. 1, § 8; U. S. R. S. § 4884; but insurance is not commerce (q. v.), and corporations engaged in that business may be regulated; Paul v. Virginia, 8 Wall. (U. S.) 168, 19 L. Ed. 357 (followed, after full consideration, in New York Life Ins. Co. v. Deer Lodge County, 231 U. S. 495, 34 Sup. Ct. 167, 58 L. Ed. —); State v. Root, 83 Wis. 667, 54 N. W. 33, 19 L. R. A. 271; Goldsmith v. Ins. Co., 62 Ga. 379; and business cannot be carried on in a state by a foreign corporation which has not complied with all the conditions imposed by the state as a prerequisite to doing business within its limits; New York Life Ins. Co. v. Cravens, 178 U. S. 389, 20 Sup. Ct. 962, 44 L. Ed. 1116; Conn. Mut. Life Ins. Co. v. Spratley, 172 U. S. 602, 19 Sup. Ct. 308, 43 L. Ed. 569; Orient Ins. Co. v. Daggs, 172 U. S. 557, 19 Sup. Ct. 281, 43 L. Ed. 552; Hooper v. California, 155 U. S. 648, 15 Sup. Ct. 207, 39 L. Ed. 297; Philadelphia Fire Ass'n v. New York, 119 U. S. 110, 7 Sup. Ct. 108, 30 L. Ed. 342; Cooper Mfg. Co. v. Ferguson, 113 U. S. 727, 5 Sup. Ct. 739, 28 L. Ed. 1137.

Subject to these constitutional limitations, the states may in their discretion, impose conditions upon foreign corporations, as essential to enable them to do business; Pembina Consol. Silver Min. & Mill. Co. v. Pennsylvania, 125 U. S. 181, 8 Sup. Ct. 737, 31 L. Ed. 650; Norfolk & W. R. Co. v. Pennsylvania, 136 U. S. 114, 10 Sup. Ct. 958, 34 L. Ed. 394; they may discriminate between them and domestic corporations by a tax upon the privilege of doing business in the state, and, if it be considered good policy, make that discrimination so burdensome as to amount to exclusion; Ducat v. City of Chicago, 48 Ill. 172, 95 Am. Dec. 529; and the federal constitution does not secure them against inequality of taxation either as to system or rates as compared with domestic corporations; Com. v. R. Co., 129 Pa. 463, 18 Atl. 412, 15 Am. St. Rep. 724; Singer Mfg. Co. v. Wright, 33 Fed. 121; but such tax was held contrary to the state constitution; San Francisco v. Ins. Co., 74 Cal. 113, 15 Pac. 380, 5 Am. St. Rep. 425; though "it is clear that it violates no principle of the federal constitution as the supreme court of California seem to suppose;" 6 Thomp. Corp. § 7877, n. 3; and another state court has said that the state cannot impose upon foreign and domestic corporations taxes differing in principle; per Beasley, C. J., Erie R. Co. v. State, 31 N. J. L. 531, 86 Am. Dec. 226; but this reasoning has been characterized as a dictum; 6 Thomp. Corp. § 8090, as the corporation in question being engaged in interstate commerce was exempt from discrimination on that ground. The provisions of state constitutions securing uniformity and equality of taxation have been held not violated by a specific tax on gross receipts of a foreign corporation on business within the state; Pacific Exp. Co. v. Seibert, 142 U. S. 339, 12 Sup. Ct. 250, 35 L. Ed. 1035; or upon such corporations as a class; Germania Life Ins. Co. v. Com., 85 Pa. 513, cited with approval in the last case.

The state power of taxation of such corporations is subject to certain restrictions in addition to those already stated, but as a general rule the property of the corporation owned or used within the state is alone the proper subject of taxation. The power has been sustained as to franchises; Society for Savings v. Coite, 6 Wall. (U. S.) 594, 18 L. Ed. 897; Provident Inst. for Savings v. Massachusetts, 6 Wall. (U. S.) 611, 18 L. Ed. 907; even of an interstate corporation acting under U. S. R. S. § 5263; Western Union Telegraph Co. v. Attorney General, 125 U. S. 530, 8 Sup. Ct. 961, 31 L. Ed. 790; Attorney General v. Telegraph Co., 141 U. S. 40, 11 Sup. Ct. 889, 35 L. Ed. 628; as to tangible property within the state even if employed in interstate commerce; Union Pac. R. Co. v. Peniston, 18 Wall. (U. S.) 5, 21 L. Ed. 787; Minot v. R. Co., 18 Wall. (U. S.) 206, 21 L. Ed. 888; Western Union Telegraph Co. v. Texas, 105 U. S. 460, 26 L. Ed. 1067; Western Union Telegraph Co. v. Attorney General, 125 U. S. 530, 8 Sup. Ct. 961, 31 L. Ed. 790; and with respect to the situs for this purpose, personal property may be separated from its owner; Pullman's Palace Car Co. v. Pennsylvania, 141 U. S. 18, 11 Sup. Ct. 876, 35 L. Ed. 613; in which the principle was applied to rolling stock (q. v.), of which as a general rule the situs is the domicile of the corporation; Appeal Tax Court of Baltimore City v. Ry. Co., 50 Md. 417; Pacific R. Co. v. Cass County, 53 Mo. 18; but subject to exceptions growing out of its character and use; City of Dubuque v. R. Co., 39 Ia. 56; Kennedy v. R. Co., 62 Ill. 395. See 6 Thomp. Corp. § 8097, and note 3. Where a corporation was registered in South Africa, but did its real business in London, it was held liable to taxation in England on its entire income: De Beers Consol. Mines, Ltd., v. Howe [1906] A. C. 455.

This power does not reach the capital of a company domiciled without the state, though a tax on a proportion of it has been sustained as a license; Riley v. Tel. Co., 47 Ind. 511; and so has a tax called an excise, on capital of a corporation having its domicile within and its business without the state; Attorney General v. Mining Co., 99 Mass. 148, 96 Am. Dec. 717; or a franchise tax assessed according to legislative discretion; People v. Trust Co., 96 N. Y. 387; measured by the capital found to be employed within the state; People v. Davenport, 91 N. Y. 574; People v. Com'rs of Taxes, 104 N. Y. 240, 10 N. E. 437; which is justified on the theory that part of the capital is employed within the state; People v. Wemple, 129 N. Y. 558, 29 N. E. 812. See TAXATION.

Independently of the power of taxation, foreign corporations may be excluded from doing business in other states, or, if permitted to do it, are subject to such terms and conditions as the legislature may see fit to impose; Attorney General v. Min. Co., 99 Mass. 148, 96 Am. Dec. 717; Western Union Telegraph Co. v. Mayer, 28 Ohio St. 521; Farmers' & Merchants' Ins. Co. v. Harrah, 47 Ind. 236; Home Ins. Co. v. Davis, 29 Mich. 238; Lafayette Ins. Co. v. French, 18 How. (U. S.) 404, 15 L. Ed. 451; Semple v. Bank, 5 Sawy. 88, Fed. Cas. No. 12,659; Paul v. Virginia, 8 Wall. (U. S.) 168, 19 L. Ed. 357. Such conditions may include: Restrictions upon the right of eminent domain (q. v.); payment of license fees; Pembina Consol. Silver Min. & Mill. Co. v. Com. of Pennsylvania, 125 U. S. 181, 8 Sup. Ct. 737, 31 L. Ed. 650; provisions that any restriction imposed by the home state of the foreign corporation shall also be imposed upon corporations of that state in the domestic state; People v. Fire Ass'n of Philadelphia, 92 N. Y. 311, 44 Am. Rep. 380; Home Ins. Co. v. Swigert, 104 Ill. 653; such provisions when, as is usual, they are in the form of a license or tax are not objectionable on the ground of inequality; State v. Ins. Co., 115 Ind. 257, 17 N. E. 574; Blackmer v. Ins. Co., 115 Ind. 596, 17 N. E. 583; Phoenix Ins. Co. of New York v. Welch, 29 Kan. 672. So statutes are upheld requiring such corporations to file their charter, etc.; Hammer v. Min. & Mill. Co., 130 U. S. 291, 9 Sup. Ct. 548, 32 L. Ed. 964; or their agents to file evidence of their authority; Morgan & Co. v. White, 101 Ind. 413; or to keep a known place of business, and a resident agent; or to appoint an attorney for service of process in suits against the company; Uteley v. Min. Co., 4 Colo. 369; in default of which contracts are voidable; Semple v. Bank, 5 Sawy. 88, Fed. Cas. No. 12,659; Bank of British Columbia v. Page, 6 Or. 431; New England Mtg. Sec. Co. v. Ingram, 91 Ala. 337, 9 South. 140; and all such statutes are self-enforcing; id.

When by constitution or statute such corporations are restricted from doing business within the state, in default of compliance with the provisions thereof, the decisions are not uniform as to what amounts to a violation of the prohibition. The question usually arises in one of two cases, either where it is sought to serve process on a corporation or to tax its property. It may also arise in penal actions against the corporation or its agent for doing business without complying with the statute. It seems to be established by the weight of authority that single transactions do not constitute such doing business as is contemplated by the statute; 6 Thomp. Corp. § 7936, where many cases are collected, holding valid acts done in states where there are statutes of the class mentioned; see infra.

Most of the statutes of this class prescribe penalties, either by qui tam action or indictment, upon agents for violations of them, and it is held that such a state statute making it a misdemeanor for a person in the state to procure insurance for a resident there from an insurance company not incorporated under its laws, and which had not filed the bond required by the laws of the state relative to insurance, is not a regulation of commerce, and does not conflict with the constitution of the United States; Hooper v. California, 155 U. S. 648, 15 Sup. Ct. 207, 39 L. Ed. 297. Such an act was held not to apply to the owner of property who merely obtained insurance on his own property; Com. v. Biddle, 139 Pa. 605, 21 Atl. 134, 11 L. R. A. 561. A foreign corporation which is barred from a state court for failure to obey the laws of that state as a prerequisite cannot sue on its contract in a federal court; Cyclone Min. Co. v. Power Co., 165 Fed. 996; nor can it foreclose a mortgage upon land in the state; Chattanooga Nat. Bldg. & Loan Ass'n v. Denson, 189 U. S. 408, 23 Sup. Ct. 630, 47 L. Ed. 870; nor can it recover upon a bond conditioned for the faithful discharge of the duty of an agent appointed to conduct business in the state; McCanna & Fraser Co. v. Surety Co., 74 Fed. 597; Mutual Ben. Life Ins. Co. v. Bales, 92 Pa. 352; U. S. Life Ins. Co. v. Adams, 7 Biss. 30, Fed. Cas. No. 16,792; contra, Penn. Mut. Life Ins. Co. v. Bradley, 21 N. Y. Supp. 876; Manhattan Ins. Co. v. Ellis, 32 Ohio St. 388; but it was held that a foreign corporation which had failed to register under the Delaware act could nevertheless enforce a contract in a Delaware court against one who retained the benefits of the contract, the act being silent on this point, and this is said to be the "better doctrine"; Model Heating Co. v. Magarity, 1

Boyce (Del.) 240, 75 Atl. 614. A South Dakota act forbidding resort to its courts to a foreign corporation that has not registered is valid under the police power, even though the transaction in question related to interstate commerce; Sioux Remedy Co. v. Cope, 28 S. D. 397, 133 N. W. 683, refusing to follow Sioux Remedy Co. v. Lindgren, 27 S. D. 123, 130 N. W. 49. Such corporation may sue on a cause of action under a federal statute having no relation to its doing business in the state contrary to law; Vitagraph Co. of America v. Optiscope Co., 157 Fed. 699. The agent of a foreign corporation which has not filed its statement under this act, is presumed to know of his incapacity and becomes personally liable to one with whom he dealt on account of such corporation, and this responsibility is in addition to the statutory penalty for acting as the agent of a foreign corporation without complying with the provisions of the act; Lasher v. Stimson, 145 Pa. 30, 23 Atl. 552.

Efforts have been made to take away the jurisdiction which federal courts may exercise in controversies between a foreign corporation and a citizen of the state, and to substitute the exclusive jurisdiction of the state courts. Any direct enactments forbidding removal would be declared unconstitutional; and an agreement made not to exercise this right of removal is void; Chicago, M. & St. P. Ry. Co. v. Becker, 32 Fed. 849; Baltimore & O. R. Co. v. Cary, 28 Ohio St. 208. A valid corporation of any state has the absolute right to institute and maintain in the federal courts, and to remove to those courts, its suits in every other state, in cases prescribed by the acts of congress; Home Ins. Co. v. Morse, 87 U. S. 445, 22 L. Ed. 365; Barron v. Burnside, 121 U. S. 186, 200, 7 Sup. Ct. 931, 30 L. Ed. 915. "Every law of a state which attempts to destroy these rights, or to burden their exercise, is violative of the constitution of the United States and void;" Butler Bros. Shoe Co. v. U. S. Rubber Co., 156 Fed. 1, 84 C. C. A. 167.

When restrictive state statutes exist, contracts made in violation of them are treated in some states as voidable at the election of the other party; Hyde v. Goodnow, 3 N. Y. 266; Columbia Fire Ins. Co. v. Kinyon, 37 N. J. L. 33; Washington County Mut. Ins. Co. v. Dawes, 6 Gray (Mass.) 376; Haverhill Ins. Co. v. Prescott, 42 N. H. 547, 80 Am. Dec. 123; Beecher v. Mill Co., 45 Mich. 103, 7 N. W. 695; except as against a bona fide holder of negotiable paper for value and without notice; Williams v. Phenev, 8 Gray (Mass.) 206; or it is held that the remedy is suspended until the statute is complied with; Daly v. Ins. Co., 64 Ind. 1; Singer Mfg. Co. v. Brown, 64 Ind. 548; or that they are only void when the statute expressly so provides, as held in an able opinion by Bartholomew, J., in Washburn Mill Co. v. Bartlett, 3 N. D. 138, 54 N. W. 544; Connecticut River Mut.

Fire Ins. Co. v. Way, 62 N. H. 622; American Loan & Trust Co. v. R. Co., 37 Fed. 242; Rogers & Co. v. Simmons, 155 Mass. 259, 29 N. E. 580; or not void when the statute provides a penalty; Fritts v. Palmer, 132 U. S. 282, 10 Sup. Ct. 93, 33 L. Ed. 317; Pangborn v. Westlake, 36 Ia. 546; Toledo Tie & Lumber Co. v. Thomas, 33 W. Va. 566, 11 S. E. 37, 25 Am. St. Rep. 925; Sherwood v. Alvis, 83 Ala. 115, 3 South. 307, 3 Am. St. Rep. 695 (but see Farrior v. Security Co., 88 Ala. 275, 7 South. 200, Mullens v. Mtg. Co., 88 Ala. 280, 7 South. 201, and Christian v. Land & Mtg. Co., 89 Ala. 198, 7 South. 427). In other states it is held that the contract cannot be enforced; Thome v. Ins. Co., 80 Pa. 15, 21 Am. Rep. 89; Ætna Ins. Co. v. Harvey, 11 Wis. 394; Cincinnati Mut. Health Assur. Co. v. Rosenthal, 55 Ill. 85, 8 Am. Rep. 626; Lycoming Fire Ins. Co. v. Wright, 55 Vt. 526; but the corporation cannot set up its own non-compliance with a statute to avoid its own contract; Lasher v. Stimson, 145 Pa. 30, 23 Atl. 552; Hartford Live Stock Ins. Co. v. Matthews, 102 Mass. 221; Watertown Fire Ins. Co. v. Rust, 141 Ill. 85, 30 N. E. 772; Behler v. Ins. Co., 68 Ind. 347; Pennypacker v. Ins. Co., 80 Ia. 56, 45 N. W. 408, 8 L. R. A. 236, 20 Am. St. Rep. 395; Daniels v. Tearney, 102 U. S. 415, 26 L. Ed. 187. Such contracts may be validated by the legislature, by subsequent act; U. S. Mortgage Co. v. Gross, 93 Ill. 483. The rule avoiding them as against public policy is not to be extended; L. R. 19 Eq. 465. Whether compliance with such statutes is presumed or must be averred and proved is a point on which the decisions differ; it is held that there is such presumption in Railway Co. v. Fire Ass'n, 55 Ark. 163, 18 S. W. 43; White River Lumber Co. v. Imp. Ass'n, 55 Ark. 625, 18 S. W. 1055; American Ins. Co. v. Cutler, 36 Mich. 261; American Ins. Co. v. Smith, 73 Mo. 368; Sprague v. Lumber Co., 106 Ind. 242, 6 N. E. 335; and an analogous case is Fry v. Bennett, 28 N. Y. 324. On the other hand, it has been frequently held that compliance must be averred and proved; Christian v. Land & Mtg. Co., 89 Ala. 198, 7 South. 427; Lycoming Fire Ins. Co. v. Wright, 55 Vt. 526; but this view is said to be illogical and unsound; 31 Am. L. Rev. 19; 6 Thomp. Corp. § 7965, citing as conclusive the analogous case in which failure of a liquor dealer to have a license is held to be a good defence to an action for liquor sold; Miller v. Ammon, 145 U. S. 421, 12 Sup. Ct. 884, 36 L. Ed. 759; although no one would think of averring and proving his license. With much reason, therefore, it was held that such averment is not necessary, and nothing short of a distinct averment of non-compliance will make proof to the contrary necessary; White River Lumber Co. v. Imp. Ass'n, 55 Ark. 625, 18 S. W. 1055.

The question of the power of a foreign corporation to take hold and transmit title to land is one of public policy, and no general rule can be formulated from the decisions and statutes which must (as in most matters affecting land titles) be referred to with reference to a particular state. Enabling statutes will be found in many states, either general, or where such legislation is permissible, for special cases. It can at least be suggested that in the absence of any such legislation, or of express decisions, serious doubt will arise as to the power. The conclusion is reached by Judge Thompson that in the absence of prohibitory local law, there is much authority that, if authorized to do so in the state of their creation, corporations may hold land in other states; Barnes v. Suddard, 117 Ill. 237, 7 N. E. 477; New Hampshire Land Co. v. Tilton, 19 Fed. 73; Thompson v. Waters, 25 Mich. 214, 12 Am. Rep. 243; unless forbidden to do so either by the public policy of the state; United States Trust Co. of New York v. Lee, 73 Ill. 142, 24 Am. Rep. 236; or its statute law; Com. v. R. Co., 132 Pa. 591, 19 Atl. 291, 7 L. R. A. 634, where the subject is considered at length by Paxson, J., with respect to general enabling laws and proceedings by the state in such cases; Runyan v. Coster, 14 Pet. (U. S.) 122, 10 L. Ed. 382; Hickory Farm Oil Co. v. R. Co., 32 Fed. 22.

It is sometimes held that the power exists for business purposes, as an office; Baltimore & P. Steamboat Co. v. McCutcheon, 13 Pa. 13; Carroll v. City of East St. Louis, 67 Ill. 568, 16 Am. Rep. 632; Barnes v. Suddard, 117 Ill. 237, 7 N. E. 477; and it has been held that a Connecticut company having no business there could operate as a land company in New Hampshire; New Hampshire Land Co. v. Tilton, 19 Fed. 73; contra, Carroll v. City of East St. Louis, 67 Ill. 568, 16 Am. Rep. 632; the tendency of American legislation is to permit the holding of land by foreign corporations, for business but not for speculation; 6 Thomp. Corp. § 7917. The right of such corporation to take and hold title to real estate cannot be questioned in ejectment by it against a former managing director; Seymour v. Gold Mines, 153 U. S. 523, 14 Sup. Ct. 847, 38 L. Ed. 807. See ALIEN.

The power of acquiring land has been held to exist until forbidden; American & F. Christian Union v. Yount, 101 U. S. 352, 25 L. Ed. 888; Blodgett v. Zinc Co., 120 Fed. 893, 58 C. C. A. 79; and as against every one except the state when proceeding for a forfeiture; Runyan v. Coster, 14 Pet. 122, 10 L. Ed. 382; Baker v. Neff, 73 Ind. 68; Alexander v. Tolleston Club of Chicago, 110 Ill. 65; Union Nat. Bank v. Matthews, 98 U. S. 621, 25 L. Ed. 188. Of such proceedings it is said that the only one in this country is that in Pennsylvania cited infra; 6 Thomp. Corp. § 7918.

Land may generally be taken by devise; Thompson v. Swoope, 24 Pa. 474; University v. Tucker, 31 W. Va. 621, 8 S. E. 410; but only by corporations having charter power so to take; Boyce v. City of St. Louis, 29 Barb. (N. Y.) 650; Starkweather v. Bible Soc., 72 Ill. 50, 22 Am. Rep. 133. Foreign corporations have usually the power to acquire land by foreclosure of mortgages; National Trust Co. v. Murphy, 30 N. J. Eq. 408; Farmers' Loan & Trust Co. v. McKinney, 6 McLean 1, Fed. Cas. No. 4,667; American Mut. Life Ins. Co. v. Owen, 15 Gray (Mass.) 491; and in such cases the state only and not the mortgagor can set up a want of power; Carlow v. C. Aultman & Co., 28 Neb. 672, 44 N. W. 873; Pancoast v. Ins. Co., 79 Ind. 172.

In all cases involving the right of foreign corporations to hold lands the lex rei sitae governs; Sto. Conf. L. § 428; Boyce v. City of St. Louis, 29 Barb. (N. Y.) 650. See ESCHEAT.

Whenever a foreign corporation has the power to make a contract in a state or country it may enforce it or recover damages for a breach in like manner as persons may do in like case; 2 Ld. Raym. 1535; Bank of Augusta v. Earle, 13 Pet. (U. S.) 519, 10 L. Ed. 274; New Jersey Protection & Lombard Bank v. Thorp, 6 Cow. (N. Y.) 46; Connecticut Mut. Life Ins. Co. v. Cross, 18 Wis. 109; British American Land Co. v. Ames, 6 Metc. (Mass.) 391; Day v. Bank, 13 Vt. 97; Savage Mfg. Co. v. Armstrong, 17 Me. 34, 35 Am. Dec. 227. From these and many other cases it is clearly a principle long and well settled that, unless prohibited by local statutory law, a corporation of one state may sue in another by its corporate title. Such prohibitory legislation exists in some states as already sufficiently shown; supra. When it does not exist this right of action extends to all cases and causes of action as to which a remedy exists in favor of persons or domestic corporations; 6 Thomp. Corp. § 7978; and see id. §§ 7380-8. An action by such corporation for libel has been sustained; Jewelers' Mercantile Agency v. Douglass, 35 Ill. App. 627.

In such actions when, as in most jurisdictions, it is unnecessary to aver or prove the corporate existence in suits by or against corporations (see 6 Thomp. Corp. § 7658), or at least only to make very formal allegation of it (id. § 7661); the same rule applies to foreign corporations; id. § 7984; Paine v. R. Co., 31 Ind. 283; Smith v. Machine Co., 26 Ohio St. 562; nor, as has been held, in the absence of a statute either expressly or by authoritative construction requiring it, need there be an averment of compliance with statutory pre-requisites for doing business; American Button Hole & O. S. S. M. Co. v. Moore, 2 Dak. 280, 8 N. W. 131; O'Reilly, Skelly & Fogarty Co. v. Greene, 17 Misc. 302, 40 N. Y. Supp. 360; Nichols v. Saving Ass'n, 93 Va. 380, 25 S. E. 8; the ground of dispensing with the averment of compliance with such statutes is the presumption of legality and compliance with local law, discussed, supra.

Apart from this question, which only affects the right of action upon contracts made within the state, the foreign corporation has, as to all other matters, the same rights and remedies as other non-residents; Utleigh v. Mining Co., 4 Colo. 369; Smith v. Little, 67 Ind. 549. It may foreclose a mortgage even when by statute disqualified from acquiring real estate; Leasure v. Ins. Co., 91 Pa. 491; Northwestern Mut. Life Ins. Co. v. Brown, 36 Minn. 108, 31 N. W. 54; contra, Christian v. Mortgage Co., 89 Ala. 198, 7 South. 427; and purchase at the execution sale; Elston v. Piggott, 94 Ind. 14; or maintain an action on an insurance policy; Tabor v. Mfg. Co., 11 Colo. 419, 18 Pac. 537; or for a tax wrongfully paid; Powder River Cattle Co. v. Com'rs of Custer County, 9 Mont. 145, 22 Pac. 383. Where a foreign corporation, by the law of its domicile, continues to exist after the expiration of its charter for the purpose of suing on debts accrued before such expiration, it may also sue in such case in New York; O'Reilly, Skelly & Fogarty Co. v. Greene, 17 Misc. 302, 40 N. Y. Supp. 360.

In suits against foreign corporations the question of jurisdiction is of first importance, and it is the general rule that a corporation, like a natural person, cannot be sued in personam in a state within whose limits it has never been found; 6 Thomp. Corp. § 7988. This conclusion springs naturally from the principle that a "corporation being the creation of local law, can have no legal existence beyond the limits of the sovereignty where created;" Paul v. Virginia, 8 Wall. (U. S.) 181, 19 L. Ed. 357; but this rule is subject to exceptions growing out of the theory that, under certain circumstances, such corporations will be held in law to have acquired a domicile within a state, at least so far as to subject them to suit.

A non-resident corporation, whose objection to the jurisdiction on the ground of insufficient service is overruled, and which then by order of court pleads to the merits, does not lose its rights of objection; but it does submit to the jurisdiction if it sets up a counterclaim, even though in the nature of recoupment; Merchants' Heat & Light Co. v. J. B. Clow & Sons, 204 U. S. 286, 27 Sup. Ct. 285, 51 L. Ed. 488.

In England in spite of dicta to the contrary; L. R. 7 Q. B. 293; 1 Ex. Div. 237; there was said to be no case prior to 1885 holding foreign corporations suable in that country; 54 L. J. Q. B. Div. 527. The necessities of the case resulted in a rule authorized by statute providing for acquiring jurisdiction over a foreign corporation carrying on business in England by service on a "head officer" in charge of its business there; and the court of appeal sustained the jurisdiction so acquired; 58 L. J. Q. B. Div.

508; 33 Ch. Div. 446. See 5 H. L. Cas. 416.

In the United States the exceptions to the general rule first stated are thus classified by Thompson: (1) Where a corporation had established a permanent agency in the state or country; (2) when it is agreed with the state that process may be served in it; (3) when it is agreed with the opposite party that an action may be brought against it to enforce a contract against it in a state or country other than its domicile; 6 Thomp. Corp. § 7988. These exceptions were rendered necessary to meet the case of corporations in recent years doing business so extensively outside of the domicile of their creation, and particularly of what are known as "tramp corporations," purposely organized in another state to do business in their own and evade its laws; besides, trading corporations being equally migratory with individuals, the reason originally assigned for want of jurisdiction had ceased to exist; id. § 7989. Accordingly it may be considered that corporations may acquire business domicils in other states and countries, and, wherever they do so, they may be sued without the aid of local statute law; id. In most, if not all of the states, however, statutes exist requiring foreign corporations to appoint an agent for process as a condition of doing business in the state, and so, also, by local statutes, jurisdiction is affirmatively assumed. See National Bank of Commerce v. Huntington, 129 Mass. 444; McNichol v. Reporting Agency, 74 Mo. 457; March v. R. Co., 40 N. H. 548, 77 Am. Dec. 732; City Fire Ins. Co. v. Carrugi, 41 Ga. 660; Iron Age Pub. Co. v. Telegraph Co., 83 Ala. 498, 3 South. 449, 3 Am. St. Rep. 758; Camden Rolling Mill Co. v. Iron Co., 32 N. J. L. 15; U. S. v. Telephone Co., 29 Fed. 17; Tuchband v. R. Co., 115 N. Y. 437, 22 N. E. 360. The principles upon which the jurisdiction rests are that it must appear in the record that the corporation was engaged in business in the state, and that the person upon whom service was made represented the company there in the business; and while the certificate of service is prima facie evidence of the latter fact, it is open to contradiction when the record is offered in evidence in another state; St. Clair v. Cox, 106 U. S. 350, 1 Sup. Ct. 354, 27 L. Ed. 222.

With respect to what constitutes a valid service on a foreign corporation, the subject is generally regulated by statutes which must be consulted with reference to any given case, and reference may be made to 6 Thomp. Corp. Ch. 198, where the decisions are collected as to service on different classes of officers and agents. The decisions of the U. S. Supreme Court established the rule that jurisdiction cannot be acquired by service upon an officer casually within the state for purposes not connected with the business of the corporation; Lafayette Ins. Co. v. French, 18 How. (U. S.) 404, 15 L. Ed. 451; St. Clair

Cases in which the corporation has been held to be "doing business" under such statute are: Writing a policy of insurance upon property within the state although the contract was executed elsewhere; Stanliber v. Ins. Co., 76 Wis. 285, 45 N. W. 221; keeping an office for a combination of two railroads where negotiation for settlement of the claim had been conducted by the agent upon whom process could be served; St. Louis S. W. Ry. Co. v. Alexander, 227 U. S. 218, 33 Sup. Ct. 245, 57 L. Ed. —. A foreign insurance company, which has been doing business in a state through its agents, does not cease to do it when it withdraws its agents and ceases to obtain or ask for new risks or obtain new policies, while, at the same time, its old policies continue in force and the premiums thereon are paid by the policy-holders to an agent in the state where the policy-holders reside; Connecticut Mut. Life Ins. Co. v. Spratley, 172 U. S. 602, 19 Sup. Ct. 308, 43 L. Ed. 569; or where its agents are there, under its authority, adjusting the losses covered by their policies; Pennsylvania Lumberman's Mut. Fire Co. v. Meyer, 197 U. S. 407, 25 Sup. Ct. 483, 49 L. Ed. 810. In some cases an isolated transaction constitutes doing business, as where a foreign corporation sold some machinery through an order taken and filled by its local agent and a note was given for the purchase price; Deere Plow Co. v. Wyland, 69 Kan. 255, 76 Pac. 863, 2 Ann. Cas. 304. The practical difficulty of determining whether a single transaction evidences a purpose to engage in business permanently is one of fact purely, and is properly for the jury; Oakland Sugar Mill Co. v. Wolf Co., 118 Fed. 239, 55 C. C. A. 93. It was said that doing business implied corporate continuity of conduct such as might be evidenced by the investment of capital there, that the maintenance of an office for the transaction of its business and those incidental circumstances which attest a corporate intent to avail itself of the privilege of carrying on the business; Penn. Collieries Co. v. McKeever, 183 N. Y. 98, 75 N. E. 935, 2 L. R. A. (N. S.) 127.

A corporation doing business in a state and protected by its power may be compelled to produce before a tribunal of the state material evidence in its custody and control although for the time outside the limits of the state; Consolidated Rendering Co. v. Vermont, 207 U. S. 541, 28 Sup. Ct. 178, 52 L. Ed. 327, 12 Ann. Cas. 658; affirming In re Consolidated Rendering Co., 80 Vt. 55, 66 Atl. 790, 11 Ann. Cas. 1069.

Cases in which the transaction in question was held not to be "doing business" within the statute are most of those in which there is a single isolated act; Ladd Metals Co. v. Mining Co., 152 Fed. 1008; Cooper Mfg. Co. v. Ferguson, 113 U. S. 727, 5 Sup. Ct. 739, 28 L. Ed. 1137; such as the purchase of railroad securities by a foreign trust company and taking a mortgage to secure them; Gilchrist v. Helena, H. S. & S. R. Co., 47 Fed. 593; but do not include an application for insurance and receiving the money therefor where the application is sent direct to the foreign office; Fulton v. Acc. Ass'n, 172 Pa. 117, 33 Atl. 324; Clay Fire & M. Ins. Co. v. Mfg. Co., 31 Mich. 346; Columbia Fire Ins. Co. v. Kinyon, 37 N. J. L. 33; or through a broker who deals with the company through another broker; Romaine v. Ins. Co., 55 Fed. 751; but these cases have been criticised; 4 Thomp. Corp. § 7937, n. 2; but the weight of authority is said to be in favor of the validity of the policy where it is written out and returned from the home office and transmitted by an agent who has not complied with the statutes of the foreign state; Lamb v. Bowser, 7 Biss. 315, Fed. Cas. No. 8,008; id., 7 Biss. 372, Fed. Cas. No. 8,009. So it was held not doing business (for service) where a steamship company sold tickets through an agent who had the company's name on his office door and received a commission on his sales and a contribution on account of office rent; Goepfert v. Compagnie Générale Transatlantique, 156 Fed. 196; nor where there was the mere renting of an office for collecting news and soliciting contracts for advertisements when the orders were sent outside of the state and filled there; American Contractor Pub. Co. v. Michael Nocenti Co., 139 N. Y. Supp. 853; nor where the corporation sends its products into a state through a commission merchant doing business there; Brookford Mills v. Baldwin, 154 App. Div. 553, 139 N. Y. Supp. 195; nor where it merely collected debts in a state; Ichenhauser Co. v. Landrum's Assignee, 153 Ky. 316, 155 S. W. 738; nor where the company has no office in a state, but employs a soliciting agent who sends the orders to the home office where they are filled by direct shipment to the buyer; Saxony Mills v. Wagner, 94 Miss. 233, 47 South. 899, 23 L. R. A. (N. S.) 834, 136 Am. St. Rep. 575, 19 Ann. Cas. 199; where there is merely an office and an agent to solicit freight and passenger traffic; Green v. Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co., 205 U. S. 530, 27 Sup. Ct. 595, 51 L. Ed. 916; nor where there was no office except for the registration of stock transfers but the company kept a bank account and its directors met there, as permitted by its laws; Honeyman v. Iron Co., 133 Fed. 96.

The service was held sufficient where an insurance company with outstanding policies collected premiums and adjusted losses and the service was made upon a doctor sent to investigate a loss; Commercial Mut. Acc. Co. v. Davis, 213 U. S. 245, 29 Sup. Ct. 445, 53 L. Ed. 782. Where a corporation is not doing business in a state, service on its president, when temporarily within its jurisdiction, is not sufficient service; Goldey v. Morning News, 156 U. S. 518, 15 Sup. Ct. 559, 39 L. Ed. 517; and the residence of an officer of a corporation in a state is not sufficient; he must be there officially representing the corporation in its business; Conley v. Alkali Works, 190 U. S. 406, 23 Sup. Ct. 728, 47 L. Ed. 1113. The residence of an attorney, appointed to accept service for a foreign corporation, fixes the residence of the corporation; Lemon v. Glass Co., 199 Fed. 927; the appointment of a statutory agent is irrevocable, except by the appointment of a new one; Gibson v. Ins. Co., 144 Mass. 81, 10 N. E. 729; and continues as long as any liability remains against the corporation arising out of business done by it under the registration; Brown-Ketcham Iron Works v. Swift Co. (Ind.) 100 N. E. 584; although irrevocable in form it may be revocable on withdrawal from the state as to matters not connected with business transacted in the state or with its residents; Hunter v. Ins. Co., 218 U. S. 573, 31 Sup. Ct. 127, 54 L. Ed. 1155, 30 L. R. A. (N. S.) 686; but a few disconnected transactions, by a foreign corporation after its withdrawal, do not constitute doing business in the state so as to preclude its revocation of a power of attorney to a state officer to accept process; id. The termination of business dealings in the state need not ipso facto terminate the statutory agent's authority to receive service. In the absence of express provisions, however, such authority should not easily be implied. The company has submitted to the jurisdiction of the courts in return for the privilege of doing business in the state; when it voluntarily withdraws, the presumption would be that it has withdrawn for all purposes. A common class of statutes, however, provides for the designation of special agents, frequently state officers other than the officers or business agents of the company, to receive service, and under these statutes some courts have held that jurisdiction over the company remains in respect to all liabilities incurred by the company while in the state; Collier v. Life Ass'n, 119 Fed. 617; Davis v. Coal Co., 129 Fed. 149; Groel v. Electric Co., 69 N. J. Eq. 397, 60 Atl. 822; contra, Swann v. Life Ass'n, 100 Fed. 922; Friedman v. Empire Ins. Co., 101 Fed. 535. See also Mutual Reserve Fund Life Ass'n v. Phelps, 190 U. S. 147, 23 Sup. Ct. 707, 47 L. Ed. 987. Where a foreign corporation had been doing business in a state and there contracted a liability, but had withdrawn from the state before suit was brought, it was held that service could be had in that state in the mode prescribed by its laws; McCord Lumber Co. v. Doyle, 97 Fed. 22, 38 C. C. A. 34.

In some states, under acts requiring registering of an agent, registering after the transaction but before suit is good, since the acts only affect the remedy and do not avoid the contract; Augur Steel Axle Co. v. Whittier, 117 Mass. 451; Security Savings & Loan Ass'n v. Elbert, 153 Ind. 198, 54 N. E. 753.

Foreign corporations, it is said, cannot be logically dealt with as non-residents within the meaning of attachment laws, where they have become domesticated so far as to be liable to actions in personam; Farnsworth v. R. Co., 29 Mo. 75; Martin v. R. Co., 7 Bush (Ky.) 116. Formerly a foreign attachment could not be issued in courts of the United States; Pollard v. Dwight, 4 Cra. (U. S.) 421, 2 L. Ed. 666; Nazro v. Cragin, 3 Dill. 474, Fed. Cas. No. 10,062; Ex parte Des Moines & M. R. Co., 103 U. S. 794, 26 L. Ed. 461; but in 1872 the federal courts were authorized to adopt the state laws in force relative to attachments; U. S. R. S. § 915; and the federal courts now apply state statutes relating to attachments to foreign corporations; Rainey v. Maas, 51 Fed. 580. Such corporations may also be summoned as garnishees whenever they would be liable for the debt attached, or by residence or agency are amenable to process; Libbey v. Hodgdon, 9 N. H. 394; Fithian v. R. Co., 31 Pa. 114; Hannibal & St. J. R. Co. v. Crane, 102 Ill. 249, 40 Am. Rep. 581; Knox v. Ins. Co., 9 Conn. 430, 25 Am. Dec. 33; or when they do business in the state and have a managing agent there; Rainey v. Maas, 51 Fed. 580.

It has been held that the dissolution of a corporation dissolves a foreign attachment against it, on the ground that to compel an appearance was the primary object of the process; Farmers' & Mechanics' Bank v. Little, 8 W. & S. (Pa.) 207, 42 Am. Dec. 293; but the soundness of this case has been doubted on the ground that, jurisdiction having attached to the res, it continues for the real object of the suit—satisfaction of the demand; 6 Thomp. Corp. § 8062; and this view is supported by another case which holds that comity does not interfere with it; City Ins. Co. of Providence v. Bank, 68 Ill. 348. But it was held that a state statute providing that corporations shall continue to exist for a certain period after the time fixed for dissolution, for the purpose of prosecuting and defending suits, and that no body of persons acting as a corporation shall set up want of legal organization as a defence to a suit against them as a corporation, does not control or affect foreign corporations merely doing business in the state; and a suit against such a corporation abates upon its dissolution, so that, if a judgment be thereafter entered against it, the same is void; Marion Phosphate Co. v. Perry, 74 Fed. 425, 20 C. C. A. 490, 33 L. R. A. 252. See DISSOLUTION OF CORPORATIONS.

A corporation may subject itself to the jurisdiction of a foreign state by contract with a private person; 60 L. T. N. S. 924; or with the state; New England Mortgage Security Co. v. Ingram, 91 Ala. 337, 9 South. 140.

Foreign corporations are sometimes held not liable to suit, except ex contractu upon domestic contracts; Bawknicht v. Ins. Co., 55 Ga. 194; or for torts committed within the state; Robinson v. Navigation Co., 112 N. Y. 315, 19 N. E. 625, 2 L. R. A. 636; Central R. & Banking Co. v. Carr, 76 Ala. 388, 52 Am. Rep. 339; Gray v. Pulley Works, 16 Fed. 436; Austin v. R. Co., 25 N. J. L. 381; unless the statutory jurisdiction extends to any cause of action; Palmer v. Ins. Co., 84 N. Y. 63; Myer v. Ins. Co., 40 Md. 595; Brauser v. Ins. Co., 21 Wis. 506; nor are they liable to suits by non-residents on foreign contracts; Sawyer v. Ins. Co., 46 Vt. 697; contra, Johnston v. Ins. Co., 132 Mass. 432.

A state court may take possession of the assets of an insolvent foreign corporation within its limits and distribute them or their proceeds among creditors, but it cannot discriminate in favor of its own creditors against citizens of other states; Blake v. McClung, 176 U. S. 62, 20 Sup. Ct. 307, 44 L. Ed. 371. But the United States circuit court has no inherent power, as a court of equity, at the suit of domestic shareholders, to dissolve an English mining company, owning and operating a mine in the United States, and to wind up its business operations; nor has it any such power under the act of parliament known as the "Companies Act, 1862;" Republican Mountain Silver Mines v. Brown, 58 Fed. 644, 7 C. C. A. 412, 24 L. R. A. 776.

A corporation, by doing business in another state and becoming liable to suit there, both in state and federal courts, does not lose its right to claim, for the purposes of federal jurisdiction, a citizenship in the state by which it was created; Murfr. For. Corp. 236. When sued in a foreign state it may remove the cause to a federal court; Baltimore & O. R. Co. v. Koontz, 104 U. S. 5, 26 L. Ed. 643; Wilkinson v. R. Co., 22 Fed. 353. But it is otherwise if the effect of the legislation under which it enters the foreign state be to confer corporate privileges upon it in that state. In such case the company is a citizen of both states; Baltimore & O. R. Co. v. Koontz, 104 U. S. 5, 26 L. Ed. 643.

FOREIGN COUNTY. Another county. It may be in the same kingdom, it will still be foreign. See Blount, Foreign.

FOREIGN COURT. The circuit court of the United States is not a foreign court relatively to the court of chancery of New Jersey; 19 Am. L. Reg. N. S. 426.

FOREIGN CREDITOR. One who is resident in a state or country foreign to that of the domicile of the debtor or the situs of his property.

FOREIGN DECREE. See FOREIGN JUDGMENT.

FOREIGN DIVORCE. One obtained in a state or country other than that in which the marriage was solemnized and the parties, or at least the one against whom the proceeding is taken, are domiciled. See DIVORCE.

FOREIGN DOMICIL. See DOMICIL.

FOREIGN DOMINION. In English Law. A country, at one time subject to a foreign prince; which, by conquest or cession, has become a part of the dominion of the British Crown. 5 B. & S. 290.

FOREIGN ENLISTMENT ACT. The statute 59 Geo. III. c. 69, for preventing British citizens from enlisting as sailors or soldiers in the service of a foreign power. 4 Steph. Com. 226. See NEUTRALITY.

FOREIGN EXCHANGE. Drafts drawn on a foreign state or county. See BILL OF EXCHANGE.

FOREIGN FACTOR. One who resides in a country foreign to that of his principal. See FACTOR.

FOREIGN FISHING. Oil, manufactured from whales caught by the crew of an American vessel, is not the product of foreign fishing within the purview of the revenue laws of the United States, though it has since been owned and brought into port by persons in the foreign service. U. S. v. Burdett, 2 Sumn. 336, Fed. Cas. No. 14,684.

FOREIGN-GOING SHIP. In the English Merchant Shipping Act, any ship employed in trading between some place or places in the United Kingdom, and other places specified in said act outside the limits of the kingdom.

It is a general rule that foreign judgments are admitted as conclusive evidence of all matters directly involved in the case decided, where the same question is brought up incidentally. 1 Greenl. Ev. 547, and note; Betts v. Bagley, 12 Pick. (Mass.) 572. Such judgments and decrees in rem, whether relating to immovable property or movables within the jurisdiction of the foreign court, are binding everywhere; L. R. 4 H. L. 414; [1897] 1 Q. B. 55; [1896] 2 Q. B. 455. This rule applies to admiralty proceedings in rem founded on actual possession of the subject-matter, and garnishment proceeding in a like case.

It seems to be the better opinion that judgments in personam regular on their face, which are sought to be enforced in another country, are conclusive evidence, subject to a re-examination, in the courts where the new action is brought, only for irregularity, fraud, or lack of jurisdiction as to the cause or parties; 1 Greenl. Ev. § 546; Westl. Priv. Int. Law 372; Story, Conf. Laws § 607; 2 Swanst. 325; Dougl. 6, n.; 3 Sim. 458; 6 Q. B. 288; Kittredge v. Emerson, 15 N. H. 227; Folger v. Ins. Co., 99 Mass. 273, 96 Am. Dec. 747; Pearce v. Olney, 20 Conn. 544; Rogers v. Gwinn, 21 Ia. 58; but see Sanford v. Sanford, 28 Conn. 28; Bicknell v. Field, 8 Paige, Ch. (N. Y.) 440; Christmas v. Russell, 5 Wall. (U. S.) 290, 18 L. Ed. 475. It was formerly held that they were prima facie evidence merely. See 2 H. Bla. 410; Dougl. 1, 6; 3 Maule & S. 20; Bissell v. Briggs, 9 Mass. 462, 6 Am. Dec. 88; Elizabethtown Sav. Inst. v. Gerber, 34 N. J. Eq. 130; Carleton v. Bickford, 13 Gray (Mass.) 591, 74 Am. Dec. 652; State of Indiana v. Helmer, 21 Ia. 370; Pawling v. Wilson, 13 Johns. (N. Y.) 192; Tourigny v. Houle, 88 Me. 406, 34 Atl. 158. But this theory has been entirely overthrown, the doctrine of their conclusive character having been settled in England in L. R. 6 Q. B. 179. It is also fully recognized in this country; Lazier v. Westcott, 26 N. Y. 148, 82 Am. Dec. 404; Konitzky v. Meyer, 49 N. Y. 571; Rankin v. Goddard, 54 Me. 28, 89 Am. Dec. 718; and see Hilton v. Guyot, infra.

The subject of the conclusiveness of foreign judgments has been treated with much diversity of opinion in the English courts. That they are prima facie evidence to sustain an action is clear according to all the authorities, but whether conclusive, and if not so in all cases, what defences may be admitted, was for a long time not definitely settled by the English courts. The cases were very fully reviewed by Judge Redfield with this result: "So that now it may be regarded as fully established in England, that the contract resulting from a foreign judgment is equally conclusive, in its force and operation, with that implied by any domestic judgment. But there is still a very essential and important distinction between the two. Domestic judgments rest upon the conclusive force of the record, which is absolutely unimpeachable. Foreign judgments are mere matters in pais, to be proved the same as an arbitration and award, or an account stated; to be established, as matter of fact before the jury; and by consequence subject to any contradiction or impeachment which might be urged against any other matter resting upon oral proof. Hence any fraud which entered into the concoction of the judgment itself is proper to be adduced, as an answer to the same; but no fraud which occurred and was known to the opposite party, before the rendition of such foreign judgment, and which might, therefore, have been brought to the notice of the foreign court, can be urged in defence of it. It is proper to add, that while the English courts thus recognize the general force and validity of foreign judgments, it has been done under such limitations and qualifications that great latitude still remains for breaking the force of, and virtually disregarding such foreign judgments as proceed upon an obvious misapprehension of the principles governing the case; or where they are produced by partiality or favoritism, or corruption, or where upon their face they appear to be at variance with the instinctive principles of universal justice. But these are rare exceptions." Sto. Conf. Laws, Redfield's ed. § 618 a-618 k. And the same conclusion from the English cases is reached in 35 Am. L. Reg. N. S. 277.

An English writer on the subject attributes the vacillation of the courts of that country to the fact that two doctrines have been discussed as the basis of the conclusive effect given to a foreign judgment. The earlier theory was that of comity, which, as defined by Blackburn, J., in opposing the doctrine, is that "it is an admitted principle of the law of nations, that a state is bound to enforce within its territories the judgment of a foreign tribunal;" L. R. 6 Q. B. 139. This doctrine was supported by Lords Nottingham, Ellenborough, Kenyon, Cockburn, and Brougham, and Chief Baron Pigot, Sir G. Jessel, and Sir R. Phillimore; 2 Swanst. 326, n.; 4 Campb. 28; 4 M. & S. 141; 7 Term 681; 30 L. J. C. P. 177; 2 Cl. & F. 470; Ir. Rep. 1 C. L. 471; 50 L. J. P. 30; L. R. 4 P. C. 144. Of the objections raised the most important was said to be uncertainty; Piggott, For. Judg. 6. See Sto. Conf. Laws § 598. The other theory, termed that of obligation, is that when a competent court has adjudicated a certain sum to be due, a legal obligation arises to pay that sum, and an action of debt to enforce the judgment may be sustained. This was first enunciated by Parke, B., in 1845; 9 M. & W. 810; 14 L. J. Ex. 145; it was approved in 1870 by Blackburn and Mellor,

Both ideas are involved in what the English writer last cited terms the theory of obligation and comity, which is in substance this: A legal obligation arises in the state where the judgment was rendered, accompanied by a correlative sanction under which the obligation may be made effective so long as the defendant is within the jurisdiction of the foreign court; but when, by his absence from that jurisdiction, the remedy is no longer available, the obligation will, in another state or country, be clothed by comity with an auxiliary sanction to replace the correlative sanction which it has lost; Piggott, For. Judg. 18.

The foreign court must have had jurisdiction, and when the defendant was not a subject of or resident in the country in which the judgment was obtained, so that there existed nothing imposing on him any duty to obey it, the judgment cannot be enforced in an English court; L. R. 6 Q. B. 153; 67 L. T. 767. But the conclusiveness of a judgment when there was jurisdiction is illustrated by a decision that a mistake of English law as to an English contract, apparent on the face of the proceedings, was not ground of defection to a foreign judgment; L. R. 6 Q. B. 139.

In this country the subject was elaborately discussed in Hilton v. Guyot, 159 U. S. 113, 16 Sup. Ct. 139, 40 L. Ed. 95, in the argument and opinions of which are collected all the authorities. In that case it was held that "when an action is brought in a court of this country, by a citizen of a foreign country, against one of our own citizens, to recover a sum of money adjudged by a court of that country to be due from the defendant to the plaintiff, and the foreign judgment appears to have been rendered by a competent court, having jurisdiction of the cause and of the parties, and upon due allegations and proofs, and opportunity to defend against them, and its proceedings are according to the course of a civilized jurisprudence, and are stated in a clear and formal record, the judgment is prima facie evidence, at least, of the truth of the matter adjudged; and it should be held conclusive upon the merits tried in the foreign court, unless some special ground is shown for impeaching the judgment, as by showing that it was affected by fraud or prejudice, or that, by the principles of international law, and by the comity of our own country, it should not be given full credit and effect;" Hilton v. Guyot, 159 U. S. 113, 16 Sup. Ct. 139, 40 L. Ed. 95.

In the opinion of the court, Mr. Justice Gray reviews the American and English cases, and examines in detail existing laws and usages of civilized nations, and reaches the conclusion that "where there has been opportunity for a full and fair trial abroad before a court of competent jurisdiction, conducting the trial upon regular proceedings, after due citation or voluntary appearance of the defendant, and under a system of jurisprudence likely to secure an impartial administration of justice between the citizens of its own country and those of other countries, and there is nothing to show either prejudice in the court, or in the system of laws under which it was sitting, or fraud in procuring the judgment, or any other special reason why the comity of this nation should not allow it full effect, the merits of the case should not, in an action brought in this country upon the judgment, be tried afresh, as on a new trial or an appeal, upon the mere assertion of the party that the judgment was erroneous in law or in fact."

But the court go further and rest the decision upon the principle of reciprocity, adopting and applying the rule that "judgments rendered in France, or in any other foreign country, by the laws of which our own judgments are reviewable upon the merits, are not entitled to full credit and conclusive effect when sued upon in this country, but are prima facie evidence only of the justice of the plaintiff's claim."

Accordingly, it was held that, such being the practice of the French courts, with regard to American judgments, the judgment recovered in France, which was the cause of action, was not conclusive, but subject to review upon its merits.

Chief Justice Fuller delivered a dissenting opinion in which concurred Harlan, Brewer, and Jackson, JJ., taking the ground that the question was not one of comity, but to be determined upon the broad principle of public policy that there should be an end of litigation, and that this applied equally to foreign and domestic judgments.

The principles of this decision were at the same time applied to a Canadian judgment which was held conclusive inasmuch as the pleadings showed a submission to the jurisdiction of a competent court. Mere averments that the judgment was "irregular and void," and that there was "no jurisdiction or authority on the part of the court to enter such a judgment upon the facts and the pleadings" are but averments of legal conclusions and so insufficient to impeach the judgment; and it was held that, in answer to an action upon a foreign judgment the specific facts must be given upon which it is supposed to be irregular and void or based upon fraud. If rendered upon regular proceedings and due notice or appearance, and not procured by fraud, in a foreign country, by whose laws a judgment of one of our own courts, under like circumstances, is held conclusive of the merits, it is conclusive between the parties in an action brought upon it in this country, as to all matters pleaded and which might have been tried; Ritchie v. McMullen, 159 U. S. 235, 16 Sup. Ct. 171, 40 L. Ed. 133.

Foreign adjudications as respects torts are not binding; Whart. Conf. L. § 793, 827; and a judgment in Germany for infringement of trade-mark cannot be set up in the United States; Hohner v. Gratz, 50 Fed. 369. See TRADE-MARK.

Foreign judgments may be evidenced by exemplifications certified under the great seal of the state or country where the judgment is recorded, or under the seal of the court where the judgment remains; 1 Greenl. Ev. § 501; by a copy proved to be a true copy, or by the certificate of an officer authorized by law, which certificate must itself be properly authenticated; Union Bank of Georgetown v. Crittenden, 2 Cra. 238, Fed. Cas. No. 14,354; Yeaton v. Fry, 5 Cra. (U. S.) 335, 3 L. Ed. 117; Vandervoort v. Smith, 2 Cal. (N. Y.) 155; Gardere v. Ins. Co., 7 Johns. (N. Y.) 514; Buttrick v. Allen, 8 Mass. 273, 5 Am. Dec. 105; Calhoun v. Ross, 60 Ill. App. 309. The acts of foreign tribunals which are recognized by the law of nations, such as courts of admiralty and the like, are sufficiently authenticated by copies under the seal of the tribunal; Yeaton v. Fry, 5 Cra. (U. S.) 335, 3 L. Ed. 117; Thompson v. Stewart, 3 Conn. 171, 8 Am. Dec. 168. The record of a judgment of a foreign court, not of record and of inferior territorial jurisdiction, is not admissible in evidence, in the absence of proof of facts showing that the court had jurisdiction; Kopperl v. Nagy, 37 Ill. App. 23. See Edwards v. Jones, 113 N. C. 453, 18 S. E. 500.

The various states are considered as foreign to each other, with respect to this subject; Grover & B. Sewing Mach. Co. v. Radcliffe, 137 U. S. 287, 11 Sup. Ct. 92, 34 L. Ed. 670.

The constitution of the United States provides that "full faith and credit shall be given in each state to the public acts, records, and judicial proceedings of every other state"; Const. Art. IV. § 1. By the act of May 26, 1790, the records and judicial proceedings of the courts of any state shall be proved or admitted in any other court within the United States, by the attestation of the clerk and the seal of the court annexed, if there be a seal, together with a certificate of the judge, chief justice, or presiding magistrate, as the case may be, that the said attestation is in due form. And the said records and judicial proceedings, authenticated as aforesaid, shall have such faith and credit given to them in every court within the United States as they have by law or usage in the courts of the state from whence the said records are or shall be taken. By the act of March 27, 1804, all records and exemplifications of office books, which are or may be kept in any public office of any state, not appertaining to a court, shall be proved or admitted in any other court or office in any other state, by the attestation of the keeper of the said records or books, and the seal of his office thereto annexed, if there be a seal, together with a certificate of the presiding justice of the court of the county or district, as the case may be, in which such office is or may be kept, or of the governor, the secretary of state, the chancellor, or the keeper of the great seal of the state, that the said attestation is in due form and by the proper officer; and the said certificate, if given by the presiding justice of a court, shall be further authenticated by the clerk or prothonotary of the said court, who shall certify, under his hand and the seal of his office, that the presiding justice is duly commissioned and qualified; or, if the said certificate be given by the governor, the secretary of state, the chancellor, or keeper of the great seal, it shall be under the great seal of the state in which the said certificate is made. And the said records and exemplifications, authenticated as aforesaid, shall have such faith and credit given to them in every court and office within the United States as they have by law or usage in the courts or offices of the state from whence the same are or shall be taken; and the provisions of both acts shall extend to the records, etc., of the territories; U. S. R. S. § 906.

The object of this clause was to prevent judgments from being disregarded in other states; People v. Dawell, 25 Mich. 247, 12 Am. Rep. 260; it relates only to the validity and force of judgments rendered in one state when proved in another; Clafin v. McDermott, 12 Fed. 375. It does not change the nature of a judgment; McElmoyle v. Cohen, 13 Pet. (U. S.) 312, 10 L. Ed. 177; but places judgments rendered in another state on a different footing from what are known at common law as foreign judgments; Gibbons v. Livingston, 6 N. J. L. 236. The clause makes the record evidence but does not affect the jurisdiction either of the court in which the judgment is rendered or of that in which it is offered in evidence. The judgment of a foreign state differs only from a foreign judgment in not being re-examinable for fraud in obtaining them, if the court had jurisdiction; Wisconsin v. Ins. Co., 127 U. S. 265, 292, 8 Sup. Ct. 1370, 32 L. Ed. 239; Forrest v. Fey, 218 Ill. 165, 75 N. E. 789, 1 L. R. A. (N. S.) 740, 109 Am. St. Rep. 249. A judgment rendered in another state is to be regarded as a domestic judgment; Eastern Townships Bank v. Beebe & Co., 53 Vt. 177, 38 Am. Rep. 665; but it is not on the footing of a domestic judgment so far as to be enforced by execution, but the manner of their enforcement is left to the state in which they are sued on, pleaded, or offered in evidence. When pleaded and proved they are conclusive, and if their enforcement is denied it amounts to the denial of a right secured by the constitution of the United States; Huntington v. Attrill, 146 U. S. 657, 13 Sup. Ct. 224, 36 L. Ed. 1123; Sistare v. Sistare, 218 U. S. 1, 30 Sup. Ct. 682, 54 L. Ed. 905, 28 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1068. The constitution and the rule of comity include only judgments in civil actions, not in criminal prosecutions; Com. v. Green, 17 Mass. 515; Huntington v. Attrill, 146 U. S. 657, 13 Sup. Ct. 224, 36 L. Ed. 1123; Wisconsin v. Ins. Co., 127 U. S. 265, 8 Sup. Ct. 1370, 32 L. Ed. 239; Arkansas v. Bowen, 3 App. D. C. 537; Commercial Nat. Bank v. Kirk, 222 Pa. 567, 71 Atl. 1085, 128 Am. St. Rep. 823. This distinction makes it necessary to examine critically the judgment which it is sought to enforce in another state, if based upon a statute, and to determine whether or not it is penal. Whether a law is penal in the international sense depends upon whether its object is to punish a public offense, or to afford a private remedy against a wrong done; Huntington v. Attrill, 146 U. S. 657, 13 Sup. Ct. 224, 36 L. Ed. 1123. Thus, in an action brought upon a judgment recovered by the state of Wisconsin in her own courts against a Louisiana corporation for fines imposed by the statutes of Wisconsin for failure to make an annual statement or for making a false statement, it was held that the rule did not apply to a judgment for such pecuniary penalty; Wisconsin v. Ins. Co., 127 U. S. 265, 8 Sup. Ct. 1370, 32 L. Ed. 239. A suit by the United States for the statutory penalty provided by the safety appliance act is a prosecution for a criminal offence; Atchison, T. & S. F. Ry. Co. v. U. S., 172 Fed. 194, 96 C. C. A. 646, 27 L. R. A. (N. S.) 756. A government proceeding in rem to enforce a forfeiture for a violation of the revenue law, though in civil form, is a criminal prosecution; Boyd v. U. S., 116 U. S. 616, 6 Sup. Ct. 524, 29 L. Ed. 746; and under an act providing that for a violation of the immigration laws the offender shall forfeit the sum of $1,000, to be recovered by the United States or by any person who shall first bring his action therefor, the prosecution was held criminal; Lees v. U. S., 150 U. S. 476, 14 Sup. Ct. 163, 37 L. Ed. 1150.

The judgment of a state court has the same validity and effect in any other state as it has in the state where it was rendered; Mayhew v. Thatcher, 6 Wheat. (U. S.) 129, 5 L. Ed. 223; Carpenter v. Strange, 141 U. S. 87, 11 Sup. Ct. 960, 35 L. Ed. 640; First Nat. Bank of Danville v. Cunningham, 48 Fed. 510. The judicial proceedings within the act are only such as have been rendered by a competent court, with full jurisdiction; Bissell v. Briggs, 9 Mass. 462, 6 Am. Dec. 88; S. Dwight Eaton Co. v. Kelly, 45 Ill. App. 533; Lindley v. O'Reilly, 50 N. J. L. 636, 15 Atl. 379, 1 L. R. A. 79, 7 Am. St. Rep. 802; Darcy v. Ketchum, 11 How. (U. S.) 165, 13 L. Ed. 648; it may be a superior court of record or an inferior tribunal; Taylor v. Barron, 30 N. H. 78, 64 Am. Dec. 281; Pelton

v. Platner, 13 Ohio 209, 42 Am. Dec. 197; including a judgment of a justice of the peace; Menken v. Brinkley, 94 Tenn. 721, 31 S. W. 92. A judgment may be attacked on the ground of a want of jurisdiction; Miller, Const. U. S. 632; Thompson v. Whitman, 18 Wall. (U. S.) 457, 21 L. Ed. 897; Morgan v. Morgan, 1 Tex. Civ. App. 315, 21 S. W. 154; Pennywit v. Foote, 27 Ohio St. 600, 22 Am. Rep. 340; McCreery v. Davis, 44 S. C. 195, 22 S. E. 178, 28 L. R. A. 655, 51 Am. St. Rep. 794; In re James' Estate, 99 Cal. 374, 33 Pac. 1122, 37 Am. St. Rep. 60; Cole v. Cunningham, 133 U. S. 107, 10 Sup. Ct. 269, 33 L. Ed. 538; thus a judgment against a defendant who was not served with proper process, and who did not appear, would be entitled to no credit in another state; D'Arcy v. Ketchum, 11 How. (U. S.) 165, 13 L. Ed. 648; Grover & B. Sewing Mach. Co. v. Radcliffe, 137 U. S. 287, 11 Sup. Ct. 92, 34 L. Ed. 670; but facts establishing the want of jurisdiction must be shown; Fitchett v. Blows, 74 Fed. 51, 20 C. C. A. 286. Credit is not to be given to judgments of another state if they were wanting in due process of law; Old Wayne Mut. Life Ass'n v. McDonough, 204 U. S. 8, 27 Sup. Ct. 236, 51 L. Ed. 345. A judgment of a foreign state, against several defendants jointly, in an action in which one of them was not served with process, cannot be enforced against one of such defendants who in the foreign action was served with process; Watson v. Steinau, 19 R. I. 218, 33 Atl. 4, 61 Am. St. Rep. 768. See Pritchett v. Clark, 4 Harr. (Del.) 281; id., 3 Harr. (Del.) 241, 517.

Not only must the foreign court have had jurisdiction of the person, but it must appear that the judgment there rendered was responsive to the issues tendered by the pleadings; so held where the defendant had appeared and answered, but took no part in the trial; but if the party was present at the trial, it will be presumed that necessary amendments to conform the pleadings to the evidence were made; Reynolds v. Stockton, 140 U. S. 254, 11 Sup. Ct. 773, 35 L. Ed. 464.

Where the court had jurisdiction of the parties and of the subject-matter, fraud in obtaining the judgment may be set up as a defence; Ambler v. Whipple, 139 Ill. 311, 28 N. E. 841, 32 Am. St. Rep. 202; White v. Reid, 70 Hun 197, 24 N. Y. Supp. 290; Ball v. Warrington, 108 Fed. 472, 47 C. C. A. 447; it must be fraud in procuring the judgment; Payne v. O'Shea, 84 Mo. 129; or it will constitute a ground of collateral attack; id.; Van Matre v. Sankey, 148 Ill. 536, 36 N. E. 628, 23 L. R. A. 665, 39 Am. St. Rep. 196; but fraud cannot be pleaded as a ground of attack in one federal court, upon a judgment obtained in another; Simmons v. Saul, 138 U. S. 439, 11 Sup. Ct. 369, 34 L. Ed. 1054.

Proceedings will lie in equity to enjoin the enforcement of a judgment obtained by fraud in a foreign state; Payne v. O'Shea, 84 Mo. 129; Levin v. Gladstein, 142 N. C. 482, 55 S. E. 371, 32 L. R. A. (N. S.) 905, 115 Am. St. Rep. 747. If the court of the foreign state had jurisdiction over the parties, its judgment cannot be impeached, even if it went upon a misapprehension of its own law; Fauntleroy v. Lum, 210 U. S. 230, 28 Sup. Ct. 641, 52 L. Ed. 1039, where a construction of the constitutional provision by Marshall, C. J., in Hampton v. McConnel, 3 Wheat. (U. S.) 234, 4 L. Ed. 378, is affirmed and the supposed qualification of it in Wisconsin v. Ins. Co., 127 U. S. 265, 8 Sup. Ct. 1370, 32 L. Ed. 239, is declared to be a dictum.

The constitution does not give to a judgment all the attributes to which it was entitled in the state where it was rendered; Brengle v. McClellan, 7 Gill & J. (Md.) 434; but if duly certified, it is admissible in evidence in any state; Whitwell v. Barbier, 7 Cal. 54; Parke v. Williams, id. 247; a state may give a judgment rendered in another state any effect it may think proper, always provided it does not derogate from the legal effect conferred upon it by the constitution and the laws of congress in this behalf; Bissell v. Briggs, 9 Mass. 462, 6 Am. Dec. 88. In case, however, full faith and credit is not given to the judgment of another state, any judgment thereon will be erroneous; Green v. Van Buskirk, 7 Wall. (U. S.) 139, 19 L. Ed. 109. If a state court refuses to give full faith and credit to a decision of a federal court, it raises a federal question and the supreme court has jurisdiction; Virginia-Carolina Chemical Co. v. Kirven, 215 U. S. 252, 30 Sup. Ct. 78, 54 L. Ed. 179. When the court rendering the judgment has jurisdiction, its judgment is final as to the merits; Christmas v. Russell, 5 Wall. (U. S.) 302, 18 L. Ed. 475; Ingram v. Drinkard, 14 Tex. 352; Bank of U. S. v. Bank of Baltimore, 7 Gill (Md.) 430; Memphis & C. R. Co. v. Hoechner, 67 Fed. 459, 14 C. C. A. 469; Snyder v. Critchfield, 44 Neb. 66, 62 N. W. 306; but no greater effect can be given to a judgment than it had in the state where it was rendered; Board of Public Works v. College, 17 Wall. (U. S.) 529, 21 L. Ed. 687; Suydam v. Barber, 18 N. Y. 468, 75 Am. Dec. 254.

The judgment must be given the same faith and credit as is given to domestic judgments; Levin v. Gladstein, 142 N. C. 482, 55 S. E. 371, 32 L. R. A. (N. S.) 905, 115 Am. St. Rep. 747. If a judgment or decree is enforceable in the state where it is rendered, it is enforceable in any other state; Caldwell v. Carrington, 9 Pet. (U. S.) 86, 9 L. Ed. 60; but the constitutional provision does not give validity to a void judgment or decree; Ogden v. Saunders, 12 Wheat. (U. S.) 213, 6 L. Ed. 606; Mitchell v. Lenox, 14 Pet. (U. S.) 49, 10 L. Ed. 349; Rodgers v. Ins. Co., 148 N. Y. 34, 42 N. E. 515. It does not impose on any state the duty of following the decision of another state as to the construction of the statutes of the latter; Wiggins' Ferry Co. v. R. Co., 3 McCrary 609, 11 Fed. 381; Miller v. Miller, 18 Hun (N. Y.) 507; nor enforcing within its territory the law of another state.

A judgment entered in pursuance of a warrant of attorney, in a state in which such judgments are authorized, has the same force when sued on in another state as a judgment in an adversary proceeding; Hazel v. Jacobs, 78 N. J. L. 459, 75 Atl. 903, 27 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1066, 20 Ann. Cas. 260; an action thereon can only be defeated by want of jurisdiction by fraud in procuring the judgment, or defences based on matter arising after the judgment was rendered; any defence to the original cause of action is conclusively negated by the judgment; but the sufficiency of the warrant may be inquired into and is to be determined from the evidence of the law of the state of its entry; Snyder v. Critchfield, 44 Neb. 66, 62 N. W. 306. Where a judgment is revived by scire facias, without service on or appearance by the defendant, the plaintiff cannot recover thereon in another state where the defendant resides, after the statute of limitations has run against the original judgment; such revival is either a new proceeding substituted for an action of debt, and hence invalid without service, or a continuation of the original action, and therefore barred; Owens v. Henry, 161 U. S. 642, 16 Sup. Ct. 693, 40 L. Ed. 837; Betts v. Johnson, 68 Vt. 549, 35 Atl. 489. And in an action on such judgment the statute of the forum governs and not that of the place where the judgment was rendered; Beer v. Simpson, 65 Hun 17, 19 N. Y. Supp. 578.

A judgment removing the disability of infancy is not conclusive upon the courts of another state, so as to make effective an infant's conveyance of land there; Beauchamp v. Bertig, 90 Ark. 351, 119 S. W. 75, 23 L. R. A. (N. S.) 659; so where the question relates to the transfer of real property in the second state; Polson v. Stewart, 167 Mass. 211, 45 N. E. 737, 36 L. R. A. 771, 57 Am. St. Rep. 452. Where a decree for alimony in a foreign state is such that it can afterwards be altered and is not a final decree, a New York court is not bound by it; Lynde v. Lynde, 181 U. S. 183, 21 Sup. Ct. 555, 45 L. Ed. 810. In Sistare v. Sistare, 80 Conn. 1, 66 Atl. 772, 125 Am. St. Rep. 102, the court refused to enforce a New York decree for alimony; but this was reversed in the United States supreme court upon the ground that if the judgment was enforceable in New York it must be given effect in another state, although the procedure to enforce it might differ; Sistare v. Sistare, 218 U. S. 1, 30 Sup. Ct. 682, 54 L. Ed. 905, 28 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1068, 20 Ann. Cas. 1061.

Refusal by a state court to allow a receiver appointed in another state to maintain an action does not deny full faith and credit; Flinney v. Guy, 189 U. S. 335, 23 Sup. Ct. 558, 47 L. Ed. 839, following Hale v. Allinson, 188 U. S. 56, 23 Sup. Ct. 244, 47 L. Ed. 380.

A judgment in personam against a corporation, obtained in a federal court of a sister state, is conclusive on the merits of the case in the courts of every other state when made the basis of an action; Chicago & A. Bridge Co. v. Packing & Provision Co., 46 Fed. 584.

U. S. R. S. § 905, applies to records, etc., of a sister state; Huntington v. Attrill, 146 U. S. 657, 13 Sup. Ct. 224, 36 L. Ed. 1123; the District of Columbia; Embry v. Palmer, 107 U. S. 3, 2 Sup. Ct. 25, 27 L. Ed. 346; a territory: Gibson v. Ins. Co., 144 Mass. 81, 10 N. E. 729; and the Indian courts in the Indian Territory; Standley v. Roberts, 59 Fed. 836, 8 C. C. A. 305. A state court must give full faith and credit to the judgment of a federal court; Crescent City Live Stock Co. v. Slaughter-House Co., 120 U. S. 141, 7 Sup. Ct. 472, 30 L. Ed. 614. There is no decision as to a case in which something more than "full faith and credit" has been given, but there are dicta that no more can be given; Tilt v. Kelsey, 207 U. S. 57, 28 Sup. Ct. 1, 52 L. Ed. 95. While the supreme court, in its original jurisdiction, takes judicial notice of the laws of the several states, yet while acting under its appellate jurisdiction, whatever was matter of fact (proof of the laws of a foreign state) in the court whose judgment is under review is matter of fact there; Hanley v. Donoghue, 116 U. S. 1, 6 Sup. Ct. 242, 29 L. Ed. 535; Chicago & A. R. Co. v. Ferry Co., 119 U. S. 622, 7 Sup. Ct. 398, 30 L. Ed. 519.

The full faith and credit clause of the constitution does not extend to judgments of foreign states or nations, and unless there is a treaty relative thereto the supreme court has no jurisdiction to review the judgment of a state court on the ground that it failed to give full faith and credit to a judgment of a foreign court; Ætna Life Ins. Co. v. Tremblay, 223 U. S. 185, 32 Sup. Ct. 309, 56 L. Ed. 398.

The provisions of the act of congress relating to the authentication of records and judicial proceedings must be complied with in order to secure the admission of the exemplification as evidence in a suit upon the judgment in another state; it is not necessary that such exemplification should be used in pleading or in a statement of claim or affidavit of defence; Mink v. Shaffer, 124 Pa. 280, 16 Atl. 805. As to pleading, see 27 Cent. L. J. 400; 26 Abb. N. C. 315, note.

R. S. § 905, provides that acts of the legislature of any state, etc., shall be authenticated by the seal thereof affixed thereto, and the judicial proceedings of the courts of any state, etc., by the attestation of the clerk, and the seal, if any, of the court annexed, with a certificate of the judge, chief justice or presiding magistrate that the attestation is in due form, and shall then have such faith and credit "as they have by law or usage in the courts of the state from which they are taken."

See Story, Conf. Laws; Freeman; Black, Judgt. 596; Dalloz, Étranger; Piggott, Foreign Judgments; 4 L. Mag. & Rev. 417; CONFLICT OF LAWS; JUDGMENT; FOREIGN LAW; FOREIGN CORPORATION; DIVORCE.

FOREIGN JURISDICTION. The exercise by one government, within the territory of another, of powers acquired by it in any manner whatsoever, whether by treaty, grant, usage, sufferance, or otherwise.

A jurisdiction other than that of the forum.

FOREIGN JURY. One drawn from a county other than that in which issue is joined. See JURY.

FOREIGN KINGDOM. One under the dominion of a foreign prince. King v. Parks, 19 Johns. (N. Y.) 375.

FOREIGN LANGUAGE. When in an action of slander the words complained of were spoken in German a declaration setting forth the words in English is not sufficient; the words must be stated in the foreign language as spoken, with an averment of the signification in English, and that they were understood by those who heard them; Wormouth v. Cramer, 3 Wend. (N. Y.) 394, 20 Am. Dec. 706. See also Cro. Eliz. 496, 865; SLANDER.

When a will was made and proved in French and in the probate it was translated into English, but, as it appeared, falsely, held that the court might determine according to what the translation ought to be; 1 P. Wms. 526.

FOREIGN LAW. The laws of a foreign country.

The courts do not take judicial notice of foreign laws; and they must, therefore, be proved as matters of fact; 4 Mood. Parl. Cas. 21; Armendiaz v. De La Serna, 40 Tex. 291; Territt v. Woodruff, 19 Vt. 182; Chouteau v. Pierre, 9 Mo. 3; Patterson v. Carrell, 60 Ind. 128; Champion v. Wilson, 64 Ga. 184; Legg v. Legg, 8 Mass. 99; Brackett v. Norton, 4 Conn. 517, 10 Am. Dec. 179; Phillips v. Gregg, 10 Watts (Pa.) 158, 36 Am. Dec. 158; Dakin v. Pomeroy, 9 Gill (Md.) 1; and pleaded; Crosby v. R. Co., 158 Fed. 144; written laws, by the text, or a collection printed by authority, or a copy certified by a proper officer, or, in their absence, perhaps, by the opinion of experts as secondary evidence; Story, Conf. Laws § 641; 1 Greenl. Ev. § 486; Ennis v. Smith, 14 How. (U. S.) 426, 14 L. Ed. 472; 8 Ad. & E. 208; Lincoln v. Battele, 6 Wend. (N. Y.) 475; Inge v. Murphy, 10 Ala. 885; Burton v. Anderson, 1 Tex. 93; Clarke v. Bank, 10 Ark. 516, 52 Am. Dec. 248; they may be construed with the aid of text-books as well as of experts; The Pawa-shick, 2 Low. 142, Fed. Cas. No. 10,851; where experts are called, the sanction of an oath is said to be required; Brackett v. Norton, 4 Conn. 517, 10 Am. Dec. 179; Dyer v. Smith, 12 Conn. 384. See State v. Rood, 12 Vt. 396; Story, Conf. Laws § 641; 1 Greenl. Ev. § 488, note. As to the manner of proving unwritten laws of foreign countries, the decisions show a divergence of opinion; the rule, as laid down by Lowell, J., in the case of The Pashawick, 2 Low. 142, Fed. Cas. No. 10,851 where the reasoning of Lord Stowell, in Dalrymple v. Dalrymple, 2 Hagg. Consist. 54, is cited with approval, is, that the unwritten law of England may be proved in the United States courts not by experts only, but also by text-writers of authority, and by the printed reports of adjudged cases; Whart. Ev. § 300. But mere citations of English statutes and authorities cannot be accepted as proving English laws; Dickerson v. Matheson, 50 Fed. 73. But in respect to the laws of other foreign countries, where a system obtains wholly different from our own, the rigid proof by the testimony of experts alone should be insisted on. See 11 Cl. & F. 85; 1 Wall. Jr. C. C. 47; Brush v. Wilkins, 4 Johns. Ch. (N. Y.) 507; as to who can prove such laws; Hall v. Costello, 48 N. H. 176, 2 Am. Rep. 207; Kenny v. Clarkson, 1 Johns. (N. Y.) 395, 3 Am. Dec. 336; Isabella v. Pecot, 2 La. Ann. 391. It need not be a lawyer; Milwaukee & St. P. Ry. Co. v. Smith, 74 Ill. 197; Pickard v. Bailey, 26 N. H. 152; Liverpool & Great Western Steam Co. v. Ins. Co., 129 U. S. 397, 9 Sup. Ct. 469, 32 L. Ed. 788; 8 C. B. 812. The United States courts take judicial notice of the laws of every state; Breed v. R. Co., 35 Fed. 642; whether depending upon statutes or upon judicial opinions and without plea or proof; Lamar v. Micou, 114 U. S. 223, 5 Sup. Ct. 857, 29 L. Ed. 94; but the decisions of the various state courts are not harmonious on this point as far as regards the laws of each other. In Tennessee; Hobbs v. R. Co., 9 Heisk. (Tenn.) 873; and Rhode Island; Paine v. Ins. Co., 11 R. I. 411; the courts will take judicial notice of the laws of sister states; in Illinois, of the jurisdiction of courts in other states; Rae v. Hulbert, 17 Ill. 577; and the supreme court has decided that where a state recognizes acts done in pursuance of the laws of another state, the courts of the first state should take judicial cognizance of such laws so far as may be necessary to judge of the acts alleged to be done under them; Carpenter v. Dexter, 8 Wall. (U. S.) 513, 19 L. Ed. 426. Where a statute of another state has been properly brought to the notice of the court, it will in all future cases take notice of that statute and presume the law of the foreign state to be the same until some change is shown; Graham v. Williams, 21 La. Ann. 594; Cochran v. Ward, 5 Ind. App. 89, 29 N. E. 795, 31 N. E. 581, 51 Am. St. Rep. 229. In Pennsylvania it has been held that the courts should take notice of the local laws of a sister state in the same manner as the supreme court of the United States would do on a writ of error to a judgment; Ohio v. Hinchman, 27 Pa. 479; but see, contra, Rape v. Heaton, 9 Wis. 328, 76 Am. Dec. 269; 20 Am. L. Reg. N. S. 385. A copy of the authorized statute-book is recognized as proof of a foreign law; Mullen v. Morris, 2 Pa. 85; and the construction of those statutes may be proved either by the reports of cases, or by one familiar therewith; Bollinger v. Gallagher, 163 Pa. 245, 29 Atl. 751, 43 Am. St. Rep. 791.

In 19 Harv. L. R. 401, it is said that, in the absence of proof as to what the law of a foreign state or country is, the court, when it takes judicial notice that the foreign state has fundamentally the same system of law as that of the forum, will presume that the law of the foreign state is the same (exclusive of statutory changes) as that of the law of the forum. For instance, where both states are composed of territory formerly belonging to one or more of the thirteen original colonies; see McAnally v. O'Neal, 56 Ala. 299 (raising the presumption with respect to Georgia); Gluck v. Cox, 75 Ala. 310 (raising the presumption with respect to Mississippi); Peet v. Hatcher, 112 Ala. 514, 21 South. 711, 57 Am. St. Rep. 45; Norris v. Harris, 15 Cal. 226. That the common law prevails in England, see Stokes v. Macken, 62 Barb. (N. Y.) 145; in the provinces of Canada; Dempster v. Stephen, 63 Ill. App. 126 (in Owen v. Boyle, 15 Me. 147, 32 Am. Dec. 143, the court refused to raise the presumption that the common law of England prevailed in the province of New Brunswick); and in all that part of the territory of the United States east of the Mississippi, excepting Louisiana and Florida. As to Texas, Florida and Louisiana, judicial notice is taken that the fundamental law there is the civil law; Equitable Bldg. & Loan Ass'n v. King, 48 Fla. 252, 37 South. 181; Sloan v. Torrey, 78 Mo. 623; Peet v. Hatcher, 112 Ala. 514, 21 South. 711, 57 Am. St. Rep. 45; Simms v. Express Co., 38 Ga. 129. So with regard to Mexico, France and other foreign countries; Aslanian v. Dostumian, 174 Mass. 328, 54 N. E. 845, 47 L. R. A. 495, 75 Am. St. Rep. 348 (Asiatic Turkey); Savage v. O'Neil, 44 N. Y. 298 (Russia); Thompson v. Ketchum, 8 Johns. (N. Y.) 190, 5 Am. Dec. 332 (Jamaica).

But there are cases in which the law of the forum, even though statutory, is always applied in the absence of proof of the foreign law; Burgess v. Tel. Co., 92 Tex. 125, 46 S. W. 794, 71 Am. St. Rep. 833; Pauska v. Daus, 31 Tex. 67; Mexican Cent. Ry. Co. v. Glover, 107 Fed. 356, 46 C. C. A. 334.

It is said that in Missouri a presumption can be raised only as to states whose territory prior to their becoming members of the Union was subject to the law of England; Silver v. Ry. Co., 21 Mo. App. 5 (denying any presumption with respect to Illinois); Barhydt v. Alexander, 59 Mo. App. 188 (with respect to Iowa); Searles v. Lum, 81 Mo. App. 607 (admitting it with respect to Mississippi).

Where the law of Brazil was the same fundamental system as prevailed in Louisiana, the Louisiana statutory law was applied; Kuenzi v. Elvers, 14 La. Ann. 391, 74 Am. Dec. 434. The cases are collected in Cherry v. Sprague, 67 L. R. A. 41, where cases are also found in which California, under the same fundamental system as a foreign country, applied its own statutory law. In Cavallaro v. Ry. Co., 110 Cal. 348, 42 Pac. 918, 52 Am. St. Rep. 94, where the fundamental systems of law in California and the foreign state were different, a presumption was refused and the law of the forum was applied.

There is no general presumption that the law of Cuba is the same as the common law. In two common-law countries the law may be presumed to be the same, but a statute of one would not be presumed to be the statute of the other; Cuba R. Co. v. Crosby, 222 U. S. 473, 56 L. Ed. 274, 38 L. R. A. (N. S.) 40. A remedy under a foreign law where it is perfectly apparent that complete justice cannot be done, and where it is plain that an equitable result can be accomplished only by the courts of the jurisdiction where the corporation was created, could not be enforced in the New York courts; Marshall v. Sherman, 148 N. Y. 9, 42 N. E. 419, 34 L. R. A. 757, 51 Am. St. Rep. 654.

Foreign unwritten laws, customs, and usages may be proved, and are ordinarily proved, by parol evidence; and when such evidence is objected to on the ground that the law in question is a written law, the party objecting must show that fact; Dougherty v. Snyder, 15 S. & R. (Pa.) 87, 16 Am. Dec. 520; Newsom v. Adams, 2 La. 154, 22 Am. Dec. 126.

The manner of proof varies according to circumstances. As a general rule, the best testimony or proof is required; for no proof will be received which presupposes better testimony attainable by the party who offers it. When the best testimony cannot be obtained, secondary evidence will be received; Church v. Hubbard, 2 Cra. (U. S.) 237, 2 L. Ed. 249. A foreign law must be proved like any other fact, and in the absence of such proof it will be presumed that the common law prevails, in the foreign jurisdiction; Roll v. Mining Co., 52 Mo. App. 60.

Exemplified or sworn copies of written laws and other public documents must, as a general thing, be produced when they can be procured; but should they be refused by the competent authorities, then inferior proof may be admitted; id.

When our own government has promulgated a foreign law or ordinance of a public nature as authentic, that is held sufficient evidence of its existence; Talbot v. Seeman, 1 Cra. (U. S.) 38, 2 L. Ed. 15; Thompson v. Musser, 1 Dall. (Pa.) 462, 1 L. Ed. 222; Kean v. Rice, 12 S. & R. (Pa.) 203.

The usual modes of authenticating them are by an exemplification under the great seal of a state, or by a copy proved by oath to be a true copy, or by a certificate of an officer authorized by law, which must itself be duly authenticated; Church v. Hubbard, 2 Cra. (U. S.) 238, 2 L. Ed. 249; Jones v. Maffet, 5 S. & R. (Pa.) 523; Seton v. Ins. Co., 2 Wash. C. C. 175, Fed. Cas. No. 12,675; Zimmerman v. Helser, 32 Md. 274; Bowles v. Eddy, 33 Ark. 645; McDeed v. McDeed, 67 Ill. 545.

Witnesses in Cuba examined under a commission touching the execution of a will testified, in general terms, that it was executed according to the law of that country; and, it not appearing from the testimony that there was any written law upon the subject, the proof was held sufficient; In re Roberts' Will, 8 Paige, Ch. (N. Y.) 446.

A defendant pleaded infancy in an action upon a contract governed by the law of Jamaica: held that the law was to be proven as a matter of fact, and that the burden lay upon him to show it; Thompson v. Ketchum, 8 Johns. (N. Y.) 189, 5 Am. Dec. 332.

Proof of such unwritten law is usually made by the testimony of witnesses learned in the law and competent to state it correctly under oath; Seton v. Delaware Ins. Co., 2 Wash. C. C. 175, Fed. Cas. No. 12,675; Dougherty v. Snyder, 15 S. & R. (Pa.) 84, 16 Am. Dec. 520; Brush v. Wilkins, 4 Johns. Ch. (N. Y.) 520; 2 Hagg. Adm. App. 15-144; Mowry v. Chase, 100 Mass. 79.

In England, certificates of persons in high authority have been allowed as evidence in such cases; 3 Hagg. Eccl. 767, 769.

The public seal of a foreign sovereign or state affixed to a writing purporting to be a written edict, or law, or judgment, is of itself the highest evidence, and no further proof is required of such public seal; Church v. Hubbard, 2 Cra. (U. S.) 238, 2 L. Ed. 249; Griswold v. Pitcairn, 2 Conn. 85; U. S. v. Johns, 4 Dall. (Pa.) 413, Fed. Cas. No. 15,481, 1 L. Ed. 888; 4 Dall. 413; 9 Mod. 66.

But the seal of a foreign court is not, in general, evidence without further proof, and must, therefore, be established by competent testimony; De lafield v. Hand, 3 Johns. (N. Y.) 310; De Sobry v. Laistre, 2 H. & J. (Md.) 193, 3 Am. Dec. 535; 4 Cow. (N. Y.) 526, note; 3 East 221.

By the act of May 26, 1790, it is provided "that the acts of the legislatures of the several states shall be authenticated by having the seal of their respective states affixed thereto;" R. S. § 905. See RECORD. It may here be observed that the rules prescribed by acts of congress do not exclude every other mode of authentication, and that the courts may admit proof of the acts of the legislatures of the several states, although not authenticated under the acts of congress. Accordingly, a printed volume, purporting on its face to contain the laws of a sister state, is admissible as prima facie evidence to prove the statute law of that state; Young v. Bank, 4 Cra. (U. S.) 384, 2 L. Ed. 655; Kean v. Rice, 12 S. & R. (Pa.) 203; Cochran v. Ward, 5 Ind. App. 89, 29 N. E. 795, 31 N. E. 581, 51 Am. St. Rep. 229; Falls v. Loan & Building Co., 97 Ala. 417, 13 South. 25, 24 L. R. A. 174, 38 Am. St. Rep. 194; Leach v. Linde, 70 Hun 145, 24 N. Y. Supp. 176; Williams v. Williams, 53 Mo. App. 617; contra, State v. Twitty, 9 N. C. 441, 11 Am. Dec. 779; Bailey v. McDowell, 2 Harr. (Del.) 34; Packard v. Hill, 2 Wend. (N. Y.) 411; Phillips v. Murphy, 2 La. Ann. 654; Rape v. Heaton, 9 Wis. 328, 76 Am. Dec. 269. By act of Aug. 8, 1846, a standard copy of the laws and treaties of the United States is fixed, and made competent evidence in all courts without further proof or authentication. R. S. § 908.

Foreign laws have, as such, no extra-territorial force, but have an effect by comity; Sto. Const. § 1305. In the absence of pleading and proof to the contrary, the laws of another state are presumed to be like those of the state in which the action is brought; Haggin v. Haggin, 35 Neb. 375, 53 N. W. 209; Scrooggin v. McClelland, 37 Neb. 644, 56 N. W. 208, 22 L. R. A. 110, 40 Am. St. Rep. 520; Mortimer v. Marder, 93 Cal. 172, 28 Pac. 814; Bollinger v. Gallagher, 144 Pa. 205, 22 Atl. 815; In re Hamilton's Will, 76 Hun 200, 27 N. Y. Supp. 813. See Coghlan v. R. Co., 142 U. S. 101, 12 Sup. Ct. 150, 35 L. Ed. 951; Sandidge v. Hunt, 40 La. Ann. 766, 5 South. 55; Bagwell v. McTighe, 85 Tenn. 616, 4 S. W. 46. While a state court is bound to take judicial cognizance of the principles of common law as it prevails in other states, this is not true of the statutes of such states; Sandidge v. Hunt, 40 La. Ann. 766, 5 South. 55; Thorn v. Weatherly, 50 Ark. 237, 7 S. W. 33; Continental Nat. Bank v. McGeoch, 73 Wis. 332, 41 N. W. 409; Templeton v. Brown, 86 Tenn. 50, 5 S. W. 441; Ligget v. Himle, 38 Minn. 421, 38 N. W. 201. But see Ufford v. Spaulding, 156 Mass. 65, 30 N. E. 360. Until the fact is shown, they will be assumed to be the same as those of the forum; Harper v. Hampton, 1 Harr. & J. (Md.) 687. See 5 Cl. & F. 14; 3 H. L. C. 19; LEX FORI.

A person claiming title under a foreign corporation is chargeable with knowledge of its chartered powers and restrictions; Hoyt v. Thompson's Ex'r, 19 N. Y. 207.

The effect of foreign laws when proved is properly referable to the court; the object of the proof of foreign laws is to enable the court to instruct the jury what is, in point of law, the result from foreign laws to be applied to the matters in controversy before them. The court are, therefore, to decide what is the proper evidence of the laws of a foreign country; and when evidence is given of those laws, the court are to judge of their applicability to the matter in issue; Story, Conf. Laws § 638; Greenl. Ev. 486; De Sobry v. De Laistre, 2 Harr. & J. (Md.) 193, 3 Am. Dec. 535; Brackett v. Norton, 4 Conn. 517, 10 Am. Dec. 179.

Where foreign statutes (here Mexican) are the basis of a claim in the United States circuit court, parol evidence of an expert is admissible upon the construction thereof upon any matter of reasonable doubt, notwithstanding they are in evidence by a certified copy and an agreed translation; Slater v. R. Co., 194 U. S. 120, 24 Sup. Ct. 581, 48 L. Ed. 900. Statutes and decisions having been proved or otherwise properly brought to the attention of the court, it may itself deduce from them an opinion as to what the law of the foreign jurisdiction is, without being conclusively bound by the testimony of a witness who gives his opinion as to the law which he deduces from these very statutes and opinions; Finney v. Guy, 189 U. S. 335, 23 Sup. Ct. 558, 47 L. Ed. 839. No witness can conclude a court by his opinion of the construction and meaning of statutes and decisions already in evidence; Laing v. Rigney, 160 U. S. 531, 16 Sup. Ct. 366, 40 L. Ed. 525. But it is held that the testimony of lawyers of a foreign country that certain proven acts, documents and records had the effect of creating complainant a corporation under the laws of such country is sufficient prima facie to establish the corporate character of complainant. The court will not undertake to construe the statutory law of such country for itself to determine if such testimony is incorrect; Badische Anilin & Soda Fabrik v. A. Klieptin & Co., 125 Fed. 543.

See CONFLICT OF LAWS; JUDICIAL NOTICE; PRECEDENT; LEX FORI.

FOREIGN MATTER. Matter which must be tried in another county. Blount. Matter done or to be tried in another county. Cowell.

FOREIGN MINISTER. An ambassador or envoy from a foreign country. See AMBASSADOR.

FOREIGN MONEY. By Act Aug. 27, 1894, the director of the mint estimates quarterly "the values of the standard coins in circulation of the various nations," and, thereafter, quarterly beginning on the 1st day of January, etc., the secretary of the treasury proclaims the same; the values so proclaimed are followed in estimating the value of imports.

FOREIGN OFFICE. The department of state through which the British sovereign communicates with foreign powers.

FOREIGN PLEA. See PLEA.

FOREIGN PORT. A port or place which is wholly without the United States. King v. Parks, 19 Johns. (N. Y.) 375; The Eliza, 2 Gall. 4, 7, Fed. Cas. No. 4,346; The Adventure,

1 Brock. 235, Fed. Cas. No. 93. A port without the jurisdiction of the court; 1 Dods. 201; 6 Exch. 886. The ports of the several states are foreign to each other so far as regards the authority of masters to pledge the credit of their vessels for supplies; The Lulu, 10 Wall. (U. S.) 192, 19 L. Ed. 906; Selden v. Hendrickson, 1 Brock. 396, Fed. Cas. No. 12,639; Negus v. Simpson, 99 Mass. 388. Practically, the definition has become, for most purposes of maritime law, a port at such distance as to make communication with the owners of the ship very inconvenient or almost impossible. See 1 Pars. Mar. Law 142, n.; DOMESTIC PORT; PORT.

FOREIGN SERVICE. Servitium forinsecum. See FORINSECUS.

FOREIGN STATE. A foreign nation or country. The states are considered as foreign to each other with respect to those subjects which are controlled by their municipal law. See FOREIGN JUDGMENT; EXTRADITION; FUGITIVE FROM JUSTICE; FOREIGN LAW; FOREIGN BILL OF EXCHANGE.

FOREIGN TRADE. The exportation and importation of commodities to or from foreign countries, as distinguished in the United States from interstate or coastwise trade. See U. S. v. Patten, 1 Holmes 421, Fed. Cas. No. 16,007; FOREIGN COMMERCE.

FOREIGN TROOPS. The grant of permission to foreign troops to cross any part of the United States has been frequently considered by the federal executive. In 1790, Washington, having advised on the subject with Adams, Jefferson and Hamilton, on the advice of the first against the inclination of the last two, declined to allow the passage of British troops through United States territory from Detroit to the Mississippi, presumably because the only purpose of such movement would be an attack upon Spanish possessions on the Mississippi, with which country we were at peace.

In 1862 permission was given by Secretary Seward to the British government to land troops at Portland for transport to Canada because the St. Lawrence was closed by ice. Pursuant to action by the senate of Maine, the governor of that state applied to Secretary Seward for information on the subject. In a communication dated January 17, 1862, from Seward to Governor Washburn, the facts were set forth and the propriety of the original order was argued at length, but it concluded that if the state of Maine would feel aggrieved the directions in question would be cheerfully modified. This letter is quoted at length in 2 Moore's Int. L. Dig. 390.

In 1875 permission was granted to Canada by the United States to transport "through its territory certain supplies designed for the use of . . . Canadian mounted police force," but whether any permission was asked from the governor of the state does not appear.

The request of the French government to the state department for permission to send French seamen to the Chicago World's Fair to guard the French exhibit in 1893 was referred to the governor of Illinois for his consent by Secretary Foster.

The request of the London Artillery Company to enter the United States in uniform with arms, to pass through New York and other states, was referred by Secretary Bayard to the governors of those states. See 2 Moore's Int. L. Dig. 395, 397.

In Tucker v. Alexandroff, 183 U. S. 424, 22 Sup. Ct. 195, 46 L. Ed. 264, Brown, J., said (obiter): "While no act of congress authorizes the executive department to permit the introduction of foreign troops, the power to give such permission without legislative assent was probably assumed to exist from the authority of the president as commander in chief of the military and naval forces of the United States."

The application for leave must be made by the representative at Washington of the foreign power. The grant of passage implies a waiver of all jurisdiction over the troops during their passage; Tucker v. Alexandroff, 183 U. S. 432, 22 Sup. Ct. 195, 46 L. Ed. 264.

The cases are considered in 2 Moore, Int. L. Dig. 390, and in Tucker v. Alexandroff, 183 U. S. 424, 22 Sup. Ct. 195, 46 L. Ed. 264.

FOREIGN VESSEL. A vessel owned by residents in or sailing under the flag of a foreign nation. It does not mean a vessel in which foreigners domiciled in the United States have an interest; The Sally, 1 Gal. 58, Fed. Cas. No. 12,257. An omission in the registry and enrollment of an American vessel does not make her foreign, but, at best, only deprives her of her American privileges. Fox v. Paine, Crabbe 271, Fed. Cas. No. 5,014. See FLAG. The patent laws were not intended to apply to and govern a vessel of a foreign, friendly nation; Brown v. Duchesne, 19 How. (U. S.) 183, 15 L. Ed. 595.

FOREIGN VOYAGE. A voyage whose termination is within a foreign country. 3 Kent 177. The length of the voyage has no effect in determining its character, but only the place of destination; 1 Stor. 1; U. S. v. Rogers, 3 Sumn. 342, Fed. Cas. No. 16,189.

FOREIGN WATERS. By U. S. R. S. § 4370, tugboats towing in whole or in part in foreign waters are exempt from a penalty therein imposed on foreign tugboats for towing vessels of the United States.

Where the treaty between the United States and Great Britain of June 15, 1846, fixed the boundary between the two countries in the strait of San Juan de Fuca by a line following the middle of the strait, but also secured to each nation a right of free navigation over all the waters of the strait, all the waters north of the boundary line were held to be "foreign waters," within the meaning of said section; The Pilot, 50 Fed. 437, 1 C. C. A. 523; reversing The Pilot, 48 Fed. 319.

FOREIGNER. One who is not a citizen. Cowell.

In the Old English Law, it seems to have been used of every one not an inhabitant of a city, at least with reference to that city; 1 H. Bla. 213. See Cowell, Foreigne.

In the United States, any one who was born in some other country than the United States, and who owes allegiance to some foreign state or country. Spratt v. Spratt, 1 Pet. (U. S.) 343, 349, 7 L. Ed. 171. An alien. See ALIEN; CITIZEN; NATURALIZATION.

FOREJUDGE. To deprive a man of the thing in question by sentence of court.

Among foreign writers, says Blount, forejudge is to banish, to expel. In this latter sense the word is also used in English law of an attorney who has been expelled from court for misconduct. Cowell; Cunningham, Law Dict.

FOREMAN. The presiding member of a grand or petit jury. See GRAND JURY; JURY.

FORENSIC. See FORENSIS.

FORENSIC MEDICINE. See MEDICAL JURISPRUDENCE.

FORENSIS. Forensic. Belonging to court. Forensis homo, a man engaged in causes. A pleader; an advocate. Vicat, Voc. Jur.; Calvinus, Lex.

FORESCHOKE. Forsaken; especially with reference to lands abandoned by the tenant. Termes de la Ley; Cowell.

FORESHORE. That part of the land immediately in front of the shore; the part of it which is between high and low water marks, and alternately covered with water and left dry by the flux and reflux of the tides. It is indicated by the middle line between the highest and lowest tides (spring and neap). This term is usually used in England. The foreshore is prima facie the property of the crown, but it may belong to an individual if he can show a grant from the crown, or a user from which such grant can be inferred. The public may walk over it to reach the sea for the purposes of navigation, or fishery, but not for amusement or bathing or for gathering seaweed or stones. The public may navigate over it at high tide and anchor (but may not place moorings) and may fish; see [1904] 2 Ch. 313; [1909] 2 Ch. 709; [1899] 2 Ch. p. 709; [1897] 2 Q. B. 318; Odgers, C. L. 13. Public meetings cannot be held there; 72 J. P. 318. See SEASHORE.

FOREST. A certain territory of wooded ground and fruitful pastures, privileged for wild beasts and fowls of forest, chase, and warren, to rest and abide in the safe protection of the prince for his princely delight and pleasure, having a peculiar court and officers. Man. For. Laws, cap. 1, num. 1; Termes de la Ley; 1 Bla. Com. 289.

A royal hunting-ground which lost its peculiar character with the extinction of its courts or when the franchise passed into the hands of a subject. Spelman, Gloss.; Cowell; Man. For. Laws, cap. 1; 2 Bla. Com. 83; 1 Steph. Com. 665.

FOREST COURTS. Courts instituted for the government of the king's forest in different parts of the kingdom, and for the punishment of all injuries done to the king's deer or venison, to the vert or greensward, and to the covert in which the deer were lodged. They comprised the courts of attachments or woodmote, of regard, of swanimote, and of justice-seat (which several titles see); but since the revolution of 1688 these courts, it is said, have gone into absolute desuetude. 3 Steph. Com. 439; 2 Bla. Com. 71. But see 8 Q. B. 981, where a mandamus to the verderers of a royal forest was refused, on the ground that the court of the Chief Justice in Eyre had power to compel the verderers to permit the exercise of the rights sought to be enforced.

FOREST LAW. The old law relating to the forest, under which the most horrid tyrannies were exercised, in the confiscation of lands for the royal forests. Hallam's Const. Hist. ch. 8.

The privilege of reserving the forest for the use of the sovereign alone was instituted by the Saxon kings, who, however, occasionally conferred it upon a subject by special license. Under the Norman kings the national property became a royal demesne. The document called Constitutiones Cnuti de Foresta, attributed to Cnute, is a forgery. The law which it contains is the early Anglo-Norman law of William I. Brunner, Sources of English Law, 2 Sel. Essays in Anglo-Amer. L. H. 18. Forest laws were made absolutely at the king's will. Mrs. J. R. Green, 1 id. 113. There were four chiefs of the forest (primarii) who administered justice; under these were four mediocres who undertook the care of the venison and vert; and who in turn superintended two tithing-men whose duties were to care for the vert and venison by night and who, if slaves, became free on being appointed to this office. Complaints against the mediocres and the tithing-men were heard by the primarii and by them disposed of, and complaints against the primarii were dealt with by the king himself; Hallam, Anc. Laws and Inst. sec. 10. If a freeman used violence towards a primarius of the forest, he lost his freedom and his goods; if a villein, he lost his right hand; and for a repetition of the offence by either, he forfeited his life. Offences against the vert were dealt with leniently as compared with those against the venison, and there was also a difference in the penalties imposed for killing a royal beast and a beast of the forest; thus for killing the latter, a freeman was fined, while for the former he lost his liberty. A difference was also recognized according to the rank of the offender, as, if a bishop, abbot, or baron killed a royal beast he was subject to a fine, at the pleasure of the king, while for the same offence a slave lost his life. Certain animals are enumerated in this document for the killing of which no penalty was attached, and the wild boar is especially mentioned as never having been held to be an animal of venison; id. sec. 27.

Under the Confessor these laws were not enforced with the rigidity of Cnute, the penalties for trespass were moderate, and the administration of the forest law did not seem to be a subject of complaint from any class of people, but William the Conqueror soon altered this condition of affairs. The hunting of wild beasts of the forest being his chief pastime he immediately claimed absolute and exclusive right to all forests then existing, and allowed no one to enter without his license; he extended those already existing by laying waste (afforestation) whole towns and villages; and he devastated vast tracts in Hampshire and Yorkshire to form the new forest, "denuding the land of both God and man to make of it a home for wild beasts." Lappenburg, England, under the Anglo-Norman Kings 214. Sometimes he drove out the people and sometimes permitted them to remain under severe laws. The Conqueror appointed new judges of the forests to supersede the former judges and keepers; he created the office of chief justice of the forest and the verderers subordinate to the chief justice, who could convict offenders and send them before the chief justice, but who had no power to punish such offenders. The verderers sat at Swanmote and all within the limits of the forest were bound to attend this court thrice a year, and to serve on inquests and juries when required. The agistators, the forestarii, and the regarders were also appointed by the Normans as officers of the forest, but without judicial powers. The highest penalty enforced for offences in the forest during the reign of William I. seems to have been the loss of a limb or the eyes of the offender, and this was enforced and fines were imposed for the most trivial offences; Sax. Chronicles.

These abuses were continued until about the year 1215, the most extensive afforestations having been made under Richard I. and John. In the 47th and 48th clauses of the great charter certain provisions are found relating to the forest, but although the belief that John issued a charter distinct from these clauses is very ancient, it is erroneous; the document given in Matthieu Paris under the name, being the forest charter of Henry III. with an altered salutation. Stubbs' Charters 338. In the great charter the heavy burden of attending the forest courts is remitted and this provision was conferred in the charta de foresta, and thus the exact analogy established by Henry II. between the courts of the shire and those of the forest was abolished. The charta de foresta disafforested the lands appropriated by Richard and John and all those seized by Henry II. which had operated to the injury of the land-owners and outside of the royal demesne; it greatly mitigated the punishment for destroying game, and provided that for that offence no man should lose life or limb, and that his punishment shall be limited to a fine or imprisonment for a year and a day; the following curious provision occurs in cap. 11: "Whatsoever archbishop, bishop, earl, or baron coming to us at our commandment, passing by our forest, it shall be lawful for him to take and kill one or two of our deer by view of our forester, if he be present; or else he shall cause him to blow a horn for him, that he seem not to steal our deer; and likewise they shall do returning from us," and this clause is still unrepealed. By reason of "the cruel and insupportable hardships which those forest laws created for the subject," says Blackstone, "we find the immunities of charta de foresta as warmly contended for, and extorted from the king with as much difficulty, as those of Magna Charta itself"; 2 Com. 416.

After this charter was issued, the forest laws not being enforced fell gradually into desuetude, until Charles I. attempted to revive them in order to replenish his exchequer, and the forest court of justice sent fined certain persons heavily for alleged encroachments on the ancient boundaries of the forest, although the right to such land was fortified by several centuries of possession. This was one of the first grievances on which the long parliament acted, and since the passing of the act "certainty of forests"; 16 Car. 1. c. 16, where it was declared that all land should be held disafforested where no justice seat, swanmote, or court of attachment had been holden for sixty years next before the first year of the reign of Charles I., the laws of the forest have practically ceased, and by acts 14 and 15 Vict. c. 43, 16 and 17 Vict. c. 42, and 19 and 20 Vict. c. 32, many of the royal forests have been disafforested on the plea of public necessity. See Hallam, Hist. Eng. Const.; Stubbs' Charters; Indermick, King's Peace; Turner, Select Picas of the Forest; 1 Holdsw. Hist. E. L. 340; Encycl. Laws of England; Manwood, Forest Laws; Stubbs, Const. Hist. Charter of Forest; CHARTA DE FORESTA; FOREST COURTS.

In 1851, the greater part of the control of the forests was given to the commissioner of woods, forests and land revenues.

FORESTAGIUM. A tribute payable to the king's foresters. Cowell.

FORESTALL. To intercept or obstruct a passenger on the king's highway. Cowell; Blount. To beset the way of a tenant so as to prevent his coming on the premises. 3 Bla. Com. 170. To intercept a deer on his way to the forest before he can regain it. Cowell. See FORESTALLING THE MARKET.

FORESTALLER. One who commits the offence of forestalling. Used, also, to denote the crime itself; namely, the obstruction of the highway, or hindering a tenant from coming to his land. 3 Bla. Com. 170. Stopping a deer before he regains the forest. Cowell.

FORESTALLING THE MARKET. Buying victuals on their way to the market before they reach it, with the intent to sell again at a higher price. Cowell; Blount; 4 Bla. Com. 158. Every device or practice, by act, conspiracy, words, or news, to enhance the price of victuals or other provisions; Co. 3d Inst. 196; 1 Russ. Cri. 169; 4 Bla. Com. 158. See 13 Viner, Abr. 430; 1 East 132; 3 M. & S. 67. At common law, as well as by stat. 5 & 6 Edw. VI. c. 14, this was an indictable offence against public trade, but since the stat. 7 & 8 Vict. c. 24, the practice of forestalling is no longer illegal. See ENGBROSS.

In the United States forestalling the market takes the form of "corners" or of "trusts," which are attempts by one person or a conspiracy or combination of persons to monopolize an article of trade or commerce, or to control or regulate, or to restrict its manufacture or production in such a manner as to enhance the price; Wright v. Crabbs, 78 Ind. 487; Arnot v. Coal Co., 68 N. Y. 558, 23 Am. Rep. 190. See RESTRAINT OF TRADE.

FORESTARIUS. A forester. An officer who takes care of the woods and forests. De forestario apponendo, a writ which lay to appoint a forester to prevent further commission of waste when a tenant in dower had committed waste. Bracton 316; Du Cange.

FORESTER. A sworn officer of the forest, appointed by the king's letters patent to walk the forest, watching both the vert and the venison, attaching and presenting all trespassers against them within their own bailiwick or walk. These letters patent were generally granted during good behavior; but sometimes they held the office in fee. Blount; Cowell.

FORFANG. A taking beforehand. A taking provisions from any one in fairs or markets before the king's purveyors are served with necessities for his majesty. Blount; Cowell.

FORFEIT. To lose as the penalty of some misdeed or negligence. The word includes not merely the idea of losing, but also of having the property transferred to another without the consent of the owner and wrongdoer.

Lost by omission or negligence or misconduct. Nolander v. Burns, 48 Minn. 13, 50 N. W. 1016.

This is the essential meaning of the word, whether it be that an offender is to forfeit a sum of money, or an estate is to be forfeited to a former owner for a breach of condition, or to the king for some crime. Cowell says that forfeiture is general and confiscation a particular forfeiture to the king's exchequer. The modern distinction, however, seems to refer rather to a difference between forfeiture as relating to acts of the owner and confiscation as relating to acts of the government; Clark v. Ins. Co., 1 Sto. 134, Fed. Cas. No. 2,832; Ocean Ins. Co. v. Polleys, 13 Pet. (U. S.) 157, 10 L. Ed. 105; Fontaine v. Ins. Co., 11 Johns. (N. Y.) 293. Confiscation is more generally used of an appropriation of an enemy's property; forfeiture, or the taking possession of property to which the owner, who may be a citizen, has lost title through violation of laws. See 1 Kent 67; Clark v. Ins. Co., 1 Sto. 134, Fed. Cas. No. 2,832.

A provision in an agreement, that for its breach the party shall "forfeit" a fixed sum, implies a penalty, not liquidated damages; Salter v. Ralph, 15 Abb. Pr. (N. Y.) 273; Richards v. Edick, 17 Barb. (N. Y.) 260; a contract to forfeit and pay a specified sum in default of performance is an agreement for liquidated damages; Nilson v. Jonesboro, 57 Ark. 168, 20 S. W. 1093; even where under the contract a bond is given as an earnest of good faith; id.

FORFEITABLE. Subject to forfeiture; as a franchise for misuser or non-user, or lands or property for crime.

FORFEITURE. A punishment annexed by law to some illegal act or negligence in the owner of lands, tenements, or hereditaments, whereby he loses all his interest therein, and they become vested in the party injured as a recompense for the wrong which he alone or the public together with himself, hath sustained. 2 Bla. Com. 267. A sum of money to be paid by way of penalty for a crime. Maclin v. Wilson, 21 Ala. 672; Anglea v. Com., 10 Gratt. (Va.) 700.

Forfeiture by alienation. By the English law, estates less than a fee may be forfeited to the party entitled to the residuary interest by a breach of duty in the owner of the particular estate; as if a tenant for his own life aliens by feoffments or fine for the life of another, or in tail, or in fee, or by recovery; there being estates, which either must or may last longer than his own, the creating them is not only beyond his power, but is a forfeiture of his own particular estate; 2 Bla. Com. 274; 1 Co. 14 b. But no forfeiture resulted from alienation of a fee tail by the particular tenant, the alienee holding the estate during the life of the tenant in tail, at whose death it went to the heir in tail. This was called a discontinuance of the estate tail. 3 Bla. Com. 171. See DISCONTINUANCE OF ESTATES.

In this country such forfeitures are almost unknown, and the more just principle prevails that the conveyance by the tenant operates only on the interest which he possessed, and does not affect the remainderman or reversioner; 4 Kent 81, 424; McMillan's Lessee v. Robbins, 5 Ohio 30; Stevens v. Winship, 1 Pick. (Mass.) 318, 11 Am. Dec. 178; Redfern v. Middleton's Ex'rs, Rice (S. C.) 459; Stump v. Findlay, 2 Rawle (Pa.) 168, 19 Am. Dec. 632; French v. Rollins, 21 Me. 372. See, also, Stearn, Real Act, 11; 2 Sharsw. Bla. Com. 121, n.; Wms. R. P. 25; 1 Washb. R. P. 92, 197.

Forfeiture for crimes. Under the constitution and laws of the United States, Const. art. 3, § 3; Act of April 30, 1790, § 24, forfeiture for crimes is nearly abolished. And when it occurs the state recovers only the title which the owner had. See, also, Dalr. Feuds, p. 145; Fost. Cr. Law 95; 1 Washb. R. P. 92; Story, Const. 1296; Owens v. Owens, 100 N. C. 240, 6 S. E. 794.

Forfeiture for treason. The constitution of the United States, art. 3, § 2, provides that no attainder of treason shall work forfeiture except during the life of the person attainted. The Confiscation Act provided that only the life estate of the convicted person can be condemned and sold; Bigelow v. Forrest, 9 Wall. (U. S.) 350, 19 L. Ed. 696; Day v. Micou, 18 Wall. (U. S.) 156, 21 L. Ed. 860. It was merely an exercise of the war power; Miller v. U. S., 11 Wall. (U. S.) 304, 20 L. Ed. 135; and did not apply to the confiscation of enemies' property; The Confiscation Cases, 1 Woods 221, Fed. Cas. No. 3,097.

Forfeiture by non-performance of conditions. An estate may be forfeited by a breach or non-performance of a condition annexed to the estate, either expressed in the deed at its original creation, or implied by law, from a principle of natural reason; 2 Bla. Com. 281; Littleton § 361; 1 Prest. Est. 478; Tud. Lead. Cas. 794; Hayden v. Inhabitants of Stoughton, 5 Pick. (Mass.) 528; Andrews v. Senter, 32 Me. 394; Bowen v. Bowen, 18 Conn. 535; Stafford v. Walker, 12 S. & R. (Pa.) 190; Drown v. Ingels, 3 Wash. 424, 28 Pac. 759. Such forfeiture may be waived by acts of the person entitled to take advantage of the breach; Chalker v. Chalker, 1 Conn. 79, 6 Am. Dec. 206; Jackson v. Cryslar, 1 Johns. Cas. (N. Y.) 126; 1 Washb. R. P. 454; Hukill v. Myers, 36 W. Va. 639, 15 S. E. 151. In order to authorize a claim to forfeiture of valuable property on account of violation of a condition, proceedings to enforce must be had at once; Huston v. Bybee, 17 Or. 140, 20 Pac. 51, 2 L. R. A. 568;

U. S. v. R. Co., 176 U. S. 242, 20 Sup. Ct. 370, 44 L. Ed. 452.

Equity will not lend its aid to enforce a forfeiture because of a breach of condition subsequent in a deed, although the aid is sought upon the special ground of removing a cloud on the title; Douglas v. Life Ins. Co., 127 Ill. 101, 20 N. E. 51; nor will it concern itself to make up the loss of interest to one who refused the principal in the hope that he could enforce, upon purely technical grounds, a forfeiture of lands sold and all payments made thereon, under the terms of a harsh and unconscionable contract; Cheney v. Bilby, 74 Fed. 52, 20 C. C. A. 291. But where a covenant to build, in a lease, has been broken by the lessee, a court of bankruptcy acting as a court of equity may declare a forfeiture; Lindeke v. Realty Co., 146 Fed. 630, 77 C. C. A. 56; and equity will not prevent forfeiture if the lessee has been at fault; Kann v. King, 204 U. S. 43, 27 Sup. Ct. 213, 51 L. Ed. 360. But equity will relieve against a forfeiture where it would be unconscionable to enforce it; Maginnis v. Ice Co., 112 Wis. 385, 88 N. W. 300, 69 L. R. A. 533; and if there is some rule by which damages for the failure to perform a condition can be accurately measured in money; Gordon v. Richardson, 185 Mass. 492, 70 N. E. 1027, 69 L. R. A. 867; Dunklee v. Adams, 20 Vt. 415, 50 Am. Dec. 44; it is a question for the discretion of the court; 22 Ont. Rep. 1. Equity may relieve against forfeitures but not enforce them; South Carolina & G. R. Co. v. R. Co., 107 Ga. 164, 33 S. E. 36; Pittsburg & C. R. Co. v. R. Co., 76 Pa. 481.

Forfeiture by waste. Waste is a cause of forfeiture. 2 Bla. Com. 283; Co. 2d Inst. 299; 1 Washb. R. P. 118.

Forfeiture of property and rights cannot be adjudged by legislative acts, and confiscation without a judicial hearing after due notice would be void as not being due process of law; Walker v. McLoud, 204 U. S. 302, 27 Sup. Ct. 293, 51 L. Ed. 495. Nor can a party by his misconduct so forfeit a right that it may be taken from him without judicial proceedings, in which the forfeiture shall be declared in due form; Cooley, Const. Law 450; Griffin v. Mixon, 38 Miss. 434. Where no express power of removal is conferred upon the executive, he cannot declare an office forfeited for misbehavior; the forfeit must be declared by judicial proceedings; Page v. Hardin, 8 B. Monr. (Ky.) 648; State v. Pritchard, 36 N. J. L. 101.

Forfeiture of wages. A provision in a contract for service to the effect that the wages of an employé shall be forfeited for neglect or misconduct which brings damage to a company, should be strictly construed as against the company; Chicago City Ry. Co. v. Blanchard, 35 Ill. App. 481. Where, after being discharged, a railroad employé sues for wages, claiming to have been hired by the month, and this being admitted by the company, which sets up the defence that he was dismissed for cause, it is error to instruct the jury that they may find for the plaintiff if they believe from the evidence that he was hired by the month; Evans v. Ry. Co., 16 Mo. App. 522, reconciled in White v. R. Co., 20 Mo. App. 564.

Forfeiture of vessel. R. S. U. S. § 5283, provides for the forfeiture of every vessel which, within the limits of the United States, is fitted out and armed, or attempted to be so, to be employed in the service of any foreign prince, state, or people, to commit hostilities against the subjects, citizens, or property of a prince, state, or people with which the United States are at peace. Held, that under this section no forfeiture can be claimed of a vessel which is only employed to transport arms and munitions of war to a vessel fitting out to pursue the forbidden warlike enterprises; The Robert and Minnie, 47 Fed. 84; United States v. Trumbull, 48 Fed. 99; The Itata, 49 Fed. 646.

Forfeiture of charter. A corporation may be dissolved by a forfeiture of its charter for the non-user or misuser of its franchises; Boston Glass Mfg. v. Langdon, 24 Pick. (Mass.) 52, 35 Am. Dec. 292; State v. Jockey Club, 200 Mo. 34, 92 S. W. 182, 98 S. W. 539, New Orleans Waterworks Co. v. Louisiana, 185 U. S. 336, 22 Sup. Ct. 691, 46 L. Ed. 936. It is only for the violation of an express provision of the organic law under which a corporation derives its powers or privileges, or for such a misuse or nonuse of them as results in a substantial failure to fulfil the purpose of its organization, that a forfeiture of a franchise will be decreed; Illinois Trust & Savings Bank v. Doud, 105 Fed. 123, 44 C. C. A. 389, 52 L. R. A. 481; State v. Bridge Co., 91 Ia. 517, 60 N. W. 121; State v. Farmers' College, 32 Ohio St. 487; Harris v. R. Co., 51 Miss. 602; Chicago City Ry. Co. v. People, 73 Ill. 541; State v. Bank, 5 Ark. 595, 41 Am. Dec. 109; State v. Société, 9 Mo. App. 114; State v. Water Co., 92 Wis. 496, 66 N. W. 512, 32 L. R. A. 391.

Accidental negligence or abuse of power will not warrant a forfeiture; there must be some plain abuse of its powers or neglect to exercise its franchises, and the acts of misuse or non-use must be wilful and repeated; Harris v. R. Co., 51 Miss. 602; State v. Turnpike Co. (Tenn.) 17 S. W. 128. Thus long-continued neglect on the part of a turnpike company to repair its road is cause of forfeiture; State v. Turnpike Co., 8 R. I. 182; id., 8 R. I. 521, 94 Am. Dec. 123. So of a bridge company, if it neglect for a long time to rebuild a bridge which has been carried away by a flood; People v. Turnpike Road, 23 Wend. (N. Y.) 254; and deliberate attempts to evade the insurance law of a state in one of its most important provisions; International Fraternal Alliance v. State, 86 Md. 550, 39 Atl. 512, 40 L. R. A. 187; or wilful disregard of an act requiring the corporation to pay in the capital stock within two years after incorporation; People v. Stone & Cement Co., 131 N. Y. 140, 29 N. E. 947, 15 L. R. A. 240; or failure to make an annual report required by statute; id.; or charging illegal rates for furnishing water; State v. Waterworks Co., 107 La. 1, 31 South. 395, affirmed, New Orleans Waterworks Co. v. Louisiana, 185 U. S. 336, 22 Sup. Ct. 691, 46 L. Ed. 936; or holding lands contrary to the law; Com. v. R. Co., 132 Pa. 591, 19 Atl. 291, 7 L. R. A. 634. Neglect to have corporate property listed for taxation was held not sufficient ground for forfeiture; North & South Rolling Stock Co. v. People, 147 Ill. 234, 35 N. E. 608, 24 L. R. A. 462.

A forfeiture must be judicially declared; La Grange & M. R. Co. v. Rainey, 7 Cold. (Tenn.) 420; In re Brooklyn, W. & N. Ry. Co., 72 N. Y. 245; Wicks v. Monihan, 130 N. Y. 232, 29 N. E. 139, 14 L. R. A. 243. A forfeiture can be enforced by scire facias or a quo warranto only at the suit of the government which created the corporation; State v. Coal Co., 46 Md. 1; Com. v. Small, 26 Pa. 31; Elizabethtown Gas Light Co. v. Green, 46 N. J. Eq. 118, 18 Atl. 844; Bass v. Navigation & Water-Power Co., 111 N. C. 439, 14 S. E. 402, 19 L. R. A. 247. But not at the suit of an individual; Proprietors of Charles River Bridge v. Proprietors of Warren Bridge, 7 Pick. (Mass.) 344; Frost v. Coal Co., 24 How. (U. S.) 278, 16 L. Ed. 637; Williams v. Ry. Co., 130 Ind. 71, 29 N. E. 408, 15 L. R. A. 64, 30 Am. St. Rep. 201. The state may waive a cause of forfeiture; People v. President & Directors of Manhattan Co., 9 Wend. (N. Y.) 351; State v. Morris, 73 Tex. 435, 11 S. W. 392; and it will not interfere, if the unauthorized acts of a corporation affect merely stockholders and creditors who have an adequate legal remedy; State v. Mfg. Co., 40 Minn. 213, 41 N. W. 1020, 3 L. R. A. 510.

Equity has no jurisdiction in the matter; Moraw. Priv. Corp. 10, 40; Attorney General v. Stevens, 1 N. J. Eq. 369, 22 Am. Dec. 526; State v. Merchants' Ins. & Trust Co., 8 Humph. (Tenn.) 253. But where there was a franchise to construct a street railway in a specified time, and in case of failure the franchise to be forfeited, the right was lost without suit, there having been a failure; Oakland R. Co. v. R. Co., 45 Cal. 365, 13 Am. Rep. 181.

Forfeiture for contesting a will. It is not against public policy for a will to provide that any contestant shall forfeit his interest under the will; In re Hite's Estate, 155 Cal. 436, 101 Pac. 443, 21 L. R. A. (N. S.) 953, 17 Ann. Cas. 993. As to what amounts to such contest, resulting in forfeiture, the rule seems to be that, where the legatee seeks to thwart the testator's expressed wishes, it is a contest; In re Hite's Estate, 155 Cal. 436, 101 Pac. 443, 21 L. R. A. (N. S.) 953, 17 Ann. Cas. 993. Disputes over construction of wills are not contests; Black v. Herring, 79 Md. 146, 28 Atl. 1063; Woodward v. James, 44 Hun (N. Y.) 95; Ir. L. R. 11 Eq. 409; nor where the legatee appears by attorney and cross-examines witnesses at the probate of a will; In re Bratt, 10 Misc. 491, 32 N. Y. Supp. 168. But if the legatee deny the ownership of the testator, there is contest and forfeiture; Smithsonian Inst. v. Meech, 169 U. S. 398, 18 Sup. Ct. 396, 42 L. Ed. 793; or if one legatee advise and aid another in a contest; Donegan v. Wade, 70 Ala. 501. An infant is not responsible for proceedings by a guardian ad litem; Bryant v. Thompson, 59 Hun 545, 14 N. Y. Supp. 28; id., 128 N. Y. 426, 28 N. E. 522, 13 L. R. A. 745. See Chew's Appeal, 45 Pa. 228, holding that such clauses are to be construed strictly and when merely denouncing such contests and making no gift over, they are considered as only in terrorem.

FORFEITURE OF A BOND. A failure to perform the condition on which the obligee was to be excused from the penalty in the bond. Courts of equity and of law in modern practice will relieve from the forfeiture of a bond; and, upon proper cause shown, criminal courts will, in general, relieve from the forfeiture of a recognizance to appear. See Respublica v. Cobbet, 3 Yeates (Pa.) 93; Stegars v. State, 2 Blackf. (Ind.) 104; Elliott v. Armstrong, 2 Blackf. (Ind.) 200.

FORFEITURE OF MARRIAGE. A penalty incurred by a ward in chivalry when he or she married contrary to the wishes of his or her guardian in chivalry.

The latter, who was the ward's lord, had an interest in controlling the marriage of his female wards, and he could exact a price for his consent; and at length it became customary to sell the marriage of wards of both sexes; 2 Bla. Com. 70.

When a male ward refused an equal match provided by his guardian, he was obliged, on coming of age, to pay him the value of the marriage,—that is, as much as he had been bona fide offered for it, or, if the guardian chose, as much as a jury would assess, taking into consideration all the real and personal property of the ward; and the guardian could claim this value although he might have made no tender of the marriage; Co. Litt. 82 a; Co. 2d Inst. 92; 5 Co. 126 b; 6 id. 70 b.

When a male ward between the age of fourteen and twenty-one refused to accept an offer of an equal match (one without disparagement), and during that period formed an alliance elsewhere without his guardian's permission, he incurred forfeiture of marriage,—that is, he became liable to pay double the value of the marriage. Co. Litt. 78 b, 82 b.

FORFEITURE OF SILK. In English Law. When the importation of silk was prohibited it was customary at each term of the Exchequer to proclaim a forfeiture of such as was suffered to lie in the docks.

FORGAVEL. A small rent reserved in money; a quit-rent. Sometimes written for-gabulum.

FORGE. To fabricate by false imitation; especially, in law, to make a false instrument in similitude of an instrument by which one person could be obligated to another for the purpose of fraud and deceit. People v. Mitchell, 92 Cal. 590, 23 Pac. 597, 788. See State v. McKenzie, 42 Me. 392.

FORGERY. The falsely making or materially altering, with intent to defraud, any writing which, if genuine, might apparently be of legal efficacy or the foundation of a legal liability. 2 Bish. Cr. Law § 523; Smith v. State, 29 Fla. 408, 10 South. 894.

The fraudulent making and alteration of a writing to the prejudice of another man's right. 4 Bla. Com. 247. The essence of forgery consists in making an instrument appear to be that which it is not; L. R. 1 C. C. R. 200.

Bishop, 2 Cr. Law § 523, n., has collected nine definitions of forgery, and remarks that the books abound in definitions. Coke says the term is "taken metaphorically from the smith, who beateth upon his anvil and forgeth what fashion and shape he will." Co. 3d Inst. 169.

A person may commit forgery by fraudulently making, over his own signature, a paper writing which, if genuine, would possess legal efficacy, and might operate to the prejudice of another's rights; Luttrell v. State, 85 Tenn. 232, 1 S. W. 886, 4 Am. St. Rep. 760. One may have authority to sign the name of another to an instrument for the payment of money in a stated amount, or for a legal purpose, and yet commit a forgery by signing for a larger amount, or for an illegal purpose with intent to defraud; Claiborne v. State, 51 Ark. 88, 9 S. W. 851.

A clerk in the telegraph office who sent to a bookmaker a telegram offering to bet on a certain horse, which purported to be sent before the race, and to be signed by a person who had authorized him to telegraph bets in his name, but which was in fact sent after the clerk knew that the horse had won the race, was held guilty of forgery under a statute against procuring money by virtue of any forged or altered instrument. Lord Russell, C. J., and Vaughan Williams, J., doubted as to the statute, but not that it was forgery at common law; [1896] 1 Q. B. 309.

The making of a whole written instrument in the name of another with a fraudulent intent is undoubtedly a sufficient making; although otherwise where one executes a promissory note as agent for a principal from whom he has no authority; Mann v. People, 15 Hun 155; but a fraudulent insertion, alteration, or erasure, even of a letter, in any material part of the instrument, whereby a new operation is given to it, will amount to a forgery; State v. Floyd, 5 Strobb. (S. C.) 58, 53 Am. Dec. 689; L. R. 1 C. C. R. 200; and this, although it be afterwards executed by a person ignorant of the deceit; 2 East, Pl. Cr. 855.

The fraudulent application of a true signature to a false instrument for which it was not intended, or vice versa, will also be a forgery; Powell v. Com., 11 Gratt. (Va.) 822; Pennsylvania v. Milsner, Add. (Pa.) 44. For example, it is forgery in an individual who is requested to draw a will for a sick person in a particular way, instead of doing so, to insert legacies of his own head, and then procure the signature of such sick person to the paper without revealing to him the legacies thus fraudulently inserted; F. Moore 759; Co. 3d Inst. 170; 1 Hawk. Pl. Cr. c. 70, s. 2; 2 Russ. Cr. 318; Bacon, Abr. Forgery (A); so held of one who was employed to draw a will and fraudulently omitted a legacy; 1 Hawk. Pl. Cr. c. 70, § 6; 3 Chitty, Cr. L. 1038. One was held not to be guilty of forgery, who in writing a promissory note for an illiterate person to execute, inserts therein an amount larger than directed; Wells v. State, 89 Ga. 788, 15 S. E. 679.

It has been intimated by Lord Ellenborough that a party who makes a copy of a receipt and adds to such copy material words not in the original, and then offers it in evidence on the ground that the original has been lost, may be prosecuted for forgery; 5 Esp. 100.

It is a sufficient making where, in the writing, the party assumes the name and character of a person in existence; 2 Russ. Cri. 327. But the adoption of a false description and addition where a false name is not assumed and there is no person answering the description, is not a forgery; 1 Russ. & R. 405.

Making an instrument in a fictitious name, or the name of a non-existing person, is as much a forgery as making it in the name of an existing person; 2 Russ. Cri. 328; Brewer v. State, 32 Tex. Cr. R. 74, 22 S. W. 41, 40 Am. St. Rep. 760; Lascelles v. State, 90 Ga. 347, 16 S. E. 945, 35 Am. St. Rep. 216; and although a man may make the instrument in his own name, if he represent it as the instrument of another of the same name, when in fact there is no such person, it will be a forgery in the name of a non-existing person; 2 Leach 775; 2 East, Pl. Cr. 963; U. S. v. Turner, 7 Pet. (U. S.) 132, 8 L. Ed. 633; (See State v. Bauman, 52 Ia. 68, 2 N. W. 956.) But the correctness of this decision has been doubted; Rosc. Cr. Ev. 384. One who, with intent to forge the check of "R. & M.," signs the name "A. E. R. & Co." thereto, believing it to be the true name of the firm, is not guilty of forgery; People v. Elliott, 90 Cal. 586, 27 Pac. 433.

The offence may be complete without a publication of the forged instrument; 2 East, Pl. Cr. 855.

The presumption is that a drawee bank knows the signature of its own customers; Neal v. Coburn, 92 Me. 139, 42 Atl. 348, 69 Am. St. Rep. 495; First Nat. Bank of Danvers v. Bank, 151 Mass. 280, 24 N. E. 44, 21 Am. St. Rep. 450. But this presumption is conclusive only when the party receiving the money has in no way contributed to the success of the fraud or mistake of fact under which the payment was made. In the absence of actual fault on the part of the drawee, his constructive fault in not knowing the signature of the drawer, and detecting the forgery will not preclude his recovery from one who took the check under circumstances of suspicion without proper precaution, or whose conduct has been such as to mislead the drawee or to induce him to pay the check without the usual security against fraud; id.; Ford v. Bank, 74 S. C. 180, 54 S. E. 204, 10 L. R. A. (N. S.) 63, 114 Am. St. Rep. 986, 7 Ann. Cas. 744.

Where the payee cut a note signed by three school trustees from an order blank for school supplies and transferred such note to another instrument for the payment of money, held that the alteration being made with criminal intent, it was forgery; State v. Mitton, 37 Mont. 366, 96 Pac. 926, 127 Am. St. Rep. 732.

With regard to the thing forged, it may be observed that it has been holden to be forgery at common law fraudulently to falsify or falsely make records and other matters of a public nature; 1 Rolle, Abr. 65, 68; a parish register; 1 Hawk. Pl. Cr. c. 70; a letter in the name of a magistrate, or of the governor of a gaol directing the discharge of a prisoner; 6 C. & P. 129; Mood. 379; the making a false municipal certificate with intent to defraud is forgery, notwithstanding the city has not power to issue such certificates; State v. Eades, 68 Mo. 150, 30 Am. Rep. 780; the alteration of a document to prevent the discovery of an embezzlement; 11 Crim. L. Mag. 47.

With regard to private writings, forgery may be committed of any writing which, if genuine, would operate as the foundation of another man's liability or the evidence of his right; 3 Greenl. Ev. § 103; Com. v. Ward, 2 Mass. 397; Butler v. Com., 12 S. & R. (Pa.) 237, 14 Am. Dec. 679; State v. Smith, 8 Yerg. (Tenn.) 150; as, a check; Hendrick v. Com., 5 Leigh (Va.) 707; an assignment of a legal claim; an indorsement of a promissory note; Powell v. Com., 11 Gratt. (Va.) 822; State v. Carragin, 210 Mo. 351, 109 S. W. 553, 16 L. R. A. (N. S.) 561; writing the name of the payee falsely and fraudulently on the back of a treasury warrant payable to order; U. S. v. Jolly, 37 Fed. 108; a receipt or acquittance; Com. v. Ladd, 15 Mass. 526; an acceptance of a bill of exchange, or an order for the delivery of goods; 8 C. & P. 629; Com. v. Ayer, 3 Cush. (Mass.) 150; Hendricks v. State, 26 Tex. App. 176, 9 S. W. 555, 557, 8 Am. St. Rep.

463; Reddick v. State, 31 Tex. Cr. R. 587, 21 S. W. 684; or an order for money; Gibson v. State, 79 Ga. 344, 5 S. E. 76; a deposition to be used in court; State v. Kimball, 50 Me. 409; a private act of parliament; 4 How. St. Tr. 951; a copy of any instrument to be used in evidence in the place of a real or supposed original; State v. Smith, 8 Yerg. (Tenn.) 150; false entries in the books of a mercantile house, but not necessarily so in every case; Biles v. Com., 32 Pa. 529, 75 Am. Dec. 568; State v. Young, 46 N. H. 266, 88 Am. Dec. 212; a letter of recommendation of a person as a man of property and pecuniary responsibility; 2 Greenl. Ev. § 365; People v. Abeel, 182 N. Y. 415, 75 N. E. 307, 1 L. R. A. (N. S.) 730, 3 Ann. Cas. 287; a false testimonial to character; Templ. & M. 207; 1 Den. Cr. Cas. 492; Dearsli. 285; a railway pass; 2 C. & K. 604; a railroad-ticket; Com. v. Ray, 3 Gray (Mass.) 441; a certified bill of costs; Luttrell v. State, 85 Tenn. 232, 1 S. W. 886, 4 Am. St. Rep. 760; or of a contract which, if genuine, would be void as against public policy; People v. Munroe, 100 Cal. 664, 35 Pac. 326, 24 L. R. A. 33, 38 Am. St. Rep. 323. Forgery may be of a printed or engraved as well as of a written instrument; Com. v. Ray, 3 Gray (Mass.) 441; Henshaw v. Foster, 9 Pick. (Mass.) 312; Benson v. McMahon, 127 U. S. 457, 8 Sup. Ct. 1240, 32 L. Ed. 234; but falsely to subscribe a person's name to a recommendation of a medicine is not forgery; Miller v. Rittinger, 2 Pear. (Pa.) 351; nor to alter a lease by interlineations in order to conform it to the purpose of parties; Pauli v. Com., 89 Pa. 432; nor is the private memorandum-book of a public officer, not required to be kept by law, the subject of forgery; Downing v. Brown, 3 Colo. 571; nor the changing the date of tax receipts which still show on their face that they were given for the taxes of the year previous; Cox v. State, 66 Miss. 14, 5 South. 618; a forgery must be of some document or writing; therefore, the printing an artist's name in the corner of a picture, in order falsely to pass it off as an original picture by that artist, is not a forgery; 1 Dearsli. & B. 460; Clark, Cr. L. 295.

Knowingly to utter a false letter by which the sentiments, character, prospects, interests, etc., of the person whose utterance the writing purports to be are misrepresented, whereby the writer induced a woman to promise to marry him, was held to be forgery, though not injurious to the person whose name was forged; People v. Abeel, 182 N. Y. 415, 75 N. E. 307, 1 L. R. A. (N. S.) 730, 3 Ann. Cas. 287.

The seal of a corporation is a "character" within the meaning of the New Jersey Crimes Act (relating to forgery) and the forgery of such seal is a crime thereunder; U. S. v. Andem, 158 Fed. 996.

The intent must be to defraud another; Cedar Rapids Ins. Co. v. Butler, 83 Ia. 128, 48 N. W. 1026; McDonald v. State, 83 Ala. 46, 3 South. 303; but it is not requisite that any one should have been injured; it is sufficient that the instrument forged might have proved prejudicial: Arnold v. Cost, 3 Gill & J. (Md.) 220, 22 Am. Dec. 302; U. S. v. Moses, 4 Wash. C. C. 726, Fed. Cas. No. 15,825; Crawford v. State, 31 Tex. Cr. R. 51, 19 S. W. 766; it has been held that the jury ought to infer an intent to defraud the person who would have to pay the instrument, if it were genuine, although from the manner of executing the forgery, or from the person's ordinary caution, it would not be likely to impose upon him; and although the object was general to defraud whoever might take the instrument, and the intention of the defrauding in particular the person who would have to pay the instrument, if genuine, did not enter into the contemplation of the prisoner; Russ. & R. 291; State v. Cross, 101 N. C. 770, 7 S. E. 715, 9 Am. St. Rep. 53; State v. Gryder, 44 La. Ann. 962, 11 South. 573, 32 Am. St. Rep. 358. See Russ. Cri. b. 4, c. 32, s. 3; 2 East, Pl. Cr. 853; 1 Leach 367; Rosc. Cr. Ev. 400; Clark, Cr. L. 300.

Most, and perhaps all, of the states have passed laws making certain acts to be forgery with the result, upon the whole, of enlarging the meaning of the term, and the national legislature has also enacted several on this subject; but these statutes do not take away the character of the offence as a misdemeanor at common law, but only provide additional punishment in the cases particularly enumerated in the statutes; Com. v. Ayer, 3 Cush. (Mass.) 150; Com. v. Ray, 3 Gray (Mass.) 441.

It has been held that the crime of uttering forged commercial paper is included in the common-law definition of the word "forgery" as used in a treaty, and that a prisoner charged with it should be surrendered, although under the law of the other treaty power that crime is known as "fraud" by means of forgery, and "forgery" is only falsification of public documents; In re Adutt, 55 Fed. 376.

The act of offering for sale and selling a forged instrument is a sufficient representation as to its genuineness; State v. Calkins, 73 Ia. 128, 34 N. W. 777.

When separate instruments are forged on the same date and as part of the same general transaction, the forgery of each constitutes a separate offense; U. S. v. Carpenter, 151 Fed. 214, 81 C. C. A. 194, 9 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1043, 10 Ann. Cas. 509; Barton v. State, 23 Wis. 587.

Although counts for forgery and uttering a forged instrument may be joined in the same indictment, a conviction cannot be had on both; State v. Carragin, 210 Mo. 351, 109 S. W. 553, 16 L. R. A. (N. S.) 561.

FORHERDA. In Old English Law. A headland, or foreland. Cowell.

FORI DISPUTATIONES. In Civil Law. Arguments in court. Disputations or arguments before a court. Eminent citizens and statesmen often debated in the forum, and their answers to questions put were gradually adopted by the courts and incorporated into the body of the Roman law under this name. 1 Kent 530; Vicat, Voc. Jur. verb. Disputatio.

FORINSECUS (Lat.), FORINSIC. Outward; on the outside; without; foreign; belonging to another manor. Silio forinsecus, the outward ridge or furrow. Servitium forinsecum, the payment of aid, scutage, and other extraordinary military services. Forinsecum manerium, the manor, or that part of it which lies outside the bars or town and is not included within the liberties of it. Cowell; Blount; Cunningham, Law Dict.; Jacob, Foreign Service; 1 Reeve, Hist. Eng. Law 273.

Forinsec service was the service due to the crown upon land; service due between grantor and grantee was termed intrinsic. 2 Holdsw. Hist. E. L. 158. See 1 Poll. & Maitl. 217.

FORIS (Lat.). Out at the doors, out of door; abroad; without. Harp. Lat. Dict.

FORIS FAMILIATION. The separation of a child from the father's family. Bell; Toml.

One who is no longer an heir of the parent was termed forisfamiliatus. Du Cange; Spelman, Gloss.; Cowell. Similar in some degree to the modern practice of advancement.

FORISBANITUS. Banished. Mat. Par. 1245.

FORISFACERE (Lat.). To forfeit. To lose on account of crime. It may be applied not only to estates, but to a variety of other things, in precisely the popular sense of the word forfeit. Spelman, Gloss.; Du Cange.

To confiscate. Du Cange; Spelman, Gloss.

To commit an offence; to do a wrong. To do something beyond or outside of (foris) what is right (extra rationem). Du Cange. To do a thing against or without law. Co. Litt. 59 a.

To disclaim. Du Cange.

FORISFACTUM (Lat.). Forfeited. Bona forisfacta, forfeited goods; 1 Bla. Com. 299. A crime. Du Cange; Spelman, Gloss..

FORISFACTURA (Lat.). A crime or offence through which property is forfeited. Leg. Edw. Conf. c. 32.

A fine or punishment in money.

Forfeiture. The loss of property or life in consequence of crime. Spelman, Gloss.

Forisfactura plena. A forfeiture of all of a man's property. Things which were forfeited. Du Cange; Spelman, Gloss.

FORISFACTUS (Lat.). A criminal. One who has forfeited his life by commission of a capital offence. Spelman, Gloss.; Du Cange. Si quispiam forisfactus poposcerit regis misericordiam, etc. (if any criminal shall have asked pardon of the king, etc.). Leg. Edw. Conf. c. 18.

Forisfactus servus. A slave who has been a free man but has forfeited his freedom by crime. Leg. Athelstan, c. 3; Du Cange.

FORISFAMILIATED, FORISFAMILIATUS. In Old English Law. Portioned off. A son was forisfamiliaried when he had a portion of his father's estate assigned to him during his father's life, in lieu of his share of the inheritance, when it was done at his request and he assented to the assignment. The word etymologically denotes put out of the family (foris familiam ponere, from which is forisfamiliare; Glanv. l. 7, c. 3) mancipiated. 1 Reeve, Hist. Eng. L. 110; Bract, fol. 64.

FORISJUDICATIO (Lat.). In Old English Law. Forejudger. A forejudgment. A judgment of court whereby a man is put out of possession of a thing. Co. Litt. 100 b; Cunningham, Law Dict.

FORISJUDICATUS (Lat.). Forejudged; sent from court; banished. Deprived of a thing by judgment of court. Bracton, 250 b; Co. Litt. 100 b; Du Cange.

FORISJURARE (Lat.). To forswear; to abjure; to abandon. Forisjurare parentilam. To remove oneself from parental authority. The person who did this lost his rights as heir. Du Cange; Leg. Hen. I. c. 88.

Provinciam forisjurare. To forswear the country, Spelman, Gloss.; Leg. Edw. Conf. c. 6.

FORJUDGE. See FOREJUDGE.

FORJURER (L. Fr.). In Old English Law. To abjure; to forswear. Forjurer royaleme, to abjure the realm. Britt. cc. 1, 16.

FORLER-LAND. Land in the diocese of Hereford, which had a peculiar custom attached to it, but which has been long since disused, although the name is retained. Butl. Surv. 56.

"Some of the peculiar customs of Hereford are recently published, as that 'the reeve of the borough may have been directly accountable to the king,' while 'in most cases the king's farmer was the sheriff of the shire.' Mattl. Domesd. Book and Beyond 209. So also, 'at Hereford the reeve's consent was necessary when a burge was to be sold, and he took a third of the price.' When a burges died the king got his horse and arms (these Hereford burgesses were fighting men); if he had no horse, then ten shillings 'or his land with the houses.' Any one who was too poor to do his service might abandon his tenement to the reeve without having to pay for it. Such an entry as this seems to tell us that the services were no trivial return for the tenements;" id. 199.

FORM. The model of an instrument or legal proceeding, containing the substance and the principal terms, to be used in accordance with the laws.

The legal order or method of legal proceedings or construction of legal instruments.

Form is usually put in contradistinction to substance. For example, by the operation of the statute of 27 Eliz. c. 5, s. 1, all merely formal defects in pleading, except in dilatory pleas, are aided on general demurrer. The difference between matter of form and matter of substance, in general, under this statute, as laid down by Lord Hobart, C. J., is that "that without which the right doth sufficiently appear to the court is form;" but that any defect "by reason whereof the right appears not" is a defect in substance; Hob. 233. A distinction somewhat more definite is that if the matter pleaded be in itself insufficient, without reference to the manner of pleading it, the defect is substantial; but that if the fault is in the manner of alleging it, the defect is formal; Dougl. 633.

For example, the omission of a consideration in a declaration in assumpsit, or of the performance of a condition precedent, when such condition exists, of a conversion of property of the plaintiff, in trover, of knowledge in the defendant, in an action for mischief done by his dog, of malice, in an action for malicious prosecution, and the like, are all defects in substance. On the other hand, duplicity, a negative pregnant, argumentative pleading, a special plea, amounting to the general issue, omission of a day, when time is immaterial, of a place, in transitory actions, and the like, are only faults in form; Bacon, Abr. Pleas, etc. (N 5, 6); Comyns, Dig. Pleader (Q 7); 10 Co. 95 a; 2 Stra. 694; Gould, Pl. c. 9, § 18; 1 Bla. Com. 142.

At the same time that fastidious objections against trifling errors of form, arising from mere clerical mistakes, are not encouraged or sanctioned by the courts, it has been justly observed that "infinite mischief has been produced by the facility of the courts in overlooking matters of form; it encourages carelessness, and places ignorance too much upon a footing with knowledge amongst those who practise the drawing of pleadings;" 1 B. & P. 59; Comm. v. Emery, 2 Binn. (Pa.) 434.

FORMA. Form; the prescribed or established form or method of legal proceedings; applied to obsolete actions "which are frequently mere establishments, Forma et figura judicii," the form and shape of judicial action. 3 Bla. Com. 271.

FORMA PAUPERIS. See IN FORMA PAUPERIS.

FORMALITIES. Customary behavior, dress, or ceremony; ceremonial. Cent. Dict.

In England. Robes worn by the magistrates of a city or corporation, etc., on solemn occasions. Encyc. Lond.

FORMALITY. The conditions which must be observed in making contracts, and the words which the law gives to be used in order to render them valid; it also signifies the conditions which the law requires to make regular proceedings.

FORMATA. Canonical letters. Spelman.

FORMATA BREVIA. See BREVIA FORMATA.

FORMED ACTION. An action for which a form of words is provided which must be exactly followed. 10 Mod. 140.

FORMEDON. An ancient writ provided by stat. Westm. 2 (13 Edw. I.) c. 1, for him who hath right to lands or tenements by virtue of a gift in tail. Stearn, Real Act. 322; Andr. Steph. Pl. 66.

It is a writ in the nature of a writ of right, and is the highest remedy which a tenant in tail can have. Co. Litt. 316.

This writ lay for those interested in an estate-tail who were liable to be defeated of their right by a discontinuance of the estate-tail, who were not entitled to a writ of right absolute, since none but those who claimed in fee-simple were entitled to this; Fitzh. N. B. 255. It is called formedon because the plaintiff in it claimed per formam doni.

It is of three sorts: See the following titles. Abolished by stat. 3 & 4 Will. IV. c. 27.

FORMEDON IN DESCENDER. Lies where a gift is made in tail and the tenant in tail alienates the lands or is disseised of them and dies, for the heir in tail to recover them, against the actual tenant of the freehold; Fitzh. N. B. 211; Littleton § 595.

If the demandant claims the inheritance as an estate-tail which ought to come to him by descent, from some ancestor to whom it was first given, his remedy is by a writ of formedon in descender; Stearn, Real Act. 322. It must have been brought within twenty years from the death of the ancestor who was disseised; 21 Jac. I. c. 16; 3 Brod. & B. 217; 2 Sharsw. Bla. Com. 193, n.

FORMEDON IN THE REMAINDER. Lies where lands are given to one for life or in tail with remainder to another in fee or in tail, and he who had the particular estate dies without issue, and a stranger intrudes upon him in remainder and keeps him out of possession. Fitzh. N. B. 211; Littleton § 597; 3 Bla. Com. 293.

FORMEDON IN THE REVERTER. Lies where there is a gift in tail, and afterwards, by the death of the donee or his heirs without issue of his body, the reversion falls in upon the donor, his heirs or assigns.

In this case the demandant must suggest the gift, his own right as derived from the donor, and the failure of heirs of the donee; 3 Bla. Com. 293; Stearn, Real Act. 323; Fitzh. N. B. 212; Littleton § 597.

FORMER ACQUITTAL. See AUTREFOIS ACQUIT.

FORMER JEOPARDY. See JEOPARDY.

FORMER RECOVERY. A recovery in a former action. The term former adjudication is sometimes, though infrequently, used.

It is a general rule that in a real or personal action a judgment unreversed, whether it be by confession, verdict, or demurrer, is a perpetual bar, and may be pleaded to any new action of the same or a like nature, for the same cause; Bacon, Abr. Pleas (I 12, n. 2); 6 Co. 7; Hob. 4, 5.

There are two exceptions to this general rule. First, in the case of mutual dealings between the parties, when the defendant omits to set off his counter-demand, he may recover in a cross action. Second, when the defendant in ejectment neglects to bring forward his title, he may avail himself of a new suit; Le Guen v. Gouverneur, 1 Johns. Cas. (N. Y.) 402, 502, 510, 1 Am. Dec. 121. It is evident that in these cases the cause of the second action is not the same as that of the first, and, therefore, a former recovery cannot be pleaded. In real actions, one is not a bar to an action of a higher nature; 6 Co. 7. See Kent v. Kent, 2 Mass. 338; RES JUDICATA.

FORMER TRIAL. Testimony given on a former trial may be given in evidence from the judge's notes or from notes of any other person who will swear to their accuracy, or by any person who will swear to its having been given; 3 Taunt. 262, per Mansfield, C. J.; so of any witness who will swear from his memory to its having been given; Johnson v. Powers, 40 Vt. 611. A justice of the peace may testify as to evidence given before him on a former trial; McGeoch v. Carlson, 96 Wis. 138, 71 N. W. 116. To impeach a witness by showing that he testified differently at a former trial one who had heard him testify is competent; McRorie v. Monroe, 203 N. Y. 426, 96 N. E. 724, Ann. Cas. 1913B, 94. It is no objection that the legally appointed stenographer could give better evidence; State v. McDonald, 65 Me. 466. See DEPOSITIONS.

FORMIDO PERICULI (Lat.). Fear of danger. 1 Kent, Com. 23.

FORMS OF ACTION. This term comprehends the various classes of personal action at common law, viz.: trespass, case, trover, detinue, replevin, covenant, debt, assumpsit, scire facias, and revivor, as well as the nearly obsolete actions of account and annuity, and the modern action of mandamus. They are now abolished in England by the Judicature Acts of 1873 and 1875, and in many of the states of the United States, where a uniform course of proceeding under codes of procedure has taken their place. But the principles regulating the distinctions between the common-law actions are still found applicable even where the technical forms are abolished.

FORMULA. In common-law practice, a set form of words used in judicial proceedings. In the civil law, an action. Calvin; Black.

FORMULÆ. In Roman Law. Directions sent by the magistrate to the judge for the dispositions of cases, with respect to which the legis actiones (established actions, or, more accurately according to English legal idiom, forms of action) were inadequate. Sand. Just. Introd. lxxviii.

The introduction of the formulae marked a distinct change in the Roman system of civil process, and they were in turn succeeded by an equally radical change. These periods have been designated as three great epochs. First, was the system of the legis actiones, defined as "certain hard, sharply defined forms which a rude civilization prescribed for all proceedings." These, as civilization advanced, were necessarily replaced by more convenient forms of action, and were finally practically suppressed. The new system of formula was a very flexible form of organizing the proceedings adopted by the prætors, by which they were "enabled to give a means enforcing every right which the more enlarged views of an advancing civilization pronounced to be founded on equity." The prætors (in the provinces, præfects) sat as magistrates. From them the directions were sent to the judge in formal shape for each case; and the different forms in which these directions were given were expressed by the formula. They were binding on the judge, but no form was binding on the magistrate, who could avail himself "of any equitable doctrine, which a more refined jurisprudence or his own sense of what was right suggested to him," and so "vary the formula, so as to render substantial justice." "These formula (which were preserved and collected), so flexible in their general character, yet couched in terms always precise and simple, furnish one of many admirable instances of the power of the Romans to express correctly the subtlest legal ideas; and it was by this machinery that the prætors principally introduced their great legal changes."

The formula ordinarily consisted of these three parts:

The demonstratio or statement of the fact or facts which the plaintiff alleges as the ground of his case.

The intentio, the really important part of the formula, a precise statement of the demand which the plaintiff made against (tendebat in) his adversary. It was necessary that it should exactly meet the law which would govern the facts alleged by the plaintiff if true.

The condemnatio, the direction to condemn or absolve according to the true circumstances of the case. In three actions,—to divide a family inheritance, or property held in common, or settle boundaries, the judge was required to adjudicate. This was termed the adjudicatio. In these actions, therefore, the parts of the formula would be four—demonstratio, intentio, adjudicatio, and condemnatio, in case, as might happen, the judge should order a payment in money by some of the parties to equalize the division; the condemnatio, under this system, being always pecuniary.

This system finally gave place to that which prevailed in the third period of the Roman system, "that of the extraordinaria judicia, by which, under the later emperors, the supreme authority took the whole conduct of the proceeding into its own hands, and arrived at what seemed to it to be just, in as direct and speedy a manner as it found possible." See a clear and satisfactory statement of the Roman system of civil process during these three periods; Sand. Just. Introd. lxi. See also Mackeld. Rom. Law § 204.

FORMULARIES. A collection of the forms of proceedings among the Franks and other early European nations. Co. Litt. Butler's note, 77.

FORNAGIUM. The fee taken by a lord of his tenants bound to bake in his common oven, for liberty to use their own. Cowell; Moz. & W.

FORNICATION. Unlawful carnal knowledge by an unmarried person of another, whether the latter be married or unmarried.

Fornication is distinguished from adultery by the fact that the guilty person is not married. Four cases of unlawful intercourse may arise: where both parties are married; where the man only is married; where the woman only is married; where neither is married. In the first case such intercourse must be adultery; in the second case the crime is fornication only on the part of the woman, but adultery on the part of the man; in the third case it is adultery in the woman, and fornication (by statute in some states, adultery) in the man; in the last case it is fornication only in both parties.

It is criminal intercourse between unmarried persons; Territory v. Whitcomb, 1 Mont. 359, 25 Am. Rep. 740; Neil v. State, 117 Ga. 14, 43 S. E. 435; or it is held to be intercourse between a married or unmarried man and an unmarried woman; Hood v. State, 56 Ind. 263, 26 Am. Rep. 21.

Simple incontinence is not punishable at common law; Com. v. Jones, 2 Gratt. (Va.) 555; simple fornication, without issue born, is not an indictable offence; Smith v. Minor, 1 N. J. L. 16; State v. Rahl, 33 Tex. 76; in the District of Columbia; Pollard v. Lyon, 91 U. S. 225, 23 L. Ed. 308; merely getting an unmarried woman with child is not indictable; but living in notorious fornication is; Lumpkins v. Justice, 1 Ind. 557.

In some states it is indictable by statute; State v. Way, 6 Vt. 311; 2 Tayl. C. 165; Com. v. Jones, 2 Gratt. (Va.) 555; and where it is there may be a conviction for this offence on an indictment for adultery; State v. Cowell, 26 N. C. 231; 1 Bish. Crim. L. 795. In Pennsylvania it is a misdemeanor for which an indictment lies, and is also a constituent of incest, adultery, seduction under promise of marriage, and rape; Com. v. Arner, 149 Pa. 35, 24 Atl. 83.

FORNIX (Lat. a vault or arch). A brothel,—so-called because formerly situated in underground vaults. Fornication. Fornix et cætera. Fornication and the rest; fornication and bastardy (qq. v.).

FORO. In Spanish Law. The place where tribunals hear and determine causes,—exercendiarum litium locus. This word, according to Varo, is derived from ferendo, and is so called because all lawsuits have reference to things that are vendible, which presupposes the administration of justice to take place in the markets.

FORPRISE. An exception; reservation; excepted; reserved. Anciently, a term of frequent use in leases and conveyances. Cowell; Blount.

In another sense, the word is taken for any exaction. Cunningham, Law Dict.

FORSCHET. A strip of land lying next to the highway. Cowell.

FORSPEAKER. An attorney or advocate. One who speaks for another. Blount.

FORSTAL. An intercepting or stopping in the highway. See FORESTALL.

To be quit of amerancements and cattle arrested within your land.

See FORESTALLER; FORESTALL.

FORSWEAR. To swear to a falsehood.

This word has not the same meaning as perjury. It does not; ex vi termini, signify a false swearing before an officer or court having authority to administer an oath, on an issue. A man may be forsworn by making a false oath before an incompetent tribunal, as well as before a lawful court. Hence, to say that a man is forsworn will or will not be slander, as the circumstances show that the oath was or was not taken before a lawful authority; Heard, Lib. & S. §§ 16, 34; Cro. Car. 378; Bacon, Abr. Slander (B, 3); Cro. Eliz. 609; Fisher v. Chandler, 1 Johns. (N. Y.) 505; Niven v. Munn, 13 Johns. (N. Y.) 48; Chapman v. Smith, 13 Johns. (N. Y.) 80.

FORT. Something more than a mere military camp, post, or station; it implies a fortification or a place protected from attack by some such means as a moat, wall, or parapet. U. S. v. Tichenor, 12 Fed. 424.

FORTALICE, or FORTELACE. A fortress or place of strength which anciently did not pass without a special grant. 11 Hen. VII. c. 18. They were originally built for the defence of the country, either against foreign invasions, or civil commotions; and were anciently held to be inter regalia, corresponding with the Roman res publicæ, such as navigable rivers, ports, ferries, and the like, but they now pass with the lands in every charter; Ersk. Pr. 165.

FORTAXED. Wrongly or extortionately taxed.

FORTHCOMING BOND. A bond given for the security of the sheriff, conditioned to produce the property levied on when required; Downman v. Chinn, 2 Wash. (Va.) 189; Hill v. Manser, 11 Gratt. (Va.) 522; Clary v. Haines, 61 Ga. 520; Aycock v. Austin, 87 Ga. 566, 13 S. E. 582.

The measure of damages for breach of a forthcoming bond would be the value of the property at the time the bond was given, provided that value did not exceed the amount of the execution, debt, interest, and costs; Welchel v. Duckett, 91 Ga. 132, 16 S. E. 643. See BOND.

FORTHWITH. As soon as by reasonable exertion, confined to the object, it may be accomplished. (Approved in Dickerman v. Trust Co., 176 U. S. 193, 20 Sup. Ct. 311, 44 L. Ed. 423.) This is the import of the term; it varies, of course, with every particular case; 4 Tyrwh. 837; Edwards v. Ins. Co., 75 Pa. 378. See Scammon v. Ins. Co., 101 Ill. 621; 11 H. L. Cas. 337; Bennett v. Ins. Co., 67 N. Y. 274; Pennsylvania R. Co. v. Reichert, 58 Md. 261; Meriden Silver Plate Co. v. Flory, 44 Ohio St. 437, 7 N. E. 753. It is not as promptly as immediately; in some cases it might mean within a reasonable time; 7 Dowl. 789.

When a defendant is ordered to plead forthwith, he must plead within twenty-four hours; Wharton. In other matters of practice, the word has come to have the same meaning; 2 Edw. 328; Dickerman v. Trust Co., 176 U. S. 193, 20 Sup. Ct. 311, 44 L. Ed. 423. A demand for an account forthwith is not the same in substance and effect as a demand for an account within 15 days; Green v. Kelley, 64 Vt. 309, 24 Atl. 133. Where a verdict was returned between noon and one p. m. on Saturday, while the justice was hearing other cases, an entry of judgment on the verdict on Monday was sufficient under a statute requiring it to be rendered "forthwith"; Sorenson v. Swensen, 55 Minn. 58, 56 N. W. 350, 43 Am. St. Rep. 472. Where a chattel mortgage must "be forthwith deposited" to affect subsequent bona fide purchasers, the filing more than three months after execution was notice to purchasers who took title after the filing; Vickers v. Carnahan, 4 Tex. Civ. App. 305, 23 S. W. 338. A statute providing that an order to revive an action may be made forthwith, means at the first term after plaintiff's death; Horsley v. Asher's Heirs, 94 Ky. 314, 22 S. W. 434. When an insurance policy required notice of loss to be given forthwith, it was sufficient twelve days after the fire when no harm was caused by delay; Capitol Ins. Co. v. Wallace, 50 Kan. 453, 31 Pac. 1070.

FORTIA (Lat.). A word of art, signifying the furnishing a weapon of force to do the fact, and by force whereof the fact was committed, and he that furnished it was not present when the act was done. Co. 2d Inst. 182.

The general meaning of the word is an unlawful force. Spelman, Gloss.; Du Cange. Fortia frisca. Fresh force (q. v.).

FORTILITY. In Old English Law. A fortified place; a castle; a bulwark. Cowell; 11 Hen. VII. c. 18.

FORTIOR (Lat.). Stronger. A term applied in the law of evidence to that species of presumption, arising from facts shown in evidence, which is strong enough to shift the burden of proof to the opposite party. Burr. Circ. Ev. 64.

FORTIORI. See A FORTIORI.

FORTIS (Lat.). Strong. Fortis et sana, strong and sound; staunch and strong; as a vessel. Townsh. Pl. 227.

FORTUIT (Fr.). Accidental; casual; fortuitous. Cas fortuit, a fortuitous event. Fortuitment, accidentally; by chance.

FORTUITOUS. Depending on or happening by chance; casual; not designed; adventitious. In Civil Law. Resulting from unavoidable causes.

FORTUITOUS COLLISION. An accidental collision.

FORTUITOUS EVENT. In Civil Law. That which happens by a cause which cannot be resisted.

That which neither of the parties has occasioned or could prevent. Lois des Bât. pt. 2, c. 2. An unforeseen event which cannot be prevented. Dict. de Jurisp. Cas fortuit.

There is a difference between a fortuitous event, or inevitable accident, and irresistible force. By the former, commonly called the act of God, is meant any accident produced by physical causes which are irresistible; such as a loss by lightning or storms, by the perils of the seas, by inundations and earthquakes, or by sudden death or illness. By the latter is meant such an interposition of human agency as is, from its nature and power, absolutely uncontrollable. Of this nature are losses occasioned by the inroads of a hostile army, or by public enemies. Story, Bailm. § 25; Lois des Bât. pt. 2, c. 2, § 1.

Fortuitous events are fortunate or unfortunate. The accident of finding a treasure is a fortuitous event of the first class. Lois des Bât. pt. 2, c. 2, § 2.

Involuntary obligations may arise in consequence of fortuitous events. For example, when to save a vessel from shipwreck, it is necessary to throw goods overboard, the loss must be borne in common; there arises, in this case, between the owners of the vessel and of the goods remaining on board, an obligation to bear proportionately the loss which has been sustained. Lois des Bât. pt. 2, c. 2, § 2. See ACT OF GOD.

FORTUNA (Lat.). Fortune; also treasure-trove. Jac.; Moz. & W.

FORTUNE-TELLER. One who pretends to be able to reveal future events; one who pretends to the knowledge of futurity.

It was a practice during the Middle Ages, and is still far from dying out, though laws for its suppression have been passed; in England, Stat. 39 Eliz. Ch. 4; in Delaware, Code of 1852, amended 1893; see State v. Durham, 5 Pennewill, 105, 58 Atl. 1024.

FORTUNIUM. In Old English Law. A tournament or fighting with spears, and an appeal to fortune therein.

FORTY-DAYS-COURT. The court of attachments (q. v.) in the forests.

FORUM. At Common Law. A place. A place of jurisdiction. The place where a remedy is sought. Jurisdiction. A court of justice.

Forum actus. The forum of the place where an act was done.

Forum conscientie. The conscience.

Forum contentiosum. A court. 3 Bla. Com. 211.

Forum contractus. Place of making a contract. 2 Kent 463.

Forum domesticum. A domestic court. 1 W. Blackst. 82.

Forum domicilii. Place of domicil. 2 Kent 463.

Forum ecclesiasticum. An ecclesiastical court.

Forum ligeantie rei. The forum of the allegiance of the defendant.

Forum originis. The forum of birth.

Forum regium. The court of the king. Stat. Westm. 2, c. 43.

Forum rei. This expression is used alternatively for the forum of the defendant's domicil, in which case it is the genitive of reus, or the forum of the thing in controversy, when it is the genitive of res.

Forum rei gestæ. Place of transaction. 2 Kent 463.

Forum rei sitæ. The place where the thing is situated.

The tribunal which has authority to decide respecting something in dispute, located within its jurisdiction: therefore, if the matter in controversy is land or other immovable property, the judgment pronounced in the forum rei sitæ is held to be of universal obligation, as to all matters of right and title on which it professes to decide, in relation to such property. And the same principle applies to all other cases of proceedings in rem, where the subject is movable property, within the jurisdiction of the court pronouncing judgment. Story, Conf. Laws §§ 532, 545, 551, 591, 592; Kaines, Eq. b. 3, c. 8, § 4; 1 Greenl. Ev. § 541.

Forum seculare. A secular court.

In Roman Law. The paved open space in cities, particularly in Rome, where were held the solemn business assemblies of the people, the markets, the exchange (whence cedere foro, to retire from 'change, equivalent to "to become bankrupt"), and where the magistrates sat to transact the business of their office. It corresponded to the ἀγορά of the Greeks. Dion. Hal. l. 3, p. 200. It came afterwards to mean any place where causes were tried, locus exercendarum litium. Isidor. l. 18, Orig. A court of justice.

The obligation and the right of a person to have his case decided by a particular court.

It is often synonymous with that signification of judicium which corresponds to our word court, in the sense of jurisdiction: e. g., foro interdicere, l. 1, § 13, D. 1. 12; C. 9, § 4, D. 48, 19; fori prescriptio, l. 7, pr. D. 2, 8; l. 1, C. 3, 24; forum rei accusator sequitur, l. 5, pr. C. 3, 13. In this sense the forum of a person means both the obligation and the right of that person to have his cause decided by a particular court. 5 Glück, Pand. 237. What court should have cognizance of the cause depends, in general, upon the person of the defendant, or upon the person of some one connected with the defendant.

Jurisdictions depending upon the person of the defendant. By modern writers upon the Roman law, this sort of jurisdiction is distinguished as that of common right, forum commune, and that of special privilege, forum privilegiatum.

(A.) Forum commune. The jurisdiction of common right was either general, forum generale, or special, forum speciale.

(a.) Forum generale. General jurisdiction was of two kinds, the forum originis, which was that of the birthplace of the party, and the forum domicilii, that of his domicile. The forum originis was either commune or proprium. The former was that legal status which all free-born subjects of the empire, wherever residing, had at Rome when they were found there and had not the jus revocandi domum (i. e., the right of one absent from his domicile) of transferring to the forum domicilii a suit instituted against him in the place of his temporary sojourn. L. 2, §§ 3, 4, 5, D. 5, 1; l. 28, § 4, D. 4, 6; 3 Glück, Pand. 183. After the privilege of Roman citizenship was conferred by Caracalla upon all free-born subjects of the empire, the city of Rome was considered the common home of all, communis omnium patria, and every citizen, no matter where his domicile, could, unless protected by special privilege, be sued at Rome while there present. Noodt, Com. ad Dig. 5, 1 p. 153; Hofacker, Pr. Jur. Civ. § 4251. The forum originis proprium, or forum originis speciale, was the court of that place of which at the time of the party's birth his father was a citizen, though that might possibly be neither his own birthplace nor the actual domicile of his father. Except in particular places, as Delphi and Pontus, where the nativity of the mother conferred the privilege of citizenship upon her son, the birthplace of the father only was regarded. L. 1, § 2, D. 50, 1. The case of the nullius filius was also an exception. Such a person having no known father derived his forum originis from the birthplace of his mother. L. 9, D. 50, 1.

Adoption might confer a twofold citizenship, that of the natural and that of the adoptive father; l. 7, C. 8, 48; but the latter was lost by emancipation; L. 16, D. 50, 1. In general, the birthplace of the father alone fixed the forum originis of the son. Amaya, Com. ad Tit. Cod. de incolis, n. 21, seq. 99. The forum originis was unchangeable, and continued although the party had established his domicile in another place; consequently, he could always be sued in the courts of that jurisdiction whenever he was there present; 6 Glück, Pand. p. 260.

Forum domicilii. The place of the domicile exercised the greatest influence over the rights of the party. (See DOMICIL.) In general, one was subject to the laws and courts of his domicile alone, unless specially privileged. L. 29, D. 50, 1. This legal status, forum domicilii, was universal, in the sense that all suits of whatever nature, real or personal, petitory or possessory, might be instituted in the courts of the defendant's domicile even when the thing in dispute was not situated within the jurisdiction of such court, and the defendant was not present at such place at the commencement of the suit; 6 Glück, Pand. 287 et seq. It seems, however, that as regarded real actions the forum domicilii was concurrent with the forum rei sitae; id. 290, and, in general, was concurrent with special jurisdictions of all kinds; although in some exceptional cases the law conferred exclusive cognizance upon a special jurisdiction, forum speciale. In cases of concurrence the plaintiff had his election of the jurisdiction.

In another sense the forum domicilii was personal, as it did not necessarily descend to the heir of defendant. See Jurisdiction ex persona alterius, at the end of this article.

Forum speciale, particular jurisdiction. These were very numerous. The more important are: (1.) Forum continentie causarum. Sometimes two or more notions or disputed questions are so connected that they cannot advantageously be tried separately, although in strictness they belong to different jurisdictions. In such cases the modern civil law permits them to be determined in a single court, although such court would be incompetent in regard to a portion of them taken singly. This beneficial rule did not exist in the Roman law, though formerly supposed to be derived thence. See 11 Glück, Pand. § 750, and cases there cited. (2.) Forum contractus, the court having cognizance of the action on a contract. If the place of performance was ascertained by the contract, the court of that place had exclusive jurisdiction of actions founded thereon; 6 Glück, Pand. 296. If the place of performance was uncertain, the court of the place where the contract was made might have jurisdiction, provided the defendant at the time of the institution of the suit was either present at that place or had attachable property there. Id. 298.

(3.) Forum delicti, forum deprehensionis, is the jurisdiction of the person of a criminal, and may be the court of the place where the offence was committed, or that of the place where the criminal was arrested. The latter jurisdiction, forum deprehensionis, extended at most only to the preliminary examination of the person arrested; and even this was abolished by Justinian, Nov. lxxix. c. 1, cxxiv. c. 5, on the ground that the examination as well as the punishment should take place on the spot where the crime was committed; 6 Glück, Pand. § 517.

(4.) Forum rei sitae is the jurisdiction of the court of that place where is situated the thing which is the object of the action. Such court had jurisdiction over all actions affecting the possession of the thing, and over all petitory actions in rem against the possessor in that character, and all such actions in personam so far as they were brought for the recovery of the thing itself. But such court had not jurisdiction of purely personal actions. Id. § 519.

Forum arresti is a jurisdiction unknown to the Roman law, but of frequent occurrence in the modern civil law. It is that over persons or things detained by a judicial order, and corresponds in some degree to the attachment of our practice. Id. § 519.

Forum gestae administrationis, the jurisdiction over the accounts and administration of guardians, agents, and all persons appointed to manage the affairs of third parties. The court which appointed such administrator, or wherein the cause was pending in which such appointment was made, or within whose territorial limits the business of the administration was transacted, had exclusive jurisdiction over all suits arising out of his acts or brought for the purpose of compelling him to account, or brought by him to recover compensation for his outlays; L. 1, C. 3, 21; 6 Glück, Pand. § 521.

Privileged jurisdictions, forum privilegiatum. In general, the privileged jurisdiction of a person held the same rank as the forum domicilii, and, like that, did not supplant the particular jurisdictions above named save in certain exceptional cases. The privilege was general in its nature, and applied to all cases not specially excepted, but it only arose when the person possessing it was sued by another; for he could not assert it when he was the plaintiff, the rule being, actor sequitur forum rei, the plaintiff must resort to the jurisdiction of the defendant. It was in general limited to personal actions; all real actions brought against the defendant in the character of possessor or the thing in dispute followed the forum speciale. The privilege embraced the wife of the privileged person and his children so long as they were under his potestas. And lastly, when a forum privilegiatum purely personal conflicted with the forum speciale, the former must yield; 6 Glück, Pand. 339-341. To these rules some exceptions occur, which will be mentioned below.

Privileged persons were: 1. Personæ miserabiles, who were persons under the special protection of the law on account of some incapacity of age, sex, mind, or condition. These were entitled, whether as plaintiffs or defendants, to carry their causes directly before the emperor, and, passing over the inferior courts, to demand a hearing before his supreme tribunal, whenever they had valid grounds for doubting the impartiality or fearing the procrastination of the inferior courts, or for dreading the influence of a powerful adversary; 6 Glück, Pand. § 522. On the other hand, if their adversary, on any pretext whatever, had himself passed by the inferior courts and applied directly to the supreme tribunal, they were not bound to appear there if this would be disadvantageous to them, but in order to avoid the increase of costs and other inconveniences, might decline answering except before their forum domicilii. The personæ miserabiles thus privileged were minor orphans, widows, whether rich or poor, persons afflicted by chronic disease or other forms of illness (diuturno morbo fatigati et debiles), which included paralytics, epileptics, the deaf, the dumb, and the blind, etc., persons impoverished by calamity or otherwise distressed, and the poor when their adversary was rich and powerful, presertim cum alicujus potentiam perhorrescant. This privilege was, however, not available, when both parties were personæ miserabiles; when it had been waived either expressly or tacitly; when the party had become persona miserabilis since the institution of the action,—except always the case of reasonable suspicion in regard to the impartiality of the judge; when the party had become persona miserabilis through his own crime or fraud; when the cause was trivial, or belonged to the class of unconditionally privileged cases having an exclusive forum; and when the cause of action was a right acquired from a persona non miserabilis. 6 Glück, Pand. § 522.

Clerici, the clergy. The privilege of clerical persons to be impleaded only in the episcopal courts commenced under the Christian emperors. Justinian enlarged the jurisdiction of these courts, not only by giving them exclusive cognizance of affairs and offences purely ecclesiastical, but also by constituting them the ordinary primary courts for the trial of suits brought against the clergy even for temporal causes of action. Nov. 83, Nov. 123, cap. 8, 21, 22, 23. The causes of action cognizable in the forum ecclesiasticum were—1. causæ ecclesiasticæ mero tales, purely ecclesiastical, i. e., those pertaining to doctrine, church services, and ceremonies, and right to membership; those relating to the synodical assemblies and church discipline; those relating to offices and dignities and to the election, ordination, translation, and deposition of pastors and other office-bearers of the church, and especially those relating to the validity of marriages and to divorce; or, 2. causæ ecclesiasticæ mixtæ, mixed causes, i. e., disputes in regard to church lands, tithes, and other revenues, their management and disbursement, and legacies to pious uses, in regard to the boundaries of ecclesiastical jurisdictions, in regard to patronage and advowsons, in regard to burials and to consecrated places, as graveyards, convents, etc., and, lastly, in regard to offences against the canons of the church, as simony, etc. But the privilege here treated of was the personal privilege of the clergy when defendant in a suit to have the cause tried before the episcopal court: when plaintiff, the rule actor sequitur forum rei prevailed. All persons employed in the church service in an official capacity, even though not in holy orders, were thus privileged. But the privilege did not embrace real actions, nor personal actions brought to recover the possession of a thing: these must be instituted in the forum rei sitæ. The jurisdiction extended to all personal actions, criminal as well as civil; although in criminal actions the ecclesiastical courts had no authority to inflict corporal or capital punishment, being restricted to the canonical judgments of deprivation, degradation, excommunication, etc. 6 Glück, Pand. § 523.

Academici. In the modern civil law the officers and students of the universities are privileged to be sued before the university courts. This species of privilege was unknown to the Roman law. See 6 Glück, Pand. § 524.

Militæ. Soldiers had special military courts as well in civil as criminal cases. In civil matters, however, the forum militare had preference only over the courts of the place where the soldier defendant was stationed; as he did not forfeit his domicile by absence on military duty, he might always be sued for debt in the ordinary forum domicilii, provided he had left there a procurator to transact his business for him, or had property there which might be proceeded against. L. 3, C. 2, 51; l. 6, eodem; l. 4, C. 7, 53. Besides this, the privilege of the forum militare did not extend to such soldiers as carried on a trade or profession in addition to their military service and were sued in a case growing out of such trade, although in other respects they were subject to the military tribunal. L. 7, C. 3, 13. If after an action had been commenced the defendant became a soldier, the privilege did not attach, but the suit must be concluded before the court which had acquired jurisdiction of it. The forum militare had cognizance of personal actions only. Actions arising out of real rights could be instituted only in the forum rei sitæ. In the Roman law, ordinary crimes of soldiers were cognizable in the forum delicti. The modern civil law is otherwise. 6 Glück, Pand. 418, 421.

There are many classes of persons who are privileged in respect to jurisdiction under the modern civil law who were not so privileged by the Roman law. Such are officers of the court of the sovereign, including ministers of state and councillors, ambassadors, noblemen, etc. These do not require extended notice.

Jurisdiction ex persona alterius. A person might be entitled to be sued in a particular court on grounds depending upon the person of another. Such were—1. The Wife, who, if the marriage had been legally contracted, acquired the forum of her husband; l. 65, D. 5, 1; l. ult. D. 50, 1; l. 19, D. 2, 1; and retained it until her second marriage; l. 22, § 1, D. 50, 1; or change of domicile; § 93, Voet. Com. ad Pand. D. 5, 1. 2. Servants, who possessed the jurisdiction of their master as regarded the forum domicilii, and also the forum privilegiatum, so far at least as the privilege was that of the class to which such master belonged and was not purely personal, Glück, Pand. § 510 b. 3. The hæres, who in many cases retained the jurisdiction of his testator. When sued in the character of heir in respect to causes of action upon which suit had been commenced before the testator's death, he must submit to the forum which had acquired cognizance of the suit; Ll. 30, 34, D. 5, 1. When the cause of action accrued, but the action was not commenced, in the lifetime of the testator, the heir must submit to special jurisdictions to which the testator would have been subjected, as the forum contractus or gestæ administrationis, especially if personally present or possessing property within such jurisdiction; L. 19, D. 5, 1. But it is even now disputed whether in such case he was bound to submit to the general jurisdiction, forum domicilii, or the privileged jurisdiction, forum privilegiatum, of his testator; though the weight of the authorities is on the side of the negative; Glück, Pand. § 560 b. If the cause of action arose after the death of the testator, as in the case of the querela inofficiosi testamenti, of partition, of suits to recover a legacy or to enforce a testamentary trust, the heir must be pursued in his own jurisdiction, i. e., the forum domicilii or forum rei sitæ; 6 Glück, Pand. 252, and authorities there cited. And, a fortiori, if the action against the heir was not in that character, but merely in the capacity of possessor of the thing in dispute, the suit must be brought before the forum to which he was himself subject; id. p. 251.

FORUTH. A long slip of ground. Cowell.

FORWARDING MERCHANT. A person who receives and forwards goods, taking upon himself the expenses of transportation, for which he receives a compensation from the owners, but who has no concern in the vessels or wagons by which they are transported, and no interest in the freight.

Such a one is not deemed a common carrier, but a mere warehouseman or agent; Roberts v. Turner, 12 Johns. (N. Y.) 232, 7 Am. Dec. 311; Platt v. Hibbard, 7 Cow. (N. Y.) 497; see Christenson v. Exp. Co., 15 Minn. 270 (Gil. 208), 2 Am. Rep. 122; 2 Wheel. Abr. 142; nor is he an insurer; Hooper v. Wells, Fargo & Co., 27 Cal. 11, 85 Am. Dec. 211. He is required to use only ordinary diligence in sending the property by responsible persons; Northern R. Co. v. R. Co., 6 Allen (Mass.) 254; Stannard v. Prince, 64 N. Y. 300. See Story, Bailm. § 502; Brown v. Denison, 2 Wend. (N. Y.) 594; COMMON CARRIERS.

FOSSA (Lat.). In English Law. A ditch full of water, where formerly women who had committed a felony were drowned; the grave. Cowell. See FURCA ET FOSSA.

FOSSAGE, FOSSAGIUM. In Old English Law. A composition paid in lieu of the duty of cleaning out and repairing the moat surrounding a fortified town. A tax paid for that work.

FOSSATORUM OPERATIO (Lat.). The service of laboring done by the inhabitants and adjoining tenants, for repair and maintenance of the ditches round a city or town. A contribution in lieu of such work, called fossagium, was sometimes paid. Kennett; Cowell.

FOSSATUM. A canal; a moat; a place inclosed by a ditch; a trench.

FOSELUM. A small ditch. Cowell.

FOSSEWAY, or FOSSE. One of the four great roads of England built by the Romans; so called from the ditch on each side. Trevisa describes it thus: "The first and gretest of the foure weyes is called fosse, and stretches oute of the southe into the north, and begynneth from the corner of Cornewaile, and passeth forth by Devenshyre by Somersete, and forth besides Tetbury, upon Cotteswold, besides Coventre, unto Leyster, and so forth, by wylde pleynes towards Newerke, and endeth at Lincoln" (Polychron l. 1, c. xiv.). Wharton. Watling-Street is the best known of them, reaching from Dover to London and to Anglesey in Wales.

FOSTER-LAND. Land given for finding food for any person, as for monks in a monastery. Cowell.

FOSTER-LEAN (Sax.). A nuptial gift; the jointure for the maintenance of a wife. Toml.

FOSTERING. An ancient custom in Ireland, in which persons put away their children to fosterers. Fostering was held to be a stronger alliance than blood, and the foster children participated in the fortunes of their foster fathers. Hallam's Const. Hist. ch. 18; Moz. & W.

FOUND. A person is said to be found within a state when actually present therein, but as applied to a corporation it is necessary that it is doing business in such state through an officer or agent or by statutory authority in such manner as to render it liable then to suit and to constructive or substituted service of process. See Romaine v. Ins. Co., 55 Fed. 751; FOREIGN CORPORATION; SERVICE; NON EST INVENTUS.

FOUNDATION. The establishment of a charity. That upon which a charity is founded and by which it is supported.

This word, in the English law, is taken in two senses, fundatio incipiens, and fundatio perficiens. As to its political capacity, an act of incorporation is metaphorically called its foundation; but as to its dotation, the first gift of revenues is called the foundation. 10 Co. 23 a.

FOUNDER. One who endows an institution. One who makes a gift of revenues to a corporation. 10 Co. 33; 1 Bla. Com. 481.

In England, the king is said to be the founder of all civil corporations; and where there is an act of incorporation, he is called the general founder, and he who endows is called the perfcient founder. 1 Bla. Com. 481.

FOUNDERS' SHARES. In English Company Law. Shares issued to the founders of (or vendors to) a public company as a part of the consideration for the business, or concession, etc., taken over, and not forming a part of, the ordinary capital. As a rule, such shares only participate in profits after the payment of a fixed minimum dividend on paid-up capital. Encyc. Dict.

FOUNDEROSUS. Out of repair. Cro. Car. 366.

FOUNDLING. A new-born child abandoned by its parents, who are unknown.

The settlement of such a child is in the place where found. Foundling hospitals are charitable institutions which exist in many countries for the care of such children. In England they are regulated by stat. 13 Geo. II. c. 29.

FOUR (Fr.). An oven; kiln; bakehouse. Four banal (banal of a manner; common), an oven owned by the proprietor of the estate, to which the tenants were obliged to bring their bread for baking. Also the proprietary right to maintain such an oven.

FOUR CORNERS. The four corners of an instrument means that which is contained on the face of it (without any aid from the knowledge of the circumstances under which it was made). This is said to be within its four corners, because every deed is still supposed to be written on one entire skin, and so to have but four corners. Wharton.

FOUR SEAS. The seas surrounding England. These were divided into the Western, including the Scotch and Irish; The Northern, or North Sea; The Eastern, being the German Ocean; The Southern, being the British Channel. Selden, Mare Clausum, lib. 2, c. 1.

Within the four seas means within the jurisdiction of England; 4 Co. 125; Co. 2d Inst. 252. See LIMITATION.

FOURCHER (Fr. to fork), or FOURCH. In English Law. A method of delaying an action formerly practised by defendants.

When an action was brought against two, who, being jointly concerned, were not bound to answer till both appeared, and they agreed not to appear both in one day, and the appearance of one excused the other's default, who had a day given him to appear with the other: the defaulter, on the day appointed, appeared; but the first then made default: in this manner they forked each other, and practised this for delay. See Co. 2d Inst. 250; Booth, Real Act. 16; 3 Holdsw. Hist. E. L. 470, 512.

FOURTEENTH AMENDMENT. The Fourteenth Amendment of the constitution of the United States became a part of the organic law July 28, 1868, and its importance entitles it to special mention.

The resolution of congress proposing the amendment was adopted June 16, 1866, 14 St. L. 358. On July 20, 1868, Secretary Seward issued a proclamation reciting the ratification of the amendment by twenty-nine states, of which two had by legislative action attempted to withdraw such ratification (which attempted withdrawal was declared to be of doubtful and uncertain effect), and declaring the ratification of the amendment if the withdrawing resolutions were of no effect. 15 St. L. 706. On July 21, 1868, a concurrent resolution was adopted by congress, reciting the ratification by the twenty-nine states (making no mention of the efforts at withdrawal by two states, which were included in those enumerated) and declaring the amendment to be a part of the constitution and directing its promulgation as such. Accordingly, July 28, 1868, Secretary Seward issued a second proclamation, reciting the resolution of congress and the proceedings of the state legislatures in detail, with dates, and certifying the adoption of the amendment. 15 St. L. 708.

Scope of the Amendment. Summarizing the several sections of the amendment in order, the first is that of the most general application, and which has mainly engaged the attention of the courts. It creates or at least recognizes for the first time a citizenship of the United States, as distinct from that of the states (see CITIZEN); forbids the making or enforcement by any state of any law abridging the privileges and immunities of citizens of the United States (see PRIVILEGES AND IMMUNITIES); and secures all "persons" against any state action which is either dep-riuation of life, liberty, or property without due process of law or denial of the equal protection of the laws (see DUE PROCESS OF LAW; EQUAL PROTECTION OF THE LAWS; LIBERTY; PROPERTY; PERSON).

The last clause secures against state action one of the most comprehensive guaranties of the fundamental rights which, in the Vth Amendment as construed by the courts, was secured against action by the federal government.

The other sections are of special application and concern themselves with the results of the civil war.

Section 2 provides for the apportionment of representatives among the states according to population, with the proviso that if any state shall abridge the right to vote "except for participation in rebellion, or other crime," the basis of representation shall be reduced. The question of the bearing of this provision upon the constitutional or statutory qualifications of voters so designed as to discriminate in fact, though not in terms, against any particular class of voters, has not been judicially settled.

It has been decided that this section does not amend Art. II of the constitution, under which the state legislatures have exclusive power to prescribe the manner of appointing electors of president and vice president, and a state law providing for their election by districts is valid; McPherson v. Blacker, 146 U. S. 1, 13 Sup. Ct. 3, 36 L. Ed. 869, affirming 92 Mich. 377, 52 N. W. 469, 16 L. R. A. 475, 31 Am. St. Rep. 587.

Section 3 provides for the exclusion from certain federal and state offices of persons who, having taken the oath to support the constitution of the United States, had engaged in insurrection or rebellion, or given aid and comfort to the enemies thereof. This disability is made removable by congress by a two-thirds vote of each house. Whether the creation of this disability was a bar to other punishment was argued in the case of Jefferson Davis, Chase 1, Fed. Cas. No. 3,621a. The judges differed in opinion, the circuit justice, Chase, being of opinion that the provision of the XIVth Amendment did operate as a bar, and the district judge, Underwood, that it did not. The question was accordingly certified to the Supreme Court, but the matter was not considered there, the indictments having been dismissed after the general amnesty proclamation of December, 1868. So, as the report of the case, supra, concluded, "the certificate [of disagreement] rests among the records of the Supreme Court, undisturbed by a single motion for either a hearing or a dismissal." Id.

This provision is not self-executing; Griffin's Case, Chase 364, Fed. Cas. No. 5,815; Rothermel v. Meyerle, 136 Pa. 250, 20 Atl. 583, 9 L. R. A. 366; Com. v. Deinno, 20 Pa. Co. Ct. 371. The disability did not operate at once to vacate offices and render official acts void; In re Griffin, Chase 364, 25 Tex. Supp. 623, Fed. Cas. No. 5,815; but was intended to operate by legislation; id.; Powell v. Boon & Booth, 43 Ala. 469. It disqualified any person who held office under the Confederate government as a county attorney; In re Tate, 63 N. C. 308; or a sheriff; Worthy v. Barrett, 63 N. C. 199. The result of the early decision of Chief Justice Chase was the enactment of the legislation known as the enforcement acts. See CIVIL RIGHTS.

Section 4 provides for the validity of the public debt, including that incurred for pensions, and prohibits the assumption or payment by the United States or any state of "any debt or obligation incurred in aid of insurrection or rebellion or any claim for the loss or emancipation of any slave," all such debts or claims being expressly declared void.

A contract to pay in Confederate money is void as being payment of a debt in aid of rebellion; Smith v. Nelson, 34 Tex. 516; but one made in a state in insurrection, if not in aid of rebellion, is valid; Hale v. Wilkinson, 21 Grat. (Va.) 75. That a debt was incurred in violation of this provision, or on any consideration forbidden by the constitution of the United States, is not a matter of judicial notice, but must be pleaded and proved; Keith v. Clark, 97 U. S. 454, 24 L. Ed. 1071.

Section 5 gives power to congress to enforce the amendment by appropriate legislation.

General Principles of Construction. Though the language of the proclamations might suggest some questions respecting the validity of the ratification (Guthrie, XIVth Amdt. 1, note), that question was not afterwards seriously raised in cases before the supreme court involving its construction and it has been uniformly treated as duly incorporated into the constitution; Miller, Const. 655. The adoption of this amendment undoubtedly resulted in broadening the sphere of the federal government and greatly enlarging the jurisdiction of the federal courts. Guthrie, XIVth Amdt.; 1 Burgess, Pol. Sc. & Const. L. 225; 1 Hare, Am. Const. L. 747. Fortunately the supreme court entered upon the duty of defining its limitations and construing its provisions in a spirit of marked judicial impartiality.

The amendment was first authoritatively construed within five years after its adoption, in the Slaughter-House Cases, 16 Wall. 36, 21 L. Ed. 394; and a long line of subsequent cases have served to establish well-settled rules of decision which, although, in some cases, modifying expressions contained in the opinion in the first case, have not departed from its essential principles.

It was judicially recognized that the purpose of the amendment, together with the XIIIth and XVth, was to secure to the colored race in the South the benefit of the freedom accorded to them; Slaughter-House Cas- es, 16 Wall. (U. S.) 71, 21 L. Ed. 394; Cooley, Const. Lim. 498; in other words to establish the citizenship of the negro; Strauder v. West Virginia, 100 U. S. 303, 26 L. Ed. 664; Virginia v. Rives, 100 U. S. 313, 25 L. Ed. 667; Fraser v. State, 3 Tex. App. 263, 30 Am. Rep. 131. By force of it negroes born in the United States are entitled to vote and are protected by the act of May 31, 1870, R. S. § 2004; U. S. v. Canter, 2 Bond 389, Fed. Cas. No. 14,719.

Nevertheless, it was held that it did not follow that "no one else but the negro can share in this protection," but, "if other rights are assailed by the states which properly and necessarily fall within the protection of these articles, that protection will apply;" Slaughter-House Cases, 16 Wall. (U. S.) 36, 21 L. Ed. 394; In re Virginia, 100 U. S. 339, 25 L. Ed. 667; Holden v. Hardy, 169 U. S. 366, 382, 385, 18 Sup. Ct. 383, 42 L. Ed. 780; U. S. v. Wong Kim Ark, 169 U. S. 649, 676, 18 Sup. Ct. 456, 42 L. Ed. 890. It is a restriction on the states as distinguished from the restrictions on the federal government in the Vth Amendment; Virginia v. Rives, 100 U. S. 313, 25 L. Ed. 667; U. S. v. Stanley, 109 U. S. 3, 3 Sup. Ct. 18, 27 L. Ed. 835; Le Grand v. U. S., 12 Fed. 581; Santa Clara County v. R. Co., 18 Fed. 385. It is prohibitory on the states only, but the legislation authorized to be enacted by congress for enforcing it is not direct legislation on matters respecting which the states are prohibited from making or enforcing certain laws, or doing certain acts, but it is corrective legislation, such as may be necessary or proper for counteracting and reducing the effect of such laws or acts; U. S. v. Stanley, 109 U. S. 3, 3 Sup. Ct. 18, 27 L. Ed. 835; see also Logan v. U. S., 144 U. S. 263, 12 Sup. Ct. 617, 36 L. Ed. 429. In these cases, known as the Civil Rights Cases, sections 1 and 2 of the Civil Rights Act, intended to secure to all persons equal facilities, etc., in inns, public conveyances, theatres, etc., and prescribing penalties for violations, were declared unconstitutional, as direct legislation; id. The XIVth and XVth Amendments operate solely on state action and not on individual action; Hodges v. U. S., 203 U. S. 1, 27 Sup. Ct. 6, 51 L. Ed. 65. But indictments were sustained against state officers or persons charged with a duty in the selection of jurors, under section 4 of the act, providing that no person, otherwise qualified, shall be disqualified by race, color, etc.; In re Virginia, 100 U. S. 339, 25 L. Ed. 667. If, however, the states do not conform their legislation to the amendment congress has authority to enforce it by appropriate legislation; U. S. v. Harris, 106 U. S. 629, 1 Sup. Ct. 601, 27 L. Ed. 290.

The amendment "adds nothing to the rights of one person as against another. It simply furnishes an additional guaranty against any encroachment by the states, upon the fundamental rights which belong to every citizen as a member of society." This principle controls both clauses, being applied to that securing due process of law and repeated with respect to equal protection of the laws; U. S. v. Cruikshank, 92 U. S. 542, 554, 23 L. Ed. 588. The United States has not conferred the right of suffrage on any one; id.; Minor v. Happersett, 21 Wall. (U. S.) 162, 178, 22 L. Ed. 627. The duty of protecting all citizens in the enjoyment of the fundamental rights mentioned in the amendment "was originally assumed by the states; and it still remains there. It does not add to the privileges and immunities of citizens, but only protects those which they already have; Minor v. Happersett, 21 Wall. (U. S.) 162, 22 L. Ed. 627.

The power of congress to protect rights secured by the XIVth Amendment may be grouped in three classes: (1) Denial by state legislation, or hostile acts of state officers, of rights secured by the amendment; (2) congressional interference, regardless of fault on the part of the state, by plenary legislation creating direct rights within the state, to protect a right which is only an immunity to be exempt from invidious discrimination at the hands of the state, and which can never bring any right into being, or authorize any action of congress, unless the state first makes such wrongful discrimination; (3) legislation by congress which confused rights dependent upon the constitution or laws with rights secured only by state laws, entwining them without distinction in the grasp of a statute whose provisions were incapable of separation, thus vitiating the enactment because broader than the power conferred; U. S. v. Powell, 151 Fed. 649.

The "amendment did not radically change the whole theory of the relations of the state and federal governments to each other, and of both governments to the people. The same person may be at the same time a citizen of the United States and a citizen of a state. Protection to life, liberty and property rests primarily with the states and the amendment furnishes an additional guaranty against any encroachment by the states upon those fundamental rights which belong to citizenship, and which the state governments were created to secure;" In re Kemmler, 136 U. S. 436, 10 Sup. Ct. 930, 34 L. Ed. 519, citing U. S. v. Cruikshank, 92 U. S. 542, 23 L. Ed. 588, and Slaughter-House Cases, 16 Wall. (U. S.) 36, 21 L. Ed. 394.

The only obligation resting on the United States is to see that the states do not deny the right. This the amendment guarantees, but no more; U. S. v. Cruikshank, 92 U. S. 542, 555, 23 L. Ed. 588; Arrowsmith v. Harmoning, 118 U. S. 194, 6 Sup. Ct. 1023, 30 L. Ed. 243; In re Converse, 137 U. S. 624, 11 Sup. Ct. 191, 34 L. Ed. 796; Morley v. Ry. Co., 146 U. S. 162, 13 Sup. Ct. 54, 36 L. Ed. 925; McNulty v. California, 149 U. S. 645, 13 Sup. Ct. 959, 37 L. Ed. 882; Marchant v.

R. Co., 153 U. S. 380, 14 Sup. Ct. 894, 38 L. Ed. 751. The continuous and systematic administration of a state law or municipal ordinance which so operates as to violate the amendment will be corrected. Neal v. Delaware, 103 U. S. 370, 26 L. Ed. 567; Arrowsmith v. Harmoning, 118 U. S. 194, 6 Sup. Ct. 1023, 30 L. Ed. 243; Yick Wo v. Hopkins, 118 U. S. 356, 6 Sup. Ct. 1064, 30 L. Ed. 220; Williams v. Mississippi, 170 U. S. 213, 18 Sup. Ct. 583, 42 L. Ed. 1012. It is applicable not only to the state but to all of its instrumentalities and agencies and to the executive and legislative bodies of its cities and counties; In re Virginia, 100 U. S. 339, 25 L. Ed. 667; Ho Ah Kow v. Nunan, 5 Sawy. 552, Fed. Cas. No. 6,546; In re Tiburcio Parrott, 6 Sawy. 349, 1 Fed. 481. It limits the exercise of all the powers of the state which can touch the individual or his property; County of San Mateo v. R. Co., 13 Fed. 722, 8 Sawy. 238; and applies in the case of a law of which the apparent purpose is to make extortion possible and which interferes with the power of congress to regulate intercourse with foreign nations; Chy Lung v. Freeman, 92 U. S. 275, 23 L. Ed. 550.

It was not the intention of the XIVth Amendment to subvert the general and special taxing systems of the states; it affords the same protection against arbitrary state legislation as is afforded by the Vth Amendment against legislation by congress; Detroit v. Parker, 181 U. S. 399, 21 Sup. Ct. 624, 45 L. Ed. 917; Tonawanda v. Tyon, 181 U. S. 389, 21 Sup. Ct. 609, 45 L. Ed. 908, where it was said that it was not intended to hold otherwise in Norwood v. Baker, 172 U. S. 269, 19 Sup. Ct. 187, 43 L. Ed. 443; see DUE PROCESS OF LAW. Its prohibitions were not intended to prevent the state from adjusting its system of taxation in all proper and reasonable ways, or from imposing different taxes on different trades, etc.; Armour Packing Co. v. Lacy, 200 U. S. 226, 26 Sup. Ct. 232, 50 L. Ed. 451, where it was held that a license tax on a meat packing house doing both interstate and domestic business applied to the latter only and was not open to review. "It is important for this court to avoid extracting, from the very general language of the XIVth Amendment, a system of delusive exactness in order to destroy methods of taxation which were well known when that amendment was adopted and which it is safe to say that no one then supposed would be disturbed;" Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Pav. Co., 197 U. S. 430, 25 Sup. Ct. 466, 49 L. Ed. 819. Nor was it designed to compel the states to adopt an ironclad rule of equality to prevent classification for taxation; Michigan Cent. R. Co. v. Powers, 201 U. S. 245, 26 Sup. Ct. 459, 50 L. Ed. 744.

"Exact wisdom and nice adaptation of remedies are not required by the XIVth Amendment nor the crudeness nor the impolicy nor even the injustice of state laws redressed by

It." Heath & Milligan Mfg. Co. v. Worst, 207 U. S. 338, 28 Sup. Ct. 114, 52 L. Ed. 236. Its prohibitions are not confined to state action through the legislative, executive or judicial authority, but relate to all instrumentalities through which the state acts; Raymond v. Traction Co., 207 U. S. 20, 28 Sup. Ct. 7, 52 L. Ed. 78, 12 Ann. Cas. 757.

In an action properly instituted against a state officer, the XIVth Amendment is not a barrier to a judicial inquiry whether the XIVth Amendment has been disregarded by state enactments; the constitution and the amendments are one instrument; Prout v. Starr, 188 U. S. 537, 23 Sup. Ct. 398, 47 L. Ed. 584 (a bill for an injunction to test the validity of a Nebraska act regulating railroads and the defense was set up that it was in effect a suit against the state).

The constitutional guaranty of a republican form of government to each of the states, however, must be enforced by the political department of the government and cannot be availed of in connection with the XIVth Amendment to obtain a revision by the supreme court of the judgment of the highest court of the state in the case of a contested election of governor and lieutenant governor; Taylor v. Beckham, 178 U. S. 548, 20 Sup. Ct. 890, 1009, 44 L. Ed. 1187.

A state is not prohibited by the XIVth Amendment from prescribing the jurisdiction of the several courts, either as to their territorial limits, or the subject matter, amount, or penalties of their respective judgments; Missouri v. Lewis, 101 U. S. 22, 25 L. Ed. 989.

The mere fact that state legislation is unjust or will result in hardship is not necessarily fatal to it; Mobile County v. Kimball, 102 U. S. 691, 26 L. Ed. 238; Missouri P. Ry. Co. v. Humes, 115 U. S. 512, 520, 6 Sup. Ct. 110, 29 L. Ed. 463; New York & N. E. R. Co. v. Bristol, 151 U. S. 566, 570, 14 Sup. Ct. 437, 38 L. Ed. 269; nor will the federal courts determine the mere question of its expediency; Mobile County v. Kimball, 102 U. S. 691, 704, 26 L. Ed. 238. The sole question to be considered is that of power and not of wisdom; Ex parte McCardle, 7 Wall. (U. S.) 506, 514, 19 L. Ed. 264; Doyle v. Ins. Co., 94 U. S. 535, 541, 24 L. Ed. 148; Soon Hing v. Crowley, 113 U. S. 703, 710, 5 Sup. Ct. 730, 28 L. Ed. 1145; Missouri P. Ry. Co. v. Humes, 115 U. S. 512, 520, 6 Sup. Ct. 110, 29 L. Ed. 463; Mugler v. Kansas, 123 U. S. 623, 661, 8 Sup. Ct. 273, 31 L. Ed. 205; Maynard v. Hill, 125 U. S. 190, 204, 8 Sup. Ct. 723, 31 L. Ed. 654; Minnesota v. Barber, 136 U. S. 313, 319, 10 Sup. Ct. 862, 34 L. Ed. 455; Angle v. R. Co., 151 U. S. 1, 18, 14 Sup. Ct. 240, 38 L. Ed. 55.

As in the Slaughter-House Cases, a difference of opinion as to the scope of the amendment was emphasized by a division of the court into five and four; its purpose and scope was, in the later case of Barbier v. Connolly, declared by Mr. Justice Field, without dissent, in terms having no relation to the race question which had furnished the immediate occasion for its adoption. It was there said that the prohibitions upon state action in the last two clauses of section 1 were undoubtedly intended to prevent the "arbitrary deprivation of life or liberty or arbitrary spoliation of property"; to secure "equal protection and security" under like circumstances in the enjoyment of their personal and civil rights, "the right" to "pursue happiness and acquire and enjoy property," like access to the courts "for protection of persons and property, the prevention and redress of wrongs, and the enforcement of contracts"; that all should be alike exempt from any special impediment to pursuits, or unusual burdens or different punishment. But neither this nor any other amendment was designed to interfere with the police power of the state "to prescribe regulations to promote the health, peace, morals, education and good order of the people, and to legislate so as to increase the industries of the state, develop its resources and add to its wealth and prosperity." Barbier v. Connolly, 113 U. S. 27, 31, 5 Sup. Ct. 357, 28 L. Ed. 923; Butchers' Union Slaughter-House & Live Stock Landing Co. v. Slaughter-House Co., 111 U. S. 746, 4 Sup. Ct. 652, 28 L. Ed. 585; Dobbins v. Los Angeles, 195 U. S. 223, 25 Sup. Ct. 18, 49 L. Ed. 169.

In construing the amendment the supreme court has generally refrained from attempting to define the scope of its various provisions except so far as required for the decision of the case in hand, and has adopted by preference the "gradual process of judicial inclusion and exclusion, as the cases presented for decision shall require, with the reasoning on which such decisions may be founded." Davidson v. New Orleans, 96 U. S. 104, 24 L. Ed. 616; Holden v. Hardy, 169 U. S. 366, 18 Sup. Ct. 383, 42 L. Ed. 780.

Though securing to the African race the rights of citizenship, it has been doubted whether this amendment adds to those the guaranties contained in the state constitutions any protection to individual rights. It does, however, by making a principle of state constitutional law a part of the United States constitution, make the United States supreme court the final arbiter of alleged violations of those rights; Cooley, Const. Lim. (4th ed.) 361. An accused person cannot of right demand a mixed jury, some of which shall be of his race, nor is a jury of that kind guaranteed by the XIVth Amendment to any race; Martin v. Texas, 200 U. S. 316, 26 Sup. Ct. 338, 50 L. Ed. 497. The guaranty of personal rights in the amendment is not confined to citizens, but secures them to every person within the jurisdiction of a state; Fraser v. McConway & Torley Co., 82 Fed. 257; Steed v. Harvey, 18 Utah 367, 54 Pac. 1011, 72 Am. St. Rep. 789.

FOUTGELD. See FOOTGELD.

FOWLS OF WARREN. Such fowls as are preserved under the game-laws in warrens. According to Manwood, these are partridges and pheasants. According to Coke, they are either campestres, as partridges, rails, and quails, sylvestres, as woodcocks and pheasants, or aquaticiles, as mallards and herons. Co. Litt. 233. See FREE WARREN.

FOX'S LIBEL ACT. An act passed in England in 1792, which provided that in prosecutions for libel, the jury might give a general verdict of guilty or not guilty upon the whole matter put at issue upon the indictment, and should not be required by the court to find the defendant guilty merely upon proof of the publication of the alleged libel, in the sense ascribed to it in the indictment.

FRACTION OF A DAY. A portion of a day. The dividing a day.

Generally, the law does not allow the fraction of a day, and the day on which an act is done must therefore be either entirely included or excluded; 2 Bla. Com. 141; Raym. 84; State v. Town of Winter Park, 25 Fla. 371, 5 South. 818; President, etc., Portland Bank v. Bank, 11 Mass. 204; Duffy v. Ogden, 64 Pa. 240; In re Welman, 20 Vt. 653, Fed. Cas. No. 17,407; and, therefore, judgments entered on the same day are regarded as entered at the same time, and create liens equal in point of priority; Rockhill v. Hanna, 4 McLean 555, Fed. Cas. No. 11,980; Mechanics' Bank v. Gorman, 8 W. & S. (Pa.) 304; but this is merely a legal fiction, which does not apply where it is necessary to distinguish between the two parts of a day; 3 Burr. 1344; 11 H. L. Cas. 411; and, therefore, it has been said that there is no such general rule of law, but that common sense and common justice sustain the propriety of considering fractions of a day whenever it will promote the purposes of substantial justice; First Nat. Bank v. Burkhardt, 100 U. S. 689, 25 L. Ed. 766; Grosvenor v. Magill, 37 Ill. 239; Tufts v. Carradine, 3 La. Ann. 430; thus, the bankrupt act of 1841 was repealed by the act of March 3, 1843, which was not signed by the president till the evening of that day; proceedings in bankruptcy begun on the morning of that day were held to have been begun before the passage of the act; Louisville v. Bank, 104 U. S. 475, 26 L. Ed. 775, citing with approval In re Richardson, 2 Sto. 571, Fed. Cas. No. 11,777; tobacco stamped, sold, and removed in the morning of March 3, 1875, was not considered subject to an increased tax-rate imposed by the act of that date, which was not signed by the president until a later hour of that day; Burgess v. Salmon, 97 U. S. 381, 24 L. Ed. 1104, approved in Louisville v. Bank, 104 U. S. 477, 26 L. Ed. 775; where a township voted aid bonds on the morning of an election day in Illinois, at which a constitutional provision was adopted forbidding the issuing of such bonds, the court found as a fact that the township vote was had before the adoption of the constitution, and, therefore, sustained the validity of the bonds; Louisville v. Bank, 104 U. S. 469, 26 L. Ed. 775. But it was held in Re Welman, Fed. Cas. No. 17,407; Wood v. Fort, 42 Ala. 641; that an act is in force all of the day in which it was approved; and in New York that an act is not in force until the day after its approval; In re Foley, 8 Misc. 57, 28 N. Y. Supp. 608.

Although the law does not generally consider fractions of a day, yet when substantial justice requires it, courts may ascertain the precise time when a statute is approved or an act done; Taylor v. Brown, 147 U. S. 640, 13 Sup. Ct. 549, 37 L. Ed. 313. In U. S. v. Norton, 97 U. S. 170, 24 L. Ed. 907, following Lapeyre v. U. S., 17 Wall. (U. S.) 191, 21 L. Ed. 606, the court held that the president's proclamation of June 13, 1865, removing restrictions upon trade, etc., took effect as of the beginning of that day and refused to consider the fraction of a day. In computing the time for the performance of official duties, each fraction of a day is to be considered as a full day.

The doctrine applies chiefly, if not entirely, to judicial and other public proceedings, and not to transactions of parties whose priority of right becomes a question of fact; Maynard v. Esher, 17 Pa. 222. Thus judgments entered on the same day have equality of lien; In re Boyers' Estate, 51 Pa. 432, 91 Am. Dec. 129; so of liens; Appeal of Hendrickson, 24 Pa. 363; but a mortgage recorded on the same day as the entry of a judgment, but earlier in the day, has priority; First Nat. Bank v. Burkhardt, 100 U. S. 689, 25 L. Ed. 766, citing Follett v. Hall, 16 Ohio 111, 47 Am. Dec. 365. Service of a declaration on the same day as filing, but earlier in the day, is good; Rusk v. Van Benschoten, 1 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 149. See FROM; AGE; TIME; DAY; INFANT; MAJORITY.

FRACTITIUM. Arable land. Toml.

FRACTURA NAVIUM. Breaking up of ships or wreck of shipping at sea. Very like naufraque (q. v.).

FRAIS DE JUSTICE. Costs incurred incidentally to the action. See 1 Troplong, 135, n. 122; 4 Low. C. 77. Frais d'un procès. Costs of a suit.

FRAIS JUSQU'À BORD (Fr.). In French Commercial Law. Expenses up to the time that goods are actually shipped on board of a vessel, including such items as packing, portorage, or cartage, commissions, etc. Bartels v. Redfield, 16 Fed. 336. A shipment on which the seller pays the frais jusqu'à bord, would correspond to a sale of the goods "free on board" (q. v.).

FRANC. A French coin, of the value of about twenty cents.

FRANC ALEU. In French Law. An absolutely free inheritance. Allodial lands.

Land freely and absolutely owned, not held. 2 Holdsw. Hist. E. L. 66; Vinogradoff, Engl. Soc. 236. It is said that, generally, the word denotes an inheritance free from seigniorial rights, though held subject to the sovereign. Dumoulin, Cout. de Par. § 1; Guyot, Rép. Univ.; 3 Kent 498, n.; 8 Low. C. 95.

FRANC TENANCIER. In French Law. A freeholder.

FRANCE. A republic of Europe. The National Assembly, February 17, 1871, declared itself the depository of sovereign power, and in August elected M. Thiers president. The law of February 25, 1875, with a second law voted soon after and a third on July 16, 1876, and with modifications voted in 1879 and 1884, forms the present constitution. The executive is a president who appoints the ministry. The legislative department is vested in a national assembly, composed of a senate, elected by an electoral college, tracing back to universal suffrage, for nine years, and a chamber of deputies, elected by universal suffrage for a term of four years. The president is elected for seven years by the senate and chamber of deputies. He initiates legislation concurrently with the two houses and makes all civil and military appointments. All his acts must be countersigned by a minister, and he cannot declare war without the previous consent of the two chambers. With the consent of the senate he may dissolve the chamber of deputies, but in such an event there must be a new election held within three months. The ministry is chiefly chosen from the two chambers. They can sit in both chambers and address them, but cannot vote unless they are members of the house. See Poincaré, How France is Governed; COURTS OF FRANCE.

FRANCHILANUS. A freeman. Chart. Hen. IV. A free tenant. Spel. Gloss.

FRANCHISE. A special privilege conferred by government on individuals, and which does not belong to the citizens of the country generally by common right. Ang. & A. Corp. § 4; Abbott v. Refining Co., 4 Neb. 416, 420.

A certain privilege conferred by grant from government and vested in individuals. 3 Kent 458.

A royal privilege or branch of the king's prerogative subsisting in the hands of a subject. Finch i. 164; 2 Bla. Com. 37; 3 Cruise, Dig. 278; Bank of Augusta v. Earle, 13 Pet. (U. S.) 595, 10 L. Ed. 274; State v. Coal Co., 36 W. Va. 802, 15 S. E. 1000, 17 L. R. A. 385.

Maitland (Domesday and Beyond 43) finds in the history of early English tenures a universality of oppressive services which literally made life a burden to the average land-holder, considers the first use of the terms "liberty" and "franchise" to be an expression of the relief of the possessor from some part of this burden. He says: "Lastly in our thirteenth century we learn that privileges and exceptional immunities are 'liberties' and 'franchises.' What is our definition of a liberty, a franchise? A portion of royal power in the hands of a subject. In Henry III.'s day we do not say that the Earl of Chester is a freer man, more of a liber homo, than is the Earl of Gloucester, but we do say that he has more, greater, higher liberties."

The right or privilege of being a corporation, and of doing such things, and such things only, as are authorized by the corporation's charter. Fietsam v. Hay, 122 Ill. 293, 13 N. E. 501, 3 Am. St. Rep. 492.

"The word franchise is generally used to designate a right or privilege conferred by law. What is called 'the franchise of forming a corporation,' is really but an exemption from the general rule of the common law prohibiting the formation of corporations. The right of forming a corporation, and of acting in a corporate capacity under the general incorporation laws, can be called a franchise only in the sense in which the right of forming a limited partnership, or of executing a conveyance of land by deed is a franchise." Horton, C. J., in State v. Canal Co., 40 Kan. 96, 19 Pac. 349, 10 Am. St. Rep. 166.

It is a privilege emanating from the sovereign power of the state, owing its existence to a grant or, as at common law, to prescription, which presupposes a grant, and vested in individuals or a body politic something not belonging to the citizen of common right. Hazelton Boiler Co. v. Boiler Co., 137 Ill. 231, 28 N. E. 248.

Commenting on Blackstone's definition, Thompson says: "It has been well observed that, under our American systems of government and laws, this definition is not strictly correct; since our franchises spring from contracts between the sovereign power and private citizens, made upon a valuable consideration, for purposes of public benefit as well as of individual advantage." 4 Thomp. Corp. § 5335.

There are two franchises, distinct in their nature, and yet governed by substantially the same rules as to grant and exercise, which may be enjoyed by a corporation. One is the franchise of being or existing as a corporation, that is, possessing a unity and continuity of existence, though composed of an aggregate of changing members; the other is the exercise of rights, like the right of eminent domain or the partial appropriation of public property by exclusive use, as in ferries. Either of these franchises is a branch of sovereignty. 1 Bouv. Inst. 1690; Adams Exp. Co. v. Ohio State Auditor, 166 U. S. 185, 17 Sup. Ct. 604, 41 L. Ed. 965.

"Franchise" means the right of a corporation to exist as such, which right does not partake of the incidents of property, and it also means the right of an existing corporation to carry on a particular enterprise, which right is property; Blackrock Copper Min. & Mill. Co. v. Tingey, 34 Utah 369, 98

"Corporate franchises are legal estates vested in the corporation itself as soon as it is in esse. They are not mere naked powers granted to the corporation, but powers coupled with an interest which vest in the corporation, upon the possession of its franchise, and whatever may be thought of the corporators, it cannot be denied that the corporation itself has a legal interest in such franchise." Society for Savings v. Coite, 6 Wall. (U. S.) 594, 606, 18 L. Ed. 897.

A franchise to be a corporation, however, is distinct from a franchise to maintain and operate a railway; the latter may be mortgaged, without the former, and pass to a purchaser at foreclosure sale; Memphis & L. R. Co. v. Commissioners, 112 U. S. 609, 5 Sup. Ct. 299, 28 L. Ed. 837.

The grant of letters patent for an invention is said to be a franchise; (1891) 2 Q. B. 263; and so is a charter of incorporation from the state; State v. Coal Co., 36 W. Va. 802, 15 S. E. 1000, 17 L. R. A. 385.

To be a franchise, the right possessed must be such as cannot be exercised without the express permission of the sovereign power—a privilege or immunity of a public nature which cannot be legally exercised without legislative grant; State v. Mfg. Co., 40 Minn. 213, 41 N. W. 1020, 3 L. R. A. 510; Dike v. State, 38 Minn. 366, 38 N. W. 95.

In a case already cited it is said that a franchise, or the right to be and act as an artificial body, is vested in the individuals who compose the corporation, and not in the corporation itself; Fletsam v. Hay, 122 Ill. 293, 13 N. E. 501, 3 Am. St. Rep. 492. "But this," it is said, "is an imperfect statement of the true conclusion,—which is, that a primary franchise, that is to say, the franchise of being a corporation, vests in the individuals who compose the corporation; while those secondary franchises which are rendible by the corporation, necessarily, and for that reason alone, must be deemed to vest in the corporation. However, judicial theory is so confused on the subject, that proceedings by information in the nature of a quo warranto, to vacate the franchises of corporations, are sometimes brought against the individuals who compose the corporation, and sometimes against the corporation itself." 4 Thomp. Corp. § 5337.

Franchises are only grantable by the sovereign power, and in the U. S. they are usually held by corporations created for the purpose, and can be held only under legislative grant; In re Fay, 15 Pick. (Mass.) 243; Chicago City Ry. Co. v. People, 73 Ill. 541; Bank of Augusta v. Earle, 13 Pet. (U. S.) 519, 10 L. Ed. 274; People v. Ins. Co., 15 Johns. (N. Y.) 358, 8 Am. Dec. 243; Spotswood v. Morris, 12 Idaho 360, 85 Pac. 1094, 6 L. R. A. (N. S.) 665; and may be accompanied with such conditions as its legislature may judge most befitting to its interest and policy; Home Ins. Co. v. New York, 134 U. S. 594, 10 Sup. Ct. 593, 33 L. Ed. 1025; Horn Silver Min. Co. v. New York, 143 U. S. 305, 12 Sup. Ct. 403, 36 L. Ed. 164.

Where a corporation is created with power to use the streets of a city, upon the consent of the city, and by ordinance such consent is granted, the grant is a license and not a franchise; City of Chicago v. Tel. Co., 230 Ill. 157, 82 N. E. 607, 13 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1084, 12 Ann. Cas. 109; so of a telephone company; Dakota Cent. Tel. Co. v. City of Huron, 165 Fed. 226.

A franchise to lay pipes and conduits or erect poles and supply the inhabitants of a city with artificial light is an incorporeal hereditament—is real estate in the nature of an easement, pertaining to the streets of a city in which it is exercisable. It is inseparably annexed to the soil and has a local situation only in the place where the right is actually exercised; Stockton Gas & Electric Co. v. San Joaquin County, 148 Cal. 313, 83 Pac. 54, 5 L. R. A. (N. S.) 174, 7 Ann. Cas. 511.

That franchises requiring for their enjoyment the use of corporeal property, such as railroad, canal, telegraph, gas, water, bridge and similar companies, constitute a property fixed and immovable in its character, like realty, is, in contemplation of law, real property—an easement appurtenant to the streets is held in People v. O'Brien, 111 N. Y. 46, 18 N. E. 692, 2 L. R. A. 255, 7 Am. St. Rep. 684; City of Chicago v. Baer, 41 Ill. 306; Stockton Gas & Electric Co. v. San Joaquin County, 148 Cal. 313, 83 Pac. 54, 5 L. R. A. (N. S.) 174, 7 Ann. Cas. 511.

The state is presumed to grant corporate franchises in the public interest, and to intend that they shall be exercised through the proper officers and agencies of the corporation, and does not contemplate that corporate powers will be delegated to others. Any conduct which destroys their functions, or maims or cripples their separate activity, by taking away the right to freely and independently exercise the functions of their franchise, is contrary to a sound public policy; McCutcheon v. Capsule Co., 71 Fed. 787, 19 C. C. A. 108, 31 L. R. A. 415.

Persons or corporations enjoying public franchises and engaged in a public employment owe a duty to the public; Gibbs v. Gas Co., 130 U. S. 396, 9 Sup. Ct. 553, 32 L. Ed. 979; or to individuals who, in compliance with established customs or rules, make demands upon them for the beneficial use of the privileges and advantages due to the public by reason of the aid so given by public authority; Coy v. Gas Co., 146 Ind. 655, 46 N. E. 17, 36 L. R. A. 535, where the failure of a natural gas company to supply gas to a consumer was held to be a tort as well as a breach of contract.

The grant of a franchise by the legislature is a contract and cannot be resumed by the state or its benefits impaired or diminished without the consent of the parties; Dartmouth College v. Woodward, 4 Wheat. (U. S.) 519, 4 L. Ed. 629; The Binghamton Bridge, 3 Wall. (U. S.) 51, 18 L. Ed. 137; 3 Kent Com. 458; it is within the protection of that clause of the United States constitution which forbids the states from impairing the obligation of contracts; Union Bank of Tennessee v. State, 9 Yerg. (Tenn.) 490; Oliver v. R. Co., 30 Ark. 128; St. Louis, I. M. & S. Ry. v. Loftin, id. 693; but this does not apply to mere personal privileges to members of a corporation, such as the exemption of a servant of such body from militia duty, or serving on juries, etc.; Neely v. State, 4 Lea (Tenn.) 316; such an exemption was held in this case unconstitutional; contra, Johnson v. State, 88 Ala. 176, 7 South. 253, where such an exemption was held part of the franchise granted to the corporation; and it may become a vested right which cannot be taken away by subsequent legislation; Ex parte Goodin, 67 Mo. 637 (overruling In re Powell, 5 Mo. App. 220). Franchises (of public service corporations) are property; Willcox v. Gas Co., 212 U. S. 19, 29 Sup. Ct. 192, 53 L. Ed. 382, 15 Ann. Cas. 1034. See IMPAIRING THE OBLIGATION OF CONTRACTS.

By the constitution or laws of many states, charters can only be granted subject to amendment or repeal. As to the power of the legislature in such cases, see Mayor, etc., of Worcester v. Norwich, 109 Mass. 103; Railroad Com'rs v. R. Co., 63 Me. 269, 18 Am. Rep. 208; Rodemacher v. R. Co., 41 Ia. 297, 20 Am. Rep. 592; Hamilton Gas Light Co. v. Hamilton, 146 U. S. 258, 13 Sup. Ct. 90, 36 L. Ed. 963; but municipal franchises are entirely under the control of the legislature; Cooley, Const. Lim. 336; Baltimore & S. R. Co. v. Nesbit, 10 How. (U. S.) 402, 13 L. Ed. 469; Munn v. Illinois, 94 U. S. 113, 24 L. Ed. 77; Georgia R. & Banking Co. v. Smith, 128 U. S. 174, 9 Sup. Ct. 47, 32 L. Ed. 377.

The grant of a franchise is construed strictly and in case of doubt most favorably to the public; Oregon R. & Nav. Co. v. R. Co., 130 U. S. 1, 9 Sup. Ct. 409, 32 L. Ed. 837; Talcott Mountain Turnpike Co. v. Marshall, 11 Conn. 185; Rockland Water Co. v. Water Co., 80 Me. 544, 15 Atl. 785, 1 L. R. A. 388; Bartram v. R. Co., 25 Cal. 283; East Line & R. R. Co. v. Cushing, 69 Tex. 306, 6 S. W. 834; Justices of Inferior Court of Pike County v. Plank-Road Co., 9 Ga. 475; Indianapolis Cable St. R. Co. v. R. Co., 127 Ind. 369, 24 N. E. 1054, 26 N. E. 893, 8 L. R. A. 539; and in the absence of doubt the obvious meaning of the words is to be followed; Citizens' St. R. Co. v. Jones, 34 Fed. 579; Birmingham & Pratt M. St. R. Co. v. St. Ry. Co., 79 Ala. 465, 58 Am. Rep. 615; such a grant is not held to be exclusive unless from its nature a presumption arises that it was so intended; Proprietors of Charles River Bridge v. Proprietors of Warren Bridge, 11 Pet. (U. S.) 420, 9 L. Ed. 773; Dyer v. Bridge Co., 2 Port. (Ala.) 296, 27 Am. Dec. 655; White River Turnpike Co. v. R. Co., 21 Vt. 590; Enfield Toll Bridge Co. v. R. Co., 17 Conn. 40, 42 Am. Dec. 716; id. 17 Conn. 454, 44 Am. Dec. 556; Mohawk Bridge Co. v. R. Co., 6 Paige (N. Y.) 554; nor is a proviso to be so interpreted as to defeat the grant; Whitaker v. Canal Co., 87 Pa. 34.

Franchises are held subject to the exercise of the right of eminent domain.

See EMINENT DOMAIN; FERRY.

They are also said to be liable for the debts of the owner; 2 Washb. R. P. 24; but it is the general rule that they cannot be levied upon and sold under execution without authority or statute; New Orleans, S. F. & L. R. R. Co. v. Delamore, 34 La. Ann. 1225; Arthur v. Bank, 9 Sm. & M. (Miss.) 394, 48 Am. Dec. 719; Baxter v. Turnpike Co., 10 Lea (Tenn.) 488; though it may be otherwise provided by statute; Philadelphia & B. C. R. Co. v. Company's Appeal, 70 Pa. 355. See McNeal Pipe & Foundry Co. v. Howland, 111 N. C. 615, 16 S. E. 857, 20 L. R. A. 743; Gregory v. Blanchard, 98 Cal. 311, 33 Pac. 199. See as to levy on franchises, 4 Am. & Eng. Corp. Cas. 138; 15 Am. Dec. 595, note.

As a general rule franchises cannot be sold or assigned without the consent of the legislature; Moraw. Priv. Corp. 930; Youngman v. R. Co., 65 Pa. 278; Randolph v. Larned, 27 N. J. Eq. 557; Chollette v. R. Co., 26 Neb. 159, 41 N. W. 1106, 4 L. R. A. 135. Legislative consent to the transfer is not alone sufficient. There must be a release from the obligations of the company to the public; Chollette v. R. Co., 26 Neb. 159, 41 N. W. 1106, 4 L. R. A. 135. The primary franchise to be a corporation, and such others as involve the performance of public duties are inalienable; Com. v. Smith, 10 Allen (Mass.) 448, 459, 87 Am. Dec. 672; Pierce v. Emery, 32 N. H. 484; Appeal of Stewart, 56 Pa. 413; State v. Coal Co., 46 Md. 1; Pearce v. R. Co., 21 How. (U. S.) 441, 16 L. Ed. 184; Pullan v. R. Co., 4 Biss. 35, Fed. Cas. Ed. 950.

The secondary franchises of a quasi-public corporation cannot be aliened without legislative authority; Central Transp. Co. v. Pullman's Car Co., 139 U. S. 24, 11 Sup. Ct. 478, 35 L. Ed. 55; 6 H. L. Cas. 113; Atlantic & P. Telegraph Co. v. Ry. Co., 1 Fed. 745, 1 McCrary 541; Central Branch U. P. R. Co. v. Telegraph Co., 3 Fed. 417; Western Union Telegraph Co. v. Ry. Co., 3 Fed. 423, 430. The same principles apply to a mortgage or lease of a franchise, see cases cited, and also, Black v. Canal Co., 24 N. J. Eq. 455; Middlesex R. Co. v. R. Co., 115

Mass. 347; Thomas v. R. Co., 101 U. S. 71, 25 L. Ed. 950. The power to sell includes the power to mortgage; Willamette Woolen Mfg. Co. v. Bank, 119 U. S. 191, 7 Sup. Ct. 137, 30 L. Ed. 384.

The franchises which pass by a judicial sale of a railroad and franchises are those which are essential to the operation of the corporation but do not include such special privileges as an exemption from taxation; Morgan v. Louisiana, 93 U. S. 217, 23 L. Ed. 860. A corporation having public duties cannot transfer a portion of them; Board of Com'rs of Tippecanoe Co. v. R. Co., 50 Ind. 85; but the attempt to divide the franchise only concerns the public and cannot be objected to by a rival company; Oakland R. Co. v. R. Co., 45 Cal. 365, 13 Am. Rep. 181. An irrigation company may make a valid conveyance of all its property and right of way; State v. Canal Co., 40 Kan. 96, 19 Pac. 349, 10 Am. St. Rep. 166; Martin v. Zellerbach, 38 Cal. 300, 99 Am. Dec. 365.

A state has power to tax the franchises of a corporation at a different rate from tangible property in the state, so far as the United States constitution is concerned; Coulter v. R. Co., 196 U. S. 599, 25 Sup. Ct. 342, 49 L. Ed. 615.

See, generally, as to the sale of franchises, 4 Thomp. Corp. ch. cxvi.; as to their constitutional protection see the IMPAIRING OF OBLIGATION OF CONTRACTS; as to their control and regulation by the state, see POLICE POWER; as to the regulation of tolls and charges, see RATES; and as to their taxation, see that title.

The remedy for a non-user or misuser of a franchise by a corporation duly created and organized is by quo warranto or scire facias, which titles see. A court of equity will not in such case interfere or declare the franchise to be forfeited; Attorney General v. Stevens, 1 N. J. Eq. 369, 22 Am. Dec. 526; Attorney General v. Utica Ins. Co., 2 Johns. Ch. (N. Y.) 371; but see 4 Thomp. Corp. § 4538. Where a franchise is asserted in a proceeding to claim a right under it, its existence may be denied by way of defence; Zanesville v. Gas-Light Co., 47 Ohio St. 1, 23 N. E. 55. But a franchise set up by a corporation in defence, if it is in de facto possession of it, cannot be disputed except by a person or corporation who in the proceeding claims a better title; Weaver-ville & Minersville Wagon Road Co. v. Trinity County, 64 Cal. 69, 28 Pac. 496. See also as to quo warranto for misuser, People v. R. Co., 15 Wend. (N. Y.) 113, 30 Am. Dec. 48; and as to compulsory exercise of franchises, Rushville v. Gas Co., 132 Ind. 575, 28 N. E. 853, 15 L. R. A. 321.

See FORFEITURE; DISSOLUTION; MANDAMUS.

In a popular sense, franchise is used synonymously with right or privilege; as, the elective franchise.

FRANCIGENA. Born in France. A designation formerly given to aliens in England.

FRANCUS. Free; a freeman; a Frank. Spel. Glos.

Francus bancus. Free bench (q. v.).

Francus homo. A freeman.

Francus plegius. Frank pledge (q. v.).

Francus tenens. A freeholder. See ESTATE OF FREEHOLD.

FRANK. In Old English Law. Free. Usually employed in compounds, as frank-bank, free bench (q. v.).

To send letters and other mail matter free of postage. See FRANKING PRIVILEGE.

FRANK-CHASE. A liberty or right of free chase. Cowell.

FRANK-FEE. Lands not held in ancient demesne. Called "lands pleadable at common law." Reg. Orig. 12, 14; Fitzh. N. B. 161; Termes de la Ley.

That which a man holds to himself and his heirs and not by such service as is required in ancient demesne, according to the custom of the manor. The opposite of copyhold. Cowell. A fine had in the king's court might convert demesne-lands into frank-fee; 2 Bla. Com. 368.

FRANK-FERME. Lands or tenements where the nature of the fee is changed by feoffment from knight's service to yearly service and whence no homage but such as is contained in the feoffment may be demanded. Britton, c. 66, n. 3; Cowell; 2 Bla. Com. 80.

FRANK-FOLD. The right of the lord to fold his tenant's sheep for manuring the land. Termes de la Ley; Cowell; Keilw. 198. See FOLDAGE.

FRANK-LAW. An obsolete expression signifying the rights and privileges of a citizen, and seeming to correspond to our term "civil rights."

FRANK-MARRIAGE. A species of estate-tail where the donee had married one of kin (as daughter or cousin) to the donor and held the estate subject to the implied condition that the estate was to descend to the issue of such marriage. On birth of issue, as in other cases of estate-tail before the statute De donis, the birth of issue was regarded as a condition performed, and the estate thereupon became alienable by the donee; 1 Cruise, Dig. 71; 1 Washb. R. P. 67.

The estate is said to be in frank-marriage because given in consideration of marriage and free from services for three generations of descendants; Blount; Cowell. See, also, 2 Bla. Com. 115; 1 Steph. Com. 232.

FRANK-PLEDGE. A pledge or surety for freemen. Termes de la Ley. Also called FRITHBORH.

The bond or pledge which the inhabitants of a tithing entered into for each one of their number that he should be forthcoming to answer every violation of law. Each boy, on reaching the age of fourteen, was obliged to find some such pledge, or be committed to prison: Blount; Cowell; 1 Bla. Com. 114. See VIEW OF FRANK PLEDGE; TITHING: VIII.

It was in force in Pennsylvania; Meyers, Immigr. of Quakers.

FRANK-TENEMENT. A freehold. See LIBERUM TENEMENTUM.

FRANKALMOIN, FRANKALMOIGNE. A species of ancient tenure, in England, whereby a religious corporation, aggregate or sole, holds its lands of the donor, in consideration of the religious services it performs. The tenant holds in "free alms." It came to mean a gift to a religious person or body. 3 Holdsw. Hist. E. L. 27.

The services rendered being divine, the tenants are not bound to take an oath of fealty to a superior lord. A tenant in frank-almoigne is not only exempt from all temporal service, but the lord of whom he holds is also bound to acquit him of every service and fruit of tenure which the lord paramount may demand of the land held by this tenure. The services to be performed are either spiritual, as prayers to God, or temporal, as the distribution of alms to the poor. Of this latter class is the office of the queen's almoner, which is usually bestowed upon the Archbishop of York, with the title of Lord High Almoner. The spiritual services which were due before the Reformation are described by Littleton § 135; since that time they have been regulated by the liturgy or Book of Common Prayer of the Church of England; Co. 2d Inst. 502; Co. Litt. 93, 494 a. Hargr. ed. note (b); 2 Bla. Com. 101.

After Edward I. this tenure became of diminishing importance, due to the statutes of mortmain and quia emptores; the former prevented indiscriminate gifts of land to the religious; the latter forbade subinfeudation. 3 Holdsw. Hist. E. L. 29.

In the United States religious corporations hold land by the same tenure as other corporations and persons; some states by statute limit the quantity which they may hold.

FRANKING PRIVILEGE. The privilege of sending certain matter through the public mails without payment therefor.

It was first claimed by the house of commons in 1660, and was confirmed by statute in 1764. On the establishment of the penny postage in 1840 it was abolished. See 1 Bla. Com. 323; 2 Steph. Com. 632.

It was formerly enjoyed by various officers of the federal government, including members of both houses of congress, theoretically for the public good.

By the act of January 31, 1873, the franking privilege was abolished from and after July 1, 1873, and the act of March 3, 1873, repealed all laws permitting the transmission by mail of any free matter whatever. The act of March 3, 1875, s. 5, permits members of congress to send free public documents and acts; a qualified exercise of the privilege has been extended to certain officials, where public convenience seemed to require it. By act of March 3, 1877, it is made lawful to transmit through the mail free of postage, any letters, packages, or other matters relating exclusively to the business of the United States, provided that every such letter or package bears over the words "Official Business," an endorsement showing the name of the department or bureau from whence transmitted. This provision was extended by act of March 3, 1879, to all officers of the government and made applicable to all official mail matter. By the act of January 12, 1895, members of congress are entitled to send through the mails free, under their frank, any mail matter to any government official or to any person, correspondence not exceeding one ounce in weight, upon official or departmental business. They may also frank the Congressional Record or any part thereof. U. S. R. S. 1 Supp. 70. By act of April 28, 1904, the vice president and members, members-elect, delegates and delegates-elect may send free any mail matter to any government official, or to any person correspondence not exceeding four ounces in weight, upon official or departmental business. By act of June 26, 1906, lending the privilege to any committee or organization is forbidden.

FRANKLEYN (spelled, also, Frankling and Franklin). A freeman; a freeholder; a gentleman; francus homo. Blount; Cowell.

FRASSETUM. A wood or wood ground where ash trees grow. Co. Litt. 4 b.

FRATER (Lat.). Brother.

Frater consanguineus. A brother born from the same father, though the mother may be different.

Frater nutricius. A bastard brother.

Frater uterinus. A brother who has the same mother but not the same father. Blount; 2 Bla. Com. 232.

Fratres conjurati. Sworn brothers or companions for the defence of their sovereign or for other purposes. Hoved. 445.

Fratres pyes. Certain friars who were accustomed to wear white and black garments. Walsingham 124. See BROTHER.

FRATERIA. A fraternity, brotherhood, or society of religious persons, who were mutually bound to pray for the good health and life, etc., of their living brethren, and the souls of those that were dead. Cowell.

FRATERNAL ASSOCIATIONS. See ASSOCIATIONS.

FRATERNIA. A fraternity or brotherhood.

FRATERNITY. A body of men associated for business, pleasure, or social intercourse, by some common tie, either natural, as of the like business, interest or character, or formal, as for religious or social purposes.

"Some people of a place united together, in respect of a mystery and business, into a company." 1 Salk. 193.

FRATRIAGE. A younger brother's inheritance.

FRATRICIDE. One who has killed a brother or sister; also the killing of a brother or sister. Black, L. Dict

FRAUD. An endeavor to alter rights, by deception touching motives, or by circumvention not touching motives. Bigelow, Fraud 5.

Fraud is sometimes used as a term synonymous with covin, collusion, and deceit, but improperly so. Covin is a secret contrivance between two or more persons to defraud and prejudice another of his rights. Collusion is an agreement between two or more persons to defraud another under the forms of law, or to accomplish an illegal purpose. Deceit is a fraudulent contrivance by words or acts to deceive a third person, who, relying thereupon, without carelessness or neglect of his own, sustains damages thereby. Co. Litt. 357 b; Bacon, Abr. Fraud.

Actual or positive fraud includes cases of the intentional and successful employment of any cunning, deception, or artifice, used to circumvent, cheat, or deceive another. 1 Story, Eq. Jur. § 186.

For instance, the misrepresentation by word or deed of material facts, by which one exercising reasonable discretion and confidence is misled to his injury, whether the misrepresentation was known to be false, or only not known to be true, or even if made altogether innocently; the suppression of material facts which one party is legally or equitably bound to disclose to another; all cases of unconscientious advantage in bargains obtained by imposition, circumvention, surprise, and undue influence over persons in general, and especially over those who are, by reason of age, infirmity, idiocy, lunacy, drunkenness, coverture, or other incapacity, unable to take due care of and protect their own rights and interests; bargains of such an unconscionable nature and of such gross inequality as naturally lead to the presumption of fraud, imposition, or undue influence, when the decree of the court can place the parties in statu quo; cases of surprise and sudden action, without due deliberation, of which one party takes advantage; cases of the fraudulent suppression or destruction of deeds and other instruments, in violation of, or injury to, the rights of others; fraudulent awards with intent to do injustice; fraudulent and illusory appointments and revocations under powers; fraudulent prevention of acts to be done for the benefit of others under false statements or false promises; frauds in relation to trusts of a secret or special nature; frauds in verdicts, judgments, decrees, and other judicial proceedings; frauds in the confusion of boundaries of estates and matters of partition and dower; frauds in the administration of charities; and frauds upon creditors and other persons standing upon a like equity, are cases of actual fraud. 1 Story, Eq. Jur. c. 6.

Legal or constructive fraud includes such contracts or acts as, though not originating in any actual evil design or contrivance to perpetrate a fraud, yet by their tendency to deceive or mislead others, or to violate private or public confidence, are prohibited by law.

Thus, for instance, contracts against some general public policy or fixed artificial policy of the law; cases arising from some peculiar confidential or fiduciary relation between the parties, where advantage is taken of that relation by the person in whom the trust or confidence is reposed, or by third persons; agreements and other acts of parties which operate virtually to delay, defraud, and deceive creditors; purchases of property, with full notice of the legal or equitable title of other persons to the same property (the purchaser becoming, by construction, particeps criminis with the fraudulent grantor); and voluntary conveyances of real estate, as affecting the title of subsequent purchasers; 1 Story, Eq. Jur. c. 7. See Bisph. Eq. 205.

According to the civilians, positive fraud consists in doing one's self, or causing another to do, such things as induce the opposite party into error, or retain him there. The intention to deceive, which is the characteristic of fraud, is here present. Fraud is also divided into that which has induced the contract, dolus dans causam contractui, and incidental or accidental fraud. The former is that which has been the cause or determining motive of the contract, that without which the party defrauded would not have contracted, when the artifices practised by one of the parties have been such that it is evident that without them the other would not have contracted. Incidental or accidental fraud is that by which a person, otherwise determined to contract, is deceived on some accessories or incidents of the contract,—for example, as to the quality of the object of the contract, or its price,—so that he has made a bad bargain. Accidental fraud does not, according to the civilians, avoid the contract, but simply subjects the party to damages. It is otherwise where the fraud has been the determining cause of the contract, qui causam dedit contractui: in that case the contract is void. Toullier, Dr. Civ. Fr. liv. 3, t. 3, c. 2, n. § 5, n. 86, et seq.

What constitutes fraud. 1. It must be such an appropriation as is not permitted by law. 2. It must be with knowledge that the property is another's, and with design to deprive him of it. 3. It is not in itself a crime, for want of a criminal intent; though it may become such in cases provided by law. See Poll. Contr. 534.

Fraud, in its ordinary application to cases of contracts, includes any trick or artifice employed by one person to induce another to fall into or to detain him in an error, so that he may make an agreement contrary to his interest; and it may consist in misrepresenting or concealing material facts, and may be effected by words or by actions.

Where a party intentionally or by design misrepresents a material fact or produces a false impression, in order to mislead another, or to obtain an undue advantage of him, there is a positive fraud in the fullest sense of the term; Barnard v. Iron Co., 85 Tenn. 139, 2 S. W. 21. It must relate to facts then existing or which had previously existed; Adams v. Schiffer, 11 Colo. 15, 17 Pac. 21, 7 Am. St. Rep. 202; Gray v. Mfg. Co., 127 Ill. 187, 19 N. E. 874. If a person take upon himself to state as true that of which he is wholly ignorant, he will, if it be false, incur the same legal responsibility as if he had made the statements with knowledge of its falsity; Hexter v. Bast, 125 Pa. 52, 17 Atl. 252, 11 Am. St. Rep. 874; Chatham Furnace Co. v. Moffatt, 147 Mass. 403, 18 N. E. 168, 9 Am. St. Rep. 727; Wells v. McGeoch, 71 Wis. 196, 35 N. W. 769; Middleton v. Jerdee, 73 Wis. 39, 42 N. W. 629; Mooney v. Davis, 75 Mich. 188, 42 N. W. 802, 13 Am. St. Rep. 425; Swayne v. Waldo, 73 Ia. 749, 33 N. W. 78, 5 Am. St. Rep. 712.

While on the one hand, the courts have aimed to repress the practice of fraud, on the other, they have required that before relieving a party from a contract on the ground of fraud, it should be made to appear that on entering into such contract he exercised a due degree of caution. Vigilantibus, non dormientibus, subveniunt leges. A misrepresentation as to a fact the truth or falsehood of which the other party has an opportunity of ascertaining, or the concealment of a matter which a person of ordinary sense, vigilance, or skill might discover, does not in law constitute fraud. See Andrus v. Smelting Co., 130 U. S. 648, 9 Sup. Ct. 645, 32 L. Ed. 1054. The party must not be indolent; 49 Ind. 427. Misrepresentation as to the legal effect of an agreement does not avoid it as against a party whom such misrepresentation has induced to enter into it,—every man being presumed to know the legal effect of an instrument which he signs or of an act which he performs; Ans. Contr. 154. But see Labbe v. Corbett, 69 Tex. 503, 6 S. W. 808. See MISREPRESENTATION.

An intention to violate entertained at the time of entering into a contract, but not afterward carried into effect, does not vitiate the contract; per Tindal, C. J., 2 Scott 588; 4 B. & C. 506; per Parke, B., 4 M. & W. 115, 122; but making a promise as an inducement to a contract, with no intention of performing it, constitutes a fraud for which the contract may be rescinded; Lawrence v. Gayetty, 78 Cal. 126, 20 Pac. 382, 12 Am. St. Rep. 29; Albitz v. Ry. Co., 40 Minn. 476, 42 N. W. 394; Mutual Reserve Life Ins. Co. v. Seidel, 52 Tex. Civ. App. 278, 113 S. W. 945; Pollard v. McKenney, 69 Neb. 742, 96 N. W. 679, 101 N. W. 9; but see Murray v. Smith, 42 Ill. App. 548. When one person misrepresents or conceals a material fact which is peculiarly within his own knowledge, or, if it is also within the reach of the other party, as a device to induce him to refrain from inquiry, and it is shown that the concealment or other deception was practised with respect to the particular transaction, such transaction will be void on the ground of fraud; 6 Cl. & F. 232; per Tindal, C. J., 3 M. & G. 446, 450. See Emmons v. Moore, 85 Ill. 304; Young v. Hughes, 32 N. J. Eq. 372; 12 Ves. 78. And even the concealment of a matter which may disable a party from performing the contract is a fraud; 9 B. & C. 387.

Misrepresentations must be fraudulently and intentionally made, or so recklessly as to be equivalent to fraud; Pittsburgh Life & Trust Co. v. Ins. Co., 148 Fed. 674, 78 C. C. A. 408; there must be moral turpitude or recklessness and carelessness; Furnas v. Friday, 102 Ind. 129, 1 N. E. 296. It is held that there must be an intent to deceive; Jolliffe v. Collins, 21 Mo. 338; Summers v. Ins. Co., 90 Mo. App. 691; but in Bishop v. Seal, 87 Mo. App. 256, it was held that actual intent is not a necessary element; and in Texas Cotton Products Co. v. Denny Bros. (Tex.) 78 S. W. 557, that intent is not a necessary element, if the misrepresentation was of a character calculated to deceive. In Michigan it is held that a misrepresentation, though made innocently and without intent to mislead, gives a right of action if the other party was misled; Holcomb v. Noble, 69 Mich. 396, 37 N. W. 497.

If the misrepresentation is made without knowledge of the transaction, but it is represented to be within the party's knowledge, it is a fraud; Upchurch v. Mizell, 50 Fla. 456, 40 South. 29; so if it was of a fact within the party's means of knowledge and he had, in fact, no knowledge; Hindman v. Bank, 112 Fed. 931, 50 C. C. A. 623, 57 L. R. A. 108. If there was no intent to deceive, and the party derived no benefit, he is not liable; Jalass v. Young, 3 Pa. Super. Ct. 422.

Equitable doctrine of fraud. It is sometimes inaccurately said that such and such transactions amount to fraud in equity, though not in law; according to the popular notion that the law allows or overlooks certain kinds of fraud which the more conscientious rules of equity condemn and punish. But, properly speaking, fraud in all its shapes is as odious in law as in equity. The difference is that, as the law courts are constituted, and as it has been found in centuries of experience that it is convenient they should be constituted, they cannot deal with fraud otherwise than to punish it by the infliction of damages. All those manifold varieties of fraud against which specific relief, of a preventive or remedial sort, is required for the purposes of substantial justice, are the subjects of equity and not of law jurisdiction.

What constitutes a case of fraud in the view of courts of equity, it would be difficult to specify. It is, indeed, part of the equity doctrine of fraud not to define it, not to lay down any rule as to the nature of it, lest the craft of men should find ways of committing fraud which might escape the limits of such a rule or definition. "The court very wisely hath never laid down any general rule beyond which it will not go, lest other means for avoiding the equity of the court should be found out." Per Hardwicke, C., in 3 Atk. 278. It includes all acts, omissions, or concealments which involve a breach of legal or equitable duty, trust or confidence justly reposed, and are injurious to another, or by which an undue and unconscientious advantage is taken of another. "It may be stated as a general rule that fraud consists in anything which is calculated to deceive, whether it be a single act or combination of circumstances, whether it be by suppression of the truth or suggestion of what is false; whether it be by direct falsehood, or by innuendo, by speech or by silence, by word of mouth or by a look or a gesture. Fraud of this kind may be defined to be any artifice by which a person is deceived to his disadvantage." Bisph. Eq. § 206.

It is said by Lord Hardwicke, 2 Ves. Ch. 155, that in equity fraud may be presumed from circumstances, but in law it must be proved. His meaning is, unquestionably, no more than this: that courts of equity will grant relief upon the ground of fraud established by a degree of presumptive evidence which courts of law would not deem sufficient proof for their purposes; that a higher degree, not a different kind, of proof may be required by courts of law to make out what they will act upon as fraud. Both tribunals accept presumptive or circumstantial proof, if of sufficient force. Circumstances of mere suspicion, leading to no certain results, will not, in either, be held sufficient to establish fraud.

The equity doctrine of fraud extends, for certain purposes, to the violation of that class of so-called imperfect obligations which are binding on conscience, but which human laws do not and cannot ordinarily undertake to enforce: as in a large variety of cases of contracts which courts of equity do not set aside, but at the same time refuse to lend their aid to enforce; 2 Kent 39; Parker v. Grant, 1 Johns. Ch. (N. Y.) 630; 1 Ball & B. 250. The proposition that "fraud must be proved and not assumed," is to be understood as affirming that a contract, honest and lawful on its face, must be treated as such until it is shown to be otherwise by evidence, either positive or circumstantial. Fraud may be inferred from facts calculated to establish it; per Black, C. J., in Kaine v. Weigley, 22 Pa. 179; Jones v. Lewis, 148

Pa. 234, 23 Atl. 985; Walker v. Collins, 59 Fed. 70, 8 C. C. A. 1.

The following classification of frauds as a head of equity jurisdiction is given by Lord Hardwicke in Chesterfield v. Janssen, 2 Ves. Ch. 125; 1 Atk. 301; 1 Lead. Cas. Eq. 428.

1. Fraud, or dolus malus, may be actual, arising from facts and circumstances of imposition. 2. It may be apparent from the intrinsic nature and subject of the bargain itself, such as no man in his senses and not under delusion would make, on the one hand, and no honest or fair man would accept, on the other. 3. It may be inferred from the circumstances and condition of the parties: for it is as much against conscience to take advantage of a man's weakness or necessity as of his ignorance. 4. It may be collected from the nature and circumstances of the transaction, as being an imposition on third persons.

Effect of. Fraud, both at law and in equity, when sufficiently proved and ascertained, avoids a contract ab initio, whether the fraud be intended to operate against one of the contracting parties, or against third parties, or against the public; Ans. Contr. 162; 1 W. Blackst. 465; Dougl. 450; 3 Burr. 1909; 3 V. & B. 42; 1 Sch. & L. 209; see Feltz v. Walker, 49 Conn. 98; but the injured party may elect to allow the transaction to stand; L. R. 2 H. L. 246; Lindsley v. Ferguson, 49 N. Y. 626; Wood v. Goff's Curator, 7 Bush (Ky.) 63.

The fraud of an agent by a misrepresentation which is embodied in the contract to which his agency relates, avoids the contract. But the party committing the fraud cannot in any case himself avoid the contract on the ground of the fraud; Chitty, Contr. 590, and cases cited. The party injured may lose the right to avoid the contract by laches; Hathaway v. Noble, 55 N. H. 508. But no delay will constitute laches except that occurring after the discovery of the fraud; 11 Cl. & F. 714; Michoud v. Girod, 4 How. (U. S.) 561, 11 L. Ed. 1076; Humphreys v. Mattoon, 43 Ia. 556; Martin v. Martin, 35 Ala. 560; Kraus v. Thompson, 30 Minn. 64, 14 N. W. 266, 44 Am. Rep. 182. The injured party must repudiate the transaction in toto, if at all; he may not adopt it in part and repudiate it in part; Farmers' Bank v. Groves, 12 How. (U. S.) 51, 13 L. Ed. 889; 25 Beav. 594.

As to frauds in contracts and dealings the common law subjects the wrong-doer, in several instances, to an action on the case, such as actions for fraud and deceit in contracts on an express or implied warranty of title or soundness, etc. But fraud gives no action in any case without damage; 3 Term 56; and in matters of contract it is merely a defence; it cannot in any case constitute a new contract; 7 Ves. 211; Abbott v. Mackinley, 2 Miles (Pa.) 229. It is essentially ad hominem; 4 Term 337.

A person cannot recover for fraudulent representations where he did not rely upon them, but relied upon information from other sources and upon his own judgment; Craig v. Hamilton, 118 Ind. 565, 21 N. E. 315; White v. Smith, 39 Kan. 752, 18 Pac. 931; Lucas v. Crippen, 76 Ia. 507, 41 N. W. 205; Moses v. Katzenberger, 84 Ala. 95, 4 South. 237; Runge v. Brown, 23 Neb. 817, 37 N. W. 660; Farrar v. Churchill, 135 U. S. 609, 10 Sup. Ct. 771, 34 L. Ed. 246. Fraud must be clearly proved and it is proper so to instruct the jury; Jones v. Lewis, 148 Pa. 234, 23 Atl. 985. There is no error in charging that fraud is never presumed, and must be shown by satisfactory proof; Walker v. Collins, 59 Fed. 70, 8 C. C. A. 1.

A contracting party, who has been the victim of fraud, may either (1) apply to the court to have the contract cancelled, or (2) elect to confirm the contract and demand its completion or damages for non-completion, or (3) bring an action for damages for deceit, and this even after he has lost his right to avoid the transaction by delaying too long.

It is no defense to say that the plaintiff could have found out the truth; [1881] 20 Ch. D. 1; or that he was only partly induced by the falsehood; 1 L. R. 4 H. L. 79.

In Criminal Law. Without the express provision of any statute, all deceitful practices in defrauding or endeavoring to defraud another of his known right, by means of some artful device, contrary to the plain rules of common honesty, are condemned by the common law, and punishable according to the heinousness of the offence; Co. Litt. 3 b; Dy. 295; Hawk. Pl. Cr. c. 71.

In considering fraud in its criminal aspect, it is often difficult to determine whether facts in evidence constitute a fraud, or amount to a felony. It seems now to be agreed that if the property obtained, whether by means of a false token or a false pretence, be parted with absolutely by the owner, it is a fraud; but if the possession only be parted with, and that possession be obtained by fraud, it will be felony; Bacon, Abr. Fraud; 2 Leach 1066; 2 East, Pl. Cr. c. 673.

Of those gross frauds or cheats which, as being "levelled against the public justice of the kingdom," are punishable by indictment or information at the common law; 2 East, Pl. Cr. c. 18, § 4, p. 821; the following are examples: Uttering a fictitious bank bill; Com. v. Boynton, 2 Mass. 77; selling unwholesome provisions; 4 Bla. Com. 162; mala praxis of a physician; 1 Ld. Raym. 213; rendering false accounts, and other frauds, by persons in official situations; Rex v. Bembridge, cited 2 East 136; 5 Mod. 179; 2 Campb. 269; 3 Chitty, Cr. Law 666; fabrication of news tending to the public injury; Stark. Lib. 546; and per Scroggs, C. J., Rex v. Harris, Guildhall, 1680; cheats by means of false weights and measures; 2 East, Pl. Cr. c. 18, § 3, p. 820; and generally, the fraudulent obtaining the property of another by any deceitful or illegal practice or token (short of felony) which affects or may affect the public; 2 East, Pl. Cr. c. 18, § 2, p. 818; as with the common cases of obtaining property by false pretences. See DECEIT; MISREPRESENTATION.

FRAUD ORDER. A name given to orders issued by the post-master general, under R. S. §§ 3929, 4041, for preventing the use of the mails as an agency for conducting schemes for obtaining money or property by means of false or fraudulent pretences, etc. They are not restricted to schemes which lack all the elements of legitimate business, but the statute applies "when a business, even if otherwise legitimate, is systematically and designedly conducted upon the plan of inducing its patrons by means of false representations to part with their money in the belief that they are purchasing something different from, superior to, and worth more than, what is actually sold;" Harris v. Rosenberger, 145 Fed. 449, 16 C. C. A. 225, 13 L. R. A. (N. S.) 762.

The fraud order is issued to the post-master of the office through which the person affected by it receives his mail. It forbids the post-master to pay any postal money order to the specified person, and instructs the post-master to return all letters to the senders if practicable, or if not, to the dead letter office, stamped in either case with the word "fraudulent." The method of testing the validity of the fraud order is to apply to the federal court for an injunction to restrain the post-master from executing it. The decision of the postmaster-general is not the exercise of a judicial function; if he exceeds his jurisdiction, the party injured may have relief in equity; Dege v. Hitchcock, 229 U. S. 162, 33 Sup. Ct. 639, 57 L. Ed. —.

Fraud orders have been sustained in the case of persons claiming by advertisement to be distillers, but being in fact mere middlemen and falsely advertising whisky as of a certain age; Harris v. Rosenberger, 145 Fed. 449, 16 C. C. A. 225, 13 L. R. A. (N. S.) 762; in selling a medicine whose ingredients and curative properties were grossly misrepresented; Missouri Drug Co. v. Wyman, 129 Fed. 623; the advertisement of a sale of instructions and materials for making artificial flowers which falsely represented that steady employment would be given to the purchasers in making and selling the same; Fairfield Floral Co. v. Bradbury, 89 Fed. 393; but where the advertisement was that of a corporation assuming to heal disease through the influence of the mind, it was held that the effectiveness of such treatment was a mere matter of opinion and not within the statutes, which were intended to cover cases of fraud in fact only; American School of Magnetic Healing v. McAnnulty, 187 U. S. 94, 23 Sup. Ct. 33, 47 L. Ed. 90.

FRAUDARE. In Civil Law. To cheat; defraud; deceive.

FRAUDS, STATUTE OF. The name commonly given to the statute 29 Car. II. c. 3, entitled "An Act for the Prevention of Frauds and Perjuries."

Sections 1-3 provide that all interest in real estate created by livery of seisin only, or by parol, and not put in writing, and signed by the parties, or their agents authorized by writing, shall have the effect of leases or estates at will only, except leases not exceeding three years.

Section 4 provides that no action shall be brought to charge any executor or administrator upon any special promise to answer damages personally, or to charge the defendant upon any special promise to answer for the debt, default or miscarriages of another; or to charge any person upon any agreement made upon consideration of marriage; or upon any contract or sale of lands, or any interest therein or upon any agreement that is not to be performed within one year; unless the agreement or some memorandum or note thereof shall be in writing, signed by the party to be charged, or his agent.

Section 17 invalidates the sale of any goods, wares and merchandises for the price of ten pounds sterling or upwards, except the buyer shall accept part of the goods, and actually receive the same, or give something in earnest to bind the bargain or in part of payment, or that some note or memorandum in writing be made and signed by the parties to be charged or their agents.

These are the most important sections; other sections provide additional solemnities in cases of wills; new liabilities imposed in respect of real estate held in trust; the disposition of estates pur auter vie; the entry and effect of judgments and executions.

The statute introduced into the law a distinction between written parol and oral parol transactions, and rendered a writing necessary for the valid performance of the matters to which they relate. Those matters are the following: Conveyances, leases, and surrenders of interests in lands; declarations of trusts of interest in lands; special promises by executors or administrators to answer damages out of their own estate; special promises to answer for the debt, default, or miscarriage of another; agreements made upon consideration of marriage; contracts for the sale of lands, tenements, or hereditaments, or any interest in or concerning them; agreements not to be performed within the space of one year from the making thereof; contracts for the sale of goods, wares, and merchandise for the price of ten pounds sterling or upwards. All these matters must be, by the statute, put in writing, signed by the party to be charged, or his attorney.

As to the acceptance of bills of exchange, see ACCEPTANCE.

A sale by parol of standing timber to be immediately cut, is good; In re Benjamin, 140 Fed. 320; Robbins v. Farwell, 193 Pa. 37, 44 Atl. 260; but not if it would require three or four years to work it up; White v. Fitts, 102 Me. 240, 66 Atl. 533, 15 L. R. A. (N. S.) 313, 120 Am. St. Rep. 483. A note or memorandum of a sale of real estate is sufficient, though the party did not deliver, but retained it; Lowther v. Potter, 197 Fed. 196.

Where possession is relied upon as part performance, it must be notorious, exclusive, continuous, and in pursuance of the contract; Baldwin v. Baldwin, 73 Kan. 39, 84 Pac. 568, 4 L. R. A. (N. S.) 957. The statutory period commences with the date of the agreement and not from the time for commencement of performance; Chase v. Hinkley, 126 Wis. 75, 105 N. W. 230, 2 L. R. A. (N. S.) 738, 110 Am. St. Rep. 896, 5 Ann. Cas. 328. An oral agreement to pay back at the purchaser's option the money advanced on a sale of realty and assume the contract is void; Esslinger v. Pascoe, 129 Iowa, 86, 105 N. W. 362, 3 L. R. A. (N. S.) 147. Where the purchaser orally agrees to pay the owner's debts as part of the consideration, he cannot interpose the statute if the contract has been so far performed that he has received the property; Ackley v. Parmenter, 98 N. Y. 425, 50 Am. Rep. 693; Satterfield v. Kindley, 144 N. C. 455, 57 S. E. 145, 15 L. R. A. (N. S.) 399, 12 Ann. Cas. 1098. A contemporary promise of one person to pay where the benefit inures to another is a promise to answer for the default of another; when it appears that the credit is not given in the first instance wholly to the person who promises to pay for goods to be delivered to another, then the undertaking is collateral, but if the credit is given direct, then no writing is necessary; Harris v. Frank, 81 Cal. 280, 22 Pac. 856; Hardman v. Bradley, 85 Ill. 162; Johnson v. Bank, 60 W. Va. 320, 55 S. E. 394, 9 Ann. Cas. 893. As a general rule contracts required to be in writing cannot be modified by parol; Nonamaker v. Amos, 73 Ohio St. 163, 76 N. E. 949; 4 L. R. A. (N. S.) 980, 112 Am. St. Rep. 708, 4 Ann. Cas. 179; contra, Marsh v. Bellew, 45 Wis. 38; Stearns v. Hall, 9 Cush. (Mass.) 31. An authorization by one to another to purchase stock for him from a third person is not within the statute; Wiger v. Carr, 131 Wis. 584, 111 N. W. 637, 11 L. R. A. (N. S.) 650, 11 Ann. Cas. 998. A delivery and acceptance of any part of the goods or chattels subsequent to the oral agreement will take the case out of the statute.

A written and signed offer, which is accepted, either in writing or orally, constitutes a sufficient memorandum of contract under the statute of frauds; In re Pettingill & Co., 137 Fed. 143.

A parol submission of matters involving the title to real estate is invalid under the statute; Hewitt v. R. Co., 57 N. J. Eq. 511, 42 Atl. 325; Wilmington Water Power Co. v. Evans, 166 Ill. 548.

As to contracts of indemnity to a third person see INDEMNITY; 42 Am. St. Rep. 186, n.; as to contracts to be performed within a year see Warner v. R. Co., 164 U. S. 418, 17 Sup. Ct. 147, 41 L. Ed. 495.

In regard to contracts for the sale of goods, wares, and merchandise, the payment of earnest-money, or the acceptance and receipt of part of the goods, etc., dispenses with the written memorandum. See EARNEST; SALE.

The substance of the statute, as regards the provisions above referred to, has been re-enacted in almost all the states; and in many of them, other points coming within the same general policy, but not embodied in the original English statute, have been made the subject of more recent enactments: as, for instance, the requirement of writing to hold a party upon a representation as to the character, credit, etc., of a third person, which was provided in England by 9 Geo. IV. cap. 14, § 6, commonly called Lord Tenterden's Act. For the legislation of the different states see Browne, Statute of Frauds.

See LEASE; SURETY; PERFORMANCE; ACCEPTANCE; GOODS, WARES AND MERCHANDISE. Throop, Val. of Verb. Agr.; Reed; Wood; Browne, Stat. Frauds.

For the date and authorship of the statute, see 134 Law Times 511; 26 Harv. L. Rev. 329.

FRAUDULENT CONVEYANCE. A conveyance, the object, tendency, or effect of which is to defraud another, or the intent of which is to avoid some duty or debt due by or incumbent on the party making it. 2 Kent 440; 4 id. 462; and if fraudulent as to any provision therein, is void in toto as against creditors; Webb v. Ingham, 29 W. Va. 389, 1 S. E. 816.

Fraudulent conveyances received early attention; and the statutes of 13 Eliz. c. 5, and 27 Eliz. c. 4, made perpetual by 29 Eliz. c. 18, declared all conveyances made with intent to defraud creditors, etc., to be void. By a liberal construction, it has become the settled English law that a voluntary conveyance shall be deemed fraudulent against a subsequent purchaser even with notice; 9 East 59; 2 Bla. Com. 296; Roberts, Fraud. Conv. 2, 3; 17 Ad. & El. N. R. 723.

Voluntary conveyances are not so construed in the United States, however, where the subsequent purchaser has notice, especially if there be a good consideration; Wait, Fraud. Convey. 97; Beal v. Warren, 2 Gray (Mass.) 447.

These statutes have been generally adopted as the foundation of all the state statutes upon this subject; 4 Kent 462.

The mere fact of indebtedness alone will not render a voluntary conveyance void, if the grantor has property amply sufficient remaining to pay his creditor; Terry v. O'Neal, 71 Tex. 592, 9 S. W. 673; Joiner v. Van Alstyne, 22 Neb. 172, 34 N. W. 366.

A voluntary settlement, all debts being paid and the settlor retaining a reasonable income, is not fraudulent as against subsequent creditors of the settlor; [1900] 2 Q. B. 508.

In the case of ante-nuptial settlements, the consideration of marriage supports only such limitations as can be justly inferred to have been purchased on behalf of the party claiming such limitation, so that such party was not taking as a volunteer; 1 Atk. 265; 6 H. & N. 849; 5 Ch. Div. 619; [1891] A. C. 264. The voluntary settlement by a husband upon his wife, when this can be done without impairing existing claims of creditors, and without intent to defraud, is valid as against subsequent creditors; Jones v. Clifton, 101 U. S. 225, 25 L. Ed. 908; Schreyer v. Scott, 134 U. S. 405, 10 Sup. Ct. 579, 33 L. Ed. 955. The conveyance must be founded on good consideration and made with a bona fide intent; if defective in either of these particulars, although good as between the parties, it is void as to creditors; Smith v. Muirheid, 34 N. J. Eq. 4; Glenn v. Randall, 2 Md. Ch. 220.

The statute of 27 Eliz., unlike the statute of 13 Eliz., is limited to conveyances of real property; Bolce v. Conover, 54 N. J. Eq. 531, 35 Atl. 402; Garrison v. Brice, 48 N. C. 85; Bohn v. Headley, 17 Harr. & J. (Md.) 257; contra, on the ground that the statute is only declaratory of the common law and the common law applies to personal property, for which reason it may be interpreted as defining the nature and effect of fraudulent conveyances generally; Gibson v. Love, 4 Fla. 217; Harper v. Scott, 12 Ga. 125; Avery v. Wilson, 47 S. C. 78, 25 S. E. 286.

A voluntary gift for charitable purposes is not to be treated as "cynical," within the meaning of 27 Eliz. c. 4, and is not avoided by a subsequent conveyance for value; [1892] App. Cas. 412.

When a mortgage is given to one person for the purpose of securing debts due to himself and others, with intent on the part of the mortgagor to defraud other creditors, it is valid as to an innocent beneficiary whose debt is an honest one, although the mortgagee himself is a party to the fraud; Morris v. Lindauer, 54 Fed. 23, 4 C. C. A. 162, 6 U. S. App. 510.

Voluntary conveyances by a debtor who is financially embarrassed are prima facie fraudulent as to existing creditors, and where a conveyance is made mala fide, and the fraud is participated in by both parties thereto, it cannot be upheld in derogation of the claims of creditors, existing or subsequent; Walsh v. Byrnes, 39 Minn. 527, 40 N. W. 831; Driggs & Co.'s Bank v. Norwood, 50 Ark. 42, 6 S. W. 323, 7 Am. St. Rep. 78; Neal v. Foster, 36 Fed. 29. But although such conveyance is void as regards purchasers and creditors, it is valid as between the parties; Reichart v. Castator, 5 Binn. (Pa.) 109, 6 Am. Dec. 402; Sherk v. Endress, 3 W. & S. (Pa.)

255; Worth v. Northam, 26 N. C. 102; Clapp v. Tirrell, 20 Pick. (Mass.) 247; Burgett's Lessee v. Burgett, 1 Ohio 469, 13 Am. Dec. 634; Hendricks v. Mount, 5 N. J. L. 738, 8 Am. Dec. 623; Osborne v. Moss, 7 Johns. (N. Y.) 161, 5 Am. Dec. 252; 1 W. Bla. 262; Romans v. Maddux, 77 Ia. 203, 41 N. W. 763. An offence within 13 Eliz. c. 5, § 3, is also indictable; 6 Cox, Cr. Cas. 31.

This subject is fully treated in a note to Twyne's case, 1 Sm. Lead. Cas. (continued in 18 Am. L. Reg. N. S. 137), and in Bump; May, Fraud. Conv. See BADGES OF FRAUD.

FRAUS (Lat.). Fraud. The term of the civil law was, however, dolus (q. v.). It has been said that fraus was distinguished from dolus and had a more extended meaning. Calv. Lex.

FRAUS DANS LOCUM CONTRACTUI. A misrepresentation or concealment of some fact that is material to the contract, and had the truth regarding which been known the contract would not have been made as made, is called a "fraud dans locum contractui," i. e. a fraud occasioning the contract, or giving place or occasion for the contract.

FRAUS LEGIS (Lat.). Fraud of law. In Civil Law. The institution of legal proceedings for a fraudulent purpose. See IN FRAUDUM LEGIS.

FRAXINETUM. In Old English Law. A wood of ashtrees; a place where ashtrees grow. Co. Litt. 4 b; Shep. Touchst. 95.

FRAY. See AFFRAY.

FRECTUM. Freight. Quoad frectum navium suarum, as to the freight of his vessels. Blount.

FREDSTOLE, FREEDSTOLE. The seat of peace, a name given to a seat or chair near the altar, to which all fled who sought to obtain the privilege of sanctuary. Encyc. Dict. A sanctuary. Gib. Cod.

FREDUM. A fine paid for obtaining pardon when the peace had been broken. Spelman, Gloss.; Blount. A sum paid the magistrate for protection against the right of revenge. 1 Robertson, Charles V., App. note xxiii.

Freda was a Frankish term answering to the Saxon "wites." Maitl. Domesday Book and Beyond 278.

FREDWIT, or FREDWITE. A liberty to hold courts and take up the fines for beating and wounding. Jacob, Law Dict.

FREE. Not bound to servitude. At liberty to act as one pleases. This word is put in opposition to slave. U. S. Const. art. 1, § 2. Used in distinction from being bound as an apprentice.

The Declaration of Independence asserts that all men are born free; and in this sense the term is usually supposed to mean all mankind; though this seems to be doubted in Scott v. Sanford, 19 How. (U. S.) 393, 15 L. Ed. 691.

Certain: as, free services. These were also more honorable.

Confined to the person possessing, instead of being held in common; as, free fishery.

FREE ALMS. See FRANK-ALMOIN.

FREE BENCH. The right of the widow of a copyholder to a provision out of his lands. Bracton, lib. 4, tr. 6, cap. 13, num. 2; Fitzh. N. B. 150; Plowd. 411; Jenks, Mod. Land C. 70.

Dower in copyhold lands. 2 Bla. Com. 129. The quantity varied in different sections of England; Co. Litt. 110 b; L. R. 16 Eq. 592; incontinency was a cause of forfeiture, except, in the west of England, on the performance of a ridiculous ceremony of coming into the court of the manor, riding backwards on a black ram, etc.; see Jacob, Law Dict.; Cowell; Blount.

FREE BORD. An allowance of land outside the fence which may be claimed by the owner. An allowance, in some places, of two and a half feet wide outside the boundary or enclosure. Blount; Cowell.

FREE BOROUGHMEN. Such great men as did not engage like the frank-pledge men for their decennier. Jac. L. Dict. See FRI-BURGUS.

FREE CHAPEL. A chapel founded by the king and exempted from the jurisdiction of the ordinary. It may be one founded or endowed by a private person under a grant from the king; Cowell; Termes de la Ley.

FREE COURSE. Having the wind from a favorable quarter. To prevent collision of vessels, it is the duty of the vessel having the wind free to give way to a vessel beating up to windward and tacking; 3 Hagg. Adm. 215. At sea, such vessel meeting another close-hauled must give way, if necessary to prevent the danger of collision; 3 C. & P. 528. See 2 W. Rob. 225.

FREE ENTRY, INGRESS AND EGRESS. The right to go upon land from time to time as required to assert any right, as to take emblements.

FREE FISHERY. See FISHERY.

FREE FOLD. See FOLDAGE; FRANK-FOLD.

FREE MEN. Before the Norman Conquest, a free man might be a man of small estate dependent on a lord. Every man, not himself a lord, was bound to have a lord or be treated as unworthy of a free man's right. Among free men there was a difference in their estimation for Wergild. See LIBER HOMO.

FREE ON BOARD. A phrase applied to the sale of goods which denotes that the seller has contracted for their delivery on the vessel, cars, etc., without cost to the buyer.

for packing, portage, cartage, and the like. See Frais Jusqu'À Bord; F. O. B.

In such a contract the seller is under no obligation to act until the buyer names the ship to which the delivery is to be made; Dwight v. Eckert, 117 Pa. 508, 12 Atl. 32. Abbreviated in common use to f. o. b.

FREE PLEDGE. See FRANKPLEDGE.

FREE SERVICES. Such as it was not unbecoming the character of a soldier or freeman to perform; as, to serve under his lord in the wars, to pay a sum of money, and the like. 2 Bla. Com. 62; 1 Washb. R. P. 25.

FREE SHIPS. Neutral ships. "Free ships make free goods" is a phrase often used in treaties to denote that the goods on board neutral ships shall be free from confiscation even though belonging to an enemy; Wheat. Int. L. 507; 1 Kent 126. "It was first recognized by Holland in the seventeenth century as against the prevailing rule of the 'Consolato del Mare' (see CODE), by which the ownership of property determined its liability to capture." The doctrine was recognized, except as to goods contraband of war, in the Declaration of Paris (1856), q. v. This declaration, while a great step in favor of neutrals, does not free neutral commerce from the belligerent right of search for the purpose of ascertaining the true character of a ship sailing under a neutral flag, and for contraband goods. While the United States was not a party to the Declaration of Paris, yet during the civil war, its second and third articles, relating to this subject, were adhered to by both parties, as also during the war with Spain in 1898. See FLAG; NEUTRALITY; DECLARATION OF PARIS.

FREE SOCAGE. Tenure in free socage is a tenure by certain and honorable services which yet are not military. 1 Spence, Eq. Jur. 52; Dalrymple, Feuds, c. 2, § 1; 1 Washb. R. P. 25; called, also, free and common socage. See SOCAGE.

FREE SOCMEN. Tenants in free socage. 2 Bla. Com. 79.

FREE TENURE. Freehold tenure.

FREE WARREN. A franchise for the preserving and custody of beasts and fowls of warren. 2 Bla. Com. 39, 417; Co. Litt. 233. This franchise gave the grantee sole right of killing, so far as his warren extended, on condition of excluding other persons. 2 Bla. Com. 39.

FREEDMAN. In Roman Law. A person who had been released from a state of servitude. See LIBERTINE.

The term is frequently applied to the emancipated slaves in the southern states. By the fourteenth amendment of the constitution, citizenship was conferred upon them; Cooley, Const. Lim. 361. See Slaughter-House Cases, 16 Wall. (U. S.) 36, 21 L. Ed.

394. The fifteenth amendment protects the elective franchise of freedmen and others of African descent; and this was the object of its adoption; Cooley, Const. Lim. 752.

FREEDOM. The condition of one to whom the law attributes the single individual right of personal liberty, limited only, in the domestic relations, by powers of control which are associated with duties of protection. See APPRENTICE; MARRIED WOMEN; PARENT AND CHILD; GUARDIAN; MASTER AND SERVANT.

This right becomes subject to judicial determination when the law requires the public custody of the person as the means of vindicating the rights of others. The security of the liberty of the individual and of the rights of others is graduated by the intrinsic equity of the law, in purpose and application. The means of protecting this liberty of the individual without hazarding the freedom of others must be sought in the provisions of the remedial and penal law.

Independently of forfeiture of personal liberty under such laws and of its limitations in the domestic relations, freedom, in this sense, is a status which is invariable under all legal systems. It is the subject of judicial determination when a condition incompatible with the possession of personal liberty is alleged against one who claims freedom as his status. A community wherein law should be recognized, and wherein nevertheless, this status should not be enjoyed by any private person, is inconceivable; and, wherever its possession is thus controverted, the judicial question arises of the personal extent of the law which attributes liberty to free persons. The law may attribute it to every natural person, and thereby preclude the recognition of any condition inconsistent with its possession. This universal extent of the law of free condition will operate in the international as well as in the internal private law of the state. In most European countries the right of one, under the law of a foreign country, to control the person of another who by such law had been his slave or bondman is not recognized under that international rule for the allowance of the effect of a foreign law which is called comity, because the law of those countries attributes personal liberty as a right to every natural person. 1 Hurd, Law of Freedom §§ 116, 300.

In other countries the power of the master under a foreign law is recognized in specified cases by a statute or treaty, while an otherwise universal attribution of personal liberty precludes every other recognition of a condition of bondage. On this principle, in some of the United States, an obligation to render personal service or labor, and the corresponding right of the person to whom it is due, existing under the law of other states, were not enforced except in cases of claim within art. 4, sec. 2, ¶ 3 of the constitution of the United States; Com. v. Aves, 18 Pick. (Mass.) 193; Lemmon v. People, 20 N. Y. 562.

Legal rights are the effects of civil society. No legal condition is the reservation of a state of nature anterior to civil society. Freedom, as here understood, is the effect of law, not a pre-existing natural element. It is, therefore, not necessarily attributed to all persons within any one jurisdiction. But personal liberty, even though not attributed universally, may be juridically regarded as a right accordant with the nature of man in society; and the effect of this doctrine will appear in a legal presumption in favor of free condition, which will throw the burden of proof always on him who denies it. This presumption obtained in the law of Rome (XII Tab. T. vi. 5; Dig. lib. 40, tit. 5, l. 53; lib. 43, tit. 29, s. 3, l. 9; lib. 50, tit. 17, ll. 20, 22) even when slavery was derived from the jus gentium, or that law which was found to be received by the general reason of mankind; 1 Hurd, Law of Freedom § 157.

In English law, this presumption in favor of liberty has always been recognized, not only in the penal and remedial law, but in applying the law of condition, at a time when involuntary servitude was lawful; Fortesque, cc. 42, 47; Co. Litt. fol. 124 b; Wood, Inst. c. 1, § 5. In the slave-holding states, a presumption against the freedom of persons of negro descent arose or was declared by statute; Cooper, Justin. 485; Bell v. Dozier, 12 N. C. 336; Macon & W. R. Co. v. Holt, 8 Ga. 157. In interpreting manumission clauses in wills, the rule differed in the states according to their prevailing policy; Cobb, Slav. 298.

The condition of a private person who is legally secured in the enjoyment of those rights of action, in social relations, which might be equally enjoyed by all private persons.

The condition of one who may exercise his natural powers as he wills is not known in jurisprudence, except as the characteristic of those who hold the supreme power of the state. The freedom which one may have by his individual strength resembles this power in kind, and is no part of legal freedom. The legal right of one person involves correlative obligations on others. All persons must be restricted by those obligations which are essential to the freedom of others; 2 Harr. Cond. La. 208; but these are not inconsistent with the possession of rights which may be enjoyed equally by all. Such obligations constitute a condition opposed to freedom only as things which mutually suppose and require each other. Where the law imposes obligations incompatible with the possession of such rights as might be equally enjoyed by all, a condition arises which is contrary to freedom, see BONDAGE, and the condition of those who hold the rights correlative to such obligations becomes superior to freedom, as above defined, or is merged in the superiority of a class or caste. The rights and obligations of all cannot be alike; men must stand towards each other in unlike relations, since the actions of all cannot be the same. In the possession of relative rights they must be unequal. But individual (absolute) rights, which exist in relations towards the community in general, and capacity for relative rights in domestic relations, may be attributed to all in the same circumstances of natural condition. It is in the possession of these rights and this capacity that this freedom exists. As thus defined, it comprehends freedom in the narrower sense, as the greater includes the less; and when attributed to all who enjoy freedom in the narrower sense, as at the present day in the greater part of Europe and formerly in the free states of the Union, the latter is not distinguished as a distinct condition. But some who enjoy personal liberty might yet be so restricted in the acquisition and use of property, so unprotected in person and limited in the exercise of relative rights, that their condition would be freedom in the narrower sense only. During the middle ages, in Europe, it was possible to discriminate the existing free conditions as thus different; and the restrictions formerly imposed on free colored persons in the slave-holding states of the Union created a similar distinction between their freedom and that which, in all the states, was attributed to all persons of white race.

Freedom, in either sense, is a condition which may exist anywhere, under the civil power; but its permanency will depend on the guarantees by which it is defended. These are of infinite variety. In connection with a high degree of guarantee against irresponsible sovereign power, freedom, in the larger sense above described, may be called civil freedom, from the fact that such guarantee becomes the public law of the state. Such freedom acquires specific character from the particular law of some one country, and becomes the topic of legal science in the juridical application of the guarantees by which the several rights incident to it are maintained. This constitutes a large portion of the jurisprudence of modern states, and embraces, particularly in England and America, the public or constitutional law. The bills of rights in American constitutions, with their great original, Magna Charta, are the written evidences of the most fundamental of these guarantees. The provisions of the constitution of the United States which have this character operate against powers held by the national government, but not against those reserved to the states; Barron v. Baltimore, 7 Pet. (U. S.) 243, 8 L. Ed. 672; Sedgw. Const. 597. It has been judicially declared that a person "held to service or labor in one state under the laws thereof escaping into another" is not protected by any of these provisions, but may be delivered up, by national authority, to a claimant, for removal from the state in which he is found, in any method congress may direct, and that any one claimed as such fugitive may be seized and removed from such state by private claimant, without regard either to the laws of such state or the acts of congress; Bank of Augusta v. Earle, 13 Pet. (U. S.) 597, 10 L. Ed. 274.

The other guarantees of freedom in either sense are considered under the titles EVIDENCE; ARREST; BAIL; TRIAL; HABEAS CORPUS; DE HOMINE REPLEGIANDO.

Irresponsible superiority, whether of one or of many, is necessarily antagonistic to freedom in others. Yet freedom rests on law, and law on the supreme power of some state. The possession of this power involves a liberty of action; but its possession by a body of persons, each one of whom must submit to the will of the majority, is not in itself a guarantee of the freedom of any one individual among them. Still, the more equally this power is distributed among those who are thus individually subject, the more their individual liberty of action in the exercise of this power approximates to a legal right,—though one beyond any incident to civil freedom as above defined,—and its possession may be said to constitute political freedom, so far as that may be ascribed to private persons which is more properly ascribed to communities. In proportion as this right is extended to the individual members of a community, it becomes a guarantee of civil freedom, by making a delegation of the power of the whole body to a representative government possible and even necessary, which government may be limited in its action by customary or written law. Thus, the political liberties of private persons and their civil freedom become intimately connected; though political and civil freedom are not necessarily coexistent. 1 Sharsw. Bla. Com. 6, n., 127, n.

Political freedom is to be studied in the public law of constitutional states and in England and America, particularly in those provisions in the bills of rights which affect the subject more in his relations towards the government than in his relations towards other private persons. See LIBERTY. The terms freedom and liberty are words differing in origin (German and Latin); but they are, in use, too nearly synonymous to be distinguished in legal definition. See LIBERTY; Lieber, Civ. Lib. etc. 37, n.

FREEDOM OF THE CITY. In English Law. Immunity from county jurisdiction, and the privilege of corporate taxation and self-government held under a charter from the crown. This freedom is enjoyed of right, subject to the provision of the charter, and is often conferred as an honor on princes and other distinguished individuals. The freedom of a city carries the parliamentary franchise. Encyc. Dict. The rights and privileges possessed by the burgesses or freemen of a municipal corporation under the old English law; now of little importance, and conferred chiefly as a mark of honor. See 11 Chlc. L. J. 357.

The phrase has no place in American law, and as frequently used in addresses of welcome made to organizations visiting an American city, particularly by mayors, has no meaning whatever except as an expression of good will.

The form of the grant made by the city of New York to Andrew Hamilton of Philadelphia is quoted at large in 13 Law Notes 150.

FREEDOM OF CONTRACT. See LIBERTY OF CONTRACT.

FREEDOM OF THE PRESS. See LIBERTY OF THE PRESS.

FREEDOM OF SPEECH. See LIBERTY OF SPEECH.

FREEHOLD. See ESTATE OF FREEHOLD.

FREEHOLD IN LAW. A freehold which has descended to a man, upon which he may enter at pleasure, but which he has not entered on. Termes de la Ley.

FREEHOLD LAND SOCIETIES. Societies in England designed for the purpose of enabling mechanics, artisans, and other working-men to purchase at the least possible price a piece of freehold land of a sufficient yearly value to entitle the owner to the elective franchise for the county in which the land is situated. Wharton.

FREEHOLDER. The owner of a freehold estate. Such a man must have been anciently a freeman; and the gift to any man by his lord of an estate to him and his heirs made the tenant a freeman, if he had not been so before. See 1 Washb. R. P. 29, 45. One who owns land in fee or for life, or for some indeterminate period. The estate may be equitable or legal. State v. Ragland, 75 N. C. 13. Boards of freeholders exist in New Jersey. It is the designation of the governing board of a county.

FREEMAN. One who is not a slave. One born free or made so.

In Old English Law. A freeholder, as distinguished from a villein.

An inhabitant of a city. Stat. 1 Hen. VI. c. 11, 3 Steph. Com. 196.

In Vermont (Acts 1903, p. 3) mention is made of freemen's meetings.

FREEMAN'S ROLL. A list of persons admitted as burgesses or freemen for the purposes of the rights reserved by the Municipal Corporation Act. 5 & 6 Will. IV. c. 76. Distinguished from the Burgess Roll; 3 Steph. Com. 197. The term was used, in early colonial history, of some of the American colonies.

FREIGHT. In Maritime Law. The sum agreed on for the hire of a ship, entirely or in part, for the carriage of goods from one port to another. 13 East 300. All rewards or compensation paid for the use of ships. Giles v. The Cynthia, 1 Pet. Adm. 206, Fed. Cas. No. 5,424; 2 B. & P. 321; Sansom v. Ball, 4 Dall. (U. S.) 459, 1 L. Ed. 908; Cheriot v. Barker, 2 Johns. (N. Y.) 346, 3 Am. Dec. 437; Chitty, Com. L. 407. The price to be paid for the actual transportation of goods by sea from one place to another. Hagar v. Donaldson, 154 Pa. 242; The Norman Prince, 185 Fed. 169.

It is an inherent element in a contract of affreightment that a vessel shall enter on the voyage named and begin the carriage of the goods shipped, or, as it is technically called, "break ground," before a claim for freight can arise, unless the shipper of the goods, the vessel remaining ready to enter on the voyage, undertakes to reclaim the goods. The circumstances under which the contract was entered into continuing the same, so far as respects the vessel, the shipper cannot reclaim the goods without paying the full freight; The Tornado, 108 U. S. 342, 2 Sup. Ct. 746, 27 L. Ed. 747; The Norman Prince, supra.

The amount of freight is usually fixed by the agreement of the parties; and if there is no agreement, the amount is to be ascertained by the usage of the trade and the circumstances and reason of the case; 3 Kent 173. See RATES. When the merchant hires the whole ship for the entire voyage, he must pay the freight though he does not fully lade the ship; Chitty, Com. L. 407; Heckscher v. McCrea, 24 Wend. (N. Y.) 304; he is, of course, only bound to pay in proportion to the goods he puts on board, when he does not agree to provide a full cargo. If the merchant agrees to furnish a return cargo, and he furnishes none, and lets the ship return in ballast, he must make compensation to the amount of the agreed freight; Giles v. The Cynthia, 1 Pet. Adm. 207, Fed. Cas. No. 5,424; 2 Vern. 210. See L. R. 6 Q. B. 528; DEAD FREIGHT.

The general rule is that the delivery of the goods at the place of destination, in fulfillment of the agreement of the charter-party or bill of lading, is required, to entitle the master or owner of the vessel to freight; Frith v. Barker, 2 Johns. (N. Y.) 327; China Mut. Ins. Co. v. Force, 142 N. Y. 90, 36 N. E. 874, 40 Am. St. Rep. 576; Thibault v. Russell, 5 Harr. (Del.) 293; Brittan v. Barnaby, 21 How. (U. S.) 527, 16 L. Ed. 177. If prepaid, it may be recovered back on a failure to make delivery unless expressly provided otherwise in the contract; Burn Line v. U. S. & A. S. S. Co., 162 Fed. 298, 89 C. C. A. 278.

An interruption of the regular course of the voyage, happening without the fault of the owner, does not deprive him of his freight if the ship afterwards proceeds with the cargo to the place of destination, as in the case of capture and recapture; 3 C. Rob. 101; 3 Kent 223; but where a voyage is broken up by reason of the inexcusable delay of the ship, resulting in damage to the shippers, he need not pay the freight; Hoadley v. The Lizzie, 39 Fed. 44. In case of the blockade of, or the interdiction of, commerce with the port to which the cargo is destined, and the return of the goods to the owner, no freight will be due; Scott v. Libby, 2 Johns. (N. Y.) 336, 3 Am. Dec. 431; 10 East 526; but see Morgan v. Ins. Co., 4 Dall. (U. S.) 455, 1 L. Ed. 907.

A shipowner, who is prevented from performing the voyage by a wrongful act of the charterer, is prima facie entitled to the freight that he would have earned, less what it would have cost him to earn it; The Gazelle, 128 U. S. 474, 9 Sup. Ct. 130, 32 L. Ed. 496.

When the ship is forced into a port short of her destination, and cannot finish the voyage, if the owner of the goods will not allow the master a reasonable time to repair, or to proceed in another ship, the master will be entitled to the whole freight; and if, after giving his consent, the master refuses to go on, he is not entitled to freight. See DEVIATION.

When the merchant accepts of the goods at an intermediate port, it is the general rule that freight is to be paid according to the proportion of the voyage performed; and the law will imply such contract; Bork v. Norton, 2 McLean 423, Fed. Cas. No. 1,659; Robinson v. Ins. Co., 2 Johns. (N. Y.) 323. The acceptance must be voluntary, and not one forced upon the owner by any illegal or violent proceedings, as from it the law implies a contract that freight pro rata parte itineris shall be accepted and paid; 2 Burr. 883; Gray v. Wain, 2 S. & R. (Pa.) 229, 7 Am. Dec. 642; Caze v. Baltimore Ins. Co., 7 Cra. (U. S.) 358, 3 L. Ed. 370; Welch v. Hicks, 6 Cow. (N. Y.) 504, 16 Am. Dec. 443; 3 Kent 182; Com. Dig. Merchant (E 3), note, pl. 43.

If the master refuse to repair his vessel and send on the goods, or to procure other vessels for that purpose and the owner of the goods then receives them, such an acceptance will not be such a voluntary one as to make him liable for freight pro rata; Welch v. Hicks, 6 Cow. (N. Y.) 504, 16 Am. Dec. 443; Atlantic Mut. Ins. Co. v. Bird, 2 Bosw. (N. Y.) 195; and where the port designated in the charter-party was unsafe, the master was held justified in discharging part of his cargo at another port in order to be able to proceed with the rest to the point designated; [1896] 1 Q. B. 586; L. R. 6 P. D. 68.

When the ship has performed the whole voyage, and has brought only a part of her cargo to the place of destination, there is a difference between a general ship and a ship chartered for a specific sum for the whole voyage. In the former case, the freight is to be paid for the goods which may be delivered at their place of destination; in the latter, it has been questioned whether the freight could be apportioned; and it seems that in such case a partial performance is not sufficient, and that a special payment cannot be claimed except in special cases; Post v. Robertson, 1 Johns. (N. Y.) 24; 2 Campb. 466. Proof that a vessel received the number of cases of oil stated in the bills of lading, that none were stolen during the voyage, and that all on board were delivered alongside by her tackles into lighters, entitles her to freight on all shown by the bills of lading, though there may have been a shortage when the oil reached its destination; Steamship Den of Ogil Co. v. Standard Oil Co., 189 Fed. 1020. Where a cargo owner is allowed, as damages against a vessel, for loss of cargo, its full value at the port of delivery, he is not entitled to a reduction in freight on account of the loss; Carolina Portland Cement Co. v. Anderson, 186 Fed. 145, 108 C. C. A. 257.

If goods are laden on board, the shipper is not entitled to their return and to have them reloaded without paying the expenses of unloading and the whole freight and surrendering the bill of lading or indemnifying the master against any loss or damage he may sustain by reason of the non-delivery of the bill; Bartlett v. Carnley, 6 Duer (N. Y.) 194. In general, the master has a lien on the goods, and need not part with them until the freight is paid; Brittan v. Barnaby, 21 How. (U. S.) 527, 16 L. Ed. 177; and when the regulations of the revenue require them to be landed in a public warehouse, the master may enter them in his own name and preserve the lien; Abb. Ship. pt. 3, ch. 3, § 11. His right to retain the goods may, however, be waived either by an express agreement at the time of making the original contract, or by his subsequent agreement or consent. The refusal of a master to deliver a cargo until security is furnished for the freight gives no right of action to the charterer, as the cargo is subject to a lien for freight; The Ira B. Ellems, 48 Fed. 591. See LIEN; MARITIME LIEN; AVERAGE.

If freight be paid in advance and the goods are not conveyed and delivered according to the contract, it can, in all cases, in the absence of an agreement to the contrary, be recovered back by the shipper; Phelps v. Williamson, 5 Sandf. (N. Y.) 578.

The captor of an enemy's vessel is entitled to freight from the owner of the goods if he perform the voyage and carries the goods to the port of original destination; 1 Kent 131; but in such cases the doctrine of freight pro rata is entirely rejected; 4 Rob. Rep. 278; 5 id. 67; 6 id. 269.

See COMMON CARRIERS; HARTER ACT; SHIP; SEAWORTHY; IMPAIRING THE OBLIGATION OF CONTRACTS; RATES; INTER-STATE COMMERCE COMMISSION.

FREIGHTER. He to whom a ship or vessel has been hired, and who loads her under his contract. He who loads a general ship. 3 Kent 173; 3 Pardessus, n. 704.

The freighter is entitled to the enjoyment of the vessel according to contract, and the vessel hired is the only one that he is bound to take; there can, therefore, be no substitution without his consent. When the vessel has been chartered only in part, the freighter is only entitled to the space he has contracted for; and in case of his occupying more room or putting on board a greater weight, he must pay freight on the principles mentioned under the article of FREIGHT.

The freighter hiring a vessel is required to use the vessel agreeably to the provisions of the charter-party, or, in the absence of any such provisions, according to the usages of trade; he cannot load the vessel with merchandise which would render it liable to condemnation for violating the laws of a foreign state; Smith v. Elder, 3 Johns. (N. Y.) 105. He is also required to return the vessel as soon as the time for which he chartered her has expired, and to pay the freight.

FRENCH LANGUAGE. See LANGUAGE.

FRENCH SPOILIATION CLAIMS. On January 20, 1885 (23 Stat. L. 283), congress authorized all citizens of the United States or their legal representatives, to present to the court of claims valid claims which they had against France for spoiliations of property on the high seas prior to 1801. These spoiliations were committed by French war vessels and privateers in pursuance of governmental orders, inspired by alleged violations of the treaty of 1778 by the United States, and extended from about 1796 to 1801. The United States authorized retaliatory measures in 1798. Napoleon having succeeded to the Directory, made a treaty with the United States by which the respective pretensions of the two nations were abandoned. The claimants insisted that this proceeding was a trading off of their claims against France for a national consideration, and that their own government became liable therefor.

In making appropriations, congress did not intend to determine conclusively what persons were entitled thereto; the payments were for the next of kin of the original sufferers; the person receiving the appropriation and filing an account is held to have submitted to such court the question of who were entitled to the money; Buchanan v. Patterson, 190 U. S. 353.

Under the act of March 3, 1891, the payments were by way of gratuity and grace, and went to the next of kin, excluding creditors, etc. Next of kin were those living at the date of the act, to be determined by the statute of distribution of the respective state of the domicil of the original sufferer; Buchanan v. Patterson, 190 U. S. 353, 23 Sup. Ct. 764, 47 L. Ed. 1093.

French spoliation cases rest upon the just and equitable principles of international law and are not matters of strict legal right; The Hiram, 24 Ct. Cl. 31. The actual loss is all that the claimant is entitled to; transactions of parties as owners, insurers, etc., cannot be considered; id.

The act of Congress (March 3, 1891) provides that claims shall be awarded to the next of kin; Rutledge v. Tunno, 63 S. C. 205, 41 S. E. 308; Healey v. Cole, 95 Me. 272, 49 Atl. 1065; to be distributed under the statute of distributions of the domicil of the original sufferer at the time of his death; id.

A probate court can appoint an administrator for the sole purpose of collecting these claims, though the fund will not be liable for the debts of the intestate, but will go to the particular persons; Sargent v. Sargent, 168 Mass. 420, 47 N. E. 121. An administrator c. t. a. collecting such claim does not deprive the next of kin of their interest; In re Warren, 105 App. Div. 582, 94 N. Y. Supp. 286.

See NEXT OF KIN.

FRENDLESMAN (Sax.). An outlaw. So called because of his outlawry he was denied all help of friends after certain days. Cowell; Blount.

FRENDWITE. A fine exacted from him who harbored an outlawed friend. Cowell; Cunningham. A quittance for for. fang (exemption from the penalty of taking provisions before the king's purveyors had taken enough for the king's necessities). Cowell.

FREOBORGH. A free-surety or free-pledge. Spelman, Gloss. See FRANK-PLEDGE.

FREQUENT. To visit often; to resort to often or habitually. Green v. State, 109 Ind. 175.

FRESH DISSEISIN. Such disseisin as a man may seek to defeat of himself, and by his own power, without the help of the king or judges. There was no limit set to the time within which this might be done. It is set in one case as a disseisin committed within fifteen days. Bracton, lib. 4, cap. 5. In another case it was held a fresh disseisin when committed within a year. Britton, cap. 32, 43, 65.

FRESH FINE. A fine levied within a year. Stat. Westm. 2 (13 Edw. I.), cap. 45.

FRESH FORCE. Force done within forty days. Fitzh. N. B. 7; Old N. B. 4. The heir or reversioner in a case of disseisin by fresh force was allowed a remedy in chancery by bill before the mayor. Cowell.

The Assize of Fresh Force has recently been elucidated by the investigations of W. C. Bolland; see Selden Society's Year Books Series, Vol. VIII, Introd. xxxvi; 1 Poll. & Maitl. 628.

FRESH SUIT. Where a man robbed follows the robber with all diligence, apprehends and convicts him of felony by verdict, even if it requires a year, it is called fresh suit, and the party shall have his goods again. The same term was applied to other cases; Cowell; 1 Bla. Com. 297.

FRESHET. A flood or overflowing of a river by means of rains or melted snow; an inundation. Stover v. Ins. Co., 3 Phila. (Pa.) 42.

FRETTUM. Freight. Moz. & W.

FRETUM. A strait. Fretum Britannicum, the strait between Dover and Calais.

FRIAR. A member of an order of religious persons, of whom there were four principal branches: 1. Minors, Grey Friars, or Franciscans. 2. Augustines. 3. Dominicans, or Black Friars. 4. White Friars, or Carmelites. Cowell; Whart.; Moz. & W.

FRIBURGH. (Also, Frithborg, Frithborgh, Friborg, Froborg, and Freoburgh.) (Sax.) A kind of frank-pledge whereby the principal men were bound for themselves and servants. Fleta, lib. 1, cap. 47. Cowell says it is the same as frank-pledge.

FRIBUSCULUM. In Civil Law. A slight dissension between husband and wife, which produced a momentary separation, without any intention to dissolve the marriage,—in which it differed from a divorce. Pothier, Pand. lib. 50, s. 106; Vicat. Voc. Jur. This amounted to a separation in our law. See SEPARATION.

FRIEND OF THE COURT. See AMICUS CURIAE.

FRIENDLESS MAN. An outlaw. Cowell.

FRIENDLY SOCIETIES. Associations for the purpose of affording relief to the members and their families in case of sickness or death. They are governed by numerous acts of parliament, and were first authorized in 1793.

FRIENDLY SUIT. A suit brought by a creditor in chancery against an executor or administrator, being really a suit by the executor or administrator, in the name of a creditor against himself, in order to compel the creditors to take an equal distribution of the assets. 2 Wms. Ex. 1915. See AMICABLE ACTION; CASE STATED.

FRIGHT. See MENTAL SUFFERING.

FRIGIDITY. Impotence.

FRILING, or FREOLING. A freeman born. Jac. L. Dict.; Spel. Gloss.

FRISCUS. Fresh uncultivated ground. Mon. Angl. tit. 2. p. 56. Fresh, not salt. Reg. Orig. 97. Recent or new.

FRITHBORGH. See FRIBURGH.

FRITHBOTE. A satisfaction or fine for a breach of the peace. See FREDUM.

FRITHBREACH. The breaking of the peace. Cowell.

FRITHGEAR. The year of jubilee or of meeting for peace and friendship. Jac. L. D.

FRITHGILD. A guild hall. A company or fraternity for the maintenance of peace and security; a fine for breach of the peace. Jac. L. Dict.

FRITHMAN. A member of a company or fraternity. Blount.

FRITHSOCNE. Surety of defence. Jurisdiction of the peace. The franchise of preserving the peace. Cowell.

FRITHSOKE, or FRITHSOKEN. The right to take a view of frank-pledge. Fleta. See FRITHSOCNE, which seems to be interchangeable. Cowell.

FRIVOLOUS. An answer or plea is frivolous which controverts no material allegation in the complaint, and which is manifestly insufficient. Under the English common-law amendment act, and by the codes of some of the states, the court is authorized to strike out such a plea, so that the plaintiff can obtain judgment without awaiting the regular call of the cause; Lefferts v. Snediker, 1 Abb. Pr. (N. Y.) 41; New Jersey Zinc Co. v. Blood, 8 Abb. Pr. (N. Y.) 149; Brown v. Jenison, 3 Sandf. (N. Y.) 732; Dobson v. Hallowell, 53 Minn. 98, 54 N. W. 939; Lerdall v. Ins. Co., 51 Wis. 430, 8 N. W. 280. See Hubber Co. v. McAllester, 1 Misc. 483, 21 N. Y. Supp. 767.

An answer cannot be stricken out on the ground that it is frivolous, where an extended argument or illustration is required to demonstrate its frailty; Deuel v. Sanford, 67 How. Prac. (N. Y.) 354; Exchange Fire Ins. Co. of New York City v. Norris, 74 Hun 527, 26 N. Y. Supp. 823. A pleading interposed for delay is frivolous, but a pleading is not frivolous because vague; Farmers' & Millers' Bank v. Sawyer, 7 Wis. 383; Kelly v. Barnett, 16 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 135; Yerkes v. Crum, 2 N. D. 72, 49 N. W. 422.

Frivolous is not synonymous with irrelevant; Fasnacht v. Stehn, 5 Abb. Pr. N. S. (N. Y.) 338, 343; id., 53 Barb. (N. Y.) 650.

FRODMORTEL, or FREOMORTEL. An immunity for committing manslaughter. Mon. Angl. t. 1. 173.

FROM. The legal effect of this word has been a fruitful subject of judicial discussion resulting in a great diversity of construction of the word as used with respect to both time and place. Many attempts have been made to lay down a general rule to determine whether it was to be treated as inclusive or exclusive of a terminus a quo, whether of time or place. Very long ago a critical writer, after reviewing the cases up to that date, undertook to formulate such a rule thus: From, as well in strict grammatical sense, as in the ordinary import thereof, when referring to a certain point as a terminus a quo, always excludes that point; though in vulgar acceptance it were capable of being taken indifferently, either inclusively or exclusively, yet in law it has obtained a certain fixed import and is always taken as exclusive of the terminus a quo. Powell, Powers 449. This conclusion states a rule applied in the majority of cases, and it was said that the prepositions "from," "until," "between," generally exclude the day to which they relate, but the general rule will yield to the intent of parties; Kendall v. Kingsley, 120 Mass. 94. But the rule has not been unvarying, and many courts have not hesitated to follow the views of Lord Mansfield, in Cowp. 714 (overruling his own decision of three years before, id. 189), that it is either exclusive or inclusive according to context and subject-matter, and the court will construe it to effectuate the intent of parties and not to destroy it.

As to time, after an examination of authorities, Washington, J., laid down what he considered the settled principles to be deduced from them: (1) When time is computed from an act done, the day of its performance is included; (2) when the words are from the date, if a present interest is to commence, the day is included, if it is a terminus from which to impute time the day is excluded; Pearpoint v. Graham, 4 Wash. C. C. 240, Fed. Cas. No. 10,877; where the latter principle was applied to a lease, as it was also in Lord Raym. 84; and to a bond; Lysle v. Williams, 15 S. & R. (Pa.) 135; and the first proposition has been laid down with reference to the words "from and after the passage of this act;" Arnold v. U. S., 9 Cra. (U. S.) 104, 3 L. Ed. 671; U. S. v. Williams, 1 Paine 261, Fed. Cas. No. 16,723; U. S. v. Arnold, 1 Gall. 348, Fed. Cas. No. 14,469; contra, Lorent v. Ins. Co., 1 Nott. & McC. (S. C.) 505. See U. S. v. Heth, 3 Cra. (U. S.) 399, 2 L. Ed. 479. From is generally held a word of exclusion; Wilcox v. Wood, 9 Wend. (N. Y.) 346; Oatman v. Walker, 33 Me. 67; Ordway v. Remington, 12 R. I. 319, 34 Am. Rep. 646; Atkins v. Sleeper, 7 Allen (Mass.) 487. But a promise made November 1st, 1811, and sued November 1st, 1817, was held barred by statute of limitation; Presbrey v. Williams, 15 Mass. 193. In many cases it is held to be either exclusive or inclusive according to the intention of the parties; Deyo v. Bleakley, 24 Barb. (N. Y.) 9; Houser v. Reynolds, 2 N. C. 114, 1 Am. Dec. 551. Where an act was to be done in a given number of days from the time of the contract, the day on which the contract was made was included; Brown v. Buzan, 24 Ind. 194; but if the contract merely says in so many days it means so many days from the day of date, and that is excluded; Blake v. Crowninshield, 9 N. H. 304. A fire policy from one given date to another includes the last day; whether the first is included was not decided; L. R. 5 Exch. 296. In most cases when something is required to be done in a given time from the day on which an event has happened, that day is excluded, as in case of proving claims against the estate of a decedent or insolvent; Weeks v. Hull, 19 Conn. 376, 50 Am. Dec. 249; enrolling deeds, after execution; Seawell v. Williams, 5 Hayw. (Tenn.) 283; appeal from arbitrators, afterward; Browne v. Browne, 3 S. & R. (Pa.) 496; issuing a scire facias to revive a judgment, after entry; Appeal of Green, 6 W. & S. (Pa.) 327; the time an execution runs, after its date; Homan v. Liswell, 6 Cow. (N. Y.) 659; redemption from execution sale; id. 518; allowing appeal from a justice; Ex parte Dean, 2 Cow. (N. Y.) 605, 14 Am. Dec. 521. The principle is thus well expressed. When time is to be computed from a particular day or a particular event, as when an act is to be performed within a specified period from or after a day named, that day is excluded and the last day included; Sheets v. Selden, 2 Wall. (U. S.) 177, 17 L. Ed. 822. But it was held that in considering the question of barring a writ of error, the day of the decree is included; Chiles v. Smith's Heirs, 13 B. Monr. (Ky.) 460.

From the expiration of a policy means from the expiration of the time from which the policy was effected and not the time at which the risk is terminated by alienation; Sullivan v. Ins. Co., 2 Mass. 318. Six months from testator's death allowed a legatee to give security not to marry, are exclusive of that day; 15 Ves. 248. Where an annuity is given, and from and after the payment thereof and subject thereto, the principal over, the gift over is subject to make up deficiency of income; aliter if the gift over were from and after the annuitant's death, merely; L. R. 2 Ch. App. 644, reversing L. R. 4 Eq. 58. From time to time, as applied to the payment of expenses or damages caused by building a railroad; L. R. 5 Ex. 6; or the appointment, by a married woman, of rents and profits; 1 Ves. Jr. 189 and note; 3 Bro. C. C. 340; 12 Ves. 501; do not require periodical payments or appointments, nor restrain the party from a sweeping discharge or disposition of the whole subject-matter at once. From time to time is not sufficient in a bail bond which under the statute should stipulate for appearance from term to term; Forbes v. State (Tex.) 25 S. W. 1072. From day to day, in reference to adjournments, usually means to the next day but, under a statute authorizing the adjournment of a sale from day to day, a sale is good if made by adjournment to a day, certain, which did not immediately succeed the first; Burns v. Lyon, 4 Watts (Pa.) 363. From henceforth in a lease means from the delivery; 5 Co. 1; so also does one from March 25th last past (the execution being March 25th); 4 B. & C. 272; or one from an impossible date (as February 30th), or no date, but if it has a sensible date, the word date in other parts of it means date, not delivery; 4 B. & C. 908. Where authority is given to commissioners to build a bridge and then and from thenceforth, the county to be liable, means only after the bridge is built; 16 East 305.

Whenever they are used with respect to places it is said that "from," "to," and "at" are taken inclusively according to the subject-matter; Union Pac. R. Co. v. Hall, 91 U. S. 343, 23 L. Ed. 428 (fixing the terminus of a railroad under an act of congress). From an object to an object in a deed excludes the terminus referred to; Bonney v. Morrill, 52 Me. 252; State v. Bushey, 84 Me. 459, 24 Atl. 940. From place to place means from one place in a town to another in the same town; Com. v. Inhabitants of Cambridge, 7 Mass. 158; Com. v. Waters, 11 Gray (Mass.) 81. From a street means from any part of it according to circumstances; City of Pittsburg v. Cluley, 74 Pa. 259. From a town is not always and indeed is seldom exclusive of the place named; it generally means from some indefinite place within that town; Chesapeake & O. Canal Co. v. Key, 3 Cra. C. C. 599, 606, Fed. Cas. No. 2,649. Authority in a railroad charter to construct a railroad from a city to another point gives power to construct the road from any point within the city; Hazlehurst v. Freeman, 52 Ga. 244; Appeal of Western Pennsylvania R. Co., 99 Pa. 155; Tennessee & A. R. Co. v. Adams, 3 Head (Tenn.) 596; contra North-Eastern R. Co. v. Payne, 8 Rich. L. (S. C.) 177. And see Farmers' Turnpike Road v. Coventry, 10 Johns. (N. Y.) 389, where in a similar case "to" was construed "into;" and Mohawk Bridge Co. v. R. Co., 6 Paige Ch. (N. Y.) 554, where, "at or near" was held equivalent to "within." But from a town to another in an indictment for transportation of liquor does not charge it as done within the town; State v. Bushey, 84 Me. 459, 24 Atl. 940. To construe reasonably the expression a road from a village to a creek within the same village, in a statute, requires that it be taken inclusively; Smith v. Helmer, 7 Barb. (N. Y.) 416. Sailing from a port means out of it; U. S. v. La Coste, 2 Mass. 129, Fed. Cas. No. 15,548.

Descent from a parent cannot be construed to mean through a parent, it must be immediate, from the person designated; Gardner v. Collins, 2 Pet. (U. S.) 58, 86, 7 L. Ed. 347; Case v. Wildridge, 4 Ind. 51; but the words from the part of the father include a descent, either immediately from the father or from any person in the line of the father; Shippen v. Izard, 1 S. & R. (Pa.) 222.

The words to be paid for in from six to eight weeks have no definite meaning and it was properly left to the jury to say if the suit was brought prematurely; L. R. 9 C. P. 20. From the loading in a marine policy ordinarily means that the risk is covered after the goods are on board, but this meaning may be qualified by any words in the policy indicating a different intention; 16 East 240; L. R. 7 Q. B. 580, 702. A contract to deliver from one to three thousand bushels gives the seller an option to deliver any quantity he chooses within the limits named; Small v. Quincy, 4 Greenl. (Me.) 497. Appraisers living from one to one and a half miles away, in a fairly well settled community, are prima facie from the neighborhood; State v. Jungling, 116 Mo. 162, 22 S. W. 638.

FRONT. Ordinarily, as applied to a lot or tract of land, that part of it which abuts on, or gives access from, it to a highway whether natural or artificial. But sometimes as in a covenant to keep up sidewalks, the front of a corner lot may mean the side; City of Des Moines v. Dorr, 31 Ia. 89.

When the contract of sale calls for a store fifty-six feet front and rear and the deed describes the lot as nineteen feet wide, there being visible monuments,—side walls,—the latter control, and front and rear will be taken as the depth of the lot, though the natural meaning would be the width; McWhorter v. McMahan, 10 Paige (N. Y.) 386.

A covenant not to open or put out a door to the front of the street means a door giving access to the street and not close upon it, and the covenant is broken if the door be eight feet back of the actual front; Dowl. & Ry. 556, 563.

The words front to the river (in French and Spanish deeds, face au fleuve, or frente al rio), used in describing part of a plantation, prima facie designate a riparian estate, unless, taken in such sense, they have an incongruous or absurd result; Morgan v. Livingston, 6 Mart. O. S. (La.) 19, 224, in which the meaning of this expression was learnedly and elaborately defined. It is otherwise as to a sale of part of a tract when at the time of sale the vendor owned another part between that sold and the river; in the last case the words are descriptive of the situation of the property; Cambre v. Kohn, 8 Mart. N. S. (La.) 572.

And the words front of the levee (fronte à la levee) when there was land outside of the levee susceptible of ownership does not signify a boundary on the river; Livingston v. Heerman, 9 Mart. O. S. (La.) 656, 719.

FRONT FOOT. As used in an act providing that property shall be assessed in proportion to the "front foot" has been held synonymous with "abutting foot." Moherly v. Hogan, 131 Mo. 19, 32 S. W. 1014. See ASSESSMENT.

FRONT OF AN ACRE. An expression which "has no proper application to a line, and has not a natural or generally acknowledged and received sense. It is too vague to determine the length of the front line of a lot as a basis for a decree for specific performance;" Crockett v. Green, 3 Del. Ch. 406.

FRONTAGE, FRONTAGER. In English Law. A frontager is a person owning or occupying land which abuts on a highway, river, sea-shore, or the like. The term is generally used with reference to the liability of frontagers on streets to contribute towards the expense of paving, draining, or other works on the highway carried out by a local authority, in proportion to the frontage of their respective tenements. Public Health Act, 11 & 12 Vict. c. 63. There is no liability at common law binding a frontager on the sea to maintain a sea-wall on his land; 1 Q. B. D. 225.

The corresponding American term is abutter (q. v.). See ASSESSMENT; FORESHORE.

FROSTA-THING. See GULA-THING.

FROZEN SNAKE. A term used to impute ingratitude and held libelous, the court taking judicial notice of its meaning without an innuendo. 12 Ad. & El. 624.

FRUCTUARIUS (Lat.). One entitled to the use of profits, fruits, and yearly increase of a thing. A lessee; a fermor. Bracton, 241; Vicat, Voc. Jur.

Sometimes, as applied to a slave, he of whom any one has the usufruct. Vicat, Voc. Jur.

FRUCTUS (Lat.). The right of using the increase of fruits: equivalent to usufruct.

That which results or springs from a thing: as, rents, interest, freight from a ship, etc.

All the natural return, increase, or addition which is added by nature or by the skill of man, including all the organic products of things. Vicat, Voc. Jur.; 1 Mackeldey, Civil Law § 154.

FRUCTUS CIVILES (Lat. civil fruits). All revenues and recompenses which, though not fruits properly speaking, are recognized as such by the law. 1 Kauffmann, Mackeld. § 154; Calvinus, Lex.

FRUCTUS INDUSTRIALES (Lat.). Those products which are obtained by the labor and cultivation of the occupant: as, corn or peaches; 1 Kauffmann, Mackeld. § 154, n.; Purner v. Piercy, 40 Md. 212, 17 Am. Rep. 591; Townsend v. Hargraves, 118 Mass. 325. Emblements are such in the common law; 2 Steph. Com. 258; Vicat, Voc. Jur.

Fruits and vegetables produced by cultivation, as distinguished from the products of perennials; such as trees, bushes, etc., which are fructus naturales. Sparrow v. Pond, 49 Minn. 412, 52 N. W. 36, 16 L. R. A. 103, 32 Am. St. Rep. 571.

FRUCTUS LEGIS. The fruit of the law, i. e. execution.

FRUCTUS NATURALES (Lat.). Those products which are produced by the powers of nature alone: as wool, metals, milk, the young of animals, and the fruit of trees and other perennial plants. 1 Kauffmann, Mackeld. § 154; Calvinus, Lex. See FRUCTUS INDUSTRIALES.

FRUCTUS PENDENTES (Lat.). The fruits united with the thing which produces them. These form a part of the principal thing; 1 Kauffmann, Mackeld. § 154. Sometimes called fructus stantes, standing fruits.

FRUCTUS REI ALIENAE. Fruits taken from another's estate; the fruits of another's property.

FRUCTUS SEPARATI. In Civil Law. Separate fruits, the fruits of a thing when they are separated from it. Dig. 7, 4, 13.

FRUGES (Lat.). Anything produced from vines, underwood, chalk-pits, stone-quarries. Dig. 50. 16. 77.

Grains and leguminous vegetables. In a more restricted sense, an esculent growing in pods. Calvinus, Lex.

FRUIT. The produce of a tree or plant which contains the seed or is used for food.

This term, in legal acceptance, is not confined to the produce of those trees which, in popular language, are called fruit trees, but applies also to the produce of oak, elm, and walnut trees. It denotes the produce not only of orchard, but of timber trees. 5 B. & C. 847. It has a wide meaning as including profits of all sorts.

FRUIT, FALLEN. The produce of any possession detached therefrom, and capable of being enjoyed by itself. Thus a next presentation, when a vacancy has occurred, is a fruit fallen from the advowson. Whart.

FRUITS OF CRIME. Material objects acquired by means and in consequence of the commission of crime, and sometimes the subject-matter of the crime. Burr. Circ. Ev. 445; Benth. Jud. Ev. 31.

FRUMENTUM. In Civil Law. Grain. That which grows in an ear. Dig. 50.

FRUMGYLD. The first payment made to the kindred of a slain person in recompense for his murder. Blount; Termes de la Ley; Leg. Edmundi, cap. ult.

FRUMSTOL (Sax.). A chief seat or mansion-house. Cowell. An original or paternal dwelling. Anct. Inst. Eng.

FRUSCA TERRA. In Old Records. Uncultivated and desert ground. 2 Mon. Angl. 327; Cowell.

FRUSSURA. Plowing; a breaking. Cowell.

FRUSTRUM TERRÆ. A piece or parcel of land lying by itself. Co. Litt. 5 b.

FRUTECTUM, FRUTETUM, or FRUTICETUM. A place where shrubs or herbs grow. Jac.; Blount; Spel. Gloss.

FRUTOS. In Spanish Law. Fruits; products; profits; grains. White, New Recop. b. 1, tit. 7, c. 5, § 2.

FRYMITH, FYNMITH. In English Law. The affording harbor and entertainment to any one. Anc. Inst. Eng.

FRYTH (Sax.). In Old English Law. A plain between woods. Co. Litt. 5 b. An arm of the sea, or a strait between two lands. Cowell.

FUAGE, FOCAGE. Hearth-money. A tax laid upon each fireplace or hearth. 1 Bla. Com. 324; Spelman, Gloss. A shilling for every hearth, levied by the Black Prince in his dukedom of Aquitaine.

FUER. To fly. It may be by bodily flight, or by non-appearance when summoned to appear in a court of justice, which is flight in the interpretation of the law. Cowell; Toml.; Whart.

FUERO. In Spanish Law. Compilations or general codes of law.

The usages and customs which, in the course of time, had acquired the force of unwritten law.

Letters of privilege and exemption from payment of certain taxes, etc.

Charters granted to cities or towns on condition of their paying certain dues to the owner of the land of which they had enjoyment.

Acts of donation granted by some lord or proprietor in favor of individuals, churches, or monasteries.

Ordinances passed by magistrates in relation to the dues, fines, etc., payable by the members of a community.

Letters emanating from the king or some superior lord, containing the ordinances and laws for the government of cities and towns, etc.

This term has many and very various meanings, as is shown above, and is sometimes used in other significations beside those here given. See, also, Schmidt, Span. Law 64; Escriche, Dict. Razz. Fuero.

Fuero de Castilla. The body of laws and customs which formerly governed the Castilians.

Fuero de Correos y Caminos. A special tribunal taking cognizance of all matters relating to the post-office and roads.

Fuero de Guerra. A special tribunal taking cognizance of all matters in relation to persons serving in the army.

Fuero Juzgo. The code of laws established by the Visigoths for the government of Spain, many of whose provisions are still in force. See the analysis of this work in Schmidt's Span. Law 30.

Fuero de Marina (called, also, Jurisdiccion de Marina). A special tribunal taking cognizance of all matters relating to the navy and to the persons employed therein.

Fuero Municipal. The body of laws granted to a city or town for its government and the administration of justice.

Fuero Real. A code of laws promulgated by Alonzo el Sabio in 1255, and intended as an introduction to the larger and more comprehensive code called Las Siete Partidas, published eight years afterwards. For an analysis of this code, see Schmidt, Span. Law 67.

Fuero Viejo. The title of a compilation of Spanish Law, published about A. D. 992. Schm. Civil Law. introd. 65.

FUGA CATALORUM. In Old English Law. A drove of cattle. Fleta; Blount.

FUGACIA. A chase. Cowell; Blount.

FUGAM FECIT (Lat. he fled). In Old English Law. A phrase in an inquisition, signifying that a person fled for treason or felony. The effect of this is to make the party forfeit his goods absolutely, and the profits of his lands until he has been pardoned or acquitted.

FUGATOR. In English Law. A privilege to hunt. Blount.

A driver. Fugatores carrucarum, drivers of wagons. Fleta, lib. 2, c. 78.

FUGITIVE FROM JUSTICE. One who, having committed a crime, flees from the jurisdiction within which it was committed, to escape punishment.

In the absence of direct evidence on the question of flight, if it appear from the indictment or affidavit produced that the crime charged is atrocious in its nature, was recently committed, and the prosecution promptly instituted, the unexplained presence of the accused in another state immediately after the commission of the crime ought perhaps to be regarded as prima facie evidence of flight, sufficient, at least, to warrant an order of arrest. The order of surrender is not required, by the act of congress, to be made at the same time with the order of arrest, and time, therefore, can be taken, in doubtful cases, after the accused is arrested and secured, to hear proofs to establish or rebut such prima facie evidence; 6 Am. Jur. 226; 7 Bost. Law Rep. 386.

One convicted of a crime, who when called for sentence is found in another state, is a fugitive from justice; Hughes v. Pfanz, 138 Fed. 980, 71 C. C. A. 234.

The accused person may be arrested to await a demand; Ex parte Cubreth, 49 Cal. 436; but he cannot be surrendered before a formal demand is made; Botts v. Williams, 17 B. Monr. (Ky.) 687. But if he be so surrendered and returned to the state from which the requisition came, this is not a ground of discharge then; In re Dow, 18 Pa. 39.

The surrender of the accused must be made to an agent of the executive authority of the demanding state, duly appointed to receive the fugitive.

The proceedings of the executive authorities are subject to be reviewed on habeas corpus by the judicial power, and if found void the prisoner may be discharged; Ex parte Smith, 3 McLean 121, Fed. Cas. No. 12,968; In re Fetter, 23 N. J. L. 311, 57 Am. Dec. 382; Ex parte Thornton, 9 Tex. 635; Ex parte White, 49 Cal. 434; Kingsbury's Case, 106 Mass. 223; People v. Brady, 56 N. Y. 182; In re Cook, 49 Fed. 833. But the courts have no jurisdiction to compel the executive to comply with a requisition; Kentucky v. Dennison, 24 How. (U. S.) 66, 16 L. Ed. 717; Ex parte Manchester, 5 Cal. 237. Nor have the federal courts such jurisdiction; Kentucky v. Dennison, 24 How. (U. S.) 66, 16 L. Ed. 717. Nor will the court on habeas corpus try the validity of the indictment under which he is charged; Ex parte Pearce, 32 Tex. Cr. R. 301, 23 S. W. 15.

See EXTRADITION.

FUGITIVE'S GOODS. Under the old English Law, where a man fled for felony, and escaped, his own goods were not forfeited as bona fugitivorum until it was found by proceedings of record (e. g. before the coroner in the case of death) that he fled for the felony. Foxley's Case, 5 Co. 109 a. See FUGAM FECIT; WAIFS.

FUGITIVE SLAVE. One who, held in bondage, flees from his master's power.

Prior to the adoption of the constitution of the United States, the duty of surrendering slaves fleeing beyond the jurisdiction of the state or colony where they were held to service was not regarded as a perfect obligation, though, on the ground of inter-state comity, they were frequently surrendered to the master. Instances of such surrender or permission to reclaim occur in the history of the colonies as early as 1685; Hurd, Hab. Corp. 592. As slavery disappeared in some states, the difficulty of recovering in them slaves fleeing from those where it remained was greatly increased, and on some occasions reclamations became quite impracticable. The subject engaged the attention of the convention of 1787; and, at the instance of members from slaveholding states, a provision was inserted in the constitution for the surrender of such persons escaping from the state where they owed service, into another, which provision was considered a valuable accession to the security of that species of property; 4 Elliott Debates 487, 492; 5 id. 176, 286.

This provision is contained in art. iv. sec. 2 of the constitution, and is as follows:

"No person held to service or labor in one state, under the laws thereof, escaping into another, shall, in consequence of any law or regulation therein, be discharged from such service or labor, but shall be delivered up on claim of the party to whom such service or labor may be due."

Congress, conceiving it to be the duty of the federal government to provide by law, with adequate sanctions, for the execution of the duty thus enjoined by the constitution, by the act of February 12, 1793, and again by the amendatory and supplementary act of September 18, 1850, regulated the mode of arrest, trial, and surrender of such fugitives. Some of the states have, also, at times passed acts relating to the subject; but it has been decided by the supreme court of the United States that the power of legislation in the matter was vested exclusively in congress, and that all state legislation inconsistent with the laws of congress was unconstitutional and void; Prigg v. Pennsylvania, 16 Pet. (U. S.) 608, 10 L. Ed. 1060; Thornton's Case, 11 Ill. 332.

These acts of congress were held to be constitutional and valid in all their provisions; Prigg v. Pennsylvania, 16 Pet. (U. S.) 608, 10 L. Ed. 1060; Wright v. Deacon, 5 S. & R. (Pa.) 62; Glen v. Hodges, 9 Johns. (N. Y.) 67; In re Martin, 2 Paine, 348, Fed. Cas. No. 9,154; In re Sims, 7 Cush. (Mass.) 285; Ex parte Robinson, 6 McLean, 355, Fed. Cas. No. 11,935.

The 3d and 4th sections of act of 1793, 1 Stat. L. 302, authorized the arrest of a slave by the owner, his agent or attorney, and on proof before a United States judge or a magistrate, a certificate of ownership should be given and would be a warrant for removal. Under the act of 1850, 9 Stat. L. 462, the marshals of the United States were required to arrest such slaves.

The act of 1850, and the 3d and 4th sections of the act of 1793 were repealed by the act of June 28, 1864, 13 Stat. at L. 200. For some decisions as to the question of the interference between the acts of 1793 and 1850, see Miller v. McQuerry, 5 McLean, 469, Fed. Cas. No. 9,583; Norris v. Crocker, 13 How. (U. S.) 429, 14 L. Ed. 210.

In the practical application of the provisions of the acts of 1793 and 1850 for the reclamation of fugitive slaves, it was held that the owner was clothed with authority in every state of the Union to seize and recapture his slave wherever he could do it without any breach of the peace or illegal violence; Prigg v. Pennsylvania, 16 Pet. (U. S.) 608, 10 L. Ed. 1060; that he might arrest him on Sunday, in the night-time, or in the house of another if no breach of the peace was committed; Johnson v. Tompkins, Baldw. 577, Fed. Cas. No. 7,416; that if the arrest was by agent of the owner, he must be authorized by written power of attorney executed and authenticated as required by the act; Weimer v. Sloane, 6 McLean, 259, Fed. Cas. No. 17,363; and if his authority was demanded it should be shown; Driskill v. Parrish, 3 McLean, 631, Fed. Cas. No. 4,089; but he was not required to exhibit it to every one who might mingle in the crowd which obstructed him; Giltner v. Gorham, 4 McLean 402, Fed. Cas. No. 5,453; that, if resisted by force in making the arrest, the owner might use sufficient force to overcome the unlawful resistance offered without being guilty of the offence of riot; 3 Am. L. J. 258; Van Metre v. Mitchell, 7 Pa. L. J. 115; that whilst the examination was pending before the magistrate who had jurisdiction of the case, the person arrested was in custody of the law and might be imprisoned for safekeeping; In re Martin, 2 Paine, 348, Fed. Cas. No. 9,154; Worthington v. Preston, 4 Wash. C. C. 461, Fed. Cas. No. 18,055; Ex parte Robinson, 6 McLean 355, Fed. Cas. No. 11,935; that the act of Sept. 18, 1850, did not operate as a suspension of the writ of habeas corpus; 5 Op. Attys. Genl. 254; but that that writ could not be used by state officers to defeat the jurisdiction acquired by the federal authorities in such cases; In re Sims, 7 Cush. (Mass.) 285; Norris v. Newton, 5 McLean 92, Fed. Cas. No. 10,307; Charge to Grand Jury, 1 Blatchf. 635; Fed. Cas. No. 18,261; Ableman v. Booth, 21 How. (U. S.) 506, 16 L. Ed. 169.

The provisions of the constitution and laws above cited were held to extend only to cases where persons held to service or labor in one state or territory by the laws thereof escaped into another. Hence, if the owner voluntarily took his slave into such other state or territory, and the slave left him there or refused to return, he could not institute proceedings under those laws for his recovery; Ex parte Simmons, 4 Wash. C. C. 396, Fed. Cas. No. 12,863; Kauffman v. Oliver, 10 Pa. 517; Strader v. Graham, 10 How. (U. S.) 82, 13 L. Ed. 337. And children, born in a state where slavery prevailed, of a negro woman who was a fugitive slave, were not fugitive slaves or slaves who had escaped from service in another state, within the meaning of the constitution and acts of congress; Fields v. Walker, 23 Ala. 155.

Since the adoption of the thirteenth amendment of the U. S. constitution, the above is entirely obsolete and possesses only an historical interest.

FULL. Complete; entire; detailed.

FULL AGE. See AGE; INFANT.

FULL ANSWER. One which meets all the legal requirements.

FULL BLOOD. Whole blood; generally used to denote brothers and sisters who descend from the same father and mother.

FULL CONFIDENCE. Under a bequest to the wife of testator "absolutely, with full power for her to dispose of the same as she may think fit for the benefit of my family, having full confidence that she will do so," the words full confidence do not constitute a trust, but are merely an expression of the testator's wishes and belief, as distinguished from a direction amounting to an obligation; 8 Ch. D. 540.

FULL COURT. A court in banc with all the judges on the bench who are qualified to sit. It is not unusual for counsel in a case of great public importance, in the absence of one or more of the judges to ask for a postponement of a trial or argument in order that the cause may be heard and determined by a full court and not by a mere quorum. The granting of such an application is not a matter of right, but, in a case which appears to the court to justify it, the course proposed will generally be taken. Such applications are not unusual in the United States Supreme Court, in cases involving grave constitutional questions, and in the state courts in cases involving the life of a party or some grave public question. Sometimes where a case has been decided by a majority of a quorum, but a minority of the whole number of judges, a motion for a rehearing by the full court is allowed.

Formerly in England the expression was used when other judges sat with the judge who regularly held the court. Thus the Full Court of Appeal in Chancery consisted of the Lord Chancellor and Lords Justices sitting together. The Full Court in Divorce and Matrimonial Causes consisted of the Judge Ordinary and at least two other members of the court. These arrangements are, nominally at least, superseded under the Judicature Acts.

FULL DEFENCE. See DEFENCE.

FULL FAITH AND CREDIT. A phrase used in the constitution of the United States, which provides that full faith and credit shall be given in each state to the public acts, records, and judicial proceedings of every other state. See FOREIGN JUDGMENTS.

FULL LIFE. Life in fact and in law.

FULL POWERS. A document issued by the government of a state empowering its dipomatic agent to conduct special business with a foreign government.

FULL PROOF. In Civil Law. Proof of two witnesses, or a public instrument. Hallfax, Civil Law b. 3, c. 9, nn. 25, 30; 3 Bla. Com. 370.

Evidence which satisfies the minds of the jury of the truth of the fact in dispute, to the entire exclusion of every reasonable doubt. Kane v. Ins. Co., 38 N. J. L. 450, 20 Am. Rep. 409. See PLENA PROBATIO.

FULL RIGHT. The union of a good title with actual possession.

FULL WAGES. The seventh article of the Laws of Oleron provides: That if a mariner be taken sick on the voyage, he ought to be put on shore, and care should be taken of him at the expense of the ship; when the vessel is ready to sail, she is not to wait for him; but, still he is to be entitled to his full wages if he recover; and if he does not, his wife, or next of kin, is to have them; deducting only such charges as the master has been at for him. The phrase full wages means the same wages which he would have been entitled to had he lived and served out the whole voyage of the vessel. Sims v. Jackson, 1 Wash. C. C. 414, Fed. Cas. No. 12,890; 2 H. Bla. 606, note.

FULLUM AQUÆ. A stream, or stream of water. Blount.

FUMAGE, FUAGE, or FOUAGE. A tax paid to the sovereign for every house that had a chimney. It is probable that the hearth-money imposed by 13 & 14 Car. II. c. 10, took its origin hence. This hearth-money was declared a great oppression, and abolished by 1 W. & M. Stat. 1, c. 10, but a tax was afterwards laid upon houses, except cottages, and upon all windows, by 1 Wm. III. c. 18. The window duty was repealed by 14 & 15 Vict. c. 36. Whart. See HEARTH Money.

FUNCTION. The occupation of an office: by the performance of its duties, the officer is said to fill his function. Dig. 32. 65. 1.

FUNCTIONARY. One who is in office or in some public employment.

FUNCTUS OFFICIO (Lat.). A term applied to something which once has had life and power, but which has become of no virtue whatsoever.

For example, a warrant of attorney on which a judgment has been entered is functus officio, and a second judgment cannot be entered by virtue of its authority. When arbitrators cannot agree and choose an umpire, they are said to be functi officio. Wats. Arb. 94. If a bill of exchange be sent to the drawee, and he passes it to the credit of the holder, it is functus officio, and cannot be further negotiated; Savage v. Merle, 5 Pick. (Mass.) 85. When an agent has completed the business with which he was intrusted, his agency is functus officio.

FUND. "Merely a name for a collection or an appropriation of money. It may be nothing but a designation of one branch of the accounts of the state; or of a certain amount of money, when collected to be applied to a particular purpose. It may have no property and represent no investments; and what are called its revenues may include all the moneys appropriated or directed to be paid to it, or for its benefit, or that of the objects it represents." People v. R. Co., 34 Barb. (N. Y.) 135. See Stephens' Ex'rs v. Milnor, 24 N. J. Eq. 358; 7 H. L. Cas. 273; Miller v. Bradish, 69 Ia. 278, 28 N. W. 594.

FUNDAMENTAL. This word is applied to those laws which are the foundation of society. Those laws by which the exercise of power is restrained and regulated are fundamental. The constitution of the United States is the fundamental law of the land. See Wolfius, Inst. Nat. § 984.

FUNDAMUS. We found. One of the words by which a corporation was created in England. 1 Bl. Comm. 473; 3 Steph. Comm. 173. See CORPORATION.

FUNDATIO (Lat.). A founding.

FUNDATOR. A founder (q. v.).

FUNDI PATRIMONIALES. Lands of inheritance.

FUNDI PUBLICI. Public lands.

FUNDING SYSTEM. The practice of borrowing money to defray the expenses of government.

In the early history of the system it was usual to set apart the revenue from some particular tax as a fund to the principal and interest of the loan. The earliest record of the funding system is found in the history of Venice. In the year 1171, during a war between the republic and the Byzantine emperor Manuel Comnenas, a Venetian fleet ravaged the eastern coasts, but, being detained by negotiations at Chiòs, suffered severely from the plague. The remnant of the expedition, returning, took with it the frightful pestilence, which ravaged Venice and produced a popular commotion in which the doge was killed. To carry on the war, the new doge, Sebastian Giani, ordered a forced loan. Every citizen was obliged to contribute one-hundredth of his property, and he was to be paid by the state five per cent. interest, the revenues being mortgaged to secure the faithful performance of the contract. To manage the business, commissioners were appointed, called the Chamber of Loans, which after the lapse of centuries grew into the Bank of Venice. Florence and other Italian republics practised the system; and it afterwards became general in Europe. Its object is to provide large sums of money for the immediate exigencies of the state, which it would be impossible to raise by direct taxation.

In England the funding system was inaugurated in the reign of William III. The Bank of England, like the Bank of Venice and the Bank of St. George at Genoa, grew out of it. In order to make it easy to procure money to carry on the war with France, the government proposed to raise a loan, for which, as usual, certain revenues were to be set aside, and the subscribers were to be made a corporation, with exclusive banking privileges. The loan was rapidly subscribed for, and the Bank of England was the corporation which it brought into existence. It was formerly the practice in England to borrow money for fixed periods; and these loans were called terminable annuities. Of late years, however, the practice is different,—loans being payable only at the option of the government; these are termed interminable annuities. The rate of interest on the earlier loans was generally fixed at three and a half per cent. and sold at such a rate below par as to conform to the state of the money-market. It is estimated that two-fifths of the entire debt of England consists of this excess over the amount of money actually received for it. The object of such a plan was to promote speculation and attract capitalists; and it is still pursued in France.

Afterwards, however, the government receded from this policy, and, by borrowing at high rates, were enabled, when the rate of interest declined, by offering to pay off the loan, to reduce the interest materially. The national debt of England consists of many different loans, all of which are included in the term funds. Of these, the largest in amount and importance are the "three per cent. consolidated annuities," or consols, as they are commonly called. They originated in 1751, when an act was passed consolidating several separate three per cent. loans into one general stock, the dividends of which are payable on the 5th of January and 5th of July at the Bank of England. The bank being the fiscal agent of the government, pays the interest on most of the funds, and also keeps the transfer-books. When stock is sold, it is transferred on the books at the bank to the new purchaser, and the interest is paid to those parties in whose names the stock is registered, at the closing of the books a short time previous to the dividend-day. Stock is bought and sold at the stock exchange generally through brokers. Time sales, when the seller is not the actual possessor of the stock, are illegal, but common. They are usually made deliverable on certain fixed days, called accounting-days; and such transactions are called "for account," to distinguish them from the ordinary sales and purchases for cash. Stock-jobbers are persons who act as middlemen between sellers and purchasers. They usually fix a price at which they will sell and buy, so that sellers and purchasers can always find a market for stock, or can purchase it in such quantities as they may desire, without delay or inconvenience.

In America the funding system has been fully developed. The general government, as well as those of all the states, have found it necessary to anticipate their revenue for the promotion of public works and other purposes. The many magnificent works of internal improvement which have added so much to the wealth of the country were mainly constructed with money borrowed by the states. The canals of New York, and many railroads in the western states, owe their existence to the system.

The funding system enables the government to raise money in exigencies, and to spread over many years the taxation which would press too severely on one. It affords a ready method of investing money on good security, and it tends to identify the interest of the state and the people. But it is open to many objections,—the principal of which is that it induces statesmen to countenance expensive and oftentimes questionable projects who would not dare to carry out their plans were they forced to provide the means from direct taxation. McCulloch, Dict. of Comm.; Sewell, Banking.

FUNDITORES. Pioneers. Jac. L. Dict.

FUNDS. Cash on hand: as, A B is in funds to pay my bill on him. Stocks: as, A B has one thousand dollars in the funds. By public funds is understood the taxes, customs, etc., appropriated by the government for the discharge of its obligations.

In England "The Funds" are synonymous with "Government Funds," or "Public Funds;" 7 H. L. C. 280; and generally mean funded securities guaranteed by the English government; 27 L. J. Ch. 448; but do not include foreign bonds guaranteed by England; 2 Coll. 324; nor bank stock; 7 H. L. C. 273.

FUNDUS (Lat.). Land. A portion of territory belonging to a person. A farm. Lands, including houses; 4 Co. 87; Co. Litt. 5 a; 3 Bla. Com. 209.

FUNERAL EXPENSES. Money expended in procuring the interment of a corpse.

The person who orders the funeral is responsible personally for the expenses, and if the estate of the deceased should be insolvent, he must lose the amount. But if there are assets sufficient to pay these expenses, the executor or administrator is bound, upon an implied assumpsit, to pay them; 1 Campb. 298; Gregory v. Hooker's Adm'r, 8 N. C. 394, 9 Am. Dec. 646; 13 Viner, Abr. 563; O'Donnell v. Slack, 123 Cal. 285, 55 Pac. 906, 43 L. R. A. 388; Huhna v. Theller, 35 Misc. 296, 71 N. Y. Supp. 752.

Frequent questions arise as to the amount which is to be allowed to the executor or administrator for such expenses. It is exceedingly difficult to gather any certain rule from the numerous cases which have been decided upon this subject. Courts have taken into consideration the circumstances of each case, the rank in life of the decedent, whether his estate was insolvent or not, and when the executors have acted with common prudence or in obedience to the will, their expenses have been allowed. In a case where the testator directed that his remains should be buried at a church thirty miles distant from the place of his death, the sum of sixty pounds sterling was allowed; 3 Atk. 119. In another case, under peculiar circumstances, six hundred pounds were allowed; Chanc. Prec. 29. Where the intestate left a considerable estate, and no children, $258.75 was allowed, the greater part of which had been expended in erecting a tombstone over a vault in which the body was interred; Appeal of McGlinsey, 14 S. & R. (Pa.) 64. A sum of $127 for burial expenses is not unreasonable where deceased left an estate worth $800; Kittle v. Huntley, 67 Hun 617, 22 N. Y. Supp. 519.

In an estate of $2,800, the sum of $700 for a burial lot and monument was held excessive; In re Erlacher, 3 Redf. Sur. (N. Y.) 9; so was $490 for a casket and box for an infant whose estate was under $7,000; In re Kiernan, 38 Misc. 394, 77 N. Y. Supp. 924; and so $329 out of an estate of $500, for funeral expenses; In re Primmer's Estate, 49 Misc. 413, 99 N. Y. Supp. 530; and $810, out of an estate of $1,167 of a domestic servant; Estate of Cullen, 8 Pa. Super. Ct. 494; and $455 for funeral expenses out of an estate of less than $5,000; Foley v. Brocksmit, 119 Ia. 457, 93 N. W. 344, 60 L. R. A. 571, 97 Am. St. Rep. 324; but not $31 for carriages where the estate was $2,400; In re Osburn's Estate, 36 Or. 8, 58 Pac. 521. The expense of a gravestone comes under the head of funeral expenses; Van Emon v. Superior Court, 76 Cal. 589, 18 Pac. 877, 9 Am. St. Rep. 258; Owens v. Bloomer, 14 Hun (N. Y.) 296; In re Howard's Estate, 3 Misc. 170, 23 N. Y. Supp. 836; Pease v. Christman, 158 Ind. 642, 64 N. E. 90.

Funeral expenses usually have priority in the order of payment of debts.

A husband is liable for the funeral expenses of his wife; 1 H. Bla. 90; 12 C. B. N. S. 344; Cunningham v. Reardon, 98 Mass. 538, 96 Am. Dec. 670; Kenyon v. Brightwell, 120 Ga. 606, 48 S. E. 124, 1 Ann. Cas. 169. In some cases it is held that when he has paid them the husband is not entitled to reimbursement out of the wife's separate estate; Smyley v. Reese, 53 Ala. 89, 25 Am. Rep. 598; Appeal of Staples, 52 Conn. 425; In re Werlinger's Estate, 100 Cal. 345, 34 Pac. 825; contra, 33 Ch. Div. 575; 6 Madd. 90; McCue v. Garvey, 14 Hun (N. Y.) 562; McClellan v. Filson, 44 Ohio St. 184, 5 N. E. 861, 58 Am. Rep. 814; (where the wife's executor paid them); Pache v. Oppenheim, 93 App. Div. 221, 87 N. Y. Supp. 704; Nashville Trust Co.

v. Carr (Tenn.) 62 S. W. 204. The rule is not affected by the fact that the wife was separated by her fault from the husband; Seybold v. Morgan, 43 Ill. App. 39; or that she bequeathed money to another person who assisted in managing the funeral; Sears v. Giddey, 41 Mich. 590, 2 N. W. 917, 32 Am. Rep. 168.

A son-in-law is not liable to pay the funeral expenses of his mother-in-law; Kraan's Estate, 31 Pa. Co. Ct. R. 93. They are chargeable to the succession in Louisiana; Succession of McNeely, 50 La. Ann. 823, 24 South. 338. If a third party incurs a debt, the estate is not liable; Kenyon v. Brightwell, 120 Ga. 606, 48 S. E. 124, 1 Ann. Cas. 169. See 2 Wms. Exec. 166, n.; 3 id. 275, n.; 2 Bla. Com. 508; 3 Atk. 249; Bacon, Abr. Executors, etc. (L 4); Viner, Abr. Funeral Expenses.

See, generally, 27 Am. St. Rep. 732, n.; Wilson v. Staats, 33 N. J. Eq. 524-529; DEAD BODY.

FUNGIBLE. A term applicable to things that are consumed by the use, as wine, oil, etc., the loan of which is subject to certain rules, and governed by the contract called mutuum. See Schmidt, Civ. Law of Spain and Mexico 145; Story, Bailm.

FUNGIBLE THINGS. When the subject of the obligation is a thing of a given class, the thing is said to be fungible; i. e., the delivery of any object which answers to the generic description will satisfy the obligation. Campbell's, Austin, 61.

FUR (Lat.). A thief. One who stole without using force, as distinguished from a robber. See FURTUM.

FUR. Skins valuable chiefly on account of the fur. Skins is a term appropriated to those valuable chiefly for the skin. The word hides is inapplicable to fur skins. Astor v. Ins. Co., 7 Cow. (N. Y.) 202, 214.

FUR MANIFESTUS (Lat.). In the Civil Law. A manifest thief. A thief who is taken in the very act of stealing.

FURANDI ANIMUS. An intention of stealing.

FURCA. A fork. A gallows or gibbet. Bract. fol. 56.

FURCA ET FLAGELLUM (Lat. gallows and whip). The meanest of servile tenures, where the bondman was at the disposal of the lord for life and limb. Cowell.

FURCA ET FOSSA (Lat. gallows and pit). A jurisdiction of punishing felons,—the men by hanging, the woman by drowning. Skene; Spelman, Gloss.; Cowell.

FURIGELDUM. A mulct paid for theft. Jac. L. Dict.

FURIOSITY. Madness by which the judgment is prevented from being applied to the ordinary purposes of life. Bell. It is distinguished from fatuity or idiotcy. Toml.

FURIOSUS (Lat.). An insane man; a madman; a lunatic.

In general, such a man can make no contract, because he has no capacity or will; Furiosus nullum negotium gerere potest, quia non intelligit quod agit. Inst. 3. 20. 8. Indeed, he is considered so incapable of exercising a will, that the law treats him as if he were absent; Furiosi nulla voluntas est. Dig. L. 17, 40. Furiosus absentis loco est. Dig. L. 17, 124. See INSANE; NON COMPOS MENTIS.

FURLINGUS (Lat.). A furlong, or a furlow one-eighth part of a mile long. Co. Litt. 5 b.

FURLONG. A measure of length, being forty poles, or one-eighth of a mile.

FURLOUGH. A permission given in the army and navy to an officer or private to absent himself for a limited time.

FURNAGE (from furnus, an oven). A sum of money paid to the lord by the tenants, who were bound by their tenure to bake at the lord's oven, for the privilege of baking elsewhere. The word is also used to signify the gain or profit taken and received for baking.

FURNITURE. Personal chattels in the use of a family.

"The word relates, ordinarily, to movable personal chattels. It is very general, both in meaning and application; and its meaning changes, so as to take the color of, or be in accord with, the subject to which it is applied. Thus, we hear of the furniture of a parlor, of a bed-chamber, of a kitchen, of shops of various kinds, of a ship, of a horse, of a plantation, etc. The articles, utensils, implements, used in these various connections, as also those used in a drug or other store, as the furniture thereof, differ in kind according to the purpose which they are intended to subserve; yet being put and employed in their several places as the equipment thereof, for ornament, or to promote comfort, or to facilitate the business therein done, and being kept, or intended to be kept, for those or some one of those purposes, they pertain to such places respectively, and collectively constitute the furniture thereof;" Fore v. Hibbard, 63 Ala. 410.

The expression household furniture must be understood to mean those vessels, utensils, or goods, which, not becoming fixtures, are designed chiefly for use in the family, as instruments of the household and for conducting and managing household affairs. It does not include a trunk nor a cabinet intended for keeping jewelry, etc.; Towns v. Pratt, 33 N. H. 345, 66 Am. Dec. 726.

It is held that by the term household furniture in a will, all personal chattels will pass which may contribute to the use or convenience of the householder or the ornament of the house: as, plate, linen, china (both useful and ornamental), and pictures; Bunn v. Winthrop, 1 Johns. Ch. (N. Y.) 329; 1 S. &

S. 189; 2 Will. Ex. 752; Jarm. Wills 712, n.; Marquam v. Sengfelder, 24 Or. 2, 32 Pac. 676; Endicott v. Endicott, 41 N. J. Eq. 93, 3 Atl. 157; bronzes, statuary, and pictures; Endicott v. Endicott, 41 N. J. Eq. 93, 3 Atl. 157; but a watch will not; Gooch v. Gooch, 33 Me. 535; nor will books; 3 Ves. 311; or furniture of a school-room in a boarding school kept by a teacher; Appeal of Hoopes, 60 Pa. 220, 100 Am. Dec. 562; or silver plate used in a hotel; Dayton v. Tillou, 1 Rob. (N. Y.) 21. A sewing machine and piano were held exempt from attachment as "household furniture"; Von Storch v. Winslow, 13 R. I. 23, 43 Am. Rep. 10; but a doubt was expressed as to the piano, and as to that it was held contra in Dunlap v. Edgerton, 30 Vt. 224; Tanner v. Billings, 18 Wis. 163, 86 Am. Dec. 755.

FURNITURE OF A SHIP. This term includes everything with which a ship requires to be furnished or equipped to make her seaworthy; it comprehends all articles furnished by ship-chandlers, which are almost innumerable. Weaver v. S. G. Owens, 1 Wall. Jr. 369, Fed. Cas. No. 17,310.

FURNIVAL'S INN. A place in Holborn, in London, which was formerly an Inn of Chancery. 1 Steph. Com. 19, n. See INNS OF COURT.

FURST AND FONDONG. Time to advise or take counsel. Jac. L. Dict.

FURTA. A right or privilege derived from the king as supreme lord of a state to try, condemn, and execute thieves and felons within certain bounds or districts of an honour, manor, etc. Cowell seems to be doubtful whether this word should not read furca, which means directly a gallows. Cowell; Holthouse, L. Dict.

FURTHER ADVANCE. A second or subsequent loan of money to a mortgagor by a mortgagee, either upon the same security as the original loan was advanced upon, or an additional security. Equity considers the arrears of interest on mortgage security converted into principal, by agreement between the parties, as a further advance. Whart.

FURTHER ASSURANCE. See COVENANT FOR FURTHER ASSURANCE.

FURTHER CONSIDERATION. It frequently happens that a decree in Chancery directs accounts and inquiries to be taken before the chief clerk. The hearing of any question arising out of such inquiries is called a hearing on further consideration. Hunt. Eq. Rules Sup. Ct. xl. 10.

FURTHER DIRECTIONS. When accounts in Chancery were taken before Masters, a hearing after a master had made his report in pursuance of the directions of the decree was called a hearing on further directions. This stage of suit is now called a hearing on further consideration. Hunt. Eq. See 2 Dan. Ch. Pr. (5th ed.) 1233, n.

FURTHER HEARING. Hearing at another time.

Prisoners are frequently committed for further hearing, either when there is not sufficient evidence for a final commitment, or because the magistrate has not time, at the moment, to hear the whole of the evidence. The magistrate is required by law, and by every principle of humanity, to hear the prisoner as soon as possible after a commitment for further hearing; and if he neglects to do so within a reasonable time, he becomes a trespasser; 10 B. & C. 28; 5 M. & R. 53. Fifteen days was held an unreasonable time, unless under special circumstances; 4 C. & P. 134; Com. v. Ross, 6 S. & R. (Pa.) 427.

In Massachusetts, magistrates may, by statute, adjourn the case for ten days; Gen. Stat. c. 170, § 17. It is the practice in England to commit for three days, and then from three days to three days; 1 Chitty, Cr. Law 74.

FURTHER MAINTENANCE OF ACTION, PLEA TO. A plea grounded upon some fact or facts which have arisen since the commencement of the suit, and which the defendant puts forward for the purpose of showing that the plaintiff should not further maintain his action. Brown.

FURTIVE. In Old English Law. Stealthily; by stealth. Fleta, lib. 1, c. 38, 3.

FURTUM (Lat.). Theft. The fraudulent appropriation to one's self of the property of another, with an intention to commit theft, without the consent of the owner. Fleta, l. 1, c. 36; Bract. 150; Co. 3d Inst. 107.

The thing which has been stolen. Bract. 151.

FURTUM CONCEPTUM (Lat.). The theft which was disclosed when, upon searching any one in the presence of witnesses in due form, the thing stolen is found. Detected theft is perhaps, the nearest concise translation of the phrase, though not quite exact. Vicat, Voc. Jur.

FURTUM GRAVE (Lat.). Aggravated theft. Formerly there were three classes of this theft: first, by landed men; second, by a trustee or one holding property under a trust; third, theft of the majora animalia (larger animals), including children. Bell, Dict.

FURTUM MANIFESTUM (Lat.). Open theft. Theft where a thief is caught with the property in his possession. Bract. 150 b.

FURTUM OBLATUM (Lat.). The theft committed when stolen property is given to any one so as not to be found in the thief's possession. The crime of receiving stolen property. Calvinus, Lex.

FUSTIGATIO. In English Law. A beating with sticks or club; one of the ancient kinds of punishment of malefactors. Bract. fol. 104 b, lib. 3, tr. 1, c. 6.

FUSTIS. In Old English Law. A staff used in making livery of seisin. Bract. fol. 40.

FUTHWITE, or FITHWITE. A fine for fighting or breaking the peace. Cowell; Cun. L. Dict.

FUTURE ACQUIRED PROPERTY. Mortgages, especially of railroad companies are frequently made in terms to cover after-acquired property; such as rolling stock, etc. Such mortgages are valid; Philadelphia, W. & B. R. Co. v. Woelpper, 64 Pa. 366, 3 Am. Rep. 596; Pierce v. Emery, 32 N. H. 484; Shaw v. Bill, 95 U. S. 10, 24 L. Ed. 333; L. R. 16 Eq. 383. This may include future net earnings; Dunham v. Isett, 15 Ia. 284; the proceeds to be received from the sale of surplus lands; L. R. 2 Ch. 201; a ditch or flume in process of construction, which was held to cover all improvements and fixtures thereafter to be put on the line thereof; De Arguello v. Greer, 26 Cal. 620; rolling stock, etc.; Philadelphia, W. & B. R. Co. v. Woelpper, 64 Pa. 366, 3 Am. Rep. 596; Benjamin v. R. Co., 49 Barb. (N. Y.) 441. Future calls of assessments on stock cannot be mortgaged; L. R. 10 Eq. 681; but calls already made can be; id.

Locomotives bought under a conditional sale, reserving title in the vendor, pass under an after-acquired clause to a mortgagee of the railroad, subject to the vendor's rights; Contracting & Building Co. of Kentucky v. Trust Co., 108 Fed. 1, 47 C. C. A. 143.

A power in a Kentucky hotel company's charter to mortgage "all its property" does not sustain a mortgage covering after-acquired personal property; In re New Galt House Co., 199 Fed. 533, following Kentucky cases, but the authorities are contra; In re Medina Quarry Co., 179 Fed. 929; Trust Co. of America v. City of Rhinelander, 182 Fed. 64; Zartman v. Bank, 189 N. Y. 267, 82 N. E. 127, 12 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1083.

By statutes in most of the states a will speaks as of the death of the testator and ordinarily passes property acquired after its date. See SALE; EXPECTANCY; MORTGAGE.

FUTURE ADVANCES. See MORTGAGE.

FUTURE ESTATE. An estate which is to commence in possession in the future (in futuro). It includes remainders, reversions, and estates limited to commence in futuro without a particular estate to support them, which last are not good at common law except in the case of terms for years. See 2 Bla. Com. 165. In New York law it has been defined "an estate limited to commence in possession at a future day, either without the intervention of a precedent estate, or on the determination by lapse of time, or otherwise, of a precedent estate created at the same time," thus excluding reversions, which cannot be said to be created at the same time, because they are a remnant of the original estate remaining in the grantor; 11 N. Y. Rev. Stat. 3d ed. 9, § 10. See, also, How.

St. Mich. § 5526; Gen. St. Minn. 1878, c. 45, § 10; L'Etourneau v. Henquenct, 89 Mich. 428, 50 N. W. 1077, 28 Am. St. Rep. 310.

FUTURE USES. See CONTINGENT USES.

FUTURES. This term has grown out of those purely speculative transactions, in which there is a nominal contract of sale for future delivery, but where in fact none is ever intended or executed. The nominal seller does not have or expect to have the stock or merchandise he purports to sell, nor does the nominal buyer expect to receive it or pay the price. Instead of that, a percentage or "margin" is paid, which is increased or diminished as the market rates go down or up and accounted for to the buyer. This is simple speculation and gambling; mere wagering on prices within a given time. King v. Quidnick Co., 14 R. I. 138. See GAMING.

FUTURI (Lat.). Those who are to be. Part of the commencement of old deeds. "Sciant præsentis et futuri, quod ego, talis, dedi et concessi," etc. (Let all men now living and to come know that I, A B, have, etc.). Bract. 34 b.

FYGTWITE. One of the fines incurred for homicide. See FIGHTWITE.

FYKE. A bow-net for catching fish. Pub. St. Mass. 1882, p. 129. Fyke nets are prohibited in Pennsylvania by Act of 1901.

FYNDERINGA (Sax.). An offence or trespass for which the fine or compensation was reserved to the king's pleasure. Leges Hen. I. c. 10. Its nature is not known. Spelman reads fynderinga, and interprets it treasure trove; but Cowell reads fyrderinga, and interprets it a joining of the king's fird or host, a neglect to do which was punished by a fine called firdwite. See Spelman, Gloss. Du Cange agrees with Cowell.

FYRD, or FYRDUNG. The military array or land force of the whole country. Contribution to the fyrd was one of the imposts forming the trinoda necessitas. Whart.

FYRDWITE. A fine for neglect of military duty. If the lord did not respond to the king's call for the quota of milites which he was required to send, he must pay the fine for each man short. The man was bound to the lord, not to the king. Maitl. Domesd. Book and Beyond 159, 161. See FYRTHWITE.

FYRTHWITE, or FRIDWITE. A mulct paid by one who deserted the army. Cowell; Cun. L. Dict. Doubtless these words and Fyrdwite (q. v.) were different forms of the same thing.

G

G. The seventh letter of the alphabet. In Law French it is often used at the beginning of words for the English W, as in gage for wage, garranty for warranty, gast for waste.

GABEL (Lat. rectigal). A tax, imposition, or duty. This word is said to have the same signification that gabelle formerly had in France. Cunningham, Dict. But this seems to be an error; for gabelle signified in that country, previous to its revolution, a duty upon salt. Merlin, Rép. Coke says that gabel or garcl, gabulum, gabellum, gabelletum, gabelletum, and gavilletum, signify a rent, duty, or service yielded or done to the king or any other lord. Co. Litt. 142 a. See GAVEL.

GABELLA. A tax or duty on personalty. Cowell; Spel. Gloss.

GABLATORES. Those who paid gabel.

GABLUM (spelled, also, gabulum, gabula). The gable-end of a building. Kennett, Paroch. Antiq. p. 201; Cowell.

A tax. Du Cange.

See GAFOL.

GABULUS DENARIORUM. Money rent. Seld. Tit. 321.

GADSDEN PURCHASE. A term commonly applied to the territory acquired by the United States from Mexico by treaty of December 30, 1853, known as the Gadsden Treaty. It extended the southern boundary of Arizona south of the Gila river, and extended the southern boundary of New Mexico, adding extensively to those territories. The treaty gave the United States freedom of transit for mails, merchandise and troops across the Isthmus of Tehautepec, and abrogated Art. XI of the treaty of Guadalupe Hidalgo, which bound the United States to prevent incursions of Indians from the United States into Mexico and to restore Mexican prisoners captured by such Indians. The boundary line between Mexico and the United States was marked by joint commissioners in 1855 and 1891. The report of the second commission was published in 1899.

GAFOL (spelled, also, gabella, gavel). Rent; tax; interest of money. Rent or customary performance of agricultural services. 3 Holdsw. Hist. E. L. 224.

Gafol gild. Payment of such rent, etc. Gafol land was land liable to tribute or tax; Cowell; or land rented; Saxon Dict. See Taylor, Hist. of Gavelkind pp. 26, 1021; Anc. Laws & Inst. of Eng.; Maitl. Domesd. 44.

GAGE, GAGER (Law Lat. vadium). Personal property placed by a debtor in possession of his creditor as a security for the payment of his debt; a pawn or pledge (q. v.). Granv. lib. 10, c. 6; Britton c. 27.

There was also a gage of land, which, in medieval English law, was characterized by delivery of immediate possession to the gagee, who was then as in modern times a creditor who took the gage as a security. There were two forms, the usufruct gage and the property gage. The former included the vadium vivum and the vadium mortuum.

The property gage involved the feature of forfeiture, either (1) where the gagee received possession at once, but not proprietorship until default, and (2) where he acquired immediate proprietorship, terminable, however, upon payment of the debt by a certain day. In each case forfeiture followed default without reference to the relative values of the land and the debt.

The modern idea of a gage of land as a security for a debt, with possession in the debtor, was a development of the period after the Norman Conquest, in which there was so rapid a growth in English law of the tendency to foster the creation of credits and facilities for the use of all kinds of property as security for loans and debts. This change of the point of view was pari passu with the development of the more numerous and effective forms of actions and executions. The gage of property, whether real or personal, became the creation of a mere security by mortgage, pledge, or other lien. As to the historical development of the gage of land, see two papers by H. D. Haseltine in 17 Harv. L. Rev. 549, 18 id. 36 (3 Sel. Essays Anglo-Amer. L. H. 661).

To pledge; to wage. Webster Dict.

Gager is used both as noun and verb: e. g. gager del ley, wager of law; Jacobs; gager ley, to wage law; Britton c. 27; gager deliverance, to put in sureties to deliver cattle distrained; Termes de la Ley; Kitchen, fol. 145; Fitzh. N. B. fol. 67, 74.

Estates in gage are those held in vadio or pledge; vivum vadium is a vifgage or living pledge; a mortgage is mortuum vadium, a dead-gage or pledge; for, whatsoever profit it yields, it redeems not itself, unless the whole amount secured is paid at the appointed time. Cowell.

GAGER DELIVERANCE. One who had distrained and was sued, but had delivered the cattle distrained, was obliged not only to avow the distress but also to furnish pledge or surety to deliver them, or, as it was called, gager deliverance, literally, to deposit or undertake for the discharge. See Fitz. N. B. 67; Kelham, Dict.

GAGER DEL LEY. Wager of law (q. v.). See GAGE.

GAINAGE. Wainage, or the draught-oxen, horses, wain, plough, and furniture for carrying on the work of tillage. Also, the land tilled itself, or the profit arising from it. Old N. B. fol. 117.

GAINER. To obtain by husbandry. Gainure. Tillage. Gainery. Tillage or the profit therefrom or from the beasts used in it. Gainé, gaignent (que), who plough or till. Kelham; Stat. Westm. 1, cc. 16, 17.

GAINOR. One who occupies or cultivates arable land; a sokeman (q. v.) Old N. B. 12.

GALE. The payment of a rent or annuity. GABEL.

GALLON. A liquid measure, containing two hundred and thirty-one cubic inches, or four quarts. The imperial gallon contains about 277 and the ale gallon 282 cubic inches.

GALLOWS. A structure on which to hang criminals condemned to death. In the thirteenth century there was in certain cases power given to him who caught a thief with stolen goods upon him, to hang him, and it is said that "the manorial gallows was a common object of the country." 1 Poll. & Matl. 564. See INFANGENETHEF; UTFANGENETHEF.

GAMACTA. A stroke or blow. Spel. Gloss.

GAMALIS. A child born in lawful wedlock; also one born to betrothed but unmarried parents. Spel. Gloss.

GAMBLE. To engage in unlawful play. To play games for stakes or bet in them. It is the most apt word in the language to express these ideas; Bennett v. State, 2 Yerg. (Tenn.) 472.

A gambler is one who follows or practices games of chance or skill with the expectation and purpose of thereby winning money or other property. Buckley v. O'Neil, 113 Mass. 193, 18 Am. Rep. 466. A common gambler is one who furnishes facilities for gambling, or keeps or exhibits a gambling table, establishment, device, or apparatus. People v. Sponsler, 1 Dak. 291, 46 N. W. 459, citing cases. A gambling policy is a life-insurance policy taken out by one who has no insurable interest in the life of the assured. See INSURABLE INTEREST. A gambling device is any contrivance or apparatus by which it is determined who is the winner or loser in a chance or contest on which money or value is staked or risked; Portis v. State, 27 Ark. 362; State v. Grimes, 49 Minn. 443, 52 N. W. 42; and the courts look to the substance of the game and not to the name merely; Smith v. State, 17 Tex. 191. The words "or other device" in an anti-gambling statute are not too loose and vague to be the basis of an indictment; U. S. v. Speeden, 1 Cra. C. C. 535, Fed. Cas. No. 16,366; contra; State v. Mann, 2 Or. 238. The term does not include implements used also for innocent amusement, as a pack of cards; State v. Hardin, 1 Kan. 474; nor is a horse-race a gambling device; State v. Lemon, 46 Mo. 375; nor the "game of cards commonly called poker"; State v. Mann, 2 Or. 238, where it was said that a device must be something tangible, and a game is not that but merely the result of using the device; but this ruling is criticized by Deady, J., in In re Lee Tong, 18 Fed. 253, with which also should be examined

State v. Gitt Lee, 6 Or. 428. See 2 Whart. Cr. L. § 1465; GAMING; LOTTERY; FUTURES; STOCK; WAGER.

GAMBLING CONTRACTS. See WAGER.

GAME. Birds and beasts of a wild nature, obtained by fowling and hunting. Racon, Abr. See Coolidge v. Choate, 11 Metc. (Mass.) 79.

As applied to animals it is to be understood in its ordinary sense, in the absence of statutory definition; Gunn v. State, 89 Ga. 341, 15 S. E. 458.

A contest. Playing golf alone on Sunday is not playing the game of golf; [1908] E. D. C. 43 (So. African).

GAME LAWS. Laws regulating the killing or taking of birds, and beasts, as game. The English game laws are founded on the idea of restricting the right of taking game to certain privileged classes, generally landholders, and are said to be directly descended from the old forest laws. The doctrine as laid down by Blackstone that the sole right of hunting and killing game was at common law vested in the crown has been controverted by Prof. Christian who clearly demonstrated that the owner of the soil, or the lessee or occupier, if no reservation was made in the lease, possessed the exclusive right to such game restriction. In 1831 the English law was so modified as to enable any one to obtain a certificate or license to kill game on payment of a fee.

The laws relating to game in the United States were generally, if not universally, framed with reference to protecting the game from indiscriminate and unreasonable havoc, leaving all persons free to take game under certain restrictions as to the season of the year and the means of capture. But the more recent acts have provided other restrictions, such as requiring licenses, etc.

As the most effective means of enforcing such statutes, most of them prohibit all persons, including licensed dealers, under penalty, from buying or selling or even having in possession or control any game purchased within a certain period after the commencement of the close season. The enforcement of these penalties has been fruitful of much litigation.

A statute forbidding any one to kill, sell, or have in possession woodcock, etc., between specified days has been held not to apply to such lawfully taken in another state; Com. v. Hall, 128 Mass. 410, 35 Am. Rep. 387; Roth v. State, 51 Ohio St. 209, 37 N. E. 259, 46 Am. St. Rep. 566 (followed in State v. Rodman, 58 Minn. 393, 59 N. W. 1099); Com. v. Wilkinson, 139 Pa. 298, 21 Atl. 14; contra as to game unlawfully taken in another state; 35 Am. Rep. 390, note; State v. Saunders, 19 Kan. 127, 27 Am. Rep. 98; L. R. 2 C. P. Div. 553; People v. O'Neil, 71 Mich. 325, 39 N. W. 1; it has been held not to be an offence to expose live birds for sale under a statute prohibiting the killing or having possession of certain birds after the same are killed; People v. Fishbough, 134 N. Y. 393, 31 N. E. 983, reversing 58 Hun 404, 12 N. Y. Supp. 24; and the mere possession of game during the closed season does not constitute an offence if it were killed during the open season; State v. Bucknam, 88 Me. 385, 34 Atl. 170, 51 Am. St. Rep. 406; but a statute which forbids the sale or having in possession for the purpose of sale, of such game during the close season, is constitutional, and a valid exercise of the police power, even if it were killed out of the state; In re Deininger, 108 Fed. 623.

A state may forbid those in rightful possession of game taken within the state from selling it; Ex parte Blardone, 55 Tex. Cr. R. 189, 115 S. W. 838, 116 S. W. 1199, 21 L. R. A. (N. S.) 607; American Express Co. v. People, 133 Ill. 649, 24 N. E. 758, 9 L. R. A. 138, 23 Am. St. Rep. 641; Ex parte Kenneke, 136 Cal. 527, 69 Pac. 261, 89 Am. St. Rep. 177; State v. Dow, 70 N. H. 286, 47 Atl. 734, 53 L. R. A. 314; State v. Heger, 194 Mo. 707, 93 S. W. 252; or may make it an offence to have in possession, for the purpose of transportation beyond the state, birds which have been lawfully killed within the state; Geer v. Connecticut, 161 U. S. 519, 16 Sup. Ct. 600, 40 L. Ed. 793. Such legislation is not an unconstitutional interference with interstate commerce; id.; New York v. Hesterberg, 211 U. S. 31, 29 Sup. Ct. 10, 53 L. Ed. 75; Organ v. State, 56 Ark. 267, 19 S. W. 840. An act declaring it unlawful in a non-resident to hunt or fish at any season of the year was held unconstitutional as denying the equal protection of the law to the non-resident land owner which was afforded to the resident land owner; State v. Mallory, 73 Ark. 236, 89 S. W. 955, 67 L. R. A. 773, 3 Ann. Cas. 852. The Lacey Act provides that all bodies of foreign game birds, the importation of which is prohibited, or of any game birds transported into any state, shall be subject therein to the operation of its laws; People v. Hesterberg, 184 N. Y. 126, 76 N. E. 1032, 3 L. R. A. (N. S.) 163, 128 Am. St. Rep. 528, 6 Ann. Cas. 353; New York v. Hesterberg, 211 U. S. 31, 29 Sup. Ct. 10, 53 L. Ed. 75; Ex parte Maier, 103 Cal. 476, 37 Pac. 402, 42 Am. St. Rep. 129; State v. Rodman, 58 Minn. 393, 59 N. W. 1098; Roth v. State, 51 Ohio St. 209, 37 N. E. 259, 46 Am. St. Rep. 566; a statute forbidding the possession of game in the close season extends to game in cold storage; State v. Judy, 7 Mo. App. 524; one forbidding the sale of trout applies to trout artificially propagated; Com. v. Gilbert, 160 Mass. 157, 35 N. E. 454, 22 L. R. A. 439. A statute forbidding the transportation of game includes deer in a private park; Dieterich v. Fargo, 119 App. Div. 315, 104 N. Y. Supp. 334.

An act prohibiting the taking of game by aliens and forbidding their possession of a gun or rifle is not obnoxious to the XIVth Amendment or the treaty with Italy; Com. v. Patsone, 231 Pa. 46, 79 Atl. 928, affirmed in Supreme Court of United States, 232 U. S. 138, 34 Sup. Ct. 281, 58 L. Ed. — (January, 1914).

See, generally, Austin, Farm and Game Law; and, for the English game laws at the end of the 18th century, Jacob, Law Dict.

GAMING. A contract between two or more persons by which they agree to play by certain rules at cards, dice, or other contrivance, and that one shall be the loser and the other the winner. Gaming is not an offence eo nomine; Harkey v. State (Tex.) 25 S. W. 423.

When considered in itself, and without regard to the end proposed by the players, there is nothing in it contrary to natural equity, and the contract will be considered as a reciprocal gift, which the parties make of the thing played for, under certain conditions.

There are some games which depend altogether upon skill, others which depend upon chance, and others which are of a mixed nature. Billiards is an example of the first; lottery, of the second; and backgammon, of the last. See State v. Gupton, 30 N. C. 271. The decisions as to what constitutes gaming have not been uniform; but under the statutes making it a penal offence, it may be defined as a staking on chance where chance is the controlling factor; In re Lee Tong, 18 Fed. 253; that betting on a horse race is so, see Ellis v. Beale, 18 Me. 337, 36 Am. Dec. 726; Tatman v. Strader, 23 Ill. 439; Cheesum v. State, 8 Blackf. (Ind.) 332, 44 Am. Dec. 771; Wade v. Deming, 9 Ind. 35; Shrophire v. Glascock, 4 Mo. 536, 31 Am. Dec. 189; Garrison v. McGregor, 51 Ill. 473; contra, State v. Rorie, 23 Ark. 726; State v. Hayden, 31 Mo. 35; Com. v. Shelton, 8 Gratt. (Va.) 592; that a billiard table is a gaming table; People v. Harrison, 28 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 247; State v. Bishel, 39 Ia. 42; contra, State v. Hope, 15 Ind. 474; Blewett v. State, 34 Miss. 606. Baseball is a game of skill within the criminal offence of betting on such a game; Mace v. State, 58 Ark. 79, 22 S. W. 1108. The following are additional examples of illegal gaming: cock fighting and betting thereon; Com. v. Tilton, 8 Metc. (Mass.) 232; Bagley v. State, 1 Humph. (Tenn.) 486; the game of "equality;" U. S. v. Speeden, 1 Cra. C. C. 535, Fed. Cas. No. 16,366; a "gift enterprise;" Bell v. State, 5 Sneed (Tenn.) 507; Eubanks v. State, 3 Heisk. (Tenn.) 488; "keno;" Miller v. State, 48 Ala. 122; City of New Orleans v. Miller, 7 La. Ann. 651; "loto;" Lowry v. State, 1 Mo. 722; betting on "pool;" State v. Jackson, 39 Mo. 420; State v. Sanders, 86 Ark. 353, 111 S. W. 454, 19 L. R. A. (N. S.) 913; a ten-pin alley; Spaight v. State, 29 Ala. 32; contra, State v. King, 113 N. C. 631,

E. 35; throwing dice or playing any game of hazard, to determine who shall pay for liquor or other article bought; Com. v. Taylor, 14 Gray (Mass.) 26; Com. v. Gourdi, 14 Gray (Mass.) 390; or throwing dice for money; Parmer v. State, 91 Ga. 152, 16 S. E. 937; one who keeps tables on which "poker" is played, but is not directly interested in the game, is not guilty of gaming under the Virginia code; Nuckolls v. Com., 32 Gratt. (Va.) 884; merely betting at "faro" is not carrying on the game; Ex parte Ah Yem, 53 Cal. 246; the law against any game cannot be evaded by changing the name of the game; Smith v. State, 17 Tex. 191; athletic contests, when not conducted brutally, even when played for a stake, have been held lawful; 2 Whar. Cr. L. § 1465; betting upon a foot race is gaming within the meaning of a statute; Jones v. Cavanaugh, 149 Mass. 124, 21 N. E. 306; pin pool has been held not to be a gambling game; State v. Quaid, 43 La. Ann. 1076, 10 South. 183, 26 Am. St. Rep. 207.

The mere fact that the loser of the game paid the charges thereon is held to constitute gaming; Hamilton v. State, 75 Ind. 586; State v. Miller, 53 Ia. 154, 4 N. W. 900; State v. Leighton, 23 N. H. 167; Ward v. State, 17 Ohio St. 32; contra, State v. Quaid, 43 La. Ann. 1076, 10 South. 183, 26 Am. St. Rep. 207; Breninger v. Treasurer of Town of Belvidere, 44 N. J. L. 350; People v. Forbes, 52 Hun 30, 4 N. Y. Supp. 757. See State v. Sanders, 86 Ark. 353, 111 S. W. 454, 19 L. R. A. (N. S.) 913.

In general, at common law, all games are lawful, unless some fraud has been practised or such games are contrary to public policy. Each of the parties to the contract must have a right to the money or thing played for. He must have given his full and free consent, and not have been entrapped by fraud. There must be equality in the play. The play must be conducted fairly. But, even when all these rules have been observed, the courts will not countenance gaming by giving too easy a remedy for the recovery of money won at play; Bacon, Abr. It has been held that money lost at a game of "five-up" may be recovered; Shinn v. Wimberly (Miss.) 12 South. 333. See also Crooks v. McMahon, 48 Mo. App. 48; Smith v. Ray, 89 Ga. 838, 16 S. E. 90.

But when fraud has been practised the contract is void; and in some cases, when the party has been guilty of cheating, by playing with false dice, cards, and the like, he may be indicted at common law; 1 Russ. Cr. 406.

Statutes have been passed in perhaps all the states forbidding gaming for money at certain games, and prohibiting the recovery of money lost at such games; and equity will not lend its aid in a gambling transaction either to the winner to compel payment of his unpaid accounts or to the loser who has paid his losses to enable him to recover them back, whether the loser pays his losses in cash or in negotiable securities; Albertson v. Laughlin, 173 Pa. 525, 34 Atl. 216, 51 Am. St. Rep. 777.

An act subjecting a building used for gambling to a judgment of an informer for money lost there at play is not a taking without due process of law; Marvin v. Trout, 199 U. S. 212, 26 Sup. Ct. 31, 50 L. Ed. 157, affirming 70 Ohio St. 437, 72 N. E. 1161; Trout v. Marvin, 62 Ohio St. 132, 56 N. E. 655. Nor is an act authorizing the seizure and destruction of gambling devices; J. B. Mullen & Co. v. Mosley, 13 Idaho 457, 90 Pac. 986; Frost v. People, 193 Ill. 635, 61 N. E. 1054, 86 Am. St. Rep. 352; Collins v. Lean, 68 Cal. 284, 9 Pac. 173; People v. Adams, 176 N. It is said "the legislature may determine when that which is property shall cease to be such, if kept against law"; Woods v. Cottrell, 55 W. Va. 476, 47 S. E. 275, 65 L. R. A. 616, 104 Am. St. Rep. 1004, 2 Ann. Cas. 933; 12 L. R. A. (N. S.) 394, note.

Statutes which forbid or regulate places of amusement that may be resorted to for the purpose of gaming or which forbid altogether the keeping of instruments made use of for unlawful games, are within the police power of the legislature; Cooley, Const. Lim. 749. See Com. v. Colton, 8 Gray (Mass.) 488; State v. Hay, 29 Me. 457.

The uncorroborated testimony of an accomplice is sufficient to warrant a conviction of gaming; Grant v. State, 89 Ga. 393, 15 S. E. 488.

Option contracts on grain, etc., or stock, which are intended to be settled by payment of differences, are invalid; Pearce v. Foote, 113 Ill. 228, 55 Am. Rep. 414; as are option contracts to sell or buy at a future time any grain, etc.; Schneider v. Turner, 130 Ill. 28, 22 N. E. 497, 6 L. R. A. 164. These cases were held not to apply to a contract for future delivery where there was no evidence that delivery was not contemplated, and where a settlement by payment of differences only was intended; Clews v. Jamieson, 182 U. S. 461, 21 Sup. Ct. 845, 45 L. Ed. 1183; to the same effect; Clement v. U. S., 149 Fed. 317, 79 C. C. A. 243; In re A. B. Baxter & Co., 152 Fed. 137, 81 C. C. A. 359. Such a contract, legitimate on its face, cannot be held void as a wagering contract because one of the parties understood it to be so. The proof must show that such understanding was mutual; In re A. B. Baxter & Co., 152 Fed. 137, 81 C. C. A. 359. Where the issue was as to whether a sale of commodities on margin was a gambling contract, the buyer may testify as to his intention not to receive delivery; Pope v. Hanke, 155 Ill. 617, 40 N. E. 839, 28 L. R. A. 568; Waite v. Frank, 14 S. D. 626, 86 N. W. 645.

See GAMING HOUSES; WAGER; HORSE RACE; PRIZE FIGHT; BUCKET SHOP; JOCKEY CLUBS.

GAMING CONTRACTS. See WAGER; FUTURES.

GAMING HOUSES. Houses kept for the purpose of permitting persons to gamble for money or other valuable thing. They are nuisances in the eyes of the law, being detrimental to the public, as they promote cheating and other corrupt practices; 1 Russ. Cr. 299; Rosc. Cr. Ev. 663; People v. Jackson, 3 Den. (N. Y.) 101, 45 Am. Dec. 449. See Haring v. State, 51 N. J. L. 386, 17 Atl. 1079; id., 53 N. J. L. 664, 23 Atl. 581; State v. Eaton, 85 Me. 237, 27 Atl. 126; State v. Mosby, 55 Mo. App. 571.

In an indictment under a statute prohibiting gaming houses, the special facts making such a house a nuisance must be averred; Whar. Cr. Law § 1466; Whar. Cr. Pl. and Pr. §§ 154, 230; U. S. v. Ringgold, 5 Cra. 378, Fed. Cas. No. 16,167. The proprietor of a gaming establishment cannot take advantage of a statute enabling a person losing money at a game of chance to recover it back; Brown v. Thompson, 14 Bush (Ky.) 538, 29 Am. Rep. 416.

They are sometimes prosecuted as disorderly houses (q. v.)

GANANCIAL. In Spanish Law. Property held in community.

The property of which it is formed belongs in common to the two consorts, and, on the dissolution of the marriage, is divisible between them in equal shares. It is confined to their future acquisitions durante el matrimonio, and the frutos or rents and profits of the other property. See 1 Burge, Conf. Laws 418; Aso & M. Inst. b. 1, t. 7, c. 5, § 1.

All that which is increased or multiplied during marriage. By multiplied is understood all that is increased by onerous cause or title, and not that which is acquired by a lucrative one; Cutter v. Waddingham, 22 Mo. 254. See Cartwright v. Cartwright, 18 Tex. 634; COMMUNITY.

GANANCIAS. In Spanish Law. Gains or profits from the employment of ganancial property. White, N. Rec. b. 1, tit. 7, c. 5.

GANG-WEEK. In England, the time when the bounds of the parish are lustrated or gone over by the parish officers—Rogation week. Lond. Encyc.

GANGIATORI. Officers in ancient times whose duty it was to examine weights and measures. Skene.

GANTELOPE. A military punishment, in which the criminal running between the ranks receives a lash from each man. Lond. Encyc. This was called "running the gauntlet," the word itself being pronounced "gauntlett."

GAOL. (This word, sometimes written jail, is said to be derived from the Spanish jaulu, a cage (derived from caula), in French gêole, gaol. 1 M. & G. 222, note a.) A place for the confinement of persons arrested for debt or for crime and held in the custody of the sheriff. Webst. Dict.

A prison or building designated by law or used by the sheriff for the confinement or detention of those whose persons are judicially ordered to be kept in custody. See Day v. Brett, 6 Johns. (N. Y.) 22; 14 Viner, Abr. 9; Bacon, Abr.; Dane, Abr. Index; 4 Com. Dig. 619. It may be used also for the confinement of witnesses; and, in general, now there is no distinction between a jail and a prison, except that the latter belongs to a greater extent of country; thus, we say a state's prison or penitentiary and a county jail. Originally, a jail seems to have been a place where persons were confined to await further proceedings—c. g. debtors till they paid their debts, witnesses and accused persons till a certain trial came on, etc.—as opposed to prison, which was for confinement, as punishment. See 2 Poll. & Maitl. 514, 518. A gaol is an inhabited dwellinghouse, and a house within the statutes against arson; 2 W. Bla. 682; 2 East, Pl. Cr. 1020; People v. Cotteral, 18 Johns. (N. Y.) 115; Stevens v. Com., 4 Leigh. (Va.) 683. See PENITENTIARY; PRISON.

GAOL-DELIVERY. In English Law. To insure the trial, within a certain time, of all prisoners, a patent, in the nature of a letter, was issued from the king to certain persons, appointing them his justices and authorizing them to deliver his gaols. 3 Bla. Com. 60; 4 id. 269. This was the humblest of the temporary judicial commissions so frequent in the fourteenth century; 1 Poll. & Maitl. 179; but so few men were kept in prison, that the work was regarded as easy work which might be entrusted to knights of the shire; 2 id. 642. See GENERAL GAOL DELIVERY; OYER AND TERMINER.

GAOL LIBERTIES, GAOL LIMITS. A space marked out by limits, which is considered as a part of the prison, and within which prisoners are allowed to go at large on giving security to return. Owing to the rigor of the law which allowed capias, or attachment of the person, as the first process against a debtor, statutes were from time to time passed enlarging the gaol liberties, in order to mitigate the hardships of imprisonment: thus, the whole city of Boston was held the "gaol liberties" of its county gaol. And so with a large part of New York City. Act of March 13, 1830. The prisoner, while within the limits, is considered as within the walls of the prison; Peters v. Henry, 6 Johns. (N. Y.) 121, 5 Am. Dec. 196.

GAOLER. The keeper of a gaol or prison; one who has the legal custody of the place where prisoners are kept.

It is his duty to keep the prisoners in safe custody, and for this purpose he may use all necessary force; 1 Hale, Pl. Cr. 601; and a prisoner who assaults him in endeavoring to break gaol may be lawfully killed by him; 1 Russ. Cr. Sharsw. ed. 860, 895. But any oppression of a prisoner, under a pretended necessity, will be punished; for the prisoner, whether he be a debtor or a criminal, is entitled to the protection of the laws from oppression. He was indictable if by oppression he induced a prisoner to accuse another; 4 Bla. Com. 128; but this statute was repealed by 4 Geo. IV. c. 64, s. 1 id. note. He is also indictable for suffering an escape (q. v.), or for extortion; 1 Russ. Cr. Sharsw. ed. 208.

When a county court delivers persons convicted by it of murder to a gaoler for safekeeping till brought back for execution, the governor has no authority to countermand a subsequent order of that court requiring the gaoler to deliver them up, nor will the fact that a writ of error and supersedeas had been awarded each of the prisoners by the supreme court justify the gaoler in refusing to deliver up the prisoners on the order of the court that committed them; but the fact that a court having jurisdiction has granted the prisoners a writ of habeas corpus will justify such a refusal; Cardoza v. Epps (Va.) 23 S. E. 296.

GARAGE. A garage is not a stable within a building restriction in a deed dated in 1899; Riverbank Improvement Co. v. Bancroft, 209 Mass. 217, 95 N. E. 216, 34 L. R. A. (N. S.) 730, Ann. Cas. 1912B, 450.

GARANDA, or GARANTIA. A warranty. Spel. Gloss.

GARANTIE. In French law, this word corresponds to warranty or covenants for title in English law. In the case of a sale this garantie includes two things: (1) Peaceful possession of the thing sold; and (2) absence of undisclosed defects (défauts cachés). Brown.

GARAUNTOR. In Old English Law. A warrantor or vouchee, who is obliged by his warranty (garauntie) to warrant (garaunter) the title of the warrantee (garaunte), that is, to defend him in his seisin, and if he do not defend, and the tenant be ousted, to give him land of equal value. Britt. c. 75.

GARBLE. In English statutes, to sort or cull out the good from the bad in spices, drugs, etc. Cowell.

A garbler of spices was anciently in London an officer to inspect drugs and spices, with power to enter and search any shop or warehouse and garble and clean the goods or direct it to be done. Stat. 6 Anne, c. 16; Mozl. & Whit.

GARDE, or GARDIA (Garder, to watch). Wardship; custody; care. The judgment. The wardship of a city. Kelham.

GARDEN. A piece of ground appropriated to raising plants and flowers.

A garden is a parcel of a house, and passes with it; 2 Co. 32; Plowd. 171; Co. Litt. 5 b, 56 a, b; Wood, Landl. and Ten. 309. But see F. Moore 24; Bac. Abr. Grants, I. See CURTILAGE.

GARDIANUS. A guardian; defender; protector.

A warden. Gardianus ecclesie, a churchwarden. Gardianus quinque portuum, warden of the Cinque Ports (q. v.). In feudal law, gardio. Spelman, Gloss.

GARDIEN. A constable; a keeper; a guardian. Kelham.

GARNESTURA. In Old English Law. Victuals, arms, and other implements of war, necessary for the defence of a town. Mat. Par. 1250. See GARNISTURA.

GARNISH. In English Law. Money paid by a prisoner to his fellow-prisoners on his entrance into prison.

To warn. To garnish the heir is to warn the heir. Obsolete.

GARNISHEE. In Practice. A person who has money or property in his possession belonging to a defendant, which money or property has been attached in his hands, with notice to him of such attachment; he is so called because he has had warning or notice of the attachment.

From the time of the notice of the attachment, the garnishee is bound to keep the money or property in his hands, to answer the plaintiff's claim, until the attachment is dissolved or he is otherwise discharged. See Serg. Att. 88; Wade, Att. 331; Drake, Att.; Comyns., Dig. Attachment, E.

See GARNISHMENT.

GARNISHMENT. A warning to any one for his appearance, in a cause in which he is not a party, for the information of the court and explaining a cause. Cowell.

Now generally used of the process of attaching money or goods due a defendant in the hands of a third party. The person in whose hands such effects are attached is the garnishee, because he is garnished, or warned, not to deliver them to the defendant, but to answer the plaintiff's suit. The use of the form "garnishee" as a verb is a prevalent corruption in this country.

It is attachment in the hands of a third person, and so is a species of seizure by notice; Beamer v. Winter, 41 Kan. 297, 21 Pac. 251; id., 41 Kan. 596, 21 Pac. 1078.

For example, when a writ of attachment issues against a debtor, in order to secure to the plaintiff a claim due by a third person to such debtor, it is served on such third person, which notice or service is a garnishment, and he is called the garnishee.

There are garnishees also in the action of detainee. They are persons against whom process is awarded, at the prayer of the defendant, to warn them to come in and interplead with the plaintiff; but in detainee, the defendant cannot have a sci. fa. to garnish a third person unless he confess the possession of the chattel or thing demanded. And when the garnishee comes in, he cannot vary or depart from the allegation of the defendant in his prayer of garnishment. The plaintiff does not declare de novo against the garnishee; but the garnishee, if he appears in due time, may have oyer of the original declaration to which he pleads.

See Brooks, Abr. Detinue.

The process of garnishment is directly founded upon the writ of attachment as by custom of London, as to the history and character of which see ATTACHMENT.

This writ reached the effects of the defendant in the hands of third persons. Its effect is simply to arrest the payment of a debt due the defendant, to him, and to compel its payment to the plaintiff, or else to reach personal property in the hands of a third person. It is known in England and in most of the states of the United States as garnishment, or the garnishee process; but in some, as the trustee process and factorizing, with the same characteristics. As affects the garnishees, it is in reality a suit by the defendant in the plaintiff's name; Moore v. Stainton, 22 Ala. 831; Tunstall v. Worthington, Hempst. 662, Fed. Cas. No. 14,239.

Garnishment is an effectual attachment of the defendant's effects in the garnishee's hands; Kennedy v. Brent, 6 Cra. (U. S.) 187, 3 L. Ed. 194; Blaisdell v. Ladd, 14 N. H. 129; Tillinghast's Ex'rs v. Johnson, 5 Ala. 514; Bryan v. Lashley, 13 Smedes & M. (Miss.) 284; Hacker v. Stevens, 4 McLean 535, Fed. Cas. No. 5,887; Beamer v. Winter, 41 Kan. 297, 21 Pac. 251; id., 41 Kan. 596, 21 Pac. 1078. It is essentially a legal remedy; and through it equities cannot be settled between the defendant and the garnishee; Harris v. Miller, 71 Ala. 26; Hoyt v. Swift, 13 Vt. 129, 37 Am. Dec. 586; Webster v. Steele, 75 Ill. 544; Perry v. Thornton, 7 R. I. 15; Massachusetts Nat. Bank v. Bullock, 120 Mass. 86; Sheedy v. Bank, 62 Mo. 17, 21 Am. Rep. 407. The plaintiff, through it, acquires no greater rights against the garnishee than the defendant has, except in cases of fraud; and he can hold the garnishee only so long as he has, in the attachment suit, a right to enforce his claim against the defendant; Price v. Higgins, 1 Litt. (Ky.) 274; Harris v. Ins. Co., 35 Conn. 310; Waldron v. Wilcox, 13 R. I. 518; Richardson v. Lester, 83 Ill. 55. No judgment can be rendered against the garnishee until judgment against the defendant shall have been recovered; Housmans v. Heilbron, 23 Ga. 186; Washburn v. Mining Co., 41 Vt. 50.

The basis of a garnishee's liability is either an indebtedness to the defendant, or the possession of personal property of the defendant capable of being seized and sold under execution; Maine Fire & Marine Ins. Co. v. Weeks, 7 Mass. 438; Rundlet v. Jordan, 3 Greenl. (Me.) 47; Haven v. Wentworth, 2 N. H. 93; Hutchins v. Hawley, 9 Vt. 295; Walke v. McGehee, 11 Ala. 273. And to be a subject of garnishment, the claim must be one for which the principal defendant can maintain an action at law, if due at the time or to become due thereafter; Farwell v. Chambers, 62 Mich. 316, 28 N. W. 859; Edney v. Willis, 23 Neb. 56, 36 N. W. 300. The existence of such indebtedness, or the possession of such property, must be shown affirmatively, either by the garnishee's answer or by evidence alibunde; Porter v. Stevens, 9 Cush. (Mass.) 530; Lomerson v. Huffman, 25 N. J. L. 625; Cameron v. Boyle, 2 G. Greene (Ia.) 154; Hunt v. Coon, 9 Ind. 537; Reagan v. R. R., 21 Mo. 30. The demand of the defendant against the garnishee, which will justify a judgment in favor of the plaintiff against the garnishee, must be such as would sustain an action of debt, or indebitatus assumpsit; Hall v. Magee, 27 Ala. 414.

A non-resident of the state in which the attachment is obtained cannot be held as garnishee, unless he have in that state property of the defendant's in his hands, or be bound to pay the defendant money, or to deliver him goods, at some particular place in that state; Nye v. Liscombe, 21 Pick. (Mass.) 263; Jones v. Winchester, 6 N. H. 497; Baxter v. Vincent, 6 Vt. 614; Miller v. Hooe, 2 Cranch, C. C. 622, Fed. Cas. No. 9,573; Lovejoy v. Albee, 33 Me. 414, 54 Am. Dec. 630; Cronin v. Foster, 13 R. I. 196. A debt may be attached in any state where the debtor can be found if the law of the forum authorize attachments; Harvey v. Ry. Co., 50 Minn. 405, 52 N. W. 905, 17 L. R. A. 84.

The right to garnish debts due to non-residents payable in a foreign jurisdiction has given rise to much conflict in state courts. The question turns on the doctrine that a debt has a situs and the difference of opinion is as to where it is. Some courts hold that it is at the domicile of the creditor of the garnishment; Nat. Bank of Wilmington & Brandywine v. Furtick, 2 Marv. (Del.) 35, 42 Atl. 479, 44 L. R. A. 115, 69 Am. St. Rep. 99; Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Nash, 118 Ala. 477, 23 South. 825, 41 L. R. A. 331, 72 Am. St. Rep. 181; High v. Padrosa, 119 Ga. 649, 46 S. E. 859; Glover v. Varnish Co., 120 Ga. 983, 48 S. E. 355; Central of Georgia Ry. Co. v. Brinson, 109 Ga. 354, 34 S. E. 597, 77 Am. St. Rep. 382; Bullard v. Chaffee, 61 Neb. 83, 84 N. W. 604, 51 L. R. A. 715. In the decisions to this effect it is sometimes admitted that "this fiction always yields to laws for attaching the property of a non-resident, because such laws necessarily assume that the property has a situs distinct from the owner's domicile"; Wyeth Hardware & Mfg. Co.

v. Lang, 127 Mo. 242, 29 S. W. 1010, 27 L. R. A. 651, 48 Am. St. Rep. 626. In other cases it is held that statutes and the custom of London may, and often do, for the purpose of garnishment give the debt a situs at the domicile of the debtor; Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co. v. Sturm, 174 U. S. 710, 17 Sup. Ct. 797, 43 L. Ed. 1144; King v. Cross, 175 U. S. 396, 20 Sup. Ct. 131, 44 L. Ed. 211; Swedish-American Nat. Bank of Minneapolis v. Bleeker, 72 Minn. 383, 75 N. W. 740, 42 L. R. A. 283, 71 Am. St. Rep. 492; Douglass v. Ins. Co., 138 N. Y. 209, 33 N. E. 938, 20 L. R. A. 118, 34 Am. St. Rep. 448; Lancashire Ins. Co. v. Corbetts, 165 Ill. 592, 46 N. E. 631, 36 L. R. A. 640, 56 Am. St. Rep. 275; Baltimore & O. R. Co. v. Allen, 58 W. Va. 388, 52 S. E. 465, 3 L. R. A. (N. S.) 608, 112 Am. St. Rep. 975. Though generally the situs of a debt is constructively with the creditor, it is within the competence of the sovereign of the residence of the debtor to pass laws subjecting the debt to seizure within its territory; Reimers v. Mfg. Co., 70 Fed. 573, 17 C. C. A. 228, 30 L. R. A. 364. See also Pomeroy v. Rand, McNally & Co., 157 Ill. 176, 41 N. E. 636; Bragg v. Gaynor, 85 Wis. 468, 55 N. W. 919, 21 L. R. A. 161; Newland v. Reilly, 85 Mich. 151, 48 N. W. 544. In many of the cases cited, neither debtor nor creditor residing in the state where it was sought to attach, the question whether the situs was with the debtor or creditor was considered immaterial; Swedish-American Nat. Bank of Minneapolis v. Bleeker, 72 Minn. 383, 75 N. W. 740, 42 L. R. A. 283, 71 Am. St. Rep. 492; Douglass v. Ins. Co., 138 N. Y. 209, 33 N. E. 938, 20 L. R. A. 118, 34 Am. St. Rep. 448; Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Dooley, 78 Ala. 524; and in the cases supporting the doctrine that the debt follows the person of the creditor, the decision is usually rested not upon that doctrine (which is merely referred to as a general principle), but upon some other proposition, although the rule has been distinctly adopted and applied; Missouri Pac. Ry. Co. v. Sharitt, 43 Kan. 375, 23 Pac. 430, 8 L. R. A. 385, 389, 19 Am. St. Rep. 143. In Chicago, R. I. & P. Ry. Co. v. Sturm, 174 U. S. 710, 17 Sup. Ct. 797, 43 L. Ed. 1144, already cited, it is said: "The essential service of foreign attachment laws is to reach and arrest the payment of what is due and might be paid to a non-resident to the defeat of his creditors. To do this he must go to the domicile of his debtor, and can only do it under the laws and procedure in force there. This is a legal necessity and considerations of situs are somewhat artificial. If not artificial, whatever of substance there is must be with the debtor. He, and he only, has something in his hands. That something is a res and gives character to the action as known in the nature of a proceeding in rem," citing Mooney v. Mfg. Co., 72 Fed. 32, 18 C. C. A. 421.

It was held that a debt expressly payable at the domicile of the creditor was not subject to attachment at the domicile of the debtor; Drake v. Ry. Co., 69 Mich. 168, 37 N. W. 70, 13 Am. St. Rep. 382; Bullard v. Chaffee, 61 Neb. 83, 84 N. W. 604, 51 L. R. A. 715; that a debt is subject to garnishment at the domicile of the debtor, if it be not payable elsewhere; Walker v. Fairbanks, 55 Mo. App. 478; but this qualification was repudiated in Wyeth Hardware & Mfg. Co. v. Lang, 127 Mo. 242, 29 S. W. 1010, 27 L. R. A. 651, 48 Am. St. Rep. 626. Some cases hold, where both debtor and creditor are nonresidents, that to give jurisdiction to garnish the debt it must be expressly payable in the state of the garnishment, or at least contracted there and payable there by legal implication; Reimers v. Mfg. Co., 70 Fed. 573, 17 C. C. A. 228, 30 L. R. A. 364; Green v. Bank, 25 Conn. 452; McKinney v. Mills, 80 Minn. 478, 83 N. W. 452, 81 Am. St. Rep. 278; Bush v. Nance, 61 Miss. 237; Sawyer v. Thompson, 24 N. H. 510; Lancaster v. Spotswood, 41 Misc. 19, 83 N. Y. Supp. 572; Balk v. Harris, 124 N. C. 467, 32 S. E. 799, 45 L. R. A. 258, 70 Am. St. Rep. 606, reversed in Harris v. Balk, 198 U. S. 215, 25 Sup. Ct. 625, 49 L. Ed. 1023, 3 Ann. Cas. 1084. In that case the principle was established that a debt may be garnished in a state in which neither debtor nor creditor resides if personal jurisdiction may be acquired over the debtor, and it was not necessary that the debt should have been contracted in or expressly payable in that state; Harris v. Balk, 198 U. S. 215, 25 Sup. Ct. 625, 49 L. Ed. 1023; Wyeth Hardware & Mfg. Co. v. Lang, 127 Mo. 242, 29 S. W. 1010, 27 L. R. A. 651, 48 Am. St. Rep. 626; Baltimore & O. R. Co. v. Allen, 58 W. Va. 389, 52 S. E. 465, 112 Am. St. Rep. 975, 3 L. R. A. (N. S.) 608, and note, which see as to this and the following:

A debt due from a foreign corporation to a non-resident, served constructively only, is subject to garnishment in a state in which such corporation does business, even though the debt be not payable in that state, and did not arise out of business transacted therein; Mooney v. Mfg. Co., 72 Fed. 32, 18 C. C. A. 421; National Fire Ins. Co. v. Ming, 7 Ariz. 6, 60 Pac. 720; German Bank v. Ins. Co., 83 Ia. 491, 50 N. W. 53, 32 Am. St. Rep. 316; Pittsburg, C., C. & St. L. Ry. Co. v. Bartels, 108 Ky. 216, 56 S. W. 152; Howland v. Ry. Co., 134 Mo. 474, 36 S. W. 29; National Fire Ins. Co. of Hartford v. Chambers, 53 N. J. Eq. 468, 32 Atl. 663; and so also where the garnishee, though originally incorporated elsewhere, was also incorporated within the state in which the garnishment proceeding was instituted; Georgia & A. Ry. v. Stollenwerck, 122 Ala. 539, 25 South. 258; Wabash R. Co. v. Dougan, 142 Ill. 248, 31 N. E. 594, 34 Am. St. Rep. 74; Mobile & O. R. Co. v. Barnhill, 91 Tenn. 395, 19 S. W. 21, 30 Am. St. Rep. 889.

On the other hand, it was held that the jurisdiction of the courts of a state in which a foreign corporation is doing business is limited, so far as debts due from the corporation to a non-resident not personally within the jurisdiction are concerned, to those which arise out of business transacted within the state, or which are payable within the state; Central Trust Co. of New York v. R. Co., 68 Fed. 685; Reimers v. Mfg. Co., 70 Fed. 573, 17 C. C. A. 228, 30 L. R. A. 364; Everett v. Ins. Co., 4 Colo. App. 509, 36 Pac. 616; National Bank of Wilmington and Brandywine v. Ins. Co., 2 Marr. (Del.) 35, 42 Atl. 479, 44 L. R. A. 115, 69 Am. St. Rep. 99; Swedish-American Nat. Bank of Minneapolis v. Bleecker, 72 Minn. 383, 75 N. W. 740, 42 L. R. A. 283, 71 Am. St. Rep. 492; Strause v. Ins. Co., 126 N. C. 223, 35 S. E. 471, 48 L. R. A. 452; Allen v. Cigar Stores Co., 39 Misc. 500, 80 N. Y. Supp. 401; Morawetz v. Ins. Office, 96 Wis. 175, 71 N. W. 109, 65 Am. St. Rep. 43.

An act declaring that the situs of a debt shall, for the purposes of attachment and garnishment, be at the residence of the garnishee, is not unconstitutional, as an attempt to pass an act having an extra-territorial effect; Harvey v. Thompson, 128 Ga. 147, 57 S. E. 104, 9 L. R. A. (N. S.) 765, 119 Am. St. Rep. 373; contra, Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Nash, 118 Ala. 483, 23 South. 825, 41 L. R. A. 331, 72 Am. St. Rep. 181.

Ordinarily all persons or corporations who may be sued may also be summoned as garnishees. Neither the national nor state government can be subjected to garnishment; Buchanan v. Alexander, 4 How. (U. S.) 20, 11 L. Ed. 857; nor counties; Ward v. Hartford County, 12 Conn. 404; Dollar v. Commission Co., 78 Miss. 274, 28 South. 876 (the courts have jurisdiction, but must sustain an objection); nor, on the weight of authority, municipal corporations; Merwin v. City of Chicago, 45 Ill. 133, 92 Am. Dec. 204; Hawthorn v. City of St. Louis, 11 Mo. 59, 47 Am. Dec. 141; Bank of Southwestern Ga. v. Americus, 92 Ga. 361, 17 S. E. 287; Leake v. Lacey, 95 Ga. 747, 22 S. E. 655, 51 Am. St. Rep. 112; Baird v. Rogers, 95 Tenn. 492, 32 S. W. 630; Van Cott v. Pratt, 11 Utah 209, 39 Pac. 827; Porter & Blair Hardware Co. v. Perdue, 105 Ala. 293, 16 South. 713, 53 Am. St. Rep. 124; Fast v. Wolf, 38 Ill. App. 27; First Nat. Bank of Ottawa v. City of Ottawa, 43 Kan. 294, 23 Pac. 485; contra, City of Newark v. Funk, 15 Ohio St. 462.

On the same principle no person deriving his authority from the law, and obliged to execute it according to the rules of the law, can be charged as garnishee in respect of any money or property held by him in virtue of that authority; Brooks v. Cook, 8 Mass. 246. Hence it has been held that an administrator cannot, in respect of moneys in his hand as such, be charged as garnishee of a creditor of his intestate; Waite v. Osborne, 11 Me. 185; Marvel v. Houston, 2 Harr. (Del.) 349; Thorn v. Woodruff, 5 Ark. 55; Fowler v. McClelland, id. 188; though he may be, by a proper tribunal, adjudged and ordered to pay a certain sum to such creditor; Marble v. Marble, 5 N. H. 374; Fitchett v. Dolbee, 3 Harr. (Del.) 267; Curling & Robertson v. Hyde, 10 Mo. 374; Harrington v. La Rocque, 13 Or. 344, 10 Pac. 498; contra, Thorn v. Woodruff, 5 Ark. 55; Fowler v. McClelland, id. 188; nor is an executor chargeable as garnishee in respect of a legacy bequeathed by his testator; Barnes v. Treat, 7 Mass. 271; Winchell v. Allen, 1 Conn. 385; Beckwith v. Baxter, 3 N. H. 67; Shewell v. Keen, 2 Whart. (Pa.) 332, 30 Am. Dec. 266; nor a guardian; Gassett v. Grout, 4 Mete. (Mass.) 486. Nor is a sheriff subject to garnishment in respect of money collected by him under process; Wilder v. Bailey, 3 Mass. 289; Farmers' Bank of Delaware v. Beaston, 7 Gill & J. (Md.) 421, 28 Am. Dec. 226; Jones v. Jones, 1 Bland (Md.) 443, 18 Am. Dec. 327; Blair v. Cantey, 2 Speer (S. C.) 34, 42 Am. Dec. 360; Zurcher v. Magee, 2 Ala. 253; Snell v. Allen, 1 Swan. (Tenn.) 208; Clymer v. Willis, 3 Cal. 363, 58 Am. Dec. 414; or where it was taken from a prisoner; Robinson v. Howard, 7 Cush. (Mass.) 257; Richardson v. Anderson, 4 Wils. (Tex. Ct. App.) 286, 18 S. W. 195; Morris v. Penniman, 14 Gray (Mass.) 220, 74 Am. Dec. 675; Closson v. Morrison, 47 N. H. 482, 93 Am. Dec. 459; Dahms v. Sears, 13 Or. 47, 11 Pac. 891; Halker v. Hennessey, 141 Mo. 527, 42 S. W. 1090, 39 L. R. A. 165, 64 Am. St. Rep. 524; Commercial Exchange Bank v. McLeod, 65 Ia. 665, 19 N. W. 329, 22 N. W. 919, 54 Am. Rep. 36; Hill v. Hatch, 99 Tenn. 39, 41 S. W. 349, 63 Am. St. Rep. 822; this is not so, however, in some states if taken bona fide and without trickery; Ex parte Hurn, 92 Ala. 102, 9 South. 515, 13 L. R. A. 120, 25 Am. St. Rep. 23; Oppenheimer v. Marr, 31 Neb. 811, 48 N. W. 818, 28 Am. St. Rep. 539; Closson v. Morrison, 47 N. H. 482, 93 Am. Dec. 459; but where plaintiff in execution paid to the sheriff $1,000 as the value of the debtor's homestead interest, and the land was sold under execution, the money in the sheriff's hands was subject to garnishment at the instance of the other judgment creditors; Self v. Schoenfeld, 60 Ill. App. 65; money taken from a person without his consent by a sheriff acting as trespasser in so doing, and delivered by him to a third person claiming title thereto, is not subject of garnishment in the hands of the sheriff or to the third parties as the property of the person from whom it was taken; Wooding v. Bank, 11 Wash. 527, 40 Pac. 223. Nor is an officer of a court in respect of money in his hands officially; Ross v. Clarke, 1 Dall. (U. S.) 354, 1 L. Ed. 173; Drane v. McGavock, 7 Humphr. (Tenn.) 132; Farmers' Bank of Delaware v. Beaston, 7 Gill & J. (Md.) 421, 28 Am. Dec. 226; Bowden v. Schatzell, Bail. Eq. (S. C.) 360, 23 Am. Dec. 170; Allen v. Gerard, 21 R. I. 467, 44 Atl. 592, 49 L. R. A. 351, 79 Am. St. Rep. 816; Curtis v. Ford, 78 Tex. 262, 14 S. W. 614, 10 L. R. A. 529; Pace v. Smith, 57 Tex. 555; though some cases permit it after the final disposition of the fund; Wilbur v. Flannery, 60 Vt. 581, 15 Atl. 203; Dunsmoor v. Furstenfeldt, 88 Cal. 522, 26 Pac. 518, 12 L. R. A. 508, 22 Am. St. Rep. 331; Boylan v. Hines, 62 W. Va. 486, 59 S. E. 503, 13 L. R. A. (N. S.) 757, 125 Am. St. Rep. 983; Gaither v. Ballew, 49 N. C. 488, 69 Am. Dec. 763; Cockey v. Leister, 12 Md. 124, 71 Am. Dec. 588 (contra, Mattingly v. Grimes, 48 Md. 102); Fearing v. Shafner, 62 Miss. 791; Smith v. People, 93 Ill. App. 135; Willard v. Decatur, 59 N. H. 137; or after the liability is changed from an official to a personal one; Reid v. Walsh (Tex.) 63 S. W. 940; Weaver v. Davis, 47 Ill. 235; contra, B. F. Sturtevant Co. v. Bohn Sash & Door Co., 57 Neb. 671, 78 N. W. 265; In re Cunningham, Fed. Cas. No. 3,478. See 13 L. R. A. 757, n. Nor is a trustee of an insolvent, nor an assignee of a bankrupt; Oliver v. Smith, 5 Mass. 183; Farmers' Bank of Delaware v. Beaston, 7 Gill & J. (Md.) 421, 28 Am. Dec. 226 (but the interest of a party in the proceeds of a partition sale may be attached in the hands of the trustee to make the sale; Fenton v. Fisher, 106 Pa. 418). When a trust is created by a third party and the trustee is vested with discretion as to term, amount or manner of payments, he cannot be charged as garnishee; Richards v. R. Co., 44 N. H. 127. A government disbursing officer is not subject to garnishment; Chealy v. Brewer, 7 Mass. 259; Bulkley v. Eckert, 3 Pa. 368, 45 Am. Dec. 650; Divine v. Harvie, 7 T. B. Monr. (Ky.) 439, 18 Am. Dec. 194; Bank of Tennessee v. Dibreil, 3 Sneed (Tenn.) 379; Buchanan v. Alexander, 4 How. (U. S.) 20, 11 L. Ed. 857; nor a receiver; Field v. Jones, 11 Ga. 413; Glenn v. Gill, 2 Md. 1; Taylor v. Gillean, 23 Tex. 508; Jackson v. Lahee, 114 Ill. 287, 2 N. E. 172; Columbian Book Co. v. De Golyer, 115 Mass. 69; Bagby v. R. Co., 86 Pa. 291; nor a United States marshal; Clarke v. Shaw, 28 Fed. 356; nor a board of levee commissioners; McBain v. Rodgers (Miss.) 29 South. 91. A trespasser in possession of another's money or goods cannot be charged as garnishee of the owner; Despatch Line of Packets v. Bellamy Mfg. Co., 12 N. H. 205, 37 Am. Dec. 203.

The defendant in an action of tort cannot be garnished before the recovery of final judgment; Gamble v. Banking Co., 80 Ga. 595, 7 S. E. 315, 12 Am. St. Rep. 276. When the wages of a fisherman are to be paid within thirty days after the arrival of the vessel in port, they are liable to garnishment within the thirty days; Telles v. Lynde, 47 Fed. 912.

A debt due to one partner cannot be attached by a creditor of the firm; Commercial Nat. Bank v. Kirkwood, 184 Ill. 139, 56 N. E. 405; Siegel, Cooper & Co. v. Schueck, 167 Ill. 522, 47 N. E. 855, 59 Am. St. Rep. 309; Ford v. Dock Co., 50 Mich. 358, 15 N. W. 509; contra, Pearce v. Shorter, 50 Ala. 318; Stevens v. Perry, 113 Mass. 380. The garnishment of an agent is insufficient as a garnishment of the principal; Provenchere v. Reiff, 62 Mo. App. 50; but an attorney may be summoned as garnishee of his client in some cases; Mann v. Buford, 3 Ala. 312, 37 Am. Dec. 691; Hancock v. Colyer, 99 Mass. 187, 96 Am. Dec. 730; Ayer v. Brown, 77 Me. 195; White v. Bird, 20 La. Ann. 188, 96 Am. Dec. 393; Narramore v. Clark, 63 N. H. 166.

A debt not due may be attached in the hands of the garnishee, but he cannot be required to pay the same until it becomes due; Sayward v. Drew, 6 Greenl. (Me.) 263; Steuart v. West, 1 Harr. & J. (Md.) 536; Peace v. Jones, 7 N. C. 256; Branch Bank at Mobile v. Poe, 1 Ala. 396; Dunnegan v. Byers, 17 Ark. 492.

Money which by state statute is exempt from attachment as a benefit or insurance, does not remain so after it has reached the beneficiary; Recor v. Bank, 142 Mich. 479, 106 N. W. 82, 5 L. R. A. (N. S.) 472, 7 Ann. Cas. 754; Bull v. Case, 165 N. Y. 578, 59 N. E. 301; Ettenson v. Schwartz, 38 Misc. 669, 78 N. Y. Supp. 231 (after which the statute was changed to cover such cases); Hathorn v. Robinson, 96 Me. 33, 51 Atl. 236; Martin v. Martin, 187 Ill. 200, 58 N. E. 230; contra, Emmert v. Schmidt, 65 Kan. 31, 68 Pac. 1072; Coleman v. McGrew, 71 Neb. 801, 99 N. W. 663; and after the death of the beneficiary it is subject to garnishment for his debts; Meyer v. Supreme Lodge Knights and Ladies of Honor, 72 Mo. App. 350. So it is held that under R. S. § 4747, pension money is exempt only "while in the course of transmission to the pensioner"; McIntosh v. Aubrey, 185 U. S. 122, 22 Sup. Ct. 561, 46 L. Ed. 834; State v. Building Ass'n, 44 N. J. L. 376; Price v. Society for Savings, 64 Conn. 362, 30 Atl. 139, 42 Am. St. Rep. 198; contra, Reiff v. Mack, 160 Pa. 265, 28 Atl. 699, 40 Am. St. Rep. 720; Crow v. Brown, 81 Ia. 344, 46 N. W. 993, 11 L. R. A. 110, 25 Am. St. Rep. 501 (overruling previous decisions); Bullard v. Goodno, 73 Vt. 88, 50 Atl. 544; and the exemption has been extended to cover the fund when changed in form or invested; Holmes v. Tallada, 125 Pa. 133, 17 Atl. 238, 3 L. R. A. 219, 11 Am. St. Rep. 880; Falkenburg v. Johnson, 102 Ky. 543, 44 S. W. 80, 80 Am. St. Rep. 369; Hissem v. Johnson, 27 W. Va. 644, 55 Am. Rep. 327. See 5 L. R. A. (N. S.) 472 note.

In most of the states, the garnishee responds to the proceedings against him by a sworn answer to interrogatories propounded to him; which in some states is held to be conclusive as to his liability, but generally may be controverted and disproved, though in the absence of contradictory evidence always taken to be true. In order to charge the garnishee upon his answer alone, there must be in it a clear admission of a debt due to, or the possession of money or other attachable property of, the defendant; Bridges v. North, 22 Ga. 52; Harney v. Ellis, 11

Smedes & M. (Miss.) 348; Davis v. Pawlette, 3 Wis. 300, 62 Am. Dec. 690; Pierce v. Carleton, 12 Ill. 358, 54 Am. Dec. 405; Ellicott v. Smith, 2 Cra. (U. S.) 543, Fed. Cas. No. 4,387; Lomerson v. Huffman, 25 N. J. L. 625; Hunt v. Coon, 9 Ind. 537.

Any rights of the garnishee under existing contracts with the principal debtor, he is entitled to have the benefit of, as against the attaching creditor; North Chicago Rolling Mill Co. v. Steel Co., 152 U. S. 596, 14 Sup. Ct. 710, 38 L. Ed. 565. No judgment can be rendered against a garnishee unless one is obtained against the principal defendant; Merchant v. Howland, 46 Ill. App. 458. It is competent for garnishees to represent in their own defence the rights of a third party to whom they are in law liable; Milwaukee & N. Ry. Co. v. Locomotive Works, 121 U. S. 430, 7 Sup. Ct. 1094, 30 L. Ed. 995. A garnishee has the right to set up any defence against attachment process which he could have done against the debtor in the principal action; Schuler v. Israel, 120 U. S. 506, 7 Sup. Ct. 648, 30 L. Ed. 707. If his debt to the defendant be barred by the statute of limitation, he may take advantage of the statute; Hinkle v. Currin, 2 Humphr. (Tenn.) 137; Myers v. Baltzell, 37 Pa. 491; McDermott v. Donegan, 44 Mo. 85; Schuler v. Israel, 120 U. S. 506, 7 Sup. Ct. 648, 30 L. Ed. 707; Sauer v. Town of Nevada, 14 Colo. 54, 23 Pac. 87. He may set up a failure of consideration; Sheldon v. Simonds, Wright (Ohio) 724; Mathis v. Clark, 2 Mill. Const. (S. C.) 456, 12 Am. Dec. 688; Moser v. Mayberry, 7 Watts (Pa.) 12; and may plead a set-off against the defendant; Swamscot Mach. Co. v. Patridge, 25 N. H. 369; Strong v. Mitchell, 19 Vt. 644.

If by a court having jurisdiction a judgment be rendered against a garnishee, and he satisfy the same under execution, it is a full defence to an action by the defendant against him for the property or debt in respect of which he was charged as garnishee; though the judgment may have been irregular, and reversible on error; Atcheson v. Smith, 3 B. Monr. (Ky.) 502; Lomerson v. Hoffman, 24 N. J. L. 674; Houston v. Walcott, 1 Ia. 86; Foster v. Walker, 2 Ala. 180; Spring v. Ayer, 23 Vt. 516; Riddle v. Etting 32 Pa. 412.

An attachment plaintiff may be sued for a malicious attachment; the action will be governed by the principles of the common law applicable to actions for malicious prosecution; Jerman v. Stewart, 12 Fed. 266; Young v. Gregory, 3 Call (Va.) 446, 2 Am. Dec. 536; Lindsay v. Larned, 17 Mass. 190; McCullough v. Grishobber, 4 W. & S. (Pa.) 201; Tomlinson v. Warner, 9 Ohio 103; Smith v. Story, 4 Humphr. (Tenn.) 169; Wiley v. Traiwick, 14 Tex. 662; McKellar v. Couch, 34 Ala. 336; Noonan v. Orton, 30 Wis. 356.

Where a law authorizing garnishment under which proceedings were commenced, was repealed, without a saving clause, pending proceedings were thereby quashed; Wooding v. Bonk, 11 Wash. 527, 40 Pac. 223.

GARNISTURA. In Old English Law. Garniture; whatever is necessary for the fortification of a city or camp, or for the ornament of a thing. 8 Rymer 328; Du Cange; Cowell; Blount. See GARNISTURA.

GARROTE. A mode of capital punishment practised in Spain and Portugal formerly by a simple strangulation. The victim, usually in a sitting posture, is fastened by an iron collar to an upright post, and a knob, operated by a screw or lever, dislocates the spinal column, or a small blade severs the spinal cord at the base of the brain. Cent. Dict.; Encyc. Dict.

GARSUMMUNE. In Old English Law. An amercement or fine. Cowell. See GRESSUME; GERSOMA; GERSUMA.

GARTH. In English Law. A yard; a homestead in the north of England. Cowell. A dam or wear. Id.

GAS. An aeriform fluid, used for illuminating purposes and for fuel.

From a legal point of view it is to be considered with respect to the companies by which it is usually furnished, their status and obligations as affected by the nature of the business; and also whether the gas furnished by them is manufactured or natural.

Nature of the business. The business is not an ordinary one in which any person may engage as of common right, but a franchise of a public nature which, in the absence of constitutional restriction, may be granted by the legislature; New Orleans Gaslight Co. v. Light Co., 115 U. S. 650, 6 Sup. Ct. 252, 29 L. Ed. 516; Louisville Gas Co. v. Gaslight Co., 115 U. S. 683, 6 Sup. Ct. 265, 29 L. Ed. 510; Grand Rapids E. L. & P. Co. v. Gas Co., 33 Fed. 659; City of Newport v. Light Co., 84 Ky. 166. A grant of the right to lay pipes is valid, but it is a franchise to be strictly construed, and is void if the conditions are not complied with; City of Newport v. Light Co., 84 Ky. 166. Such a company cannot sell, lease, or assign its corporate privileges without consent of the legislature; Brunswick Gaslight Co. v. Light Co., 85 Me. 532, 27 Atl. 525, 35 Am. St. Rep. 385.

They are not, however, always treated as strictly public corporations, but in some cases such a company is said to be simply "a private manufacturing corporation which furnishes gas to individuals as agreed. This of itself does not make it a public corporation;" In re New York Cent. & H. R. R. Co. v. Gaslight Co., 63 N. Y. 326. A company furnishing gas to a municipality under contract is not performing such public service as to exempt it from ordinary taxation; New-as to Light Co. v. City of Newport (Ky.) 20 S. W. 434.

A gas company having power to manufacture and sell gas has an implied power to make all contracts necessary to that end; St. Louis Gaslight Co. v. St. Louis, 86 Mo. 495.

Natural Gas. The gas obtained from wells in coal and oil regions, and used for lighting and heating. In nature and character, such gas has been termed "a mineral with peculiar attributes which require the application of precedents arising out of ordinary mineral rights, with more careful consideration of the principles involved than of the mere decisions. . . . Water and oil, and still more strongly, gas, may be classed by themselves, if the analogy be not too fanciful, as minerals feræ naturæ. In common with animals, and unlike other minerals, they have the power and the tendency to escape without the volition of the owner. Their 'fugitive and wandering existence within the limits of a particular tract is uncertain;' (per Agnew, C. J. in Brown v. Vandergrift, 80 Pa. 147). They belong to the owner of the land, and are part of it, so long as they are on or in it, and are subject to his control; but when they escape, and go into other land, or come under another's control, the title of the former owner is gone. Possession of the land, therefore, is not necessarily possession of the gas. If an adjoining, or even a distant, owner, drills his own land, and taps your gas, so that it comes into his well and under his control, it is no longer yours, but his." Per Mitchell, J., in Westmoreland, etc., N. Gas Co. v. De Witt, 130 Pa. 235, 18 Atl. 724, 5 L. R. A. 731.

Under a lease of land for the sole purpose of drilling and operating for oil and gas, the lessee's right in the surface of the land is in the nature of an easement of entry and examination, with a right of possession where the particular place of operation is selected, and the easement of ingress and egress, transportation and storage; id.

Whether the words "other valuable volatile substance" in a lease when they were used with petroleum, rock, or carbon oil, will include gas is a question for a jury, as the words have no settled meaning; Ford v. Buchanan, 111 Pa. 31, 2 Atl. 339. The words oil and gas in a lease have been held not synonymous; Truby v. Palmer (Pa.) 6 Atl. 74; it is a fuel; Citizens' Gas & Min. Co. v. Town of Elwood, 114 Ind. 338, 16 N. E. 624; but it has been held that a company incorporated for supplying heat cannot also furnish natural gas; Emerson v. Com., 108 Pa. 126.

Natural gas is as much an article of commerce as any other product of the earth; State v. Oil, Gas & Min. Co., 120 Ind. 575, 22 N. E. 778, 6 L. R. A. 579; West v. Gas Co., 221 U. S. 229, 31 Sup. Ct. 564, 55 L. Ed. 716, 35 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1193. A state statute prohibiting the waste of natural gas and oil is not unconstitutional as depriving the owner of his property without due process of law; Ohio Oil Co. v. Indiana, 177 U. S. 190, 20 Sup. Ct. 576, 44 L. Ed. 729, affirming Ohio Oil Co. v. State, 150 Ind. 698, 50 N. E. 1125. See LAND.

The business of transporting and furnishing natural gas is a public use, and the right of eminent domain may be constitutionally granted to companies engaged in it; 5 Cent. Rep. (Pa.) 564; the business is transportation of freight; Carothers v. Philadelphia Co., 118 Pa. 468, 12 Atl. 314. Because of the public nature of the business taxation may be authorized for supplying it to municipal corporations; Fellows v. Walker, 39 Fed. 651; and any unreasonable restraint upon the business is against public policy; People v. Trust Co., 130 Ill. 268, 22 N. E. 798, 8 L. R. A. 497, 17 Am. St. Rep. 319. It was held that under the Pennsylvania general incorporation act of 1874, under which companies for the manufacture and supply of gas were formed, natural gas companies could not be incorporated; Emerson v. Com., 108 Pa. 111; Sterling's Appeal, 111 Pa. 35, 2 Atl. 105, 56 Am. Rep. 246. Consequently a general law was passed providing for such companies under which, when lawfully incorporated, they may exercise the right of eminent domain, and the grant of the power is constitutional; State v. Oil, Gas & Min. Co., 120 Ind. 581, 22 N. E. 778, 6 L. R. A. 579; Bloomfield & R. Natural Gas Light Co. v. Richardson, 63 Barb. (N. Y.) 437; McDevitt v. Gas Co., 160 Pa. 367, 28 Atl. 948; and the use of city streets for that purpose imposes no additional servitude; id. In Pennsylvania, the courts of common pleas may hear and determine controversies between natural gas companies and municipalities as to the manner of laying their pipes; Appeal of City of Pittsburgh, 115 Pa. 4, 7 Atl. 778.

A right to take natural gas from land under the Pennsylvania act of Apr. 7, 1870, P. L. 58, is not land held in fee, subject to be sold under a special fi. fa. against an insolvent corporation; Greensburg Fuel Co. v. Gas Co., 162 Pa. 78, 29 Atl. 274. The lessee for oil and gas, having drilled a well and tapped the gas-bearing strata (the only one in the land), has both the possession of the gas and the right to it, and the owner will be enjoined from drilling; Westmoreland N. Gas Co. v. De Witt, 130 Pa. 235, 18 Atl. 724, 5 L. R. A. 731. A lessee for oil only who took from the well both oil and gas was held not accountable to the lessor for the gas, which is, like air and water, the subject only of qualified property by occupancy; Wood County Petroleum Co. v. Transportation Co., 28 W. Va. 210, 57 Am. Rep. 659. From the nature of the gas, a lease of well-rights is necessarily exclusive so far as concerns the leased premises themselves; id.; Westmoreland Nat. Gas Co. v. De Witt, 130 Pa. 235, 18 Atl. 724, 5 L. R. A. 731. A person who has a natural gas well on his premises has the right to explode nitro-glycerine therein for the purpose of increasing the flow, although such explosion may have the effect to draw gas from the land of another; Greenfield Gas Co. v. Gas Co., 131 Ind. 599, 81 N. E. 61. An act prohibiting the transportation of natural gas in pipes to points outside a state is invalid as interfering with inter-state commerce; West v. Gas Co., 221 U. S. 229, 31 Sup. Ct. 564, 55 L. Ed. 716, 35 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1193.

The rights and liabilities of gas companies are, in the main, the same, whether they are engaged in the business of supplying artificial or natural gas.

Municipal lighting. The business is usually carried on by companies acting either under a legislative or municipal franchise or contract, or directly by the municipality under express legislative authority or implied power.

As to the implied power of a municipality to light its streets, etc., see ELECTRIC LIGHT COMPANIES.

A municipal corporation having power to light its own streets, and erect and maintain gas works has implied power to contract with others to do so; City of Newport v. Light Co., 84 Ky. 166. A municipal council exceeds its power, in granting an exclusive privilege; Cincinnati Gaslight & Coke Co. v. Avondale, 43 Ohio St. 257, 1 N. E. 527; at least, without legislative authority; 3 Cent. Rep. (Pa.) 921. The authority to lay mains and pipes in streets and provide gas does not give an exclusive right to the use of the streets for that purpose; Hamilton Gaslight & Coke Co. v. City of Hamilton, 21 Ohio L. J. 94.

A city engaged in making and selling gas is quoad hoc a private corporation, not legislating but making contracts which bind it as a natural person, and cannot be impaired by the legislature; Western Sav. Fund Society of Philadelphia v. City of Philadelphia, 31 Pa. 175, 72 Am. Dec. 730.

The grant of an exclusive privilege is a contract none the less because the business requires supervision by public authority, and such grant does not restrict the power of regulation by the state; New Orleans Gaslight Co. v. Light Co., 115 U. S. 650, 6 Sup. Ct. 252, 29 L. Ed. 516. A grant by a city, under legislative authority, of an exclusive privilege for a term of years of supplying the city with gas, does not prevent the city from erecting its own gas works under a state law giving it power to do so; Hamilton Gaslight & Coke Co. v. Hamilton, 146 U. S. 258, 13 Sup. Ct. 90, 36 L. Ed. 963; the grant of an exclusive privilege with an option to the city to buy the plant does not bind the city to maintain it when the sale of the plant is refused, but the city must elect whether it will purchase at the price fixed by referees before they are chosen, and until the city does so agree it is not a breach of contract for the company to refuse to join in selecting referees; Montgomery Gaslight Co. v. City Council, 87 Ala. 245, 6 South. 113, 4 L. R. A. 616. Under a grant for a term of years of the exclusive privilege for this purpose, the right to use the streets for light other than gas is not implied and must be authorized; City of Newport v. Light Co., 89 Ky. 454, 12 S. W. 1040, 11 Ky. L. Rep. 840. In this case it was held that the city had power to contract with another person for electric lighting, and pay for both gas and electricity, but it could not dispense with the gas company's gas without liability for breach of contract. When an exclusive privilege of lighting the city and using the streets was given by the city to one company for a term of years, in consideration of low rates to citizens, it did not estop the municipal corporation from subscribing to the stock of a new gas company seeking to introduce gas; Memphis v. Dean, 8 Wall. (U. S.) 64, 19 L. Ed. 326. As to municipal authority to light streets, see Opinion of Justices, 150 Mass. 592, 24 N. E. 1084, 8 L. R. A. 487, note; ELECTRIC LIGHT.

The use of highways. The right to lay gas pipes in public highways can in general be granted only by the legislature. Such is the established rule both in England and in this country; 16 Q. B. 1012; 2 El. & El. 650; Jersey City Gas Co. v. Dwight, 29 N. J. Eq. 242; State v. Coke Co., 18 Ohio St. 262. In a city it may be granted by the municipal or local authorities when empowered by the legislature to do so; Norwich Gaslight Co. v. Gas Co., 25 Conn. 19; People v. Bowen, 30 Barb. (N. Y.) 24; in Massachusetts it was said to be not clear whether the city could act without authority from the state; per Gray, J., in City of Boston v. Richardson, 13 Allen (Mass.) 160; but in Michigan it was held to be essentially a matter of local control; People v. Gaslight Co., 38 Mich. 154. The city may forbid opening the streets within certain periods as a regulation, but a prohibition of digging up the street to introduce gas on the opposite side of it is an unreasonable exercise of authority; Com'rs of Northern Liberties v. Gas Co., 12 Pa. 318. In rural highways the laying of gas pipes is held to impose a new servitude not contemplated in the condemnation; Bloomfield & R. Natural Gas Light Co. v. Calkins, 62 N. Y. 386; Mills, Em. Dom. § 55; McDevitt v. Gas Co., 160 Pa. 367, 28 Atl. 948; but in city streets it does not; id. See 12 Am. & Eng. Corp. Cas. 334; EMINENT DOMAIN; HIGHWAY; STREET.

Obligation to supply gas. The difference of opinion as to the public character of gas companies necessarily results in contradictory decisions as to whether the companies are under a public duty to supply gas on request. They are usually held to be subject to the duty of furnishing gas upon reasonable terms to any one who applies for it, especially if the franchise is exclusive; Gaslight Co. of Baltimore v. Colliday, 25 Md. 1; Shepard v. Gaslight Co., 6 Wis. 539, 70 Am. Dec. 479; and the rule also applies where it is not; Williams v. Gas Co., 52 Mich. 499, 18 N. W. 236, 50 Am. Rep. 266; companies may be compelled to do so by mandamus; People v. Gaslight Co., 45 Barb. (N. Y.) 136. On the other hand it has been held that they are under no public duty to supply gas; McCune v. Gas Co., 30 Conn. 521, 79 Am. Dec. 278; 20 U. C. Q. B. 233; Com. v. Gaslight Co., 12 Allen (Mass.) 75; L. R. 15 Eq. 157; Paterson Gaslight Co. v. Brady, 27 N. J. L. 245, 72 Am. Dec. 360. The last case was put solely on the lack of precedent and is practically overruled; Dayton v. Quigley, 29 N. J. Eq. 77. See Portland Natural Gas & Oil Co. v. State, 34 N. E. 818.

The right to regulate rates has been applied to gas works; Zanesville v. Gaslight Co., 47 Ohio St. 1, 23 N. E. 55. But the right is not arbitrary, even where given to a municipality by the legislature; the right to charge reasonable rates is part of the contract of the company with the state, and this reasonableness is a matter for judicial determination; Capital City Gas Co. v. Des Moines, 72 Fed. 818. See RATES.

A gas company need not leave a gas meter in the house of a citizen who is using electric light, furnished by another company, so that in case of accident to the electric light he may use the gas; Fleming v. Light Co., 100 Ala. 657, 13 South. 618.

Rules and Regulations. In the conduct of their business such companies may make and enforce rules and regulations if fair and reasonable. Regulations have been held to be reasonable, requiring a deposit; Shepard v. Gaslight Co., 6 Wis. 539, 70 Am. Dec. 479; Williams v. Gas Co., 52 Mich. 499, 18 N. W. 236, 50 Am. Rep. 266; and that a written application should be signed; Shepherd v. Gaslight Co., 11 Wis. 234; but such an application cannot be made to embrace an agreement to be bound by illegal rules and regulations; Shepherd v. Gaslight Co., 15 Wis. 318, 82 Am. Dec. 679. Regulations may be enforced respecting the care and treatment of meters; Foster v. Gas Works, 12 Phila. (Pa.) 511; but it has been held that visits must be made at stated times and with notice; Shepard v. Gaslight Co., 6 Wis. 539, 70 Am. Dec. 479. Regulations held unreasonable or oppressive, and therefore non-enforceable, are that after the admission of gas the pipes may not be opened without a permit under penalty of treble damage; id.; that meters be placed upon main pipes of apartment buildings instead of smaller pipes of individual occupants; Young v. City of Boston, 104 Mass. 95; that rents should be payable half yearly in advance with penalty twenty days after default enforceable by cutting off the attachment until payment of the arrears and additional half year in advance; Dayton v. Quigley, 29 N. J. Eq. 77.

The right to cut off the supply. The company or the municipality has, as a general rule, the right to cut off the supply of gas if the bill for supplying it is not paid within a limited period. Such a provision by ordinance is a reasonable regulation; Com. v. Philadelphia, 132 Pa. 288, 19 Atl. 136; and furnishing gas without objection on account of former indebtedness is not a waiver of the right to shut off the gas for such prior indebtedness; People v. Gaslight Co., 45 Barb. (N. Y.) 136; but the right has been held not to extend to indebtedness of a former occupant of the premises; Morey v. Gaslight Co., 38 N. Y. Super. Ct. 185; L. R. 4 C. P. D. 410; Cox v. Gaslight Co., 199 Mass. 324, 85 N. E. 180, 17 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1235, 127 Am. St. Rep. 503. Even when the company has the right by statute to cut off the supply for nonpayment of regular charges it does not extend to charges for special service; 20 U. C. Q. B. 233; nor can the supply be cut off from one house for non-payment for another supplied under a different contract; Gaslight Co. of Baltimore v. Colliday, 25 Md. 1; 7 Grant, U. C. 112; and even when the contract authorizes refusal to continue a supply in case of default in payment for "any premises" of the owner it will apply only to future defaults; Lloyd v. Gaslight Co., 1 Mackey (D. C.) 331. Whenever there is a controversy as to the indebtedness the consumer may have an injunction; Sickles v. Gaslight Co., 66 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 314; contra, Cox v. Gaslight Co., 199 Mass. 324, 85 N. E. 180, 17 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1235, 127 Am. St. Rep. 503, where the remedy was held to be by mandamus. As to the measure of damages see that title. See also WATER.

Liability for negligence. Gas companies and others using or generating gas, artificial or natural, are subject to the general principle that one who uses a force which he cannot control is liable for the consequences, and where it may be controlled by due care and scientific knowledge and appliances he who receives the profit must bear the responsibility; 3 C. B. 1; they are liable for negligence which must involve the omission of something required by, or the doing of something forbidden by, reasonable care; Hutchinson v. Gaslight Co., 122 Mass. 219; 2 Fost. & F. 437; what is such care is not capable of exact definition but must vary with and conform to the exigencies of the situation; Holly v. Gaslight Co., 8 Gray (Mass.) 123, 69 Am. Dec. 233; Smith v. Gaslight Co., 129 Mass. 318; the obligation is increased by the dangerous character of the force under control; Koelsch v. Philadelphia Co., 152 Pa. 355, 25 Atl. 522, 18 L. R. A. 759, 34 Am. St. Rep. 653; Butcher v. Gas Co., 12 R. I. 149, 34 Am. Rep. 626; Fuchs v. City of St. Louis, 133 Mo. 168, 31 S. W. 115, 34 S. W. 508, 34 L. R. A. 118; and it extends to the company's agents and servants; Louisville Gas Co. v. Gutenkuntz, 82 Ky. 432; Butcher

v. Gas Co., 12 R. I. 149, 34 Am. Rep. 626. The company is liable for such consequences as were natural and probable and, in view of the nature of the agency, ought to have been foreseen; Oil City Gas Co. v. Robinson, 99 Pa. 1; Koelsch v. Philadelphia Co., 152 Pa. 355, 25 Atl. 522, 18 L. R. A. 759, 34 Am. St. Rep. 653; Hunt v. Gaslight Co., 8 Allen (Mass.) 169, 85 Am. Dec. 697; Emerson v. Gaslight Co., 3 Allen (Mass.) 410. See CAUSA PROXIMA NON REMOTA; Taylor v. Baldwin, 78 Cal. 517, 21 Pac. 124; Lannen v. Gaslight Co., 44 N. Y. 459.

Where the municipality is held liable in damages for an injury resulting from the negligence of a gas company in failing to keep in repair its apparatus located under the sidewalk, the company is liable over to the municipality; Washington Gaslight Co. v. District of Columbia, 161 U. S. 316, 16 Sup. Ct. 564, 40 L. Ed. 712.

The company is bound to exercise reasonable care in the location, structure, and repair of its pipes to prevent escape of gas so as to become dangerous to life or property; L. R. 7 Exch. 96; Smith v. Light Co., 129 Mass. 318; Mississinewa Mining Co. v. Patton, 129 Ind. 472, 28 N. E. 1113, 28 Am. St. Rep. 203; whether by reason of explosion or inhalation; Schmeer v. Gas Co., 65 Hun 378, 20 N. Y. Supp. 168; it must also provide with the like care for the inspection of pipes and repairing leaks; Pine Bluff Water & Light Co. v. Schneider, 62 Ark. 109, 34 S. W. 547, 33 L. R. A. 366; 4 Fost. & F. 324; and the discovery of such leaks; Consolidated Gas Co. of Baltimore City v. Crocker, 82 Md. 113, 33 Atl. 423, 31 L. R. A. 785; Lewis v. Boston Gas Co., 165 Mass. 411, 43 N. E. 178; Evans v. Gas Co., 148 N. Y. 112, 42 N. E. 513, 30 L. R. A. 651, 51 Am. St. Rep. 681; Koelsch v. Philadelphia Co., 152 Pa. 355, 25 Atl. 522, 18 L. R. A. 759, 34 Am. St. Rep. 653; and the safe condition of its apparatus authorized to be placed under the streets; Washington Gaslight Co. v. Dist. of Columbia, 161 U. S. 316, 16 Sup. Ct. 564, 40 L. Ed. 712. The failure to use such care makes the company jointly liable with one who seeks for the leak with a lighted match, for the results of an explosion; Pine Bluff Water & Light Co. v. McCain, 62 Ark. 118, 34 S. W. 549. The mere fact that the gas was exploded by a lighted match will not relieve the company whose negligence caused the leak; Koelsch v. Philadelphia Co., 152 Pa. 355, 25 Atl. 522, 18 L. R. A. 759, 34 Am. St. Rep. 653. It is not contributory negligence to search for a gas leak with a lighted match; Pine Bluff Water & Light Co. v. Schneider, 62 Ark. 109, 34 S. W. 547, 33 L. R. A. 366; or a candle; Schmeer v. Gas Co., 147 N. Y. 529, 42 N. E. 202, 30 L. R. A. 653. A city as a manufacturer and distributor of gas is liable for negligence of its officers, and its agents are bound to the exercise of due care in like manner as those of a private corporation;

Kibele v. City of Philadelphia, 105 Pa. 41; but not unless there is negligence; Strawbridge v. City of Philadelphia, 13 Phila. (Pa.) 173.

Where the gas company is authorized by the legislature the public may not recover damages, but it will be liable to a private person; People v. Gaslight Co., 64 Barb. (N. Y.) 55; id., 6 Lans. (N. Y.) 467. A gas company before turning on gas into an apartment house must use reasonable precautions to ascertain that the pipes in the building are in such condition that it will not flow out into the apartments of tenants, who have not applied for it, to their injury; per Peckham, J., in Schmeer v. Gaslight Co., 147 N. Y. 529, 42 N. E. 202, 30 L. R. A. 653. For an elaborate note on the liability for negligence in the escape and explosion of gas, see Ohio Gas Fuel Co. v. Andrews, 50 Ohio St. 695, 35 N. E. 1059, 29 L. R. A. 337; 16 Alb. L. J. 466. See also NEGLIGENCE. As to gas as a nuisance, see that title.

Remedies. An injunction will be granted to restrain a company from improperly cutting off the supply on the ground of irreparable injury; Sickles v. Gaslight Co., 64 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 33; L. R. 28 Ch. D. 138; a private owner cannot ask for an injunction against acts of companies in laying pipes until a request to the municipal authorities to do it and their refusal; Kenney v. Gas Co., 142 Mass. 417, 8 N. E. 138; and one company will not be restrained at suit of another; Jersey City Gaslight Co. v. Gas Co., 40 N. J. Eq. 427, 2 Atl. 922. When the gas becomes a nuisance by defective pipes, the municipality may abate it and will not be restrained, but when it is not a nuisance a bill for injunction will not be sustained at suit of the municipality; 5 Cent. Rep. (Pa.) 669.

Mandamus. Will lie to compel a supply of gas either artificial; People v. Gaslight Co., 45 Barb. (N. Y.) 137; or natural; Portland Natural Gas & Oil Co. v. State, 135 Ind. 54, 34 N. E. 818, 21 L. R. A. 639.

A claim that gas is of poor quality is no defence to an action for the supply of it; 32 Gas J. 5; but it may be shown that the gas was put out by air passing through the tubes, the contract being to pay for gas only, and the meter not being conclusive; Healey v. Bauer, 65 Hun 621, 19 N. Y. Supp. 988. An action will not lie against a gas company by a consumer for the failure of the company to give him a supply of gas of the amount and purity required by law; [1896] 1 Q. B. 592.

Connecting a rubber pipe with gas mains and taking off the gas therefrom is larceny; 1 Cr. Cas. Res. 172; Woods v. People, 222 Ill. 293, 78 N. E. 607, 7 L. R. A. (N. S.) 520, 113 Am. St. Rep. 415, 6 Ann. Cas. 736.

As to pipes in the ground, whether real or personal, see 12 Am. & Eng. Corp. Cas. 334; and as to gas fixtures, see FIXTURES.

GASTALDERS. A temporary governor of the country. Blount. A steward or bailiff. Spel. Gloss.

GASTEL (L. Fr.). Wastel; wastelbread; the finest kind of wheat bread. Britt. c. 30; Kelham.

GASTINE (L. Fr.). Waste or uncultivated ground. Britt. c. 57.

GATE (Sax. geat), at the end of names of places, signifies way or path. Cunningham, Law Dict.

In the words beast-gate and cattle-gate, it means a right of pasture: these rights are local to Suffolk and Yorkshire respectively; they are considered as corporeal hereditaments, for which ejectment will lie; 2 Stra. 1084, 1 Term 137; and are entirely distinct from right of common. The right is sometimes connected with the duty of repairing the gates of the pasture: and perhaps the name comes from this.

GAUGER. An officer appointed to examine all tuns, pipes, hogsheads, barrels, and tierces of wine, oil, and other liquids, and to give them a mark of allowance, as containing lawful measure.

GAUGETUM. A gauge or guaging; a measure of the contents of any vessel. Cowell.

GAVEL. In Old English Law. Tribute; toll; custom; yearly revenue, of which there were formerly various kinds. Jacob, Law Dict.; Taylor, Hist. Gavelkind, 26, 102. See GABEL.

GAVELBRED. In English Law. Rent reserved in bread, corn, or provision; rent payable in kind. Cowell.

GAVELET. An obsolete writ, a kind of cessavit (q. v.), used in Kent. Cowell.

A custom in Kent which practically amounted to a forfeiture of land held in gavelkind. Hazeltine, 3 Sel. Essays in Anglo-Amer. L. H. 661.

GAVELGELD (Sax. gavel, rent, geld, payment). That which yields annual profit or toll. The tribute or toll itself. 3 Mon. Angl. 155; Cowell; Du Cange, Gavelgida.

GAVELHERTE. A customary service of ploughing. Du Cange.

GAVELKIND (Gafolcund; Gaful-gecynd. Vinogradoff, Engl. Soc.). The tenure by which almost all lands in England were held prior to the Conquest, and which is still preserved in Kent.

All the sons of a tenant of gavelkind lands take equally, or their heirs male and female by representation. The wife of such tenant is dowable of one-half the lands. The husband of such tenant has curtesy, whether issue be born or not, but only of one-half while without issue. Such lands do not escheat, except for treason or want of heirs. The heir of such lands may sell at fifteen years old, but must himself give livery. The rule as to division among brothers in default of sons is the same as among the sons. Digb. R. P. 46. The youngest son took the hearth. Vinogradoff, Engl. Soc. 92.

Coke derives gavelkind from "gave all kinde;" for this custom gave to all the sons alike; 1 Co. Litt. 140 a; Lambard, from gavel, rent,—that is, land of the kind that pays rent or customary husbandry work, in distinction from lands held by knight service. Perambulations of Kent, 1856, p. 585.

There have been many suggested derivations of gavelkind. The true derivation connects it with the old English gafol, or gavel, which means rent or customary performance of agricultural services. The tenant was called gavelman, and gavelkind, a compound of gavel and gekynde (kind, quality), meant land of the kind which yielded rent, as distinguished from knight service land held by free military tenure. No doubt in earlier days it denoted land held by this particular tenure, but later it came to be used as the name for the custom by which lands in Kent are, in the absence of proof to the contrary, presumed to be affected, and sometimes in later law to express the fact that lands, in Kent or elsewhere, were divided between male heirs on the death of the ancestor. 3 Holdsw. Hist. E. L. 224. See Robinson, Gavelkind.

See Encyc. Brit.; Blount; 1 Bla. Com. 74; 2 id. 84; 4 id. 408; 1 Poll. & Maitl. 165; 2 id. 269, 416.

GAVELLER. An officer of the English crown, who had the management of the mines and quarries in the Forest of Dean and Hundred of St. Briavels, subject, in some respects, to the control of commissioners of woods and forests. He granted gales to free miners in their proper order, accepted surrenders of gales, and kept the registers required by the acts. There was a deputy-gaveller who appears to have exercised most of the gaveller's functions. Sweet.

GAVELMAN. A tenant who is liable to tribute. Somner, Gavelkind, p. 33; Blount. Gavelingmen were tenants who paid a reserved rent, besides customary service. Cowell.

GAVELMED. A customary service of mowing meadow-land or cutting grass (consuetudo falcandi). Somner, Gavelkind, App.; Blount.

GAVELREP. In Old English Law. Bed-reap or bidreap; the duty of reaping at the bid or command of the lord. Somner, Gavelkind 19, 21; Cowell.

GAVELSESTER. A certain measure of rent-ale. Cowell.

GAVELWERK (called also Gavelweek). A customary service, either manuopera, by the person of the tenant, or carropera, by his carts or carriages. Phillips, Purveyance; Somner, Gavelkind 24; Du Cange.

GAZETTE. The official publication of the British government, also called the London Gazette. It is evidence of acts of state, and of everything done by the crown in a political capacity. Orders of adjudication in bankruptcy are required to be published therein, and a copy of the Gazette containing such publication is conclusive evidence of the fact, and of the date thereof. Moz. & W.

GEARY ACT. See CHINESE.

GEBOCIAN (from Sax. boc). To convey boc land,—the grantor being said to gebocian the grantee of the land; 1 Reeves, Hist. Eng. Law 21.

See Du Cange, Liber; BOCLAND; FOLCLAND.

GEBUR (Sax.). A boor. His services varied in different places—to work for his lord two or more days a week; to pay gafols in money, barley, etc.; to pay hearth money, etc. He was a tenant with a house and a yard land or virgate or two oxen. Maitl. Domesday and Beyond 37.

GEBURSCIR. Neighborhood or adjoining district. Cowell.

GEBURUS. In Old English Law. A country neighbor; an inhabitant of the same gaburscript, or village. Cowell.

GELD (from Sax. gildan; Law Lat. geldum). A payment, tax, tribute. Laws of Hen. I. c. 2; Charta Edredi Regis apud Ingulfum, c. 81; Mon. Ang. t. 1, pp. 52, 211, 379; t. 2, p. 161; Du Cange; Blount.

A land tax of so much per hide or carucate. Maitl. Domesday Book 120.

The compensation for a crime.

We find geld added to the word denoting the offence, or the thing injured or destroyed, and the compound taking the meaning of compensation for that offence or the value of that thing. Capitulare 3, anno 813, cc. 23, 25; Carl Magn. So, wergeld, the compensation for killing a man, or his value; orfgeld the value of cattle; angeld, the value of a single thing; octogeld, the value eight times over, etc. Du Cange, Geldum.

GELDABILIS. In Old English Law. Taxable.

GELDABLE. Liable to be taxed. 1 Poll. & Maitl. 552; Kelham.

GEMOT (gemote, or mote; Sax., from gemelland, to meet or assemble; L. Lat. gemotum). An assembly; a mote or moot, meeting or public assembly.

There were various kinds: as, the witena-gemot, or meeting of the wise men; the folc-gemot, or fole-moot, the general assembly of the people; the shire-gemot or shiremoot or county court; the burghmoot, or borough court; the hundred-moot, or hundred court; the hali-gemot, or court-baron; the halimote, a convention of citizens in their public hall;

the holy-mote, or holy court; the swanmote, or forest court; the ward-mote, or ward court; Cunningham, Law Dict. And see the several titles.

GENEALOGY. The summary history or table of a family, showing how the persons there named are connected together.

It is founded on the idea of a lineage or family. Persons descended from the common father constitute a family. Under the idea of degrees is noted the nearness or remoteness of relationship in which one person stands with respect to another. A series of several persons, descended from a common progenitor, is called a line. Children stand to each other in the relation either of full blood or half-blood, according as they are descended from the same parents or have only one parent in common. For illustrating descent and relationship, genealogical tables are constructed, the order of which depends on the end in view. In tables the object of which is to show all the individuals embraced in a family, it is usual to begin with the oldest progenitor, and to put all the persons of the male and female sex in descending, and then in collateral, lines. Other tables exhibit the ancestors of a particular person in ascending lines both on the father's and the mother's side. In this way four, eight, sixteen, thirty-two, etc., ancestors are exhibited, doubling at every degree. Some tables are constructed in the form of a tree, after the model of canonical law (arbor consanguinitatis), with the progenitor beneath, for the root or stem. See CONSANGUINITY.

GENEARCH. The head of the family.

GENEATH. In Saxon Law. A villein, or agricultural tenant (villanus villicus); a hind, or farmer (fimarius rusticus). Spel. Gloss.

GENER (Lat.). A son-in-law.

GENERAL APPEARANCE. See APPEARANCE.

GENERAL APPRAISERS, COURT OF. See COURT OF APPRAISERS OF THE UNITED STATES.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY. A name given in some of the states to the senate and house of representatives, which compose the legislative body.

GENERAL ASSIGNMENT. An assignment of all one's property for the benefit of his creditors; it necessarily includes an assignee who shall by the terms of the instrument, or as an inference from those terms, take as a trustee for the creditors. Tompkins v. Bank, 18 N. Y. Supp. 234. See ASSIGNMENT.

GENERAL AVERAGE. A loss arising out of extraordinary sacrifices made, or extraordinary expenses incurred, for the joint benefit of a ship and cargo. Louisville Underwriters v. Pence, 93 Ky. 96, 19 S. W. 10, 40 Am. St. Rep. 176.

A general average clause in a bill of lading, that if the shipowner shall have exercised due diligence to make his ship seaworthy and properly manned, etc. (see Harter Act), the cargo shall contribute in general average with the shipowner, even if the loss result from negligence in navigation, is valid. Under the same circumstances, the cargo owners are entitled to contribution from the shipowner for sacrifices of cargo for the common benefit of ship, cargo and freight subsequent to stranding; The Jason, 225 U. S. 32, 32 Sup. Ct. 560, 56 L. Ed. 969.

The essence is that extraordinary sacrifices made and expenses incurred for the common benefit are to be borne proportionately by all interested; The Jason, 225 U. S. 32, 32 Sup. Ct. 560, 56 L. Ed. 969. The Irrawaddy, 171 U. S. 187, 18 Sup. Ct. 831, 43 L. Ed. 130, goes no further than to decide that while the Harter Act relieved the shipowner from liability for his servant's negligence, it did not of its own force entitle him to share in a general average rendered necessary by such negligence; The Jason, 225 U. S. 54, 32 Sup. Ct. 560, 56 L. Ed. 969.

See AVERAGE; HARTER ACT.

GENERAL BOARD OF THE NAVY. It consists of the Admiral of the Navy, the Aids for Operations and for Material, the Chief Intelligence Officer, the President of the War College, and such additional officers as the Secretary of the Navy may designate. It was established under General Order March 13, 1900. It is a general advisory board to the Secretary of the Navy as to the preparation, maintenance and distribution of the fleet, plans of campaign, number and types of vessels, etc., number and ranks of officers and number and ratings of enlisted men, etc.

GENERAL CHALLENGE. A challenge for cause to a particular juror, upon a ground which disqualifies him from serving in any case. Cal. Pen. Code § 1071.

GENERAL CHARACTER. The general character is the estimation in which a person is held in the community where he has resided, and, ordinarily, the members of that community are the only proper witnesses to testify as to such character. Accordingly a witness who goes to the place of the former residence of a party to learn his character will not be allowed to testify as to the result of his inquiries. Douglass v. Tousey, 2 Wend. (N. Y.) 354, 20 Am. Dec. 616. See CHARACTER.

GENERAL CHARGE. The charge or instruction of the court to the jury upon the case, as a whole, or upon its general features and characteristics. See CHARGE.

GENERAL CIRCULATION. That of a general newspaper only, as distinguished from one of a special or limited character; 1 Lack. Leg. N. (Pa.) 114.

GENERAL COUNCIL. A council of bishops, of the Roman Catholic Church, from different parts of the world.

A name sometimes applied to the British parliament.

GENERAL COURT. The Massachusetts legislature is so called.

GENERAL CREDIT. The character of a witness as one generally worthy of credit. There is a distinction between this and particular credit, which may be affected by proof of particular facts relating to the particular action; Bemis v. Kyle, 5 Abb. Pr. N. S. (N. Y.) 232.

GENERAL CUSTOM. See CUSTOM.

GENERAL DAMAGES. See DAMAGES.

GENERAL DEMURRER. See DEMURRER.

GENERAL DENIAL. See DENIAL; PLEA; TRAVERSE.

GENERAL DEPOSIT. As to money in a bank, it means one to be returned to the depositor in a like sum, but not the same money which was deposited. Mutual Accident Ass'n of the Northwest v. Jacobs, 43 Ill. App. 340; Talladega Ins. Co. v. Landers, 43 Ala. 138. See DEPOSIT; SPECIAL DEPOSIT.

GENERAL ELECTION. An election of officers of the general government, either federal or state, as distinguished from an election of local officers.

One held to choose an officer after the expiration of the full term of the former officer, as distinguished from one held to fill a vacancy occurring before the expiration of the full term for which the incumbent was elected. Kenfield v. Irwin, 52 Cal. 164.

GENERAL FUND. A phrase used in some states as a collective designation of all the assets of the state available for the support of the state government and for defraying the ordinary appropriations of the legislature. It is so used in New York; People v. Board of Sup'rs, 27 Barb. (N. Y.) 575, 588; and also in Delaware in the messages of the governor and other state papers to distinguish such funds as are available in the hands of the state treasurer for general purposes from assets of a special character, such as the school fund.

GENERAL GAOL DELIVERY. In English Law. One of the four commissions issued to judges holding the assizes, which empowers them to try and deliverance make of every prisoner who shall be in the gaol when the judges arrive at the circuit town, whether an indictment has been preferred at any previous assize or not.

It was anciently the course to issue special writs of gaol delivery for each prisoner, which were called writs de bono et malo; but, these being found inconvenient and oppressive, a general commission for all the prisoners has long been established in their stead. 4 Steph. Com. 333; 2 Hawk. Pl. Cr. 14, 28.

Under this authority it was necessary that the gaol be cleared and delivered of all prisoners in it, whenever or before whomever indicted or for whatever crime. Such deliverance took place when the person is either acquitted, convicted, or sentenced to punishment. Bract. 110. See COURTS OF OYER AND TERMINER AND GENERAL GAOL DELIVERY; GAOL DELIVERY; ASSIZE.

GENERAL IMPARLANCE. In Pleading. One granted upon a prayer in which the defendant reserves to himself no exceptions.

GENERAL ISSUE. In Pleading. A plea which denies or traverses at once the whole indictment or declaration, without offering any special matter to evade it.

It is called the general issue because, by importing an absolute and general denial of what is alleged in the indictment or declaration, it amounts at once to an issue. 2 Bla. Com. 305. In the early manner of pleading, the general issue was seldom used except where the party meant wholly to deny the charges alleged against him. When he intended to excuse or palliate the charge, a special plea was used to set forth the particular facts. See 2 Poll. & Matl. 617. But now, since special pleading is generally abolished, the same result is secured by requiring the defendant to file notice of special matters of defence which he intends to set up at the trial, or obliging him to use a form of answer adapted to the plaintiff's declaration, the method varying in different systems of pleading. Under the English Judicature Acts, the general issue is no longer admissible in ordinary civil actions, except where expressly sanctioned by statute.

In criminal cases the general issue is, not guilty. In civil cases the general issues are almost as various as the forms of action: in assumpsit, the general issue is non assumpsit; in debt, nil debet; in detinue, non detinet; in trespass, non culpabilis (not guilty); in replevin, non cepit, etc. Steph. Pl. 232.

GENERAL LAND-OFFICE. A bureau in the United States government which has the charge of matters relating to the public lands.

It was established by the act of April 25, 1812. It was reorganized by act of July 4, 1836. It was originally a bureau of the treasury department, but was transferred in 1859 to the department of the interior. The statutes on the subject are comprised in U. S. Rev. Stat. §§ 446-461. The head of it is the commissioner of the general land-office. He has charge (under the secretary of the interior) of surveying and selling public lands, matters pertaining to private claims of lands, and issuing patents for lands granted by the United States. By act of April 28, 1904, he has all the powers vested formerly in the court of private land claims in the approval of surveys.

GENERAL LAWS. Laws which apply to and operate uniformly upon all members of any class of persons, places, or things, requiring legislation peculiar to themselves in the matters covered by the laws. Binney, Restrictions upon Local and Special Legislation. Quoted in Com. v. State Treasurer, 29 Pa. Co. Ct. R. 578.

Statutes which relate to persons and things as a class. Wheeler v. Philadelphia, 77 Pa. 348. Laws that are framed in general terms, restricted to no locality, and operating equally upon all of a group of objects which, having regard to the purpose of the legislation, are distinguished by characteristics sufficiently marked and important to make them a class by themselves. Van Riper v. Parsons, 40 N. J. L. 123, 29 Am. Rep. 210.

The later constitutions of many of the states place restrictions upon the legislature as to passing special laws in certain cases. In some states there is a provision that general laws only may be passed, in cases where such can be made applicable. Provisions requiring all laws of a general nature to be uniform in their operation do not prohibit the passage of laws applicable to cities of a certain class having not less than a certain number of inhabitants, although there be but one city in the state of that class; Welker v. Potter, 18 Ohio St. 85; Cooley, Const. Lim. 156. See Brooks v. Hyde, 37 Cal. 366.

The wisdom of these constitutional provisions has been the subject of grave doubt. See Cooley, Const. Lim. 156, n.

When thus used, the term "general" has a twofold meaning. With reference to the subject-matter of the statute, it is synonymous with "public" and opposed to "private"; Brooks v. Hyde, 37 Cal. 366; Yellow River Imp. Co. v. Arnold, 46 Wis. 218, 49 N. W. 971; Dwarries, Stat. 629; Sedgw. Stat. L. 30; but with reference to the extent of territory over which it is to operate, it is opposed to "local," and means that the statute to which it applies operates throughout the whole of the territory subject to the legislative jurisdiction; 4 Co. 75 a; 1 Bla. Com. 85; People v. Cooper, 83 Ill. 585; King v. State, 87 Tenn. 304, 10 S. W. 509, 3 L. R. A. 210; Clark v. City of Janesville, 10 Wis. 180. Further, when used in antithesis to "special" it means relating to all of a class instead of to men only of that class; People v. Wright, 70 Ill. 398; Hymes v. Aydelott, 26 Ind. 431; Porter v. Thomson, 22 Ia. 391; Wheeler v. Philadelphia, 77 Pa. 348; Sawyer v. Dooley, 21 Nev. 390, 32 Pac. 440.

When the constitution forbids the passing of special or local laws in specified cases, it is within the discretion of the legislature to decide whether a subject not named in the constitution is a proper subject for general legislation; the fact that a special law is passed in relation thereto is evidence that it was thought that a general law would not serve; and in such a case clear evidence of mistake is required to invalidate the enactment; People v. McFadden, 81 Cal. 489, 22 Pac. 851, 15 Am. St. Rep. 66; Kelly v. State, 92 Ind. 236; Richman v. Sup'rs Muscatine County, 77 Ia. 513, 42 N. W. 422, 4 L. R. A. 445, 14 Am. St. Rep. 308.

In deciding whether or not a given law is general, the purpose of the act and the objects on which it operates must be looked to. If these objects possess sufficient characteristics peculiar to themselves and the purpose of the legislation is germane thereto, they will be considered as a separate class, and legislation affecting them will be general; Long Branch v. Sloane, 49 N. J. L. 356, 8 Atl. 101; Consumers' Gas-Trust Co. v. Harless, 131 Ind. 446, 29 N. E. 1062, 15 L. R. A. 505; Ripley v. Evans, 87 Mich. 217, 49 N. W. 504; Coal Run Coal Co. v. Finlen, 124 Ill. 666, 17 N. E. 11; Demoville & Co. v. Davidson County, 87 Tenn. 214, 10 S. W. 353; but if the distinctive characteristics of the class have no relation to that purpose of the legislature, or if objects which would appropriately belong to the same class have been excluded, the classification is faulty, and the law not general; Lorentz v. Alexander, 87 Ga. 444, 13 S. E. 632; City of Pasadena v. Stimson, 91 Cal. 238, 27 Pac. 604; City of Topeka v. Gillett, 32 Kan. 431, 4 Pac. 800; Inhabitants of Lodi Tp. v. State, 51 N. J. L. 402, 18 Atl. 749, 6 L. R. A. 56; State v. Boyd, 19 Nev. 43, 5 Pac. 735; Edmonds v. Herbrandson, 2 N. Dak. 270, 50 N. W. 970, 14 L. R. A. 725; Davis v. Clark, 106 Pa. 377. The effect, not the form of the law, determines its character; McAunich v. R. Co., 20 Ia. 338; State v. Tolle, 71 Mo. 645; Dempsey v. Newark, 53 N. J. L. 4, 20 Atl. 886, 10 L. R. A. 700; Marmet v. State, 45 Ohio St. 63, 12 N. E. 463; Commonwealth v. Patton, 88 Pa. 258.

See LEGISLATIVE POWER; STATUTE.

GENERAL OCCUPANT. The man who could first enter upon lands held pur autre vie, after the death of the tenant for life, living the cestui que vie. At common law he held the lands by right for the remainder of the term; but this is now altered by statute, in England, the term going to the executors if not devised; 29 Car. II. c. 3; 14 Geo. II. c. 20; 2 Bla. Com. 258. This has been followed by some states; 1 Md. Code 666, s. 220, art. 93; in some states the term goes to heirs, if undevise; Mass. Gen. Stat. c. 91, § 1.

GENERAL ORDERS. Orders or rules of court, entered for the guidance of practitioners and the general regulation of procedure, or in some branch of its general jurisdiction; as opposed to a rule or an order made in a particular case. The rules of court.

GENERAL OWNER. The general owner of a thing is one who has the primary title to it; as distinguished from a special owner, who has a special interest in the same thing, amounting to a qualified ownership, such, for example, as a bailee lien.

One who has both the right of property and of possession.

GENERAL PARTNERSHIP. See PARTNERSHIP.

GENERAL PROPERTY. The right and property in a thing enjoyed by the general owner (q. v.).

GENERAL RELIEF. In a bill in equity, after praying such relief as is deemed proper, it is usual to add a prayer for general relief. The new supreme court equity rule 25 (33 Sup. Ct. xxv) does not require such prayer.

GENERAL RESTRAINT OF TRADE. A contract which forbids the party to it from engaging in a particular business without limitation either of time or locality. Such contracts are void. 2 Add. Cont., Abb. & Wood ed. 737.

One which forbids the person to employ his talents, industry, or capital in any undertaking within the limits of the state or country. Holbrook v. Waters, 9 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 337. See RESTRAINT OF TRADE; GOOD WILL.

GENERAL RETURN DAY. In any court the day for the return of all process, such as writs of summons, subpoena, etc., issued returnable to a particular term of the court. See RETURN OF WRITS.

GENERAL RULES. Standing orders of a court for the regulation of its practice. See GENERAL ORDERS.

GENERAL SESSIONS. See COURT OF GENERAL QUARTER SESSIONS OF THE PEACE.

GENERAL SHIP. One which is employed by the charterer or owner on a particular voyage, and is hired by a number of persons, unconnected with each other, to convey their respective goods to the place of destination. A ship advertised for general receipt of goods to be carried on a particular voyage. The advertisement should state the name of the ship and master, the general character of the ship, the time of sailing, and the proposed voyages. See 1 Pars. Mar. Law 130; Abb. Shipp. 123.

The shippers in a general ship generally contract with the master; but in law the owners and the masters are separately bound to the performance of the contract, it being considered as made with the owners as well as with the master; Abb. Shipp. 319.

GENERAL SPECIAL IMPARLANCE. In Pleading. One in which the defendant reserves to himself "all advantages and exceptions whatsoever." 2 Chitty, Pl. 408. See IMPARLANCE.

GENERAL STATUTE. See GENERAL LAWS.

GENERAL TAIL. See FEE-TAIL.

GENERAL TENANCY. A tenancy which is not fixed and made certain, as to its duration, by agreement of the parties. Brown's Adm'rs v. Bragg, 22 Ind. 122.

GENERAL TERM. A phrase used in some jurisdictions to designate the regular session of a court, for the trial and decision of causes, as distinguished from a special term, for the hearing of motions or arguments, or the despatch of routine or formal business, or the trial of a special list or class of causes or a particular case. It is also sometimes used to designate a sitting of the court in banc.

GENERAL TRAVERSE. See TRAVERSE.

GENERAL VERDICT. See VERDICT.

GENERAL WARRANT. A process which used to issue from the state secretary's office, to take up (without naming any person in particular) the author, printer, and publisher of such obscene and seditious libels as were particularly specified in it. The practice of issuing such warrants was common in early English history, but it received its death blow from Lord Camden, in the time of Wilkes. The latter was arrested and his private papers taken possession of under such a warrant, on a charge of seditious libel in publishing No. 45 of the North Briton. He recovered heavy damages against Lord Halifax who issued the warrant. Pratt, C. J., declared the practice to be "totally subversive of the liberty of the subject," and with the unanimous concurrence of the other judges condemned this dangerous and unconstitutional practice. See May, Const. Hist. of England; 5 Co. 91; 2 Wils. 151, 275; Bell v. Clapp, 10 Johns. (N. Y.) 263, 6 Am. Dec. 339; Saily v. Smith, 11 Johns. (N. Y.) 500; Cooley, Const. Lim. 369. Such warrants were declared illegal and void for uncertainty by a vote of the house of commons. Com. Jour. 22, April, 1766; Whart. Law Dict.

A writ of assistance.

The issuing of these was one of the causes of the American Revolution. They were a species of general warrant, being directed to "all and singular justices, sheriffs, constables and all other officers and subjects," empowering them to enter and search any house for uncustomed goods, and to command all to assist them. These writs were perpetual, there being no return to them. They were not executed, owing to the eloquent argument of Otis before the supreme court of Massachusetts against their legality. See Tudor, Life of Otis 66; Story, Const. 1901.

GENERAL WARRANTY. See COVENANT OF WARRANTY; WARRANTY.

GENERAL WORDS. Such words of a descriptive character as are used in conveyances in order to convey, not only the specific property described, but also all kinds of easements, privileges, and appurtenances which may possibly belong to the property conveyed. Such words are in general unnecessary; but are properly used when there are any easements or privileges reputed to belong to the property not legally appurtenant to it.

Such words are rendered unnecessary by the English conveyancing act of 1881, under which they are presumed to be included.

See, as to the effect of such words in deeds, 4 M. & S. 423; in a will; 1 P. Wms. 302; in a lease; 2 Moo. 592; in a release; 3 Mod. 277; in a covenant; 3 Moo. 703; in a statute; 1 Bla. Com. 88; 2 Co. 46.

See INTERPRETATION.

GENERATION. A simple succession of living beings in natural descent; the age or period between one succession and another. It is not equivalent to degree. McMillan v. School Committee, 107 N. C. 609, 12 S. E. 330, 10 L. R. A. 823.

GENS (Lat.). In Roman Law. A union of families, who bore the same name, who were of an ingenuous (free) birth, ingenui, none of whose ancestors had been a slave, and who had suffered no capitis diminutio (reduction from a superior to an inferior condition), of which there were three degrees, maxima, media, minima. The first was the reduction of a free man to the condition of a slave, and was undergone by those who refused or neglected to be registered at the census, who had been condemned to ignominious punishments, who refused to perform military service, or who had been taken prisoners by the enemy, though those of the last class, on recovering their liberty, could be reinstated in their rights of citizenship. The second degree consisted in the reduction of a citizen to the condition of an alien (Latinus or peregrinus), and involved in the case of a Latinus, the loss of the right of legal marriage, but not of acquiring property, and in the case of the peregrinus, the loss of both. The third degree consisted in the change of condition of a pater familias into that of a filius familias, either by adoption or by legitimation.

Gentiles sunt, qui inter se eodem nomine sunt; qui ab ingenuis oriundi sunt; quorum majorum nemo servitutem servivit: qui capite non sunt diminuti. This definition is given by Cicero (Topic 6), after Scævola, the pontifex. But, notwithstanding this high authority, the question as to the organization of the gens is involved in great obscurity and doubt. The definition of Festus is still more vague and unsatisfactory. He says, "Gentilis dicitur et ex eodem genere ortus, et is, qui simili nomine appellatur, ut ait Cincius: Gentiles mihi sunt, qui meo nomine appellantur." Gens and genus are convertible terms; and Cicero defines the latter word, "Genus autem est quod sui similes communione quadam, specie autem differentes, duas aut plures complectitur partes." De Oratore, 1, 42. The gens is that which comprehends two or more particulars, similar to one another by having something in common, but differing in species. From this it may fairly be concluded that the gens or race comprises several families, always of ingenuous birth, resembling each other by their origin, general name,—nomen,—and common sacrifices or sacred rites,—sacra gentilitia (sui similes communione quadam),—but differing from each other by a particular name,—cognomen and agnatio (specie autem differentes). It would seem, however, from the litigation between the Claudii and Marcellii in relation to the inheritance of the son of a freedman, reported by Cicero, that the deceased, whose succession was in controversy, belonging to the gens Claudia, for the foundation of their claim was the gentile rights,—gente; and the Marcellii (plebeians belonging to the same gens) supported their pretensions on the ground that he was the son of their freedman. This fact has been thought by some writers to contradict that part of the definition of Scaevola and Cicero where they say, quorum majorum nemo servitutem servivit. And Niebuhr, in a note to his history, concludes that the definition is erroneous: he says, "The claim of the patrician Claudii is at variance with the definition in the Topics, which excludes the posterity of freedmen from the character of gentiles: probably the decision was against the Claudii, and this might be the ground on which Cicero denied the title of gentiles to the descendants of freedmen. I conceive in so doing he must have been mistaken. We know from Cicero himself (de Leg. 11, 22) that no bodies or ashes were allowed to be placed in the common sepulchre unless they belonged to such as shared in the gens and its sacred rites; and several freedmen have been admitted into the sepulchre of the Scipios." But in another place he says, "The division into houses was so essential to the patrician order that the appropriate ancient term to designate that order was a circumlocution,—the patrician gentes; but the instance just mentioned shows beyond the reach of a doubt that such a gens did not consist of patricians alone. The Claudian contained the Marcellii, who were plebeians, equal to the Appii in the splendor of the honors they attained to, and incomparably more useful to the commonwealth; such plebeian families must evidently have arisen from marriages of disparagement, contracted before there was any right of intermarriage between the orders. But the Claudian house had also a very large number of insignificant persons who bore its name,—such as the M. Claudius who disputed the freedom of Virginia; nay, according to an opinion of earlier times, as the very case in Cicero proves, it contained the freedmen and their descendants. Thus, among the Gaels, the clan of the Campbells was formed by the nobles and their vassals: if we apply the Roman phrase to them, the former had the clan, the latter only belonged to it." It is obvious that, if what is said in the concluding part of the passage last quoted be correct, the definition of Scaevola and Cicero is perfectly consistent with the theory of Niebuhr himself; for the definition, of course, refers to the original stock of the gens, and not to such as might be attached to it or stand in a certain legal relation towards it. In Smith's Dictionary of Greek and Roman Antiquities, edited by that accomplished classical scholar, Professor Anthon, the same distinction is intimated, though not fully developed, as follows: "But it must be observed, though the descendants of freedmen might have no claim as gentiles, the members of the gens might, as such, have claims against them; and in this sense the descendants of freedmen might be gentiles." This article by George Long is much quoted and contains references to the principal German authorities, and it may be consulted with profit. Hugo, in his history of the Roman Law, vol. 1, p. 83, says, "Those who bore the same name belonged all to the same gens: they were gentiles with regard to each other. Consequently, as the freedmen took the name of their former master, they adhered to his gens, or, in other words, stood in the relation of gentiles to him and his male descendants. Livy refers in express terms to the gens of an enfranchised slave (b. 39, 19), "Tecenæ Hispanæ . . . gentis enupatio," and the right of inheritance of the son of a freedman was conferred on the ground of civil relationship,—gente. But there must necessarily have been a great difference between those who were born in the gens and those who had only entered it by adoption, and their descendants; that is to say, between those who formed the original stock of the gens, who were all of patrician origin, and those who had entered the family by their own enfranchisement or that of their ancestors. The former alone were entitled to the rights of the gentiles; and perhaps the appellation itself was confined to them, while the latter were called gentilitii, to designate those against whom the gentiles had certain rights to exercise."

In a lecture of Niebuhr on the Roman Gentes, vol. 1, p. 70, he says, "Such an association, consisting of a number of families, from which a person may withdraw, but into which he cannot be admitted at all; or only by being adopted by the whole association, is a gens. It must not be confounded with the family, the members of which are descended from a common ancestor; for the patronymic names of the gentes are nothing but symbols, and are derived from heroes." Arnold gives the following exposition of the subject: "The people of Rome were divided into the three tribes of the Ramnenses, Titienses, and Luceres, and each of these tribes was divided into ten curiæ; it would be more correct to say that the union of ten curiæ formed the tribe. For the state grew out of the junction of certain original elements; and these were neither the tribes, nor even the curiæ, but the gentes or houses which made up the curiæ. The first element of the whole system was the gens, or house, a union of several families who were bound together by the joint performance of certain religious rites. Actually, where a system of houses has existed within historical memory, the several families who composed a house were not necessarily related to one another; they were not really cousins more or less distant, all descended from a common ancestor. But there is no reason to doubt that in the original idea of a house the bond of union between its several families was truly sameness of blood; such was likely to be the earliest acknowledged tie, although afterwards, as names are apt to outlive their meaning, an artificial bond may have succeeded to the natural one, and a house, instead of consisting of families of real relations, was made up sometimes of families of strangers, whom it was proposed to bind together by a fictitious tie, in the hope that law and custom and religion might together rival the force of nature." 1 Arnold, Hist. 31.

Maine, in his chapter on the origin of property, selects the village community of India as a type of "an organized patriarchal society and an assemblage of co-proprietors" which "ought at once to rivet our attention from its exactly fitting in with the ideas which our studies in the law of persons would lead us to entertain respecting the original condition of property;" Anc. L. 252. After describing it somewhat fully he says: The type with which it should be compared is evidently not the Roman family, but the Roman gens or house. The gens was also a group on the model of a family; it was the family extended by a variety of fictions of which the exact nature was lost in antiquity. In historical times, its leading characteristics were the very two which Elphinstone remarks in the village community. There was always the assumption of a common origin, an assumption sometimes notoriously at variance with fact; and, to repeat the historian's words, "if a family became extinct, its share returned to the common stock." In old Roman Law, unclaimed inheritances escheated to the gentiles. It is further suspected by all who have examined their history that the communities, like the gentes, have been very generally adulterated by the admission of strangers, but the exact mode of absorption cannot now be ascertained; id. 256. Another writer considers that the gens "was something very nearly identical with a Celtic clan, the identity or similarity of name being always supposed to have arisen from relationship, and not from similarity of occupation, as in the case of the Smiths, Taylors, Lorrainers, etc., of modern Europe. There was this peculiarity, however, about the gens which did not belong to the clan—viz., that it was possible for an individual born in it to cease to belong to it by capitis diminutio, or by adoption (by a family not of the same gens), or adrogation as it was called when the person adopted was sui juris." Int. Cyc.

A recognized authority on the civil law refers to the obscurity of this subject in treating of successions. Under the twelve tables there were recognized only (1) sui heredes; (2) agnati; (3) gentiles, and in default of the latter the inheritance lapsed to the state. The prætors called the cognati for the first time to the succession, "probably because" says Sandars (Inst. 290), "at the time of the prætor's legislation there were few families that could boast a descent so pure and accurately known as to satisfy the requisite of gentilitas." He also says in the same connection: "The subject of gentilitas is too obscure, and repays investigation too little, to permit us to enter into it here. Probably the original notion of gentiles was that of members of some pure uncorrupted patrician stock, though not necessarily of the same descent, but bearing the same name, and having the same sacra. Probably, also, freedmen and clients of gentiles were in some degree, considered as themselves gentiles; probably if their property was not claimed by their patron it went to the members of his gens, but they had not any claim on the property of any other gentiles. We know also that there were plebeian gentes, formed probably by the marriage of a patrician with a plebeian before the plebs received the connubium. Members of plebeian gentes would, we may suppose, have the rights of gentilitas towards other members of the same plebeian gens, and it would seem that they had them towards the members of the patrician gens, from which they were an offset; Clc. de Orat. l. 39. Of the mode in which the gentiles took the inheritance, we know nothing of, nor at how late a period of history the gentes were still really in existence. Galus (iii. 17), treats the subject as one of mere antiquarian interest." In his introduction to the Institutes, Sandars gives generally his understanding of the nature of the gens. The body of Roman citizens was composed of two distinct divisions, the populus and the plebs. The former consisted of three tribes, each of ten curiæ, and each curiæ was divided into ten decuriæ. For the latter another name was gens, "and it included a great number of distinct families, united by having common sacred rites, and bearing a common name. In theory at least, the members of the same gens were descended from a common ancestor, and the families of the gens were subdivisions of the same ancestral stock, but both individuals and groups were occasionally admitted from outside. A pure unspotted pedigree was claimed by every member of a gens, and there was a theoretical equality among all the members of the whole tribe. The heads of the different families in these gentes met together in a great council, called the council of the curiæ (comitia curiata). A small body of three hundred, answering in number to the gentes in each of the three tribes, and called the senate, was charged with the office of initiating the more important questions submitted to the great council; and a king, nominated by the senate, but chosen by the curiæ, presided over the whole body, and was charged with the functions of executive government."

The gentiles inherited from each other in the absence of agnates.

GENS DE JUSTICE. In French Law. Officers of a court.

GENTLEMAN. In English Law. A person of superior birth.

According to Coke, he is one who bears coat-armour, the grant of which adds gentility to a man's family. The eldest son had no exclusive claim to the degree; for, according to Littleton, "every son is as great a gentleman as the eldest." Co. 2d Inst. 667. Sir Thomas Smith, quoted by Blackstone, 1 Com. 406, says, "As for gentlemen, they are made good cheap in this kingdom; for whosoever studies the laws of the realm, who studies in the universities, who professeth liberal sciences, and (to be short) who can live idly and without manual labor, and will bear the port, charge, and countenance of a gentleman, shall be called master, and be taken for a gentleman." In the United States, this word is unknown to the law. See Pothier, Proc. Crim. sec. 1, App. § 3; 1 C. P. D. 60; 1 Ch. Div. 577; 3 H. & N. 382.

GENTLEWOMAN. An addition formerly appropriate in England to the state or degree of a woman. Co. 2d Inst. 667.

GENTOO LAW. See HINDU LAW.

GENUINE. Not false, fictitious, simulated, spurious, counterfeit. Baldwin v. Van Deusen, 37 N. Y. 492.

GEORGIA. The name of one of the original thirteen states of the United States of America.

It was called after George II., king of Great Britain, under whose reign it was colonized.

George II. granted a charter, dated June 9, 1732, to a company consisting of General James Oglethorpe, Lord Percival, and nineteen others, who planted a colony, in 1733, on the bank of the Savannah river, a short distance from its mouth.

The corporation thus created was authorized, for twenty-one years, to erect courts of judicature for all civil and criminal causes, and to appoint a governor, judges, and other magistrates. The territory was to be held, as of the manor of Hampton Court in Middlesex, in free and common socage, and not in capite.

This charter was to expire by its own limitation in 1753; and under it the colony was governed by trustees, who, on December 19, 1751, in anticipation of the expiration of the charter, offered to surrender it up to the crown. The offer was accepted and on June 23, 1752, the trustees closed their accounts, made their last grant, and affixed the seal to the deed of surrender, and the colony became a royal province, of which the first governor was appointed August 6, and landed October 29, 1754; the colony having in the meantime been governed by the Board of Trade and Plantations.

A state constitution was adopted in 1777, another in 1789, and a third in 1798, which, with some amendments, remained in force until the civil war. The state seceded January 19, 1861, and was readmitted to the Union under act of congress approved July 15, 1870.

The present constitution, as revised, compiled, and amended, was adopted by a convention at Atlanta and ratified by a vote of the people on 5th December, 1877; amended, 1898.

Paragraph 1, sec. 1, article VII, amended so as to provide pensions for widows of ex-Confederate soldiers, who were married prior to 1870.

August 17, 1911, paragraph 1, sec. 1, article VII, amended so as to provide a uniform system of common schools.

GEREFA. Reeve, which see.

GERMAN. Whole or entire, as respects genealogy or descent: thus "brother-german" denotes one who is brother both by the father's and mother's side; "cousin-german," those in the first and nearest degree, i. e. children of brothers or sisters. Tech. Dict.; 4 M. & G. 56.

GERMANY. An Empire of Europe composed of twenty-six states. The constitution is dated April 16, 1871. It includes all the German states in "an eternal union," under the supervisory power of the King of Prussia as the Deutscher Kaiser (the German Emperor). The legislative power is vested in two bodies, the bundesrath, or federal council, and the reichstag. The members of the bundesrath are annually appointed by the several states. The members of the reichstag are elected by ballot by universal suffrage for a period of five years, and may be prorogued for a period not to exceed ninety days, or it may be dissolved by the emperor. In case of dissolution new elections take place within sixty days and the new session must be opened within ninety days. All imperial laws must receive the votes of the majority of both bodies, and have the assent of the emperor. The bundesrath can declare war, make peace, enter into treaties with foreign nations and appoint and receive ambassadors, but if the territory of the empire is attacked, the emperor does not require the consent of the bundesrath to declare war, but can act independently. In connection with the chancellor the bundesrath also exercises some executive functions, through committees which are substantially boards of administration and consultation.

The Code Napoléon was until later years the common law in many parts of Germany, and the Prussian code of Frederick the Great in other parts. In 1850 a new penal code was promulgated; in 1862 a partial codification was effected; and in 1869 a code of commercial law was enacted which was valid for the North German Confederation. Since 1870 there has been a universal criminal code for the whole empire and a common judicature was established in 1879. For later codes, see CODE.

GERONTOCOMI. In Civil Law. Officers appointed to manage hospitals for poor old persons. Clef des Lois Rom. Administrateurs.

GERSUMA (Sax.). Expense; reward; compensation; wealth; especially, the consideration or fine of a contract: e. g. et pro hac concessione dedit nobis prædictus Jordanus 100 sol. sterling de gersuma. Old charter, cited Somner, Gavelkind, 177; Tabul. Reg. Ch. 377; 3 Mon. Ang. 720; 3 id. 126. It is also used for a fine or compensation for an offence. 2 Mon. Ang. 973.

GESTATION, UTERO-GESTATION. In Medical Jurisprudence. The time during which a female, who has conceived, carries the embryo or fœtus in her uterus.

This directly involves the duration of pregnancy, questions concerning which most frequently arise in cases of contested legitimacy. The descent of property and peerage may be made entirely dependent upon the settlement of this question, as to which see PREGNANCY.

There are some women to whom it is peculiar always to have the normal time of delivery anticipated by two or three weeks. Montgomery, Preg. 264. So, also, there are many cases establishing the fact that the usual period is sometimes exceeded by one, two, or more weeks, the limits of which it is difficult or impossible to determine. Coke seems inclined to adopt a peremptory rule that forty weeks is the longest time allowed by law for gestation. Co. Litt. 123 b. But although the law of some countries prescribes the time from conception within which the child must be born to be legitimate, that of England and America fixes no precise limit, but admits the possibility of the birth's occurring previous or subsequent to the usual time.

A conviction will not be disturbed because the child was born within a shorter time after the alleged intercourse than the ordinary period of gestation; Peterson v. People, 74 Ill. App. 178. It is proper to charge the jury that they must be satisfied that the defendant had sexual intercourse with the complainant within the period in which, in the ordinary course of nature, the child could be begotten; Sonnenberg v. State, 124 Wis. 124, 102 N. W. 233.

The following are cases in which this question will be found discussed: 3 Bro. C. C. 349; Gardner Peerage case, Le Marchant Report; Cro. Jac. 686; 7 Hazard, Reg. of Penn. 363; 2 Wh. & Stillé, Med. Jur. § 4; 2 Wittl. & Beck. Med. Jur. 264. See PREGNANCY; FÆTUS; VIABILITY.

GESTIO (Lat.). In Civil Law. The doing or management of a thing. Negotiorum gestio, the doing voluntarily without authority business of another. L. 20, C. de neg. gest. Gestio negotiorum, one who so interferes with business of another without authority. Gestio pro hærede, behavior as heir; such conduct on the part of the heir as indicates acceptance of the inheritance and makes him liable for ancestor's debts universally: e. g. an entry upon, or assigning, or letting any of the heritable property, releasing any of the heritable property, releasing any of the debtors of the estate, or meddling with the title-deeds or heirship movables, etc. Erskine, Inst. 3. 8. 82 et seq.; Stair, Inst. 3. 6. 1.

GEWRITE. In Saxon Law. Deeds of charters; writings. 1 Reeve, Hist. Eng. Law, 10.

GIFT. A voluntary conveyance or transfer of property; that is, one not founded on the consideration of money or blood.

A voluntary, immediate and absolute transfer of property without consideration. Lewis' Estate, 139 Pa. 640, 22 Atl. 635.

As used by the old text writers, it signified a distinct species of deed, applicable to the creation of an estate tail; while a feoffment was strictly confined to the creation of a fee-simple estate. This use is almost obsolete; Wharton. It has been said that the word denotes rather the motive of the conveyance; so that a feoffment or grant may be called a gift when gratuitous. A gift is of the same nature as a settlement; neither denotes a form of assurance, but the nature of the transaction. Watk. Conv. 199. The operative words of this conveyance are do, or dedi—I give, or I have given. The maker of this instrument is called the donor, and he to whom it is made, the donee, and the entail is the gift or donation, the issue taking per formam doni. 2 Bla. Com. 316;

Littleton 59; Shepp. Touchst. c. 11; 2 Poll. & Maitl. 12, 81, 211.

Gifts inter vivos are gifts made from one or more persons, without any prospect of immediate death, to one or more others. Gifts mortis causa are gifts made in prospect of death.

Gifts inter vivos have no reference to the future, and go into immediate and absolute effect; 2 Kent 439; no further act of the parties is needed to give them effect; Robson v. Jones, 3 Del. Ch. 62. Delivery is essential. Without actual possession, the title does not pass. A mere intention or naked promise to give, without some act to pass the property, is not a gift. There may be repentance (the locus penitentiae) as long as the gift is incomplete in the mode of making it; 1 Pars. Contr. 245; Pearson v. Pearson, 7 Johns. (N. Y.) 26; but see Poullain v. Poullain, 79 Ga. 11, 4 S. E. 81, where it was held that a donatio inter vivos, as distinguished from a donatio mortis causa, does not require actual delivery, and that it is sufficient to complete a gift inter vivos that the conduct of the parties should show that the ownership of the chattels has been changed.

Under a gift, a person "may take a benefit to accrue at a future day—it may be at the donor's death; but this can be only through the instrumentality of a trust created either in a third person or in the donor. The effect is to divest at once the former property of the donor in the thing given. Such a gift is no more immediate than in the ordinary case." Robson v. Jones, 3 Del. Ch. 62.

The subject of the gift must be certain; and there must be the mutual consent and concurrent will of both parties. There must be an intention on the part of the donor to make a gift; Thornt. Gifts & Adv. § 70, and expressions of it are admissible as part of the res gestae; 1 Wils. Ch. 212; In re Ward, 2 Redf. (N. Y.) 251; Booth v. Cornell, 2 Redf. (N. Y.) 261; Stevens v. Stevens, 2 Redf. (N. Y.) 265; Williams v. Guile, 117 N. Y. 343, 22 N. E. 1071, 6 L. R. A. 366; and also declarations of the donor prior to the gift; Smith v. Maine, 25 Barb. (N. Y.) 33; if followed up by proof of delivery; Larimore v. Wells, 29 Ohio St. 13; and subsequent to the gift to support it; Blalock v. Miland, 87 Ga. 573, 13 S. E. 551; Scott v. Bank, 140 Mass. 157, 2 N. E. 925; but not to disapprove it; Baxter v. Knowles, 12 Allen (Mass.) 114. See Thornt. Gift § 222. Acceptance is also necessary; Peirce v. Burroughs, 58 N. H. 302; Nickerson v. Nickerson, 28 Md. 327; Thomas v. Thomas, 107 Mo. 459, 18 S. W. 27; and this is true under both the common and civil law; De Levillain v. Evans, 39 Cal. 120. It must be in the lifetime of the donor; Eskridge v. Farrar, 34 La. Ann. 709; but it is presumed if the gift is of value; Thouvenin v. Rodrigues, 24 Tex. 468; Love v. Francis, 63 Mich. 181, 29 N. W. 843, 6 Am. St. Rep.

290. Delivery must be according to the nature of the thing. It must be an actual delivery, so far as the subject is capable of delivery. If the thing be not capable of actual delivery, there must be some act equivalent to it; something sufficient to work an immediate change in the dominion of the property; Gartside v. Pahlman, 45 Mo. App. 160. The donor must part not only with the possession, but with the dominion. If the thing given be a chose in action, the law requires an assignment or some equivalent instrument, and the transfer must be executed; 1 Swanst. 436; Picot v. Sanderson, 12 N. C. 309. Delivery first and gift afterwards of a chattel capable of delivery, is as effectual as gift first and delivery afterwards; 64 Law T. 645. The presumption of a resulting trust in favor of the donor arises where a conveyance has been made, without consideration, to one of an estate or other property which has been purchased with the money of another; but this presumption is rebutted where the purchase may fairly be deemed to be made for another from motives of natural love and affection; Appeal of Roberts, 85 Pa. 84; Gardner v. Merritt, 32 Md. 78, 3 Am. Rep. 115. Knowledge by the donee that the gift has been made is not necessary; L. R. 2 Ch. Div. 104. The gift is complete when the legal title has actually vested in the donee; 108 E. C. L. R. 435; and in cases of gifts by husband to wife, or parent to child living at home, the necessity for an actual change of possession does not exist; Appeal of Crawford, 61 Pa. 52, 100 Am. Dec. 609.

A chose in action not negotiable and negotiable paper not endorsed may be the subject of a gift, and a delivery which vests in the donee the equitable title is sufficient without a complete transfer of the legal title; First Nat. Bank of Richmond v. Holland, 99 Va. 495, 39 S. E. 126, 55 L. R. A. 155, 86 Am. St. Rep. 898; Basket v. Hassell, 107 U. S. 602, 2 Sup. Ct. 415, 27 L. Ed. 500; Grover v. Grover, 24 Pick. (Mass.) 261, 35 Am. Dec. 319. Where a father gives money deposited in bank to his infant son, the gift will not be defeated by the failure of the father to deliver to the son the pass book evidencing the gift, the father as natural guardian being the proper custodian of such book during the infancy of the son; Beaver v. Beaver, 62 Hun 194, 16 N. Y. Supp. 476, 746. The instances here given are merely illustrative of the cases on the subject of the necessity of delivery, the number of which is almost without limit.

The mere deposit by one in trust for another does not establish an irrevocable trust. It is a tentative trust, revocable at will, until the depositor dies or completes the gift during his lifetime; In re Totten, 179 N. Y. 112, 71 N. E. 748, 70 L. R. A. 711, 1 Ann. Cas. 900, reversing id., 89 App. Div. 368, 85 N. Y. Supp. 928. It is a question of the depositor's intent; In re Barefield, 177 N. Y.

387, 69 N. E. 732, 101 Am. St. Rep. 814; Cleveland v. Bank, 182 Mass. 110, 65 N. E. 27; Estate of Smith, 144 Pa. 428, 22 Atl. 916, 27 Am. St. Rep. 641; Rombo v. Pile, 220 Pa. 235, 69 Atl. 807. See 14 Yale L. J. 315; Brady, Bank Deposits.

The declaration of the depositor may make the trust valid; Merigan v. McGonigle, 205 Pa. 321, 54 Atl. 994. The retention of the pass book by the depositor does not rebut the idea of a trust; Bath Sav. Inst. v. Hathorn, 88 Me. 122, 33 Atl. 836, 32 L. R. A. 377, 51 Am. St. Rep. 382; Estate of Gaffney, 146 Pa. 49, 23 Atl. 163; Robertson v. McCarty, 54 App. Div. 103, 66 N. Y. Supp. 327. But the delivery of the pass book will render the trust irrevocable; In re Totten, 179 N. Y. 112, 71 N. E. 748, 70 L. R. A. 711, 1 Ann. Cas. 900. Notice to the beneficiary may create a trust; but absence of notice does not establish conclusively that there was no trust; Bath Sav. Inst. v. Hathorn, 88 Me. 122, 33 Atl. 836, 32 L. R. A. 377, 51 Am. St. Rep. 382; Gerrish v. Sav. Inst., 128 Mass. 159, 35 Am. Rep. 365.

It is held that where the intent was that the beneficiary should take only at the death of the depositor, the fund passed at his death to the depositor's estate; Coolidge v. Knight, 194 Mass. 546, 80 N. E. 620, 120 Am. St. Rep. 573. A deposit cannot be made which will be revocable, but will take effect as a trust after death; Appeal of Main, 73 Conn. 638, 48 Atl. 965; Whalen v. Milholland, 89 Md. 199, 43 Atl. 45, 44 L. R. A. 208, as a testamentary act can be done only under the statute of wills. But see 179 N. Y. 112, 71 N. E. 748, 70 L. R. A. 711, 1 Ann. Cas. 900, supra. One who makes a deposit in trust for a fictitious person does not lose control of his money; Garvey v. Clifford, 114 App. Div. 193, 99 N. Y. Supp. 555; Nicklas v. Parker, 69 N. J. Eq. 743, 61 Atl. 267.

During the lifetime of the depositor, the bank may allow him to draw out the fund; Pennsylvania Title & Trust Co. v. Meyer, 201 Pa. 299, 50 Atl. 998; Sayre v. Weil, 94 Ala. 466, 10 South. 421; the beneficiary cannot compel the bank to pay him during the depositor's lifetime; Hemmerich v. Union Inst., 144 App. Div. 413, 129 N. Y. Supp. 267.

A gift is effectual only after the intention to make it has been accompanied by delivery of possession or some equivalent act; Smith's Estate, 144 Pa. 428, 22 Atl. 916, 27 Am. St. Rep. 641.

Where one made large deposits in a bank as nominally trustee for another, but only for his own convenience and intending to retain his ownership, no title passed to the cestui que trust; it is a question of intention; Rambo v. Pile, 220 Pa. 235, 69 Atl. 807. What was intended as a gift, but is imperfect, cannot be made effectual by construing it as a declaration of trust; Smith's Estate, 144 Pa. 428, 22 Atl. 916, 27 Am. St. Rep. 641, following L. R. 18 Eq. 11. If a trust is intended, it will be equally effectual whether the donor transfers the title to a trustee, or declare himself such; Smith's Estate, 144 Pa. 428, 22 Atl. 916, 27 Am. St. Rep. 641.

Where a savings bank depositor has lost his book, gives an order upon the bank and delivers it to the donee with words indicating a gift, this is a valid gift, at least if the order has been accepted by the bank; Candee v. Savings Bank, 81 Conn. 372, 71 Atl. 551, 22 L. R. A. (N. S.) 568. Where the deposit was in the donee's name, but subject to donor's order, and the donor told the donee he meant to give him the money: the pass book was given to the donee, but taken back by the donor for safe keeping, and the donor gave the donee a writing certifying that the money was for him, and the donor never exercised ownership over the fund, it was held a valid gift; Eastman v. Savings Bank, 136 Mass. 208.

A written assignment of certificates of shares of stock without delivery is not sufficient to constitute a valid gift, especially where the donor retained control of the shares and collected dividends thereon for four years; Allen-West Commission Co. v. Grumbles, 129 Fed. 287, 63 C. C. A. 401.

For a full discussion of the subject, see Thornt. Gifts & Adv. ch. ix., where the cases are collected; 15 Am. L. Reg. N. S. 701, n.; 15 Va. L. J. 737; 32 Cent. L. J. 11. As to what circumstances will dispense with actual physical delivery, see 9 id. 639; 26 Am. L. Reg. 587; Law Q. Rev. 446; see also DONATIO MORTIS CAUSA, with respect to delivery, the requisites of which in the two classes of gifts are the same; Thornt. Gifts § 130; Murdock v. McDowell, 1 Nott & McC. (S. C.) 237, 9 Am. Dec. 684; Brinckerhoff v. Lawrence, 2 Sandf. Ch. (N. Y.) 400. "Gifts inter vivos and gifts causa mortis differ in nothing, except that the latter are made in expectation of death, become effectual only upon the death of the donor, and may be revoked. Otherwise, the same principles apply to each." Dresser v. Dresser, 46 Me. 48; Robson v. Jones, 3 Del. Ch. 51; Shackelford v. Brown, 89 Mo. 546, 1 S. W. 390; Young v. Young, 80 N. Y. 422, 36 Am. Rep. 634; Meriwether v. Morrison, 78 Ky. 572; Conser v. Snowden, 54 Md. 175, 39 Am. Rep. 368. A parol gift of land is valid when possession is taken and valuable improvements are made thereunder; Wootters v. Hale, 83 Tex. 563, 19 S. W. 134.

The presumption is that a gift by a child to its parents is valid, and to set it aside the court must be satisfied that it was not a voluntary act of the child; Towson v. Moore, 173 U. S. 17, 19 Sup. Ct. 332, 43 L. Ed. 597.

When the gift is perfect it is then irrevocable, unless it is prejudicial to creditors or the donor was under a legal incapacity or was circumvented by fraud; except in case of donatio mortis causa (q. v.), as to which one of the distinguishing characteristics is that it is revocable during the donor's life.

If a man, intending to give a jewel to au-other, say to him, Here I give you my ring with the ruby in it, etc., and with his own hand delivers it to the party, this will be a good gift notwithstanding the ring bear any other jewel, being delivered by the party himself to the person to whom given; Bacon, Max. 87. See Van Slooten v. Wheeler, 66 Hun 632, 21 N. Y. Supp. 336.

Where a father bought a ticket in a lottery, which he declared he gave to his infant daughter E., and wrote her name upon it, and after the ticket had drawn a prize he declared that he had given the ticket to his child E., and that the prize money was hers, this was held sufficient for a jury to infer all the formality requisite to a valid gift, and that the title in the money was complete and vested in E. See Grangiac v. Arden, 10 Johns. (N. Y.) 293. Where notes are endorsed by the owner, placed in a pocketbook, and the packet marked with the name of the donees, a delivery to one of the donees is sufficient, though he at once returns the packet to the donor to keep for the present; Brandon v. Dawson, 51 Mo. App. 237.

A certificate of deposit may be the subject of gift, and, when endorsed and delivered for such purpose, the gift is perfect and cannot be revoked by the donor before the money is collected; Wheeler v. Glasgow, 97 Ala. 700, 11 South. 758. A written assignment, under seal, of money in the hands of a third person, delivered to the assignee, constitutes a valid gift and acceptance of the money; Matson v. Abbey, 141 N. Y. 179, 36 N. E. 11.

See, generally, Thornton, Gifts; DONATIO INTER VIVOS; DONATIO MORTIS CAUSA; DONATIO.

GIFT ENTERPRISE. A scheme for the division or distribution of certain articles of property, to be determined by chance, amongst those who have taken shares in the scheme; the phrase has attained such a notoriety as to justify courts in taking judicial notice of what is meant and understood; Lohman v. State, 81 Ind. 17; Meserve v. Andrews, 106 Mass. 422. See LOTTERY.

GILD. See GUILD.

GILDA MERCATORIA (L. Lat.). A mercantile meeting.

If the king once grants to a set of men to have gilda mercatoria, mercantile meeting assembly, this is alone sufficient to incorporate and establish them forever. 1 Bla. Com. 473. A company of merchants incorporated. Stat. Will. Reg. Scot. c. 35; Leg. Burgorum Scot. c. 99; Spelman, Gloss.; 8 Co. 125 a; 2 Ld. Raym. 1134.

They were widely spread trade organizations which appeared in England soon after the Conquest. They supervised trade and labor, prices, hours of labor, etc., and punished dishonest workmanship and short weights and measures. They were closely identified with the town and its government, but it is not probable (though maintained by certain writers) that the grant of gilda mercatoria to a borough was a grant of corporateness. See Carr, 3 Sel. Essays, Anglo-Amer. Leg. Hist. 177.

See GUILD.

GILDO. In Saxon Law. Members of a gild or decemary. Oftener spelled congildo. Du Cange; Spelman, Gloss. Geldum.

GILL. A measure of capacity, equal to one-fourth of a pint. See MEASURE.

GIRANTEM. An Italian word which signifies the drawer. It is derived from girare, to draw, in the same manner as the English verb to murder is transformed into murdrare in our old indictments. Hall, Mar. Loans 183, n.

GIRTH. A girth, or yard, is a measure of length. The word is of Saxon origin, taken from the circumference of the human body. Girth is contracted from girdeth, and signifies as much as girdle. See ELL.

GIRTH AND SANCTUARY. In Scotch Law. A refuge or place of safety given to those who had slain a man in heat of passion (chaude medley) and unpremeditatedly. Abolished at the Reformation. 1 Hume 235; 1 Ross, Lect. 331.

GIST (sometimes, also, spelled git).

In Pleading. The essential ground or object of the action in point of law, without which there would be no cause of action. Gould, Pl. c. 4, § 12; 19 Vt. 102. The cause for which an action will lie; the ground or foundation of a suit, without which it would not be maintainable; the essential ground or object of a suit, without which there is not a cause of action. First Nat. Bank of Flora v. Burkett, 101 Ill. 394, 40 Am. Rep. 209. In stating the gist of the action, everything must be averred which is necessary to be proved at the trial. The moving cause of the plaintiff's bringing the action, and the matter for which he recovers the principal satisfaction, is frequently entirely collateral to the gist of the action. Thus, where a father sues the defendant for a trespass for the seduction of his daughter, the gist of the action is the trespass and the loss of his daughter's services; but the collateral cause is the injury done to his feelings, for which the principal damages are given. See 1 Viner, Abr. 598; Tayl. Ev. 334; Bac., Abr. Pleas, B.; Doctr. Plac. 85; DAMAGES.

GIVE. A term used in deeds of conveyance. At common law, it implied a covenant for quiet enjoyment; 2 Hill. R. P. 366. So in Kentucky; 1 Pirtle, Dig. 211. In Maryland it is doubtful; Deakins v. Hollis, 7 G. & J. 311. In Ohio, in conveyance of freehold, it implies warranty for the grantor's life; 2 Hill. R. P. 366. In Maine it implies a covenant; Webber v. Webber, 6 Greenl. (Me.) 127. In New York it does not, by statute. See Kinney v. Watts, 14 Wend. (N. Y.) 38. It does not imply a covenant in North Carolina; Rickets v. Dickens, 5 N. C. 343, 4 Am. Dec. 555; nor in England, by statute 8 & 9 Vict. c. 106, § 4. See COVENANT; GIFT.

The word give, in a statute providing that no person shall give away any intoxicating liquors, etc., does not apply to giving such liquor at private dwellings, etc., unless given to a habitual drunkard, or unless such dwelling, etc., becomes a place of public resort. O'Neil v. Vermont, 144 U. S. 323, 12 Sup. Ct. 693, 36 L. Ed. 450. See LIQUOR LAWS.

GIVER. He who makes a gift. By his gift, the giver always impliedly agrees with the donee that he will not revoke the gift.

GIVING IN PAYMENT. In Louisiana. A term which signifies that a debtor, instead of paying a debt he owes in money, satisfies his creditor by giving in payment a movable or immovable. See DATON EN PAIEMENT.

GIVING TIME. An agreement by which a creditor gives his debtor a delay or time in paying his debt beyond that contained in the original agreement. When other persons are responsible to him, either as drawer, indorser, or surety, if such time be given without the consent of the latter, it discharges them from responsibility to him; and the same effect follows if time is given to one of the joint makers of a note; 2 Dan. Neg. Inst. 299. See SURETYSHIP; GUARANTY.

GLADIUS (Lat. a sword). In old Latin authors, and in the Norman laws, this word was used to signify supreme jurisdiction: jus gladii.

GLEANING. The act of gathering such grain in a field where it grew, as may have been left by the reapers after the sheaves were gathered.

There is a custom in England, it is said, by which the poor are allowed to enter and glean upon another's land after harvest, without being guilty of a trespass; 3 Bla. Com. 212. But it has been decided that the community are not entitled to claim this privilege as a right; 1 H. Bla. 51. In the United States, it is believed, no such right exists. It seems to have existed in some parts of France. Merlin, Rép. Glanage. As to whether gleaning would or would not amount to larceny, see Wood. Landl. & T. 242; 2 Russ. Cr. 99. The Jewish law may be found in Leviticus xix, 9, 10. See Ruth ii, 2, 3; Isaiah xxii, 6.

GLEBE. The land which belongs to a church. The dowry of the church. Gleba est terra qua consistit dos ecclesie. Town of Pawlet v. Clark, 9 Cra. (U. S.) 329, 3 L. Ed. 735.

In Civil Law. The soil of an inheritance. There were serfs of the glebe, called glebae addicti. Code 11. 47. 7, 21; Nov. 54, c. 1.

GLOSS (Lat. glossa). Interpretation; comment; explanation; remark intended to illustrate a subject,—especially the text of an author. See Webster, Dict.

In Civil Law. Glossæ, or glossemata, were words which needed explanation. Calvinus, Lex. The explanations of such words. Calvinus, Lex. Especially used of the short comments or explanations of the text of the Roman Law, made during the twelfth century by the teachers at the schools of Bologna, etc., who were hence called glossators, of which glosses Accursius made a compilation which possesses great authority, called glossa ordinaria. These glosses were at first written between the lines of the text (glossæ interlineares), afterwards, on the margin, close by and partly under the text (glossæ marginales). Cush. Intr. to Rom. Law 130.

GLOSSATOR. A commentator or annotator of the Roman law. One of the authors of the Gloss.

GLOUCESTER, STATUTE OF. An English statute, 6 Edw. I., c. 1, A. D. 1278; so called because it was passed at Gloucester. It was the first statute giving to a successful plaintiff "the costs of his writ purchased." There were other statutes made at Gloucester which do not bear this name. See stat. 2 Rich. II.; Costs.

GO. To issue, as applied to the process of a court. 1 W. Bla. 50; 5 Mod. 421; 18 C. B. 35. Not frequent in modern use.

To be discharged from attendance at court. See GO WITHOUT DAY.

In a statute of descents, to go to is to vest in.

GO BAIL. To become surety in a bail bond.

GO TO PROTEST. Of negotiable paper, to be protested for non-payment or non-acceptance.

GO WITHOUT DAY. Words used to denote that a party is dismissed the court. He is said to go without day, because there is no day appointed for him to appear again, or because the suit is discontinued.

GOAT, GOTE (Law Lat. gota; Germ. gote). A canal or sluice for the passage of water. Charter of Roger, Duke de Basingham, anno 1220, in Tabularis S. Bertini; Du Cange.

A ditch, sluice, or gutter. Cowell, Gote; stat. 23 Hen. VIII. c. 5. An engine for draining waters out of the land into the sea, erected and built with doors and perculesses of timber, stone, or brick,—invented first in Lower Germany. Callis, Sewers 66.

GOD AND MY COUNTRY. When a prisoner is arraigned, he is asked, How will you be tried? he answers, By God and my country. This practice arose when the prisoner had the right to choose the mode of trial, namely, by ordeal or by jury, and then he elected by God or by his country, that is, by ordeal or by jury. It is probable that originally it was By God or my country; for the question asked supposes an option in the prisoner, and the answer is meant to assert his innocence by declining neither sort of trial. 1 Chitty, Cr. Law 416; Barrling, Stat. 73, note. See ORDEAL; WAGER OF BATTLE.

GOD BOTE. An ecclesiastical or church fine imposed upon an offender for crimes and offences committed against God.

GOD'S PENNY. In Old English Law. Money given to bind a bargain; earnest money. So called because such money was anciently given to God,—that is, to the church and the poor.

"All over western Europe the earnest becomes known as the God's penny or Holy Ghost's penny (denarius Dei). Sometimes we find that it is to be expended in the purchase of tapers for the patron saint of the town, or in works of mercy. Thus the contract is put under divine protection. In the law merchant as stated by Fleta we seem to see God's penny yet afraid, if we may so speak, to proclaim itself as what it really is, namely, a sufficient vestment for a contract of sale. A few years later Edward I. took the step that remained to be taken, and by his Carta Mercatoria, in words which seem to have come from the south of Europe, proclaimed that among merchants the God's penny binds the contract of sale so that neither party may resile from it. At a later day this new rule passed from the law merchant into the common law." 2 Poll. & Maitl. 207. See DENARIUS DEI; EARNEST; 2 Holdsw. Hist. E. L. 492.

GOING. A term applied to sheep. The "going" of 105 sheep with his master's flock in a contract with a shepherd meant that the sheep should be pasture fed; Rex v. Inhabitants of Macton, 3 B. & Ad. 543.

GOING CONCERN. Some enterprise which is being carried on as a whole, and with some particular object in view. Oliver v. Lausing, 59 Neb. 219, 80 N. W. 829.

The term, when applied to a corporation, means that it continues to transact its ordinary business. The mere fact that a corporation is insolvent does not dissolve it and make the directors mere trustees of its assets, if it is still a going concern; White, Potter & Paige Mfg. Co. v. Importing Co., 30 Fed. 864. It means, as applied to a corporation, one which "is still prosecuting its business with the prospect and expectation of continuing to do so, even though its assets are insufficient to pay its debts;" Corey v. Wadsworth, 99 Ala. 68, 11 South. 350, 23 L. R. A. 618, 42 Am. St. Rep. 29.

The "going value" is that which results from having an established business as a going concern; Cedar Rapids Water Co. v. City of Cedar Rapids, 118 Ia. 234, 91 N. W. 1081; where, in deciding whether water rates fixed by ordinance were confiscatory, the going value was not to be considered as a distinct element of the value of the plant.

GOING FREE. Used of a vessel when she has a fair wind and her yards braced in; The Queen Elizabeth, 100 Fed. 874.

GOING OFF LARGE. Having the wind free on either tack and properly termed a "vessel off large"; that is free to take a course to either side, proceed straight forward or return to the point from which she started; Ward v. The Fashion, Fed. Cas. No. 17,155. It differs technically from "going before the wind" which means that the wind is free, comes from the stern and the yards are braced square across, whereas going off large is when the wind blows from a point abaft the beam or from the quarter; Hall v. The Buffalo, Fed. Cas. No. 5,927.

GOING WITNESS. One who is going out of the jurisdiction of the court, although only into a state or country under the same general sovereignty: as, for example, if he is going from one to another of the United States, or, in Great Britain, from England to Scotland. 2 Dick. Ch. 454. See DEPOSITION; WITNESS.

GOLD. Contracts expressly stipulating for payment in gold and silver dollars can only be satisfied by the payment of coined dollars; Bronson v. Rodes, 7 Wall. (U. S.) 229, 19 L. Ed. 141; where it was said: "A contract to pay a certain number of dollars in gold or silver coins is nothing else than an agreement to deliver a certain weight of standard gold to be ascertained by a count of coins, each of which is certified to contain a definite proportion of that weight." This case was followed in Gregory v. Morris, 96 U. S. 619, 24 L. Ed. 740; Woodruff v. Mississippi, 162 U. S. 291, 16 Sup. Ct. 820, 40 L. Ed. 973. In the last case it was said: "This court has held that parties may contract for the payment of an obligation in gold, or any other money or commodity, and it must then be paid in the medium contracted for." It has been pointed out in Belford v. Woodward, 158 Ill. 122, 41 N. E. 1097, 29 L. R. A. 593, note, that the rule in Bronson v. Rodes has not been affected in any way by the Legal Tender Cases in 12 Wall. (U. S.) 457, 20 L. Ed. 287. In Trebilcock v. Wilson, 12 Wall. (U. S.) 687, 20 L. Ed. 460, where a note in dollars was made payable in specie, it was held that the designated number of dollars must be paid in so many gold or silver dollars of the coinage of the United States, reversing the supreme court of Iowa, which had held that a tender of greenbacks or United States legal tender notes was sufficient.

In Gregory v. Morris, 96 U. S. 619, 24 L. Ed. 740, the party was entitled to recover a certain amount in gold coin; it was held that where the party, with the approbation of the court, takes judgment which might be discharged in currency, it should be entered for a sum in currency equivalent to the specified amount of that coin as bullion. A decision of a state court, which holds a tender of legal tender notes as valid in the payment of a contract payable only in specie, will be reviewed by the supreme court of the United States; Trebilcock v. Wilson, 12 Wall. (U. S.) 687, 20 L. Ed. 460. The doctrine of the latter court is therefore binding upon all the state courts.

A contract to pay a certain number of dollars in gold; Hittson v. Davenport, 4 Colo. 169; a draft for a certain number of gold dollars; Chrysler v. Renois, 43 N. Y. 209; a note payable "in gold or silver;" Phillips v. Dugan, 21 Ohio St. 466, 8 Am. Rep. 66; a ground rent payable in "gold or silver lawful money of the United States;" Rankin v. Demott, 61 Pa. 263; are all enforceable according to their terms. A ground rent payable in "gold or silver money of the United States" must be paid in coin or its equivalent; Rankin v. Demott, 61 Pa. 263. In this case Agnew, J., said that the distinction taken in the earlier Pennsylvania cases between contracts for a specific article and contracts for lawful money (coin or currency) had become unimportant since the decision in Bronson v. Rodas. In such cases it is held that payment in currency is to be computed upon the value of gold at the time of payment; Hittson v. Davenport, 4 Colo. 169. Where rent was payable "in current money of the State of New York equal in value to money of Great Britain," it was held that if payment was made in legal tender notes, the amount paid must equal the value of the stipulated amount of coin; Stranaghan v. Youmans, 65 Barb. (N. Y.) 392.

Where an act authorized a city to issue negotiable bonds, it was held to authorize the issue of bonds payable in gold coin; Judson v. City of Bessemer, 87 Ala. 240, 6 South. 267, 4 L. R. A. 742; so of bonds "payable in gold coin of the present standard weight and fineness;" Moore v. Walla Walla, 60 Fed. 961. To the same effect, Pollard v. City of Pleasant Hill, 3 Dill. 195, Fed. Cas. No. 11,253; but, contra, of levee bonds which were issued payable "in gold coin," under an act which authorized the levee board to borrow money and issue its bonds therefor; Woodruff v. State, 66 Miss. 298, 6 South. 235. But this judgment was reversed by the supreme court of the United States (Woodruff v. Mississippi, 162 U. S. 291, 16 Sup. Ct. 820, 40 L. Ed. 973), which held: That the inquiry as to the medium in which the bonds were payable raised a federal question and that the bonds were legally solvable in the money of the United States, whatever its description, and not in any particular kind of money, and that they were not void because of a want of power to issue them. Field, J., concurring, said that no transaction of commerce or business, etc., that is not immoral in its character, and which is not in its manifest purpose detrimental to society, can be declared invalid because made payable in gold coin or currency when that is established or recognized by the government.

An injunction will not lie to restrain the issue of municipal bonds payable "in gold or lawful money of the United States, at the option of the holder;" Heilbron v. City of Cuthbert, 96 Ga. 312, 23 S. E. 206. But where a statute authorized the issue of bonds payable "in gold coin or lawful money of the United States," an issue of bonds payable in gold coin of the United States of the present standard of weight and fineness was held invalid; Skinner v. Santa Rosa, 107 Cal. 464, 40 Pac. 742, 29 L. R. A. 512.

In the absence of stipulation in the contract, a right to demand payment in coin will not be implied, although it appear that payment in coin was the only method of payment recognized by law when the contract was entered into and that the parties no doubt expected that payment would be made in coin; Maryland v. R. Co., 22 Wall. (U. S.) 105, 22 L. Ed. 713. So when the consideration in a note was a loan of gold and silver and there was no stipulation to pay in such money; Curiac v. Abadie, 25 Cal. 502.

An insurance company in an action against an agent who had collected premiums in gold; Independent Ins. Co. v. Thomas, 104 Mass. 192; and a hotel guest in an action against an innkeeper to recover for gold coin left at the inn for safe keeping; Kellogg v. Sweeney, 46 N. Y. 291, 7 Am. Rep. 333; are entitled to judgment in gold coin. In an action against an express company for failure to deliver gold coin which it received for transportation, judgment was entered in currency notes for the amount of the gold coin with the premium on gold added with interest from the date of demand; Cushing v. Wells, Fargo & Co., 98 Mass. 550. Where a person deposited both coin and treasury notes in a bank in 1861, it was held that the bank need not pay him in coin unless there was an express agreement to that effect; Thompson v. Riggs, 5 Wall. (U. S.) 663, 18 L. Ed. 704.

See LEGAL TENDER; MONEY.

GOLD CERTIFICATES. Issued by the secretary of the treasury, in denominations of not less than $10, against deposits of gold coin in sums of not less than $20. They are receivable for all public dues, may be reissued and when held by a national bank may be taken as part of its reserve. Act of March 2, 1911.

GOLDSMITH'S NOTES. In English Law. Banker's notes: so called because the trades of banker and goldsmith were originally joined. Chitty, Bills 423.

GOOD AND LAWFUL MEN. Those qualified to serve on juries; that is, those of full age, citizens, not infamous or non compos mentis; and they must be resident in the county where the venue is laid. Bacon, Abr. Juries (A); Cro. Eliz. 654; Co. 3d Inst. 39; 2 Rolle 82; Cam. & N. 38.

GOOD AND VALID. Legally firm: e. g. a good title. Adequate; responsible; e. g. his security is good for the amount of the debt. Webst. A note satisfies a warranty of it as a "good" note if the makers are able to pay it, and liable to do so on proper legal diligence being used against them; Hammond v. Chamberlin, 26 Vt. 406.

GOOD BEHAVIOR. Conduct authorized by law. Surety of good behavior may be demanded from any person who is justly suspected, upon sufficient grounds, of intending to commit a crime or misdemeanor. Surety for good behavior is somewhat similar to surety of the peace, but the recognizance is more easily forfeited, and it ought to be demanded with greater caution; Com. v. Davies, 1 Binn. (Pa.) 98; 14 Vintr. Abr. 21; Dane, Abr. As to what is a breach of good behavior, see State v. Bell, 2 Mart. N. S. (La.) 683; Hawk. Pl. Cr. b. 1, c. 61, s. 6; 1 Chitty, Pr. 676.

See SURETY OF THE PEACE.

A judge holding office for life also holds it during good behavior, dum se bene gesserit.

GOOD CONSIDERATION. See CONSIDERATION.

GOOD FAITH. An honest intention to abstain from taking any unconscientious advantage of another, even through the forms or technicalities of law, together with an absence of all information or belief of facts which would render the transaction unconscientious. Wood v. Conrad, 2 S. D. 334, 50 N. W. 95. See Winters v. Haines, 84 Ill. 588; Rawson v. Fox, 65 Ill. 200; Thornton v. Bledsoe, 46 Ala. 73; Bronner v. Loomis, 17 Hun (N. Y.) 442.

That honesty of intention and freedom from knowledge, of circumstances which ought to put him on inquiry, which protects a purchaser, holder, or creditor from being implicated in an effort by one with whom he is dealing to defraud some party in interest. Canal Bank v. Hudson, 111 U. S. 80, 4 Sup. Ct. 303, 28 L. Ed. 354.

Good faith, in a statute regulating chattel mortgages, and declaring unrecorded mortgages to be invalid as against purchasers and mortgagees in good faith, means such as parted with something of value, or otherwise altered their position irretrievably, on the strength of the apparent ownership, and without notice. Good faith in this connection means actual reliance upon the ownership of the vendor or mortgagor, because without notice of the incumbrance; National Bank of the Metropolis v. Sprague, 21 N. J. Eq. 536.

Good faith is presumed in favor of the holder of negotiable paper; Dresser v. Construction Co., 93 U. S. 94, 23 L. Ed. 815; Collins v. Gilbert, 94 U. S. 754, 24 L. Ed. 170; Marfield v. Douglass, 3 N. Y. Super. Ct. 360; it is a presumption of law; Jones v. Simpson, 116 U. S. 609, 6 Sup. Ct. 538, 29 L. Ed. 742; and outweighs a presumption of payment; Louisville, N. A. & C. Ry. Co. v. Thompson, 107 Ind. 442, 8 N. E. 18, 9 N. E. 357, 57 Am. Rep. 120; and such holder takes the paper free from any infirmity in its origin except such as make it void for illegality of consideration or want of capacity in the maker; Bowditch v. Ins. Co., 141 Mass. 296, 4 N. E. 798, 55 Am. Rep. 474; Cromwell v.

County of Sac, 96 U. S. 51, 24 L. Ed. 681. While the presumption of law is sufficient in the absence of evidence, if the good faith of a party is put in issue by his adversary, he has a right to give affirmative evidence of it; Macon County v. Shores, 97 U. S. 272, 24 L. Ed. 889; as, where his ownership of negotiable paper is put in issue, he may prove he became the owner in good faith; Ralls County v. Douglass, 105 U. S. 728, 26 L. Ed. 957. A person to whom the want of good faith is imputed in a statement shown to have been made by him may be asked if he believed this statement to be correct; Rawls v. Ins. Co., 27 N. Y. 282, 84 Am. Dec. 280. After proof of circumstances relied on as showing want of good faith by putting a person on inquiry, he may explain them by showing the reasons why he did not pursue the inquiry; Seybel v. Bank, 54 N. Y. 288, 13 Am. Rep. 583; and after stating the explanation received upon inquiry he may testify that he was satisfied with it; Jennings v. Conboy, 73 N. Y. 236. Where the knowledge of the third person is in issue proof of general reputation is sometimes competent as tending to show reasonable ground of belief or suspicion; Barrett v. Western, 66 Barb. (N. Y.) 205. Good faith is not disproved by a forgotten conversation; Kenyon v. See, 29 Hun (N. Y.) 214.

One who has purchased for value and without notice, or his transferee, is termed a holder in good faith; McClure v. Oxford Tp., 94 U. S. 432, 24 L. Ed. 129.

A holder of a negotiable instrument in due course must have taken it in good faith. Neg. Instr. Act, § 52.

GOOD MORAL CHARACTER. The naturalization laws require that in order to be admitted to citizenship the applicant must, during his residence in the United States since his declaration of intention, have "behaved as a man of good moral character"; U. S. R. S. § 2165. What is a good moral character may vary in some respects in different times and places, but "it would seem that whatever is forbidden by the law of the land ought to be considered for the time being immoral within the purview of this statute;" In re Spenser, 5 Sawy. 195, Fed. Cas. No. 13,234. Accordingly, a person who commits perjury is not a man of good moral character, and is therefore not entitled to naturalization; id. But a distinction is drawn between acts which are mala in se and those which are mala prohibita; and it is said that a single act of the former grade is sufficient to establish immoral character, but only habitual acts of the latter character; id. It has been held that an alien who lives in a state of polygamy or believes that it may be rightfully practised in defiance of the laws to the contrary, is not a person of good moral character entitled to naturalization; Ex parte Douglass, cited in 2 Bright. Fed. Dig. 25, from 5 West. Jur. 171.

Under the English excise laws it was held that the mere fact that a man lived in a state of concubinage was not such an absence of good character as would justify his conviction under the excise law for making and using a certificate of good character knowing it to be false; 16 C. B. N. S. 584. "Good or bad character does not depend on what a man knows of himself; it means his general reputation in the estimation of his neighbors; . . . the fact of a man's living with a woman without marrying her may possibly admit of some palliating circumstances;" id.

As to what is good moral character under the Pennsylvania license law, it was held by Sulzberger, J., that the act "is not to be understood as setting up the highest ethical character. It means good moral character as it is used among men in the ordinary business of life, not that high type which ought to form the ideal of every virtuous person." Donoghue's License, 5 Pa. Super. Ct. 1 (on appeal).

GOOD ORDER AND CONDITION. "The general statement in a bill of lading that goods have been shipped in 'good order and condition' amounts to an admission by the shipowner that, so far as he and his agents had the opportunity of judging, the goods were so shipped"; Carver, Carr. by Sea, sec. 73.

GOOD REPUTE. An expression synonymous with and meaning only "of good reputation." State v. Wheeler, 108 Mo. 658, 665, 18 S. W. 924.

GOOD TITLE. Such a title as a court of chancery would adopt as a sufficient ground for compelling specific performance, and such a title as would be a good answer to an action of ejectment by any claimant. 6 Exch. 873. See Gillespie v. Broas, 23 Barb. (N. Y.) 370. One that would be accepted by a reasonably prudent man; Justice v. Button, 89 Neb. 367, 131 N. W. 736, 38 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1; a marketable title; Fagan v. Hook, 134 Ia. 381, 105 N. W. 155, 111 N. W. 981; Moore v. Williams, 115 N. Y. 586, 22 N. E. 233, 5 L. R. A. 654, 12 Am. St. Rep. 844.

GOOD WILL. The benefit which arises from the establishment of a particular trade or occupation. The advantage or benefit which is acquired by an establishment, beyond the mere value of the capital, stocks, funds, or property employed therein, in consequence of the general public patronage and encouragement which it receives from constant or habitual customers, on account of its local position, or common celebrity, or reputation for skill or affluence or punctuality, or from other accidental circumstances or necessities, or even from ancient partialities, or prejudices. Story, Partn. § 99. See 16 Am. Jur. 87; 22 Beav. 84; Elliot's Appeal, 60 Pa. 161; 5 Russ. 29; Vonderbank v. Schmidt, 44 La. Ann. 264, 10 South. 616, 15 L. R. A. 462, 32 Am. St. Rep. 336.

The advantages which may inure to the purchaser from holding himself out to the public as succeeding to an enterprise which has been identified in the past with the name and repute of his predecessor. Knoedler v. Boussod, 47 Fed. 465.

"The term good will can hardly be said to have any precise signification. It is generally used to denote the benefit arising from connection and reputation; and its value is what can be got for the chance of being able to keep that connection and improve it. Upon the sale of an established business its good will has a marketable value, whether the business is that of a professional man or of any other person. But it is plain that good will has no meaning except in connection with a continuing business; it may have no value except in connection with a particular house, and it may be so inseparably connected with it as to pass with it, under a will, or deed, without being specially mentioned." Lindl. Partn., Wentworth's ed. 440.

"The good will . . . is nothing more than the probability that the old customers will resort to the old place." Per Eldon, C., in 17 Ves. 335; but this is said to be too narrow a definition by Wood, V. C., who said that the term meant every advantage . . . that has been acquired by the old firm in carrying on its business, whether connected with the premises in which the business was previously carried on, or with the name of the late firm, or with any other matter carrying with it the benefit of the late business. Johns. (Eng. Ch.) 174; and similar views were expressed in 2 Madd. 198. Many definitions are collected in People v. Roberts, 159 N. Y. 70, 80, 53 N. E. 685, 45 L. R. A. 126, by Vann, J., who concludes: "Good will embraces at least two elements, the advantage of continuing an established business in its old place, and of continuing it under the old style or name. While it is not necessarily local, it is usually to a great extent, and must, of necessity, be an incident to a place, an established business or a name known to the trade." In that case the good will of a foreign corporation engaged in business in New York was held to be taxable as capital employed in that state.

The point of the opinion of Lord Eldon in the case above cited, so much referred to, was that there is no implied covenant or promise on the part of the vendor or assignor of the good will of a business, not to set up the same trade, in opposition to the purchaser, in the neighborhood; accordingly an injunction to prevent him from doing so was refused; 17 Ves. 335. Since this case, the English decisions, after passing through a period of vacillation, seemed recently to have established the implied contract of one who simply sells the business and good will upon a much more substantial basis. It was held by Lord Romilly in Labouchere v. Dawson that an outgoing partner may not solicit the old customers privately by letter or by a travelling agent if he has sold the good will to his former partners. This went upon the principle that a grantor may not derogate from his grant. This was considered to have gone beyond any previous case and was overruled in Pearson v. Pearson, 27 Ch. D. 145, where Cotton, L. J., said: "It is admitted that a person who has sold the good will of his business may set up a similar business next door and say that he is the person that carried on the old business, yet such proceedings manifestly tend to prevent the old customers going to the old place." See 74 L. T. 343. Between the rendering of these judgments Jessel, M. R., had enjoined the solicitation of old customers but not the dealing with them; 14 Ch. D. 603; in that case good will is defined as "the formation of that connection which has made the value of the thing that the late firm sold," and is frequently the only thing saleable. This definition was quoted with approval by Lord Herschell in Trego v. Hunt, infra. Another decision of Jessel, M. R., restraining a former partner from dealing with old customers was reversed by the court of appeal, but the order in this case, restraining the solicitation, was not appealed from; the court said that "to enjoin a man against dealing with people whom he has not solicited is not only to enjoin him, but to enjoin them, for it prevents them from having the liberty which anybody in the country might have of dealing with whom they like;" 15 Ch. D. 306. But the court of appeal, affirming the same judge, held that on the compulsory sale of a good will in bankruptcy proceedings, the bankrupt would not be restrained from solicitation; 19 Ch. Div. 355; and this distinction has been characterized as inconsistent; 9 Harv. L. Rev. 480. All the decisions based upon Labouchere v. Dawson were overturned by the case in 27 Ch. D. 145, which was followed by 44 Ch. D. 616. But in Trego v. Hunt, [1896] App. Cas. 7, reversing [1895] 1 Ch. 462, the later decisions were overruled and the doctrine of Labouchere v. Dawson, was approved. There the good will remained with the old concern and the outgoing partner who had sold it to his former partner employed a clerk in the firm to keep the names and addresses of the firm's customers so that he might solicit their business on his own account. This the house of lords restrained him from doing. Lord MacNaghten designated the good will as "the very sap and life of the business, without which the business would yield little or no fruit," the result "of the reputation and connection of the firm which may have been built up by years of honest work or gained by lavish expenditure of money."

The vendor or retiring partner "may not sell the custom and steal away the customers. It is not an honest thing to pocket the price and then to recapture the subject of sale, to decoy it away or call it back before the purchaser has had time to attach it to himself and make it his very own." But "he may do everything that a stranger in the ordinary course of business would be in a position to do. He may set up where he will. He may push his wares as much as he pleases." In the same case it was said by Lord Davy, "that the idea of good will and what is comprised in the sale of business has silently been developed and grown since the days of Lord Eldon."

In Curl v. Webster, [1904] 1 Ch. 685, the rule of Trego v. Hunt was applied to all persons previously customers of the old business, even including those who without solicitation became customers of the vendor.

A brief but careful review of the fluctuations of the English cases concludes that without special covenants the measure of protection resulting from the sale of the good will is merely to prevent the vendor from soliciting his former customers, whether they have of their own accord become customers of the new competing firm or not, but he may deal with the old customers or set up a similar business next door, so long as he does not represent it to be the same business as the old one; 25 Can. L. T. & Rev. 484.

The question is frequently raised whether a covenant not to engage in the same business is violated by the covenantor's accepting employment from a rival in business of the covenantee. The test is found in the nature of the employment; Nelson v. Johnson, 38 Minn. 255, 36 N. W. 868; and in most cases such employment is held to be a breach, particularly when it is as manager, or in such capacity as will result in a substantial interference; Wilson v. Delaney, 137 Ia. 636, 113 N. W. 842; Boutelle v. Smith, 116 Mass. 111; Jefferson v. Market & Co., 112 Ga. 498, 37 S. E. 758; American Ice Co. v. Meckel, 109 App. Div. 93, 95 N. Y. Supp. 1060; Merica v. Burget, 36 Ind. App. 453, 75 N. E. 1083; 14 Ont. L. Rep. 685; and such an agreement was broken by engaging in business as trustee; Geiger v. Cawley, 146 Mich. 550, 109 N. W. 1064; and the court will see to it that the contract is complied with (as is said in varied terms in many cases) not only in letter but in spirit; Kramer v. Old, 119 N. C. 1, 25 S. E. 813, 34 L. R. A. 389, 56 Am. St. Rep. 650; Emery v. Bradley, 88 Me. 357, 34 Atl. 167; Finger v. Hahn, 42 N. J. Eq. 606, 8 Atl. 654; Siegel v. Marcus, 18 N. D. 214, 119 N. W. 358, 20 L. R. A. (N. S.) 769, and note. In the comparatively few cases where the employment has been held not to be a breach, it has been because the employment has been of such minor or unimportant character as not to occasion mischief; Grimm v. Warner, 45 Ia. 106; Battershell v. Bauer, 91 Ill. App. 181; or where the agreement was construed as only forbidding the engaging in a rival business as principal; Tabor v. Blake, 61 N. H. 83; or for profit as distinguished from salary; Haley Grocery Co. v. Haley, 8 Wash.

75, 35 Pac. 595; Eastern Express Co. v. Measure, 60 N. H. 198.

In this country the expressions of the courts as to what is the precise effect of a sale of good will, without restrictive covenants, vary as much as might be expected from the indefinable nature of the subject. The opinion of Lord Eldon has been, in the main, very closely followed, though often criticised in both countries. Such a sale has been said to carry with it only the probability that the business will continue in the future as in the past; Bell v. Ellis, 33 Cal. 620; or the favor which the management has won from the public and the probability that the customers will continue their patronage; Chittenden v. Witbeck, 50 Mich. 401, 15 N. W. 526; and commend it to others; Myers v. Buggy Co., 54 Mich. 215, 19 N. W. 961, 20 N. W. 545, 52 Am. Rep. 811. It has been said that it amounts to nothing more than the right to succeed to the business and carry it on as a successor to the old concern; 33 Am. L. Reg. N. S. 217; and a federal court terms it "those advantages which may inure to the purchaser from holding himself out to the public as succeeding to an enterprise which has been identified in the past with the name and the repute of his predecessors;" Knoedler v. Boussod, 47 Fed. 467, affirmed Knoedler v. Glaenger, 55 Fed. 895, 5 C. C. A. 305, 20 L. R. A. 733. The principle of Labouchere v. Dawson that the vendor would not be permitted to solicit trade from the customers of the old business may seem to be maintained in this country in cases prior to the English decisions; Palmer v. Graham, 1 Pars. Eq. Cas. (Pa.) 476; Angier v. Webber, 14 Allen (Mass.) 211, 92 Am. Dec. 748; Burckhardt v. Burckhardt, 36 Ohio St. 261; and in some later cases it was so held upon the ground that there was an implied contract not to solicit, or that by so doing the value of the thing sold was impaired; Foss v. Roby, 195 Mass. 292, 81 N. E. 199, 10 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1200, 11 Ann. Cas. 571; Townsend v. Hurst, 37 Miss. 679; Ranft v. Reimers, 200 Ill. 386, 65 N. E. 720, 60 L. R. A. 291; Zanturjian v. Boornazian, 25 R. I. 151, 55 Atl. 199; but other courts have held that the vendor is not barred from soliciting his old customers; Williams v. Farrand, 88 Mich. 473, 50 N. W. 446, 14 L. R. A. 161; Cottrell v. Mfg. Co., 54 Conn. 122, 6 Atl. 791; Close v. Flesher, 8 Misc. 299, 28 N. Y. Supp. 737. The rule against canvassing old customers applies in cases of partners; Althen v. Vreeland (N. J.) 36 Atl. 479; contra; Fish Bros. Wagon Co. v. Wagon Works, 82 Wis. 546, 52 N. W. 595, 16 L. R. A. 453, 33 Am. St. Rep. 72; Williams v. Farrand, 88 Mich. 473, 50 N. W. 446, 14 L. R. A. 161; but not in case of a sale for benefit of creditors; Iowa Seed Co. v. Dorr, 70 Ia. 481, 30 N. W. 866, 59 Am. Rep. 446; or where the firm is dissolved by death and at a sale forced by the administrator of the deceased partner the good will is sold as part of the assets; Hutchinson v. Nay, 187 Mass. 262, 72 N. E. 974, 68 L. R. A. 186, 105 Am. St. Rep. 390; nor has the vendor the right to hold himself out as the successor of the old firm or as continuing its business; Appeal of Hall, 60 Pa. 458, 100 Am. Dec. 584; Dwight v. Hamilton, 113 Mass. 175; Knoedler v. Boussod, 47 Fed. 465; affirmed, Knoedler v. Glaenger, 55 Fed. 895, 5 C. C. A. 305, 20 L. R. A. 733; Smith v. Gibbs, 44 N. H. 335; 3 L. T. N. S. 447; 11 id. 299; but, in the absence of express contract to the contrary, he may set up a similar business; Bergamini v. Bastian, 35 La. Ann. 60, 48 Am. Rep. 216; Washburn v. Dosch, 68 Wis. 436, 32 N. W. 551, 60 Am. Rep. 873; Bassett v. Percival, 5 Allen (Mass.) 345; White v. Trowbridge, 216 Pa. 11, 64 Atl. 862; Jackson v. Byrnes, 103 Tenn. 698, 54 S. W. 984; Williams v. Farrand, 88 Mich. 473, 50 N. W. 446, 14 L. R. A. 161; Hoxie v. Chaney, 143 Mass. 592, 10 N. E. 713, 58 Am. Rep. 149; Rupp v. Over, 3 Brewst. (Pa.) 133; Moreau v. Edwards, 2 Tenn. Ch. 347 (but in this case there was no conveyance of the good will in terms).

Competition may, however, be prohibited without express covenant, if from the nature of the business an agreement to refrain from it is naturally implied; Wentzel v. Barbin, 189 Pa. 502, 42 Atl. 44; as in the sale of his practice by a physician; Dwight v. Hamilton, 113 Mass. 175; or engaging in competition would necessarily derogate from the grant; Gordon v. Knott, 199 Mass. 173, 85 N. E. 184, 19 L. R. A. (N. S.) 762; as to establish a newspaper of the same name; Lawrence v. Printing Co., 90 Fed. 24; or if there was an agreement not to do anything in conflict with the transfer; Hitchcock v. Anthony, 83 Fed. 779, 28 C. C. A. 80. The vendor may bind himself not to engage in the same business within a limited time or distance, by express covenant, which, if reasonable, is valid. See RESTRAINT OF TRADE.

The question has been much discussed whether good will is an incident of the business, of the premises, or of the person. It has been held in the case of a stand in a public market to be personal and not local; Succession of Journe, 21 La. Ann. 391; 25 L. J. N. S. 194; but it is said to be the general rule that the good will is an incident of the premises; Appeal of Elliot, 60 Pa. 161; Mitchell v. Read, 84 N. Y. 556; Bergamini v. Bastian, 35 La. Ann. 60, 48 Am. Rep. 216; and a devise of real estate, on which a business is located, and its stock and equipment passed the good will as an incident; Bradbury v. Wells, 138 Ia. 673, 115 N. W. 880, 16 L. R. A. (N. S.) 240; or, at least, the good will of a newspaper is not to be treated as of value apart from the plant and ownership of the business itself; Seabrook v. Grimes, 107 Md. 410, 68 Atl. 883, 16 L. R. A. (N. S.) 483, 126 Am. St. Rep. 400; but where a widow carried on the business of a licensed victualler on leased premises and assigned all her goods, stock in trade, etc., without mentioning the good will, in trust prior to her second marriage, the good will passed by the assignment as an incident to the stock and license, and not to the husband with the premises; 6 Beav. 269. It is said that good will is only an incident, as connected with a going concern, of business having locality or name, and is not susceptible of being disposed of independently; Metropolitan Nat. Bank v. Despatch Co., 149 U. S. 436, 13 Sup. Ct. 944, 37 L. Ed. 799. See Metropolitan Nat. Bank v. Despatch Co., 36 Fed. 722. So in [1901] A. C. 217, holding that the statutory phrase "property locally outside of the United Kingdom" may include good will, after premising that the term is difficult to define, the court said that it is property that has no independent existence, "it must be attached to a business" and "the attribute of locality" is involved in it.

To this variety of expressions may be added the decision of a federal court that good will is property and may have an independent value without reference to tangible property or locality, and stock of a corporation may be issued for it; Washburn v. Wall Paper Co., 81 Fed. 17, 26 C. C. A. 312; and in New York it was held that the good will of a business may be sold where no material "plant" is involved in the transaction; Brett v. Ebel, 29 App. Div. 256, 51 N. Y. Supp. 573; or where the calling is one which is followed without a business plant; Wood v. Whitehead Bros. Co., 165 N. Y. 545, 59 N. E. 357.

As between partners, it has been held that the good will of a partnership trade survives; 5 Ves. 539; but this appears to be doubtful; 15 Ves. 227; and is not in accord with modern authorities; 27 Beav. 446. A distinction in this respect has been suggested between commercial and professional partnerships; 3 Madd. 79; 2 De G. & J. 626; but see 14 Am. L. Reg. N. S. 10, where the distinction is said to be untenable. It has been held that the firm name constitutes a part of the good will of a partnership; 6 Hare 325; contra, Howe v. Searing, 19 How Pr. (N. Y.) 14. Where a partner sells out his share in a going concern, he is presumed to include the good will; Johns. (Eng. Ch.) 174; certainly so where he acquiesces in the retention of the old place of business, and its future conduct by the other partners under the old name; Menendez v. Holt, 128 U. S. 514, 9 Sup. Ct. 143, 32 L. Ed. 526; and he cannot use the firm name in a business of like character carried on by him in the vicinity; Brass & Iron Works Co. v. Payne, 50 Ohio St. 115, 33 N. E. 88, 19 L. R. A. 82; or a name so similar to that of the first as to mislead and draw off business; Myers v. Buggy Co., 54 Mich. 215, 19 N. W. 961, 20 N. W. 545, 52 Am. Rep. 811. When a partnership is dissolved by death, bankruptcy, or otherwise, the good will is an asset of the firm, and should be sold and the proceeds distributed among the partners; 15 Ves. 218; Holden's Adm'rs v. McMakin, 1 Pars. Eq. Cas. (Pa.) 270. In such case the sale of the good will may include the right to use the old firm name which is inseparable from it and part of the assets; Slater v. Slater, 175 N. Y. 143, 67 N. E. 224, 61 L. R. A. 796, 96 Am. St. Rep. 605; Snyder Mfg. Co. v. Snyder, 54 Ohio St. 86, 43 N. E. 325, 31 L. R. A. 657; though in New York it had been earlier decided otherwise; Mason v. Dawson, 15 Misc. 595, 37 N. Y. Supp. 90; but in this case the question did not arise in a precisely similar manner. On the death of a partner the good will does not go to the survivor, unless by express agreement; 22 Beav. 84; 26 L. J. N. S. 391. It has been held, however, that on the dissolution of a partnership by the death of one of its members, the surviving partners may carry on the same line of business, at the same place, without liability to account to the legal representative of the deceased partner for the good will of the firm, in the absence of their own agreement to the contrary; Lobeck v. Hardware Co., 37 Neb. 158, 55 N. W. 650, 23 L. R. A. 795. And where on the death of a partner the business was sold to a corporation organized to carry it on, there remained nothing to be accounted for to the estate of the deceased partner, the good will passing with the property under the sale; Didlake v. Roden Grocery, 160 Ala. 484, 49 South. 384, 22 L. R. A. (N. S.) 907, 18 Ann. Cas. 430. The dissolution of the firm during the life time of all the partners gives each of them the right to use the firm name; 34 Beav. 566; contra, Williams v. Wilson, 4 Sandf. Ch. (N. Y.) 379; 35 Am. Rep. 546 note.

The good will of a trade or business is a valuable right of property; Senter v. Davis, 38 Cal. 450; 10 Exch. 147; Howard v. Taylor, 90 Ala. 244, 8 South. 36; 2 Ves. & B. 218; 16 Harv. L. R. 135; it is an asset of the business; Wallingford v. Burr, 17 Neb. 137, 22 N. W. 350; or of a partnership; 27 Beav. 456; or of a corporation; Washburn v. Paper Co., 81 Fed. 17, 26 C. C. A. 312; or of a decedent; Succession of Journe, 21 La. Ann. 391; but it does not include the use of the name of a deceased person, though the good will of the business is an asset to be accounted for; In re Randell's Estate, 2 Cow. Surr. 29, 8 N. Y. Supp. 652. It may be bequeathed by will; 27 Beav. 446. It may be sold like other personal property; see 3 Mer. 452; 1 J. & W. 589; 2 B. & Ad. 341; McFarland v. Stewart, 2 Watts (Pa.) 111, 26 Am. Dec. 109; 1 S. & S. 74; Caruthers & Murray v. McMurray, 75 Ia. 173, 39 N. W. 255; Appeal of Musselman, 62 Pa. 81, 1 Am. Rep. 382.

The good will of a liquor business is an asset to be sold with fixtures and the unexpired term of the lease; Aschenbach v.

Carey, 224 Pa. 303, 73 Atl. 435. The right to use a name on a medicine may be assigned to an outgoing partner or to a successor in business, as an incident to its good will; Brown Chemical Co. v. Meyer, 139 U. S. 540, 11 Sup. Ct. 625, 35 L. Ed. 247. In the United States the subject of good will has in the original technical sense less relative prominence than in England, but the subject has developed very great importance in connection with the use of trademarks and trade names, which titles see.

A good will may be mortgaged, assigned, or taken in execution, in connection with the business; id.; 39 L. J. Ch. N. S. 79; and passes under a general description in a mortgage of a newspaper plant; Vinall v. Hendricks, 33 Ind. App. 413, 71 N. E. 682, or a lease; Lane v. Smythe, 46 N. J. Eq. 443, 19 Atl. 199; or a conditional sale of one; Boon v. Moss, 70 N. Y. 465; but not if dependent on the ability and skill of the proprietor; 25 Ch. D. 472; Slack v. Suddoth, 102 Tenn. 375, 52 S. W. 180, 45 L. R. A. 589, 73 Am. St. Rep. 881; or not necessarily connected with the establishment itself; MacMartin v. Stevens, 37 Wash. 616, 79 Pac. 1099.

The good will passes under a general assignment for the benefit of creditors, though not specifically mentioned; Lothrop Pub. Co. v. Lothrop, Lee & Shepard Co., 191 Mass. 353, 77 N. E. 841, 5 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1077; Iowa Seed Co. v. Dorr, 70 Ia. 481, 30 N. W. 866, 59 Am. Rep. 446; Wilmer v. Thomas, 74 Md. 485, 22 Atl. 403, 13 L. R. A. 380; Hegeman v. Hegeman, 8 Daly (N. Y.) 1; Bank of Tomah v. Warren, 94 Wis. 151, 68 N. W. 549; but although the good will passed, the members of the assigning firm could afterwards use trademarks consisting of words and pictures, to such limited extent as not to impair the good will of the business in the hands of the receiver; Fish Bros. Wagon Co. v. Wagon Works, 82 Wis. 546, 52 N. W. 595, 16 L. R. A. 453, 33 Am. St. Rep. 72. The vendor of a business and good will who stipulates against carrying on the business in the same place, may be enjoined from doing so as the agent of another; Emery v. Bradley, 88 Me. 357, 34 Atl. 167; but individual stockholders are not bound by a contract for the sale of the good will of a corporation, although as agents of the latter they sold the business; Hall's Safe Co. v. Safe Co., 146 Fed. 37, 76 C. C. A. 495, 14 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1182. The purchaser who finds there is no good will is without remedy unless he can show fraudulent representation or suppression of fact by the vendor; Johnson v. Friedhoff, 7 Misc. Rep. 484, 27 N. Y. Supp. 982.

The purchaser of a good will and firm name is entitled to receive letters and telegrams addressed to it and to the advantage of business propositions from customers of the old firm contained in them; J. G. Mattingly Co. v. Mattingly, 96 Ky. 430, 27 S. W. 985.

The measure of damages for the breach of a contract of sale of good will is the loss suffered by the vendee, not the profits made by the vendor; Gregory v. Spieker, 110 Cal. 150, 42 Pac. 576, 52 Am. St. Rep. 70.

English courts have adopted an arbitrary rule of limiting the value of good will to one year's purchase of the net annual profits, calculated on an average of three years; 28 Beav. 453; or that three years' net profits represents the value of good will; 75 L. T. Rep. 371; but it was said that American courts had not adopted it; Von Au v. Magenheimer, 115 App. Div. 84, 100 N. Y. Supp. 659, where an attempt was made to prescribe a rule for ascertaining the value of a good will by multiplying the average annual net profits for a suitable number of years with reference to the business. It would seem, however, difficult to deal with the question of value, where it arises, otherwise than to leave it to be determined as other matters of fact. See 20 Harv. L. Rev. 235. In estimating its value it is proper to consider the continued use of the firm name as an element; Moore v. Rawson, 199 Mass. 493, 85 N. E. 586.

See, generally, 14 Am. L. Reg. N. S. 1, 329, 649, 713; 33 id. 216; 30 Cent. L. J. 155; 34 Sol. J. 294; Lindl. Partn. Wentworth's ed. 440-9; Allan, Law of Goodwill.

GOODS. In Contracts. The term goods is not so wide as chattels, for it applies to inanimate objects, and does not include animals or chattels real, as a lease for years of house or land, which chattels does include. Co. Litt. 118; 1 Russ. 376.

Goods will not include fixtures; 4 J. B. Moore 73; a subscription for stock; Webb v. R. Co., 77 Md. 92, 26 Atl. 113, 39 Am. St. Rep. 396; or teams and wagons, notes and accounts due; Van Patten v. Leonard, 55 Ia. 520, 8 N. W. 334. In a more limited sense, goods is used for articles of merchandise; 2 Bla. Com. 389. It has been held in Massachusetts that promissory notes were within the term goods in the Statute of Frauds; Baldwin v. Williams, 3 Metc. 365; but see Whittemore v. Gibbs, 24 N. H. 484; so stock or shares of an incorporated company; Tisdale v. Harris, 20 Pick. (Mass.) 9; Colvin v. Williams, 3 H. & J. (Md.) 38, 5 Am. Dec. 417; North v. Forest, 15 Conn. 400; so, in some cases, bank notes and coin; Citizens' Bank v. Steamboat Co., 2 Sto. 52, Fed. Cas. No. 2,730; U. S. v. Moulton, 5 Mas. 537, Fed. Cas. No. 15,827; Rogers v. Morton, 12 Wend. (N. Y.) 486. The word "goods" is always used to designate wares, commodities, and personal chattels; the word effects is the equivalent of the word movables; Appeal of Vandergrift, 83 Pa. 126.

In Wills. In wills goods is nomen generalissimum, and, if there is nothing to limit it, will comprehend all the personal estate of the testator, as stocks, bonds, notes, mou-er. plate, furniture, etc.; 1 Atk. 180; 1 P. Wms. 267; 1 Bro. C. C. 128; 4 Russ. 370; Wms. Ex. 1014; 1 Rep. Leg. 250; but in general it will be limited by the context of the will; see 2 Belt. Suppl. Ves. 287; 1 Ves. 63; Jackson v. Vandersprengle's Ex'r, 2 Dall. (U. S.) 142; 1 L. Ed. 118; Sugd. Vend. 493. See 1 Jarm. Wills 751; and the titles BIENS; CHATELLETS; FURNITURE.

GOODS AND CHATELLETS. In Contracts.

A term which includes not only personal property in possession, but choses in action and chattels real, as a lease for years of house or land, or emblements. 12 Co. 1; 1 Ark. 182; Co. Litt. 118; 1 Russ. 376; see Kirkland v. Brune, 31 Gratt. (Va.) 131; it includes railroad ties; Russell v. Ry. Co., 39 Minn. 145, 39 N. W. 302.

A merchant's stock in trade is "goods and chattels permanently located," provided such goods and chattels are taxable in the city or county where they are so located; Hopkins v. Baker, 78 Md. 363, 28 Atl. 284, 22 L. R. A. 477.

In Criminal Law. Choses in action, as bank notes, mortgage deeds, and money, do not fall within the technical definition of "goods and chattels." And if described in an indictment as goods and chattels, these words may be rejected as surplusage; Eastman v. Com., 4 Gray (Mass.) 416; State v. Calvin, 22 N. J. Law 207; 3 Cox, Cr. Cas. 460; 1 Den. Cr. Cas. 450; 1 Dears. & B. 426; 1 Leach 241, 4th ed. 468. See U. S. v. Moulton, 5 Mas. (U. S.) 537, Fed. Cas. No. 15,827.

In Wills. If unrestrained, these words will pass all personal property; Wms. Ex. 1014 Am. notes. See 1 Jarm. Wills 751; Add. Contr. 31, 201, 912; Beach, Wills 470.

GOODS SOLD AND DELIVERED. A phrase used to designate the action of assumpsit brought when the sale and delivery of goods furnish the cause.

A sale, delivery, and the value of the goods must be proved. See ASSUMPSIT.

GOODS, WARES, AND MERCHANDISE.

A phrase used in the Statute of Frauds. Fixtures do not come within it; 1 Cr. M. & R. 275. Growing crops of potatoes, corn, turnips, and other annual crops, are within it; 4 M. & W. 347; contra, 2 Taunt. 38. See Addison, Contr. 31; Blackb. Sales §§ 4, 5; Craddock v. Riddlesbarger, 2 Dana (Ky.) 206; Stambaugh v. Yeates, 2 Rawle (Pa.) 161; 10 Ad. & E. 753. As to when growing crops are part of the realty and when personal property, see 1 Washb. R. P. 3. A contract for the sale of apples, peaches, and blackberries which might be raised during certain years, are chattels personal and not within the statute; Smock v. Smock, 37 Mo. App. 56. Promissory notes and shares in an incorporated company, and, in some cases, money and bank-notes, have been held within it; see 2 Pars. Contr. 330; and so have a bond and mortgage; Greenwood v. Law, 55 N. J. L. 168, 26 Atl. 134, 19 L. R. A. 688; Bernhardt v. Walls, 29 Mo. App. 206. Within the meaning of the tariff laws "goods, wares and merchandise" do not include a quantity of waste material; Shaw v. Dix, 72 Fed. 166. Fruit, imported into this country, which decays on the voyage, was held not goods, wares and merchandise; Lawder v. Stone, 187 U. S. 281, 23 Sup. Ct. 79, 47 L. Ed. 178; the term "merchandise" as used in the revised statutes of the United States includes goods, wares, and chattels of every description capable of being imported; R. S. § 2766. See Pratt v. Miller, 109 Mo. 78, 18 S. W. 965, 32 Am. St. Rep. 656.

The cases which have considered that the rule for distinguishing goods, wares and merchandise from work and labor under the 17th section of statute of frauds have been grouped under three rules, under one of which usually any case may be classified. The English rule was that, if the transaction results in the sale of a chattel, the contract is within the statute. The New York rule is that, if the subject matter was in existence at the time of the contract, the transaction is within the statute, otherwise not; and the Massachusetts rule is that, if the article be such as the manufacturer makes in the ordinary course of his business, the contract is within the statute, otherwise not.

The English rule was applied in 1 B. & S. 272, in which a set of artificial teeth manufactured by a dentist was declared to be merchandise. The New York rule was laid down in Crookshank v. Burrell, 18 Johns. (N. Y.) 58, 9 Am. Dec. 187, and Parsons v. Loucks, 48 N. Y. 17, 8 Am. Rep. 517. The Massachusetts rule was laid down in Mixer v. Howarth, 21 Pick. (Mass.) 205, 32 Am. Dec. 256.

A more recent test has been laid down in some cases to the effect that, if the article when manufactured is fit for the general market, it is merchandise; otherwise, if it is of such peculiar construction as to be of value only to the particular person ordering it; Puget Sound Mach. Depot v. Rigby, 13 Wash. 264, 43 Pac. 39; Orman v. Hagar, 3 N. Mex. 568, 9 Pac. 363; Pratt v. Miller, 109 Mo. 78, 18 S. W. 965, 32 Am. St. Rep. 656.

GORGE. A defile between hills or mountains, that is a narrow throat or outlet from a region of country. Gibbs v. Williams, 25 Kan. 214, 37 Am. Rep. 241.

GOUT. In Medical Jurisprudence. A nutritional disorder associated with an excessive formation of uric acid, and characterized by attacks of acute inflammation of the joints, by the gradual deposit of urate of sodium in and about the joints, and by the occurrence of irregular constitutional symptoms. Osler, Practice of Med.

In case of insurance on lives, when there is warranty of health, it seems that a man subject to the gout is capable of being insured, if he has no sickness at the time to make it an unequal contract; 2 Park, Ins. 650.

GOVERNMENT (Lat. gubernaculum, a rudder. The Romans compared the state to a vessel, and applied the term gubernator, helmsman, to the leader or actual ruler of a state. From the Latin, this word has passed into most of the modern European languages). That institution or aggregate of institutions by which a state makes and carries out those rules of action which are necessary to enable men to live in a social state, or which are imposed upon the people forming a state.

We understand, in modern political science, by state, in its widest sense, an independent society, acknowledging no superior, and by the term government, that institution or aggregate of institutions by which that society makes and carries out those rules of action which are necessary to enable men to live in a social state, or which are imposed upon the people forming that society by those who possess the power or authority of prescribing them. Government is the aggregate of authorities which rule a society. By administration, again, we understand in modern times, and especially in more or less free countries, the aggregate of those persons in whose hands the reins of government are for the time-being (the chief ministers or heads of departments). But the terms state, government, and administration are not always used in their strictness. The government of a state being its most prominent feature, which is most readily perceived, government has frequently been used for state; and the publicists of the last century almost always used the term government, or form of government, when they discussed the different political societies or states. On the other hand, government is often used, to this day, for administration, in the sense in which it has been explained. We shall give in this article a classification of all governments and political societies which have existed and exist to this day.

Governments, or the authorities of societies, are, like societies themselves, grown institutions. See INSTITUTION.

They are never actually created by agreement, or compact. Even where portions of government are formed by agreement, as, for instance, when a certain family is called to rule over a country, the contracting parties must previously be conscious of having authority to do so. As society originates with the family, so does authority or government. Nowhere do men exist without authority among them, even though it were but in its mere incipency. Men are forced into this state of things by the fundamental law that with them, and with them alone of all mammals, the period of dependence of the young upon its parents outlasts by many years the period of lactation; so that, during this period of post-lactational dependence, time and opportunity are given for the development of affection and the habit of obedience on the one hand, and of affection and authority on the other, as well as of mutual dependence. The family is a society, and expands into clusters of families, into tribes and larger societies, collecting into communities, always carrying the habit and necessity of authority and mutual support along with them. As men advance, the great and pervading law of mutual dependence shows itself more and more clearly, and acts more and more intensely. Man is eminently a social being, not only as to an instinctive love of aggregation, not only as to material necessity and security, but also as to mental and affectional development, and not only as to a given number of existing beings, or what we will call as to extent, but also as to descent of generation after generation, or, as we may call it, transmission. Society, and its government along with it, are continuous. Government exists and continues among men, and laws have authority for generations which neither made them nor had any direct representation in making them, because the necessity of government—necessary according to the nature of social man and to his wants—is a continuous necessity. But the family is not only the institution from which once, at a distant period, society, authority, government arose. The family increases in importance, distinctness, and intensity of action as man advances, and continues to develop authority, obedience, affection, and social adhesiveness, and thus acts with reference to the state as the feeder acts with reference to the canal; the state originates daily anew in the family.

Although man is an eminently social being, he is also individual, morally, intellectually, and physically; and though his individuality may endure even beyond this life, he is compelled, by his physical condition, to appropriate and to produce, and thus to imprint his individuality upon the material world around, to create property. But man is not only an appropriating and producing, he is also an exchanging being. He always exchanges and always intercommunicates. This constant intertwining of man's individualism and socialism creates mutual claims of protection, rights, the necessity of rules, of laws: in one word, as individuals and as natural members of society, men produce and require government. No society, no cluster of men, no individuals banded together even for a temporary purpose, can exist without some sort of government instantly springing up. Government is natural to men and characteristic. No animals have a government; no authority exists among them; instinct and physical submission alone exist among them. Man alone has laws which ought to be obeyed but may be disobeyed. Expansion, accumulation, development, progress, relapses, disintegration, violence, error, superstition, the necessity of intercommunication, wealth and poverty, peculiar disposition, temperament, configuration of the country, traditional types, pride and avarice, knowledge and ignorance, sagacity of individuals, taste, activity and sluggishness, noble or criminal bias, position, both geographical and chronological,—all that affects numbers of men affects their governments, and an endless variety of governments and political societies has been the consequence; but, whatever form of government may present itself to us, the fundamental idea, however rudely conceived, is always the protection of society and its members, security of property and person, the administration of justice therefor, and the united efforts of society to furnish the means to authority to carry out its objects,—contribution, which, viewed as imposed by authority, is taxation. Those bands of robbers which occasionally have risen in disintegrating societies, as in India, and who merely robbed and devastated, avowing that they did not mean to administer justice or protect the people, form no exception, although the extent of their soldiery and the periodicity of their raids caused them to be called governments. What little of government continued to exist was still the remnant of the communal government of the oppressed hamlets; while the robbers themselves could not exist without a government among themselves.

Aristotle classified governments according to the seat of supreme power, and he has been generally followed down to very recent times. Accordingly, we had Monarchy, that government in which the supreme power is vested in one man, to which was added, at a later period, the idea of hereditaryness. Aristocracy, the government in which the supreme power is vested in the ἀριστοι, which does not mean, in this case, the best, but the excellent ones, the prominent, i. e. by property and influence. Privilege is its characteristic. Its corresponding degenerate government is the Oligarchy (from ὀλίγοι, little, few), that government in which supreme power is exercised by a few privileged ones, who generally have arrogated the power. Democracy, that government in which supreme power is vested in the people at large. Equality is one of its characteristics. Its degenerate correspondent is the Ochlocracy (from ὄχλος, the rabble), for which at present the barbarous term mobocracy is frequently used.

But this classification was insufficient even at the time of Aristotle, when, for instance, theocracies existed; nor is the seat of supreme power the only characteristic, nor, in all respects, by any means the chief characteristic. A royal government, for instance, may be less absolute than a republican government. In order to group together the governments and political societies which have existed and are still existing, with philosophical discrimination, we must pay attention to the chief-power-holder (whether he be one or whether there are many), to the pervading spirit of the administration or wielding of the power, to the characteristics of the society or the influencing interests of the same, to the limitation or entirety of public power, to the peculiar relations of the citizen to the state. Indeed, every principle, relation, or condition characteristically influencing or shaping society or government in particular may furnish us with a proper division. We propose, then, the following

Grouping of Political Societies and Governments.

I. According to the supreme power-holder or the placing of supreme power, whether really or nominally so.

The power-holder may be one, a few, many, or all; and we have, accordingly:

A. Principalities, that is, states the rulers of which are set apart from the ruled, or inherently differ from the ruled, as in the case of the theocracy.

1. Monarchy.

- a. Patriarchy.
- b. Chieftain government (as our Indians).
- c. Sacerdotal monarchy (as the States of the Church; former sovereign bishoprics).
- d. Kingdom, or Principality proper.
- e. Theocracy (Jehovah was the chief magistrate of the Israelitic state).

2. Dyarchy. It exists in Siam, and existed occasionally in the Roman empire; not in Sparta, because Sparta was a republic, although her two hereditary generals were called kings.

B. Republic.

1. Aristocracy.

- a. Aristocracy proper.
  - aa. Aristocracies which are democracies within the body of aristocrats (as former Polish government).
  - bb. Organic internal government (as Venice formerly).
- b. Oligarchy.
- c. Sacerdotal republic, or Hierarchy.
- d. Plutocracy; if, indeed, we adopt this term from antiquity for a government in which it is the principle that the possessors of great wealth constitute the body of aristocrats.

2. Democracy.

- a. Democracy proper.
- b. Ochlocracy (Mob-rule), mob meaning unorganized multitude.

II. According to the unity of public power, or its division and limitation.

A. Unrestricted power, or absolutism.

1. According to the form of government.
  - a. Absolute monarchy, or despotism.
  - b. Absolute aristocracy (Venice); absolute sacerdotal aristocracy, etc. etc. etc.
  - c. Absolute democracy (the government of the Agora or market democracy).
2. According to the organization of the administration.

- a. Centralized absolutism. Centralism, called bureaucracy when carried on by writing; at least, bureaucracy has very rarely existed, if ever, without centralism.
- b. Provincial (satraps, pashas, pro-consuls).

B. According to divisions of public power.

1. Governments in which the three great functions of public power are separate, viz., the legislative, executive, judiciary. If a distinct term contradistinguished to centralism be wanted, we might call these co-operative governments.

2. Governments in which these branches are not strictly separate, as, for instance, in our government, but which are nevertheless not centralized governments; as Republican Rome, Athens, and several modern kingdoms.

C. Institutional government.

1. Institutional government comprehending the whole, or constitutional government.

- a. Deputative government.
- b. Representative government.
  - aa. Bicameral.
  - bb. Unicameral.

2. Local self-government. See V. We do not believe that any substantial self-government can exist without an institutional character and subordinate self-governments. It can exist only under an institutional government (see Lieber's Civil Liberty and Self-Government, under "Institution").

D. Whether the state is the substantive or the means, or whether the principle of socialism or individualism preponderates.

1. Socialism, that state of society in which the socialist principle prevails, or in which government considers itself the substantive; the ancient states absorbing the individual or making citizenship the highest phase of humanity; absolutism of Louis XIV. Indeed, all modern absolutism is socialistic.

2. Individualism, that system in which the state remains acknowledged a means, and the individual the substantive; where primary claims, that is, rights, are felt to exist, for the obtaining and protection of which the government is established,—the government, or even society, which must not attempt to absorb the individual. The individual is immortal, and will be of another world; the state is neither.

III. According to the descent or transfer of supreme power.

A. Hereditary governments.

- Monarchies.
- Aristocracies.
- Hierarchies, etc.

B. Elective.

- Monarchies.
- Aristocracies.
- Hierarchies.

C. Hereditary—elective—governments, the rulers of which are chosen from a certain family or tribe.

D. Governments in which the chief magistrate or monarch has the right to appoint the successor; as occasionally the Roman emperors, the Chinese, the Russian, in theory, Bonaparte when consul for life.

IV. According to the origin of supreme power, real or theoretical.

A. According to the primordial character of power.

1. Based on jus divinum.

- a. Monarchies.
- b. Communism, which rests its claims on a jus divinum or extra-political claim of society.
- c. Democracies, when proclaiming that the people, because the people, can do what they list, even against the law; as the Athenians once declared it, and Napoleon III. when he desired to be elected president a second time against the constitution.

2. Based on the sovereignty of the people.

- a. Establishing an institutional government, as with us.

- b. Establishing absolutism (the Bonaparte sovereignty).
- B. Delegated power.
1. Chartered governments.
    - a. Chartered city governments.
    - b. Chartered companies, as the reform great East India Company.
    - c. Proprietary governments.
  2. Vice-Royalties; as Egypt, and, formerly, Algiers.
  3. Colonial government with constitution and high amount of self-government,—a government of great importance in modern history.
- V. Constitutions. (To avoid too many subdivisions, this subject has been treated here separately. See II.)
- Constitutions, the fundamental laws on which governments rest, and which determine the relation in which the citizen stands to the government, as well as each portion of the government to the whole, and which therefore give feature to the political society, may be:
- A. As to their origin.
    1. Accumulative: as the constitutions of England or Republican Rome.
    2. Enacted constitutions (generally, but not philosophically, called written constitutions).
      - a. Octroyed constitutions (as the French, by Louis XVIII.).
      - b. Enacted by the people, as our constitutions. ["We the people charter governments; formerly governments chartered the liberties of the people."]
    3. Pacts between two parties, contracts, as Magna Charta, and most charters in the Middle Ages. The medieval rule was that as much freedom was enjoyed as it was possible to conquer,—expugnare in the true sense.
  - B. As to extent or uniformity.
    1. Broadcast over the land. We may call them national constitutions, popular constitutions, constitutions for the whole state.
    2. Special charters. Chartered, accumulated and varying franchises, medieval character. (See article Constitution in the Encyclopædia Americana.)
- VI. As to the extent and comprehension of the chief government.
- A. Military governments.
    1. Commercial government; one of the first in Asia, and that into which Asiatic society relapses, as the only remaining element, when barbarous conquerors destroy all bonds which can be torn by them.
    2. Tribal government.
      - a. Stationary.
      - b. Nomadic. We mention the nomadic government under the tribal government, because no other government has been nomadic, except the patriarchal government, which indeed is the incipency of the tribal government.
    3. City government (that is, city-states; as all free states of antiquity, and as the Hanseatic governments in modern times).
    4. Government of the Medieval Orders extending over portions of societies far apart; as the Templars, Teutonic Knights, Knights of St. John, Political societies without necessary territory, although they had always landed property.
    5. National states; that is, populous political societies spreading over an extensive and cohesive territory beyond the limits of a city.
  - B. Confederacies.
    1. As to admission of members, or extension.
      - a. Closed, as the Amphictyonic council, Germany.
      - b. Open, as ours.
    2. As to the federal character, or the character of the members, as states.

a. Leagues.

- aa. Tribal confederacies; frequently observed in Asia; generally of a loose character.
  - bb. City leagues; as the Hanseatic League, the Lombard League.
  - cc. Congress of deputies, voting by states and according to instruction; as the Netherlands republic and our Articles of Confederation, Germanic Confederation.
  - dd. Present "state system of Europe" (with constant congresses, if we may call this "system," a federative government in its incipency.)
- b. Confederacies proper, with national congress.
- aa. With ecclesiæ or democratic congress (Achaean League).
  - bb. With representative national congress, as ours.
- C. Mere agglomerations of one ruler.
1. As the early Asiatic monarchies, or Turkey.
  2. Several crowns on one head; as Austria, Sweden, Denmark.
- VII. As to the construction of society, the title of property and allegiance.
- A. As to the classes of society.
    1. Castes, hereditarily dividing the whole population, according to occupations and privileges. India, ancient Egypt.
    2. Special castes.
      - a. Government with privileged classes or caste; nobility.
      - b. Government with degraded or oppressed caste; slavery.
      - c. Governments founded on equality of citizens (the uniform tendency of modern civilization).
  - B. As to property and production.
    1. Communism.
    2. Individualism.
  - C. As to allegiance.
    1. Plain, direct; as in unitary governments.
    2. Varied; as in national confederacies.
    3. Graduated or encapsulated; as in the feudal system, or as in the case with the serf.
  - D. Governments are occasionally called according to the prevailing interest or classes; as Military states; for instance, Prussia under Frederick II. Maritime state. Commercial. Agricultural. Manufacturing. Ecclesiastical, etc.
- VIII. According to simplicity or complexity, as in all other spheres, we have—
- A. Simple governments (formerly called pure; as pure democracy).
  - B. Complex governments, formerly called mixed. All organism is complex.

See STATE; FEDERAL GOVERNMENT; EXECUTIVE POWER; JUDICIAL POWER; LEGISLATIVE POWER; UNITED STATES OF AMERICA.

GOVERNOR. See EXECUTIVE POWER.

GRACE, DAYS OF. See DAYS OF GRACE.

GRADE. Used in reference to streets: (1) The line of the street's inclination from the horizontal; (2) a part of a street inclined from the horizontal. Cent. Dict. That is, it sometimes signifies the line established to guide future construction, and at other times, the street wrought to the line; Little Rock v. Ry. Co., 56 Ark. 28, 19 S. W. 17.

Grades of crime, in legal parlance, are always spoken of and understood as higher or lower in grade, or degree, according to the measure of punishment attached and meted out on conviction, and the consequences resulting to the party convicted; People v. Rawson, 61 Barb. (N. Y.) 619.

As to military grade, see RANK.

GRADE CROSSING. A place where one highway crosses another: in particular, a place where a railroad is crossed at grade by a public or private road, or by another railroad. The term is most frequently used with reference to the crossing of a public highway by a railroad.

At such a crossing it is the duty of the railroad company to construct and maintain safe and proper crossings; and it is liable for all injuries resulting from a failure to perform this duty; Louisville, N. A. & C. Ry. Co. v. Smith, 91 Ind. 119; Farley v. R. Co., 42 Ia. 234; Paducah & E. R. Co. v. Com., 80 Ky. 147; State v. R. Co., 36 Ohio St. 436; Pittsburg, P. W. & C. Ry. Co. v. Dunn, 56 Pa. 280; but the most numerous class of cases relating to grade crossings, arises from accidents to persons who are using the crossing, caused by the operation of trains thereon.

The rule that the roadbed and track of a railroad company are its private property, and that one who gets thereon does so at his own peril, does not apply to a highway crossing; Florida Cent. & R. R. Co. v. Williams, 37 Fla. 406, 20 South. 558. At such a place the company hold its roadbed, subject to the right of the public to cross it; and that circumstance creates mutual rights and obligations. Both parties must use ordinary care in the exercise of their own rights. Theoretically, the rights of the company and a person who intends to cross are equal; practically, the more onerous duty of avoiding danger rests upon the latter, on account of the difficulty in stopping a train in rapid motion. But this fact, on the other hand, imposes upon the railroad company the duty of using every practicable agency consistent with the operation of its trains, to give due warning of their approach; Rockford, R. I. & St. L. R. Co. v. Hillmer, 72 Ill. 235; Western & A. R. Co. v. King, 70 Ga. 261; Indianapolis & V. R. R. Co. v. McLin, 82 Ind. 435; Louisville, C. & L. R. Co. v. Goetz, 79 Ky. 442, 42 Am. Rep. 227; Baltimore & O. R. Co. v. Owings, 65 Md. 502, 5 Atl. 329; Weber v. R. Co., 58 N. Y. 451; Kay v. R. Co., 65 Pa. 269, 3 Am. Rep. 628. Thus, the whistle must be sounded on approaching a crossing; Grand Trunk Ry. Co. v. Ives, 144 U. S. 408, 12 Sup. Ct. 679, 36 L. Ed. 485; Hinkle v. R. Co., 109 N. C. 472, 13 S. E. 884, 26 Am. St. Rep. 581; Reeves v. R. Co., 30 Pa. 454, 72 Am. Dec. 713; Baltimore & O. R. Co. v. Owings, 65 Md. 502, 5 Atl. 329; and the better view is that watchmen should be stationed at every much-used crossing; Grand Trunk Ry. Co. v. Ives, 144 U. S. 408, 12 Sup. Ct. 679, 36 L. Ed. 485. But this rule is not uniformly held; and some courts have decided that the railroad company, unless required by statute, is under no obligation to give warning; Brown v. R. Co., 22 Minn. 165; Favor v. R. Corp., 114 Mass. 350, 19 Am. Rep. 364. This duty is now, however, generally prescribed by statute; and a failure to discharge it is in such a case always evidence of negligence, though not conclusive; Barber v. R. Co., 34 S. C. 444, 13 S. E. 630; Railway Co. v. Howard, 90 Tenn. 144, 19 S. W. 116; Augusta & S. R. Co. v. McElmurry, 24 Ga. 75; Hanlon v. R. Co., 129 Mass. 310; Funston v. Ry. Co., 61 Ia. 452, 16 N. W. 518; Atlanta & W. P. R. v. Wyly, 65 Ga. 120; Lewis v. R. Co., 123 N. Y. 496, 26 N. E. 357; Nash v. R. Co., 125 N. Y. 715, 26 N. E. 266; Hinkle v. R. Co., 109 N. C. 472, 13 S. E. 884, 26 Am. St. Rep. 581; Clark v. R. Co., 64 N. H. 323, 10 Atl. 676.

The railroad company is not alone bound to the exercise of care in approaching a crossing. A traveller who intends to cross is also bound to use ordinary prudence, by which is to be understood such as is fairly commensurate with the risk. He must therefore, look for an approaching train, if he has a fair view of the track; and if his view is obstructed, he must also listen. If he does not do so, and is injured, he cannot recover; but if he does, and is nevertheless injured by the negligence of the company, the latter is liable to him; Wabash, St. L. & P. Ry. Co. v. Wallace, 110 Ill. 114; Lang v. Holiday Creek R. & Coal Min. Co., 49 Ia. 469; Murray v. R. Co., 31 La. Ann. 490; Cincinnati, H. & I. Ry. Co. v. Duncan, 143 Ind. 524, 42 N. E. 37; Frech v. R. Co., 39 Md. 574; Wright v. R. Co., 129 Mass. 440; Carney v. Ry. Co., 46 Minn. 220, 48 N. W. 912; Pennsylvania R. Co. v. Righter, 42 N. J. L. 180; Haas v. Ry. Co., 41 Wis. 44. It is not necessary to leave to the jury whether a prudent man would look and listen before attempting to cross a railroad track. It is the duty of the court to declare that a failure to do so is negligence; Pyle v. Clark, 75 Fed. 644; it is a conclusion of law; St. Louis, I. M. & S. Ry. Co. v. Martin, 61 Ark. 549, 33 S. W. 1070; Baltimore & O. R. Co. v. Talmage, 15 Ind. App. 203, 43 N. E. 1019; Philadelphia & R. R. Co. v. Peebles, 67 Fed. 591, 14 C. C. A. 555; Horn v. R. Co., 54 Fed. 301, 4 C. C. A. 346.

One approaching a grade crossing must look and listen; this rule is elementary; Northern Pac. R. Co. v. Freeman, 174 U. S. 379, 19 Sup. Ct. 763, 43 L. Ed. 1014; he must exercise all his faculties of sight and hearing at such short distance as will be effectual; Chicago Great Western R. Co. v. Smith, 141 Fed. 930, 73 C. C. A. 164.

One, who, on approaching a double-track railroad, looked to the north, and seeing no train, concentrated his attention on a switch-engine on the nearer track for a minute and a half, and then, without looking again to the north, started across and was struck by a train coming from that direction on the further track, was held guilty of negligence; Pyle v. Clark, 75 Fed. 644. See Baltimore & O. R. Co. v. Griffith, 159 U. S. 603, 16 Sup. Ct. 105, 40 L. Ed. 274; Baltimore & Potomac R. Co. v. Carrington, 3 App. D. C. 101; New York, N. H. & H. R. Co. v. Blessing, 67 Fed. 277, 14 C. C. A. 394. It is held negligence for a traveller, after waiting for a train to pass on the near track, to start across behind it without waiting until it had passed far enough to enable him to see a train approaching from the opposite direction on another track; Stowell v. Erie R. Co., 98 Fed. 520, 39 C. C. A. 145; Delaware & H. Co. v. Flannely, 172 Fed. 328, 97 C. C. A. 112; Fletcher v. R. Co., 149 Mass. 127, 21 N. E. 302, 3 L. R. A. 743; Marty v. R. Co., 38 Minn. 108, 35 N. W. 670; Morrow v. R. Co., 146 N. C. 14, 59 S. E. 158; Hughes v. Canal Co., 176 Pa. 254, 35 Atl. 190; Wallenburg v. R. Co., 86 Neb. 642, 126 N. W. 289, 37 L. R. A. (N. S.) 135 and note. It is held in Pennsylvania that a traveller is required to stop, look, and listen for an approaching train; Pennsylvania R. Co. v. Beale, 73 Pa. 504, 13 Am. Rep. 753; Pennsylvania R. Co. v. Fortney, 90 Pa. 323; Philadelphia & Reading R. Co. v. Boyer, 97 Pa. 91; Reading & Columbia R. Co. v. Ritchie, 102 Pa. 425. But this rule does not prevail in other courts, and it has been said that without relaxing the rule just stated, "yet when the facts are not clear and simple, and where the existence of contributory negligence depends upon inferences to be drawn from the evidence, the question must go to the jury for decision;" Davidson v. R. Co., 179 Pa. 227, 36 Atl. 291. In Pennsylvania, if the view of the track is obstructed, a traveler should get down from his vehicle and go forward to a point where he can see; Pennsylvania R. Co. v. Beale, 73 Pa. 504, 13 Am. Rep. 753; Central R. Co. v. Feller, 84 Pa. 226; Kinter v. R. Co., 204 Pa. 497, 54 Atl. 276, 93 Am. St. Rep. 795; Maniewicz v. R. Co., 214 Pa. 386, 63 Atl. 604; Bistider v. R. Co., 224 Pa. 615, 73 Atl. 940. But in other jurisdictions no such duty is imposed upon the traveler; Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Bryant, 141 Ala. 292, 37 South. 370; Vance v. R. Co., 9 Cal. App. 20, 98 Pac. 41; Indianapolis & G. Rapid Transit Co. v. Haines, 33 Ind. App. 64, 69 N. E. 187; Kelly v. R. Co., 88 Mo. 534; Hinkle v. R. Co., 109 N. C. 472, 13 S. E. 884, 26 Am. St. Rep. 581.

There are three well-recognized exceptions to the rule which requires a traveller to look and listen for approaching trains. These are thus classified in Ormsbee v. R. Co., 14 R. I. 102, 51 Am. Rep. 354: (1) When the view of the track is obstructed, and hence the injured party, not being able to see, is obliged to act upon his judgment at the time; Baltimore & O. R. Co. v. Griffith, 159 U. S. 603, 16 Sup. Ct. 105, 40 L. Ed. 274; L. R. 3 C. P. 368; 3 App. Cas. 1155; Webb v. R. Co., 57 Me. 117; Craig v. R. Co., 118 Mass. 431; Pennsylvania R. Co. v. Ogier, 35 Pa. 60, 78 Am. Dec. 322; (2) where the injured person is a passenger going to, or alighting from, a train, under the implied invitation and assurance of the company that he may cross the track in safety; Wheelock v. R. Co., 105 Mass. 203; Klein v. Jewett, 26 N. J. Eq. 474; Brassell v. R. Co., 84 N. Y. 241; and (3) when the direct act of some agent of the company has put the person off his guard and induced him to cross the track without precautions; e. g. when the flagman beckons to him to cross; Spencer v. R. Co., 29 Ia. 55; Sweeny v. R. Co., 10 Allen (Mass.) 368, 87 Am. Dec. 644; Newson v. R. Co., 29 N. Y. 383. To these may be added cases where the traveller (as might happen to a stranger on a dark night) is ignorant of the nearness of the railroad, and when the driver of a horse, which becomes suddenly frightened, is obliged to choose between the risk of an upset or a collision. See Patterson, Ry. Acc. L. §§ 173-183, where the cases on the subject of contributory negligence at grade-crossings are collected.

Where there are permanent obstructions to sight that would make danger invisible, and a transient noise that would make it inaudible, it is held negligence to go forward at once from a place of safety to a place of possible danger, without waiting for hearing to become effective; Central R. Co. of New Jersey v. Smalley, 61 N. J. L. 277, 39 Atl. 695. But the duty to stop before crossing has not been held to arise except where there are casual noises or temporary obstructions to the view; Merkle v. R. Co., 49 N. J. L. 473, 9 Atl. 680; Keyley v. R. Co., 64 N. J. L. 355, 45 Atl. 811; Dickinson v. R. Co., 81 N. J. L. 464, 81 Atl. 104, 37 L. R. A. (N. S.) 150. It is negligence per se to attempt to cross tracks hidden by the smoke of a passing train, without waiting for a clear view; Hovenden v. R. Co., 180 Pa. 244, 36 Atl. 731; Heaney v. R. Co., 112 N. Y. 122, 19 N. E. 422; West Jersey R. Co. v. Ewan, 55 N. J. L. 574, 27 Atl. 1064.

It is also the general rule outside of Pennsylvania, that if the company maintains safety-gates at a crossing, which are closed at the approach of a train, a traveller who sees them standing open has the right to act upon the implied invitation to cross; and may do so without looking and listening; Chicago & N. W. Ry. Co. v. Whitton's Adm'r, 13 Wall. (U. S.) 270, 20 L. Ed. 571; Hinckley v. R. Co., 120 Mass. 257; Abbott v. Ry. Co., 30 Minn. 482, 16 N. W. 266; Bunting v. R. Co., 14 Nev. 351; Cohen v. R. Co., 14 Nev. 376; Kellogg v. R. Co., 79 N. Y. 72; Marietta & C. R. Co. v. Picklesley, 24 Ohio St. 654; Ellert v. R. Co., 48 Wis. 606, 4 N.

W. 769. But it is held that failure to give the usual signals does not exempt traveller from looking and listening; Cooper v. R. Co., 140 N. C. 209, 52 S. E. 932, 3 L. R. A. (N. S.) 391 and note, 6 Ann. Cas. 71; Schofield v. Ry. Co., 114 U. S. 615, 5 Sup. Ct. 1125, 29 L. Ed. 224; or a failure to give proper and statutory signals; Rodrian v. R. Co., 125 N. Y. 526, 26 N. E. 741; Johnson's Adm'r v. Ry. Co., 91 Va. 171, 21 S. E. 238; contra, Turner v. Ft. Worth & D. C. Ry. Co. (Tex.), 30 S. W. 253; Cahill v. Ry. Co., 92 Ky. 345, 18 S. W. 2. The signal of a flagman to cross will not relieve one from the duty to look and listen before driving upon a railroad crossing; Union Pac. R. Co. v. Rosewater, 157 Fed. 168, 84 C. C. A. 616, 15 L. R. A. (N. S.) 803, 13 Ann. Cas. 851; Lake Shore & M. S. Ry. Co. v. Frantz, 127 Pa. 297, 18 Atl. 22, 4 L. R. A. 389; Berry v. R. Co., 48 N. J. L. 141, 4 Atl. 303; Ellis v. R. R., 169 Mass. 600, 48 N. E. 839. But other cases hold that one may rely wholly upon the invitation of the flagman or the open gate; Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Webb, 90 Ala. 185, 8 South. 518, 11 L. R. A. 674; Chicago, R. I. & P. Ry. Co. v. Clough, 134 Ill. 586, 25 N. E. 664, 29 N. E. 184.

The fact that one's sight or hearing is defective does not exonerate him from the exercise of due care, but rather raises the standard to be observed by him. The employes of the company have a right to presume that his sight and hearing are normal; and he must observe all the added precautions necessary to make him as safe as if his faculties were normal. If he does not, he is guilty of contributory negligence; Laicher v. R. Co., 28 La. Ann. 320; Purl v. Ry. Co., 72 Mo. 168; Cogswell v. R. Co., 6 Or. 417. Nor will deafness; Smith's Adm'r v. Ry. Co., 146 Ky. 568, 142 S. W. 1047, 41 L. R. A. (N. S.) 193; Williams v. Ry. Co., 139 Ia. 552, 117 N. W. 956; Birmingham Ry. & El. Co. v. Bowers, 110 Ala. 328, 20 South. 345; Mitchell v. Ry. Co., 153 N. C. 116, 68 S. E. 1059; Schmidt v. Ry. Co., 191 Mo. 215, 90 S. W. 136, 3 L. R. A. (N. S.) 196; Hall v. Ry. Co., 168 Mass. 461, 47 N. E. 124. See Smith's Adm'r v. Ry. Co., 41 L. R. A. (N. S.) 193 note; nor haste and mental preoccupation; Riedel v. Traction Co., 63 W. Va. 522, 61 S. E. 821, 16 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1123.

Generally the duty to look before crossing a railroad track is not discharged by looking only once. It is a continuing duty; Wallenburg v. Ry. Co., 37 L. R. A. (N. S.) 135 n., citing Kelsay v. Ry. Co., 129 Mo. 362, 30 S. W. 339; Gangawer v. R. Co., 168 Pa. 265, 32 Atl. 21; Walsh v. R. Co., 222 Pa. 162, 70 Atl. 1088; Southern Ry. Co. v. Jones, 106 Va. 412, 56 S. E. 155; which must be observed until danger is passed; Griffie v. Ry. Co., 80 Ark. 186, 96 S. W. 750; Doherty v. Ry. Co., 118 Mich. 209, 76 N. W. 377, 80 N. W. 36; unless there are exculpatory circumstances; St. Louis, I. M. & S. Ry. Co. v. Hitt, 76 Ark. 224, 88 S. W. 911; Stevens v. Ry. Co., 67 Mo. App. 356.

That the team of the person crossing is beyond the control of the driver is held an excuse for his failure to look and listen and if necessary to stop; Salles v. Ry. Co., 138 Wis. 498, 120 N. W. 232, 21 L. R. A. (N. S.) 415, 16 Ann. Cas. 952; Southern Ry. Co. v. Hobbs, 151 Ala. 335, 43 South. 844. He is not necessarily negligent because he did not look at the most advantageous point; Wallenburg v. Ry. Co., 86 Neb. 642, 126 N. W. 289, 37 L. R. A. (N. S.) 135.

As to the power of the states to require railroad companies to change, alter, or abolish grade crossings, see 4 Thomp. Corp. § 5505; POLICE POWER. As to signals at crossings; Welsch v. R. Co., 72 Mo. 451, 37 Am. Rep. 443; as to care at crossings; Louisville, etc., R. R. Co. v. Com., 13 Bush. (Ky.) 388, 26 Am. Rep. 207.

In the absence of evidence to the contrary, there is a presumption that one who was killed while crossing a railroad track at night stopped, looked and listened before crossing; Baltimore & P. R. Co. v. Landrigan, 191 U. S. 461, 24 Sup. Ct. 137, 48 L. Ed. 262.

See RAILROAD; NEGLIGENCE.

GRADUATE. One who has taken a degree in a college or university. It is said to be a word of elastic meaning, involving infinite variety in the methods and standards of graduation which may be adopted; State v. Ins. Co., 40 La. Ann. 463, 4 South. 504.

GRADUS (Lat. a step). A measure of space. Vicat, Voc. Jur. A degree of relationship (distancia cognatorum). Heineccius, Elem. Jur. Civ. § 153; Bract. fol. 134, 374; Fleta, lib. 6, c. 2, § 1, lib. 4, c. 17, § 4.

A step or degree generally; e. g. gradus honorum, degrees of honor. Vicat, Voc. Jur. A pulpit; a year; a generation. Du Cange.

A port; any place where a vessel can be brought to land. Du Cange.

GRAFFER (Fr. greffier, a clerk, or prothonotary). A notary or scrivener. See stat. 5 Hen. VIII. c. 1.

GRAFFIO. A baron, inferior to a count. 1 Marten, Anecd. Collect. 13. A fiscal judge. An advocate. Gregor. Turon. l. 1, de Mirac. c. 33; Spelman, Gloss.; Cowell. For various derivations, see Du Cange.

GRAFFIUM. A register; a lieger-book or cartulary of deeds and evidences. 1 Annal. Eccles. Menevensio, apud Angl. Sax. 653.

GRAFT. In Equity. A term used to designate the right of a mortgagee in premises to which the mortgagor at the time of making the mortgage had an imperfect title, but afterwards obtained a good title. In this case the new title is considered a graft into the old stock, enuring to the benefit of the mortgagee, and arising in consideration of the former title; 1 Ball & B. 40, 46, 57; 1 Pow. Mort. 190. See Porter v. Hill, 9 Mass. 34. "It is well settled that when a mortgage of land is made, purporting to convey the land in fee, any title afterward acquired by the mortgagor will feed the mortgage and enure to the benefit of the mortgagee." 1 Pingree, Mort. § 304; Clark v. Baker, 14 Cal. 612, 76 Am. Dec. 449; Sherman v. McCarthy, 57 Cal. 507; Orr v. Stewart, 67 Cal. 275, 7 Pac. 693. And this is so where the title was in the government when the mortgage was made and a patent afterwards issued to the mortgagor; 1 Pingree, Mort. § 304; Spiess v. Neuberger, 71 Wis. 279, 37 N. W. 417, 5 Am. St. Rep. 211. See Hughes v. U. S., 4 Wall. (U. S.) 232, 18 L. Ed. 303; French v. Spencer, 21 How. (U. S.) 228, 16 L. Ed. 97. But it is the prevailing doctrine that in the absence of statutory enactment there must be a covenant of warranty or something tantamount to it, to give this effect to the mortgage; Gray v. Franks, 86 Mich. 382, 49 N. W. 130; Howze v. Dew, 90 Ala. 178, 7 South. 239, 24 Am. St. Rep. 783; Kline v. Ragland, 47 Ark. 111, 14 S. W. 474. See 1 Pingree, Mort. §§ 696-706. The purchase of a paramount title by a purchaser from the mortgagor does not inure to the benefit of the mortgagee; id. § 1012; and in some cases the mortgagee may be estopped to assert the after-acquired title of the mortgagor against an innocent purchaser; id.; Calder v. Chapman, 52 Pa. 359, 91 Am. Dec. 163. The same principle has been obtained by legislative enactment in Louisiana. If a person contracting an obligation towards another, says the Civil Code, art. 3271, grants a mortgage on property of which he is not then the owner, this mortgage shall be valid if the debtor should ever require the ownership of the property, by whatever right. This principle is also adopted by statute in other states, as Arkansas; Mansf. Dig. § 642; and California; Civ. Code § 2930. See MORTGAGE.

GRAIN. The twenty-fourth part of a pennyweight.

For scientific purposes the grain only is used, and sets of weights are constructed in decimal progression, from ten thousand grains to one-hundredth of a grain.

Wheat, rye, barley, or Indian corn sown in the ground. It may include millet and oats; Holland v. State, 34 Ga. 455; Smith v. Clayton, 29 N. J. L. 357; flaxseed; Hewitt v. Ins. Co., 55 Ia. 323, 7 N. W. 596, 39 Am. Rep. 174; peas; State v. Williams, 2 Strobb. (S. C.) 474; sugar cane seed; Holland v. State, 34 Ga. 455. A statute requiring all persons who deal in grain on commission to secure a license and give a bond for the protection of the public is valid; State v. Edwards, 94 Minn. 225, 102 N. W. 697, 69 L. R. A. 667; State v. Brass, 2 N. D. 482, 52 N. W. 408; American Live Stock Com. Co. v.

GRAINAGE. In English Law. The name of an ancient duty collected in London, consisting of one-twentieth part of the salt imported into that city.

GRAMME. The French unit of weight. The gramme is the weight of a cubic centimetre of distilled water at the temperature of 4° C. It is equal to 15.4341 grains troy, or 5.6481 drachms avoirdupois.

GRAND ASSIZE. A method of trial, instituted by Henry II., by way of alternative offered to the choice of the tenant or defendant in a writ of right, instead of trial by battle. For this purpose a writ de magna assize eligenda issued to choose four knights from the county and twelve from the vicinage. If some or all of the sixteen differed or were ignorant of the facts, more were summoned until there were twelve who could agree on a verdict. 1 Holdsw. Hist. E. L. 150. Abolished in 1834. The latest case is in 1 Bingh. N. C. 597; 5 id. 161.

"It is abundantly clear that, whatever may have been the practice at a later time, the grand assize was a body of twelve, not of sixteen, knights; in other words, the four electors took no part in the verdict." 2 Poll. & Maitl. 618, n. 3.

Although the jury were theoretically to speak only about matter of fact, the principle was long latent and tacit. "The recognitors in a grand assize were called upon to say whether the demandant had greater right than the tenant, and in so doing they had an opportunity of giving effect of law. . . . We must not suppose that in such a case they followed the ruling of the justices;" id. 627.

The assize of novel disseisin, the requirement of a royal writ to compel a man to answer for his free tenement, and the grand assize, are said to have been fashioned at the same time to uphold three principles founded upon the idea of the sacredness of a freehold and intended to assure the royal protection of possession. "No one is to be disseised of his free tenement unjustly and without a judgment, . . . (nor) even by a judgment unless he has been summoned to answer by a royal writ; no one is to be forced to defend his seisin of a free tenement by battle. The ordinance that instituted the grand assize was a one-sided measure, a protection of possessors. The claimant had to offer battle; the possessor, if he pleased, might refuse battle and put himself upon the grand assize;" 1 id. 126. As to its place in the history of possessory action, see 2 id. 62.

Its date was probably during the first years of Henry II., but it is uncertain. Mrs. J. R. Green, in 1 Sel. Essays in Anglo-Amer. L. H. 125.

GRAND BILL OF SALE. In English Law. The name of an instrument used for the transfer of a ship while she is at sea. Thurset v. Jenkins, 7 Mart. O. S. (La.) 318, 12 Am. Dec. 508; 3 Kent 133.

GRAND CAPE. In English Law. A writ judicial which lieth when a man has brought a præcipe quod reddat, of a thing that toucheth plea of lands, and the tenant makes default on the day given him in the writ original, then this writ shall go for the king, to take the land into the king's hands, and if he comes not at the day given him by the grand cape, he has lost his lands. Old N. B. fol. 161, 162; Regist. Judic. fol. 2 b; Brac. lib. 5, tr. 3, cap. 1, nu. 4, 5, 6. So called because its Latin form began with the word cape, "take thou," and because it had more words than the petit cape, or because petit cape summons to answer for default only. Petit cape issues after appearance to the original writ, grand magnum cape before. These writs have long been abolished. In Glanvill's day three successive summons preceded the cape. See 2 Poll. & Maitl. 590.

GRAND COUTUMIER. Two collections of laws bore this title. One, also called the Coutumier of France, is a collection of the customs, usages, and forms of practice which had been used from time immemorial in France; the other, called the Coutumier de Normandie (which indeed, with some alterations, made a part of the former), was composed, about 14 Henry III. (1229), and is a collection of the Norman laws, not as they stood at the conquest of England, but some time afterwards, and contains many provisions probably borrowed from the old English or Saxon laws. Hale, Hist. Com. Law c. 6. The work was reprinted in 1881 with notes by William L. De Gruchy. The Channel Islands are still for the most part governed by the ducal customs of Normandy; 1 Steph. Com. 61.

GRAND DAYS. In English Practice. Those days in the term which are solemnly kept in the inns of court and chancery, viz.: Candlemas-day in Hilary Term, Ascension-day in Easter Term, St. John the Baptist's day in Trinity Term, and All Saints' day in Michaelmas Term, which are dies non juridici, or no days in court, and are set apart for festivity. Jacob, Law Dic.

All this is now altered: the grand days, which are different for each term of court, are those days in each term in which a more splendid dinner than ordinary is provided in the hall. Moz. & W.

GRAND DISTRESS (Lat. magna districtio). An ancient kind of distress, more extensive than the writs of grand and petit cape, extending to all the goods and chattels of the party distrained within the county. T. L.; Cowell. The writ lay in real actions, and was so called on account of its quality and great extent. It lay in two cases, either when the tenant or defendant was attached, and did not appear, but made default; or when the tenant or defendant had once appeared, and afterwards made default. Fleta lib. 2, c. 69; Cowell; Holthouse.

GRAND JURY. A body of men, consisting at common law of not less than twelve nor more than twenty-four, respectively returned by the sheriff of every county to every session of the peace,oyer and terminer and general gaol delivery, to whom indictments are preferred. 4 Bla. Com. 302; 1 Chitty, Cr. Law 310, 311; 1 Jur. Soc. Papers; English v. State, 31 Fla. 340, 356, 12 South. 689.

There is reason to believe that this institution existed among the Saxons; Crabb, Eng. Law 35. By the constitution of Clarendon, enacted 10 Hen. II. (A. D. 1164), it is provided that "If such men were suspected whom none wished or dared to accuse, the sheriff, being thereto required by the bishop, should swear twelve men of the neighborhood, or village, to declare the truth" respecting such supposed crime, the jurors being summoned as witnesses or accusers rather than judges. It seems to be pretty certain that this statute either established grand juries, if this institution did not exist before, or reorganized them if they already existed; 1 Spence, Eq. Jur. 63. But a later work (passing over the question of the relation of the old Frankish inquest to the initiation of criminal proceedings by presentment by indictment) says of the accusing jury of the time of Henry II: "The ancestors of our 'grand jurors' are from the first neither exactly accusers, nor exactly witnesses; they are to give voice to common repute." 2 Poll. & Maitl. 639; 1 id. 130; 2 id. 644; and the conclusion reached is, "a great deal yet remained to be done before that process of indictment by a 'grand jury' and trial by a 'petty jury' with which we are all familiar would have been established. The details of this process will never be known until large piles of records have been systematically perused. This task we must leave for the historian of the fourteenth century. Apparently the change was intimately connected with the discontinuance of those cumbrous old eyres which brought 'the whole county' and every hundred and vill in it before the eyes of the justices;" 2 id. 646.

Organization. Where the common law prevails, unmodified by statutory or constitutional provisions, the law requires that twenty-four citizens shall be summoned to attend as grand jurors; but in practice not more than twenty-three are sworn, because of the inconvenience which might arise of having twelve, who are sufficient to find a true bill, opposed to another twelve who might be against it; 2 Hale, Pl. Cr. 161; 1 Bish. Cr. Proc. 854; 6 Ad. & El. 236; People v. King, 2 Caines (N. Y.) 98. There is no distinction between the qualification of grand and petit jurors; State v. Williams, 35 S. C. 344, 14 S. E. 819.

The number is a matter of local regulation, and while in the main the common-law system has been continued, there is in this country a growing disposition to reduce the number of jurors by statute where it was practicable, and by constitutional provision where that was held to be necessary. It is beyond the present purpose to state in detail all the changes, or to do more than to indicate the existence of a prevailing tendency to simplify the proceedings, which, however, is coupled with a great respect for the grand jury as one of the common-law institutions protected by constitutional guaranty.

The question has been much discussed whether in states having constitutional provisions for indictment by a grand jury, a legislative change in the number required to find an indictment at common law is permissible. In several states this question has been answered in the negative where the constitutional provision specified "indictment by grand jury;" at least so far as to forbid a change making less than twelve sufficient to find an indictment; State v. Barker, 107 N. C. 913, 12 S. E. 115, 10 L. R. A. 50; Donald v. State, 31 Fla. 255, 12 South. 695; English v. State, 31 Fla. 340, 12 South. 689; Brucker v. State, 16 Wis. 334. See Thurman v. State, 25 Ga. 220. But the provision of the federal constitution securing the "due process of law" does not prevent the states from varying the common-law rule as to a grand jury; Hausenfluck v. Com., 85 Va. 702, 8 S. E. 683; Parker v. People, 13 Colo. 155, 21 Pac. 1120, 4 L. R. A. 803; or even from dispensing with it; Hurtado v. California, 110 U. S. 516, 4 Sup. Ct. 111, 292, 28 L. Ed. 232. Where the state constitution prescribes a number it is obligatory; Ex parte Reynolds, 35 Tex. Cr. R. 437, 34 S. W. 120, 60 Am. St. Rep. 54; but where the grand jury consisted of less than the required number but as many jurors concurred as were necessary to find an indictment it was sufficient; State v. Belvel, 89 Ia. 405, 56 N. W. 545, 27 L. R. A. 846; and where the requisite number do concur, the fact that the panel was not full, either by reason of the discharge, or improper excusing of one or more members, or any like cause, does not invalidate an indictment; Drake v. State, 25 Tex. App. 293, 7 S. W. 868; Jackson v. State, 25 Tex. App. 314, 7 S. W. 872; State v. Billings, 77 Ia. 417, 42 N. W. 456; U. S. v. Belvin, 46 Fed. 381; Williams v. State, 69 Ga. 11; State v. Ward, 60 Vt. 142, 14 Atl. 187; Beasley v. People, 89 Ill. 571; State v. Fee, 19 Wis. 563; Blevins v. State, 68 Ala. 92. A discharge of a juror is presumed to be proper; Wallis v. State, 54 Ark. 611, 16 S. W. 821; State v. Wingate, 4 Ind. 193; but if improper and void, it does not affect the legal organization; Smith v. State, 19 Tex. App. 95. It will be presumed that a grand jury was legally organized; State v. Dilworth, 34 La. Ann. 216; Wilson v. People, 3 Colo. 325; and where the court has power to fill up the panel it will be presumed to have been rightly done; Burrell v. State, 129 Ind. 290, 28 N. E. 699. It has been held that when, on calling the grand jury, some of them fail to appear, the court may orally direct the sheriff to fill the vacancy without issuing a precept; State v. Miller, 53 Ia. 84, 4 N. W. 838; id., 53 Ia. 154, 4 N. W. 900; in other states a new venire facias is necessary; Pouch v. State, 63 Ala. 163; State v. Chase, 20 N. J. L. 218. The power to excuse grand jurors confers upon the court, by implication, the power to fill the vacancy; Burrell v. State, 129 Ind. 290, 28 N. E. 699. If more are present than the statute permits the indictment is bad; Box v. State, 34 Miss. 614; U. S. v.

Reynolds, 1 Utah, 226; Downs v. Com., 92 Ky. 605, 18 S. W. 526; Com. v. Salter, 2 Pears. (Pa.) 461; Com. v. Leisenring, 2 Pears. (Pa.) 466. A constitutional provision fixing the number of the panel and prescribing how many must concur is held to be self-executing; Sanders v. Com. (Ky.) 18 S. W. 528; State v. Ah Jim, 9 Mont. 167, 23 Pac. 76.

The number of grand jurors varies in different states, as also the number or proportion required for concurrence. In Utah fifteen grand jurors were held sufficient; Reynolds v. U. S., 98 U. S. 145, 25 L. Ed. 244; and see People v. Green, 1 Utah 11. When twenty-three were provided for, the provision was held to be directory merely; Com. v. Wood, 2 Cush. (Mass.) 149.

Objections. An objection must be properly made as to time and manner; In re Wilson, 140 U. S. 575, 11 Sup. Ct. 870, 35 L. Ed. 513; Com. v. Windish, 176 Pa. 167, 34 Atl. 1019; State v. Scarborough, 55 Md. 345; Young v. State, 6 Ohio, 435; State v. Pate, 67 Mo. 488; 2 Ad. & El. 236; 1 Nev. & P. 187. A person summoned to testify before the grand jury de facto cannot question its organization; Ex parte Haymond, 91 Cal. 545, 27 Pac. 859. An objection to the competency of a grand juror must be raised before the general issue; State v. Easter, 30 Ohio St. 542, 27 Am. Rep. 478; Whart. Cr. Pl. 350. It has been held that an objection comes too late after the jury has been empanelled and sworn; Com. v. Smith, 9 Mass. 110; People v. Jewett, 3 Wend. (N. Y.) 314; but on this point the authorities are conflicting; see contra, State v. Davis, 12 R. I. 492, 34 Am. Rep. 704, n. The proper method of taking objection to the organization of a grand jury is by plea in abatement; Falk v. Reese, 19 Ala. 240; Henning v. State, 106 Ind. 386, 6 N. E. 803, 7 N. E. 4, 55 Am. Rep. 756; Brown v. State, 13 Ark. 96; and not by demurrer; Collier v. State, 2 Stew. (Ala.) 388; Fisher v. U. S., 1 Okl. 252, 31 Pac. 195; or motion to quash; State v. Haywood, 73 N. C. 437; Johnson v. Ins. Co., 3 Wyo. 140, 6 Pac. 729; or motion in arrest of judgment; State v. Pile, 5 Ala. 72; or collaterally on habeas corpus; Ex parte Waris, 28 Fla. 371, 9 South. 718; State v. Noyes, 87 Wis. 340, 58 N. W. 386, 27 L. R. A. 776, 41 Am. St. Rep. 45. A plea in abatement must specify the objection with particularity; State v. Holcomb, 86 Mo. 371; Tilley v. Commonwealth, 89 Va. 136, 15 S. E. 526; Newman v. State, 14 Wis. 394; Brennan v. People, 15 Ill. 511; State v. Skinner, 34 Kan. 256, 8 Pac. 420; Baldwin v. State, 12 Neb. 61, 10 N. W. 463. If a method of objection is prescribed by a statute, it must be followed strictly; People v. Hooghkirk, 96 N. Y. 149; Boulo v. State, 51 Ala. 18; Johnson v. State, 33 Tex. 570; Williams v. State, 86 Ind. 400.

Federal courts may, on their own motion, enforce other objections to grand jurors than those prescribed by state statute; U. S. v. Jones, 69 Fed. 973.

See an elaborate note upon the organization of grand jury in which are collected the cases relating to defects of every kind in the summoning, organization, and proceedings of grand jury; 27 L. R. A. 776; and one on the qualification of grand jurors; 28 id. 195; as to the number of grand jurors necessary or proper to act and the constitutional and statutory provisions relating thereto in states which have changed the common-law rule, see 27 id. 846; and as to the number necessary to concur in finding an indictment; 28 id. 33.

Proceedings. Being called into the jury-box, they are usually permitted to select a foreman, whom the court appoints; but the court may exercise the right to nominate one for them.

The foreman then takes the following oath or affirmation, namely: "You, A. B., as foreman of this inquest for the body of the —, of —, do swear (or affirm) that you will diligently inquire, and true presentment make of all such articles matters, and things as shall be given you in charge, or otherwise come to your knowledge, touching the present service; the commonwealth's counsel, your fellows', and your own, you shall keep secret; you shall present no one for envy, hatred, or malice; nor shall you leave any one unpresented for fear, favor, affection, hope of reward or gain, but shall present all things truly, as they come to your knowledge, according to the best of your understanding. So help you God." It will be perceived that this oath contains the substance of the duties of the grand jury. The foreman having been sworn or affirmed, the other grand jurors are sworn or affirmed according to this formula: "You and each of you do swear (or affirm) that the same oath (or affirmation) which your foreman has taken on his part, you and every one of you shall well and truly observe on your part." In Hale v. Henkel, 201 U. S. 43, 26 Sup. Ct. 370, 50 L. Ed. 652, Brown, J., quoted from the grand juror's oath as given in 8 How. St. Tr. 759. He refers to the words "as of all other matters and things as shall come to your knowledge touching these present services," etc., as showing the competency of the grand jury to act solely on its own volition. It was there held that the grand jury might proceed either upon their own knowledge or upon the examination of witnesses without a previous presentment or formal indictment being submitted to them. It was also held that the examination of a witness before a grand jury is a "proceeding" within the meaning of the proviso of the general appropriation act of 1903, that no person shall be prosecuted on account of anything which he may testify in any proceeding under the anti-trust law. The authorities are collected at large in the opinion and arguments.

One may be compelled to answer questions before a grand jury though there be no specific charge pending; Wilson v. U. S., 221 U. S. 361, 31 Sup. Ct. 538, 55 L. Ed. 771, Ann. Cas. 1912D, 558.

In Massachusetts it is not necessary to show that those affirming had conscientious scruples about taking the oath; Com. v. Fisher, 7 Gray (Mass.) 492; Com. v. Smith, 9 Mass. 107; but in New Jersey it was originally held that it would be necessary to show this or the indictment would be invalid; State v. Rockafellow, 6 N. J. L. 332; but since then by the N. J. Crim. Code § 53, it is provided that objection to the indictment for form or substance shall be by demurrer or motion to quash before the jury are sworn in and not after, and an objection to affirmation not made as so provided will not avail.

On being sworn or affirmed, and having received the charge of the court, the grand jury are organized, and may proceed to transact the business which may be laid before them; 2 Burr. 1088; Bacon, Abr. Juries, A. See Pierce v. State, 12 Tex. 210. The grand jury constitute a regular body until discharged by the court, or by operation of law, as where they cannot continue, by virtue of an act of assembly, beyond a certain day. But although they have been formally discharged by the court, if they have not separated, they may be called back and fresh bills be submitted to them; 9 C. & P. 43. When properly organized, in some states, it meets and adjourns upon its own motion, and it may lawfully proceed in the performance of its duties whether the court is in session or not, until the final adjournment of the court; Nealon v. People, 39 Ill. App. 481. In other states it is always discharged from time to time by the court, to which it reports at each session. The grand juries in the federal courts usually meet and adjourn on their own motion.

A charge to the grand jury delivered by Mr. Justice Field in the district of California is reported in 2 Sawy. 667, Fed. Cas. No. 18,255. The duties and functions of the grand jury are admirably stated and particularly the difference between those of grand jurors of the state courts and of the national courts; those of the state courts having very great inquisitorial powers conferred upon them by statute; those of the United States courts having no general authority of an inquisitorial character.

The absence of such a power in the federal statutes is attributed to the fact that the examination of books and accounts of the officers of the federal government is provided for by law or by executive regulation, and when upon such examination, an unsatisfactory condition is found the matter is brought before the grand jury by the proper authority.

Justice Field considers that the phrase in the oath discriminating subjects of inquiry which shall "otherwise come to your knowledge touching the present service" authorizes them to act upon their own knowledge or observations or evidence before them but not upon mere rumor or reports.

The jurisdiction of the grand jury is co-extensive with that of the court for which they inquire, both as to the offences triable there and the territory over which such court has jurisdiction.

The mode of doing business. The foreman acts as president, and the jury usually appoint one of their number to perform the duties of secretary. No records are to be kept of the acts of the grand jury, except for their own use, because their proceedings are to be secret. Bills of indictment against offenders are then supplied by the attorney-general, or other officer representing government. See Shattuck v. State, 11 Ind. 473; U. S. v. Reed, 2 Blatchf. 435, Fed. Cas. No. 16,134. On these bills are indorsed the names of the witnesses by whose testimony they are supported. The jury are also required to make true presentment of all such matters as have otherwise come to their knowledge. These presentments, which are technically so called, are, in practice, usually made at the close of the session of the grand jury, and include offences of which they had personal knowledge: they should name the authors of the offences, with a view to indictment. The witnesses in support of a bill are to be examined in all cases under oath, even when members of the jury itself testify,—as they may do.

When the number required by law concur in finding a true bill, the foreman must write on the back of the indictment, "A true bill," sign his name as foreman, and date the time of finding. On the contrary, where there is not sufficient evidence to authorize the finding of the bill, the jury return that they are ignorant whether the person accused committed the offence charged in the bill, which is expressed by the foreman indorsing on the bill, "Ignoramus," "Not a true bill," or similar words, signing his name as before, and dating the indorsement. The grand jury cannot find a bill, true for part, and false for part; 1 Russ. Cr., Sharsw. ed. 430.

A grand jury cannot indict without a previous prosecution before a magistrate; except in offences of public notoriety, such as are within their own knowledge, or are given them in charge by the court, or are sent to them by the prosecuting officer of the commonwealth; Whart. Cr. Pl. & Pr. § 338; McCullough v. Com., 67 Pa. 30.

As to the witnesses, and the power of the jury over them. The jury examine all the witnesses in support of the bill, or enough of them to satisfy themselves of the propriety of putting the accused on trial, but none in favor of the accused. The jury are the sole judges of the credit and confidence to which a witness before them is entitled. It is decided that when a witness, duly summoned, appears before the grand jury, but refuses to be sworn, and behaves in a disrespectful manner towards the jury, they may lawfully require the officer in attendance upon them to take the witness before the court, in order to obtain its aid and direction in the matter; Heard v. Pierce, 8 Cush. (Mass.) 338, 54 Am. Dec. 757; State v. Blocker, 14 Ala. 450. Such a refusal, it seems, is considered a contempt; State v. Blocker, 14 Ala. 450; the disobedience of this order of the court constituting the contempt; Wyatt v. People, 17 Colo. 252, 28 Pac. 961; but the governor of a state is exempt from the powers of subpœna, and this immunity extends to his official subordinates; Appeal of Hartrauft, 85 Pa. 433, 27 Am. Rep. 667. A person having knowledge of a crime has the right to go before the grand jury, and disclose his knowledge, without being summoned; State v. Stewart, 45 La. Ann. 1164, 14 South. 143.

As to the competency of evidence before grand jury see 28 L. R. A. 318, note; and as to the sufficiency of evidence to sustain indictment; 28 L. R. A. 324, note; as to improper influence or interference with a grand jury; 28 L. R. A. 367, note.

Of the secrecy to be observed. This extends to the vote given in any case, to the evidence delivered by witnesses, and to the communications of the jurors to each other. The disclosure of these facts, unless under the sanction of law, would render the imprudent juror who should make them public liable to punishment. Giving intelligence to a defendant that a bill has been found against him, to enable him to escape, is so obviously wrong that no one can for a moment doubt its being criminal. The grand juror who should be guilty of this offence might, upon conviction, be fined and imprisoned. One who stealthily listens to a grand jury while in the performance of their duties commits the offence of eavesdropping; State v. Pennington, 3 Head (Tenn.) 299, 75 Am. Dec. 771. The duration of the secrecy depends upon the particular circumstances of each case; Tindle v. Nichols, 20 Mo. 326. In a case, for example, where a witness swears to a fact in open court, on the trial, directly in opposition to what he swore before the grand jury, there can be no doubt that the injunction of secrecy, as far as regards this evidence, would be at an end, and the grand jurors might be sworn to testify what this witness swore to in the grand jury's room, in order that the witness might be prosecuted for perjury; 3 Russ. Cr., Sharsw. ed. 520; Low's Case, 4 Me. 439, 16 Am. Dec. 271; 1 Bish. Cr. Proc. 857; Com. v. Scowden, 92 Ky. 120, 17 S. W. 205; Izer v. State, 77 Md. 110, 26 Atl. 282; Com. v. Hill, 11 Cush. (Mass.) 137. A member of the grand jury may testify as to how the jury acquired knowledge of an alleged offence; Com. v. Green, 126 Pa. 531, 17 Atl. 878, 12 Am. St. Rep. 894; Com. v. McComb, 157 Pa. 611, 27 Atl. 794; but see contra, Imlay v. Rogers, 7 N. J. Law 347; 1 C. & K. 519. It has been held that the foreman of a grand jury may be called as a witness concerning an admission of gaming made by defendant when testifying before the grand jury concerning another offence, since the statute enjoining secrecy as to proceedings before the grand jury is intended only for the protection of the jurors and of the public; People v. Reggel, 8 Utah 21, 28 Pac. 955.

Grand jurors are held competent witnesses as to matters disclosed to them in the course of their duty as such; U. S. v. Charles, 2 Cra. C. C. 76, Fed. Cas. No. 14,786; Gordon v. Com., 92 Pa. 220, 37 Am. Rep. 672; to impeach a witness who testified differently before the grand jury; Com. v. Mead, 12 Gray (Mass.) 167, 71 Am. Dec. 741.

The minutes of what took place before the grand jury may be disclosed but not to show that the indictment was found upon insufficient evidence or no evidence, as that question is not open to review; Beavers v. Henkel, 194 U. S. 76, 24 Sup. Ct. 605, 48 L. Ed. 882.

A grand jury may without hearing witnesses return a second indictment against a person for the same offence charged in the first one for the purpose of correcting a formal description; Nordlinger v. U. S., 24 App. D. C. 406, 70 L. R. A. 227; Byers v. State, 63 Md. 207; Whiting v. State, 48 Ohio St. 220, 27 N. E. 96; Creek v. State, 24 Ind. 151.

Self-incriminating statements before a grand jury were admitted at the trial; Wisdom v. State, 42 Tex. Cr. R. 579, 61 S. W. 926; but this decision was based on the ground that a grand juror might testify to them without violating his secrets, which is said to be apparently well settled but not conclusive of the issue in that case; 15 Harv. L. Rev. 308.

A grand juror may be punished for contempt for disclosing testimony produced before it; In re Atwell, 140 Fed. 368; In re Summerhayes, 70 Fed. 769.

A grand juror is not competent to testify in a civil case as to the statements of a witness before the grand jury; Loveland v. Cooley, 59 Minn. 259, 61 N. W. 138. It is not error to reject evidence of grand jurors disclosing testimony given before the grand jury; Kennedy v. Holladay, 105 Mo. 24, 16 S. W. 688. Statements of the prosecuting officer as to what occurred in the grand jury room are inadmissible; State v. Johnson, 115 Mo. 480, 22 S. W. 463. The fact that a stenographer, at the request of the prosecuting attorney, attended before the grand jury and took the testimony of the witnesses, is, upon the weight of authority, no ground for quashing the indictment; Courtney v. State, 5 Ind. App. 356, 32 N. E. 335; State v. Bates, 148 Ind. 610, 48 N. E. 2; State v. Brewster, 70 Vt. 341, 40 Atl. 1037, 42 L. R. A. 444; U. S. v. Simmons, 46 Fed. 65; contra, State v. Bowman, 90 Me. 363, 38 Atl. 331, 60 Am. St. Rep. 266; the presence of the state's attorney while inquiry is being made by the grand jury is not objectionable; Shoop v. People, 45 Ill. App. 110; but the presence of a private prosecutor is ground for reversal of a judgment of conviction; Wilson v. State, 70 Miss. 595, 13 South. 225, 35 Am. St. Rep. 664.

The grand jury can be discharged only by order of the court or the final adjournment of the term; Jones v. U. S., 162 Fed. 417, 89 C. C. A. 303. In the absence of an order of the court the grand jury may meet and adjourn while in existence whether the court is in session or not; id. Neither the improper discharge of a grand juror nor the absence of one or more will invalidate an indictment if the number required to find one are present; id. The provisions of the grand jurors' oath to make diligent inquiry and presentment, not to present for envy, hatred or malice, and to leave no one unrepresented for fear, favor or affection are mandatory, but the requirement to keep the nation's counsel, his fellows' and his own secret is not so; Atwell v. U. S., 162 Fed. 97, 89 C. C. A. 97, 17 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1049, 15 Ann. Cas. 253. If after the presentment an indictment has been found and made public and the accused has been apprehended and the grand jury finally discharged, the grand jurors are no longer bound to keep their proceedings secret; Atwell v. U. S., 162 Fed. 97, 89 C. C. A. 97, 17 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1049, 15 Ann. Cas. 253; reversing In re Atwell, 140 Fed. 368.

The privilege given by the fifth amendment to the constitution, that no person shall be compelled in any criminal case to be a witness against himself, extends to a proceeding before a grand jury; Counselman v. Hitchcock, 142 U. S. 547, 12 Sup. Ct. 195, 35 L. Ed. 1110.

That provision has no application to criminal procedure in the Cherokee Nation whose powers of self-government antedated the constitution; Talton v. Mayes, 163 U. S. 376, 16 Sup. Ct. 986, 41 L. Ed. 196.

The fifth amendment is satisfied by one inquiry and adjudication, and an indictment found by the proper grand jury should be accepted anywhere within the United States as at least prima facie evidence of probable cause and sufficient basis for removal from the district where the person arrested is found to the district where the indictment was found; Beavers v. Henkel, 194 U. S. 73, 24 Sup. Ct. 605, 48 L. Ed. 882.

The place where such inquiry must be had, and the decision of the grand jury obtained, is the locality in which by the constitution and laws the final trial must be had; Beavers v. Henkel, 194 U. S. 73, 24 Sup. Ct. 605, 48 L. Ed. 882.

The disqualification of grand jurors does not destroy jurisdiction if it otherwise exists and an indictment though voidable is not void, and objections taken seasonably in the trial must be corrected by writ of error and not habeas corpus; Keizo v. Henry, 211 U. S. 146, 29 Sup. Ct. 41, 53 L. Ed. 125.

See INDICTMENT; PRESENTMENT; CHARGE; INFORMATION; INCRIMINATION.

GRAND LARCENY. By the English law simple larceny was divided into grand and petit: the former was committed by the stealing of property exceeding twelve pence in value; the latter, when the property was of the value of twelve pence or under; Stat. West. 1 (3 Edw. I.), c. 15. This distinction was abolished in England by 7 & 8 Geo. IV. c. 29, and is recognized in only a few of the states. Grand larceny was a capital offence, but clergyable unless attended with certain aggravations. Petty larceny was punishable with whipping, "or some such corporal punishment less than death;" and, being a felony, it was subject to forfeiture, whether upon conviction or flight. See 1 Bish. Cr. L. § 679; LARCENY.

GRAND REMONSTRANCE. A constitutional document passed by the British House of Commons in November, 1641. It was in the nature of an appeal to the country, setting forth political grievances. It consisted of a preamble of 20 clauses and the body of the remonstrance with 206 clauses, each of which was voted separately. Its first remedial measure was against papists; its second demanded that all illegal grievances and exactions should be presented and punished at the sessions and assizes and that judges and justices should be sworn to the due execution of the Petition of Rights and other laws. The third was a series of precautions to prevent the employment of evil councilors. See Taswell-Langmead, Engl. Const. Hist. 464; Forsher, Grand Remonstrance. The text will be found in History for Ready Reference, II, 833.

GRAND SERJEANTY. See SERJEANTY.

GRANDCHILDREN. The children of one's children. Sometimes these may take bequests in a will to children; in general they cannot claim; 6 Co. 16. The term grandchildren has been held to include great-grandchildren; 2 Eden 194; contra, Hone v. Van Schaick, 3 Barb. Ch. (N. Y.) 488, 505; Hone v. Van Schaick, 3 N. Y. 538.

GRANDFATHER. The father of one's father or mother. The father's father is called the paternal grandfather; the mother's father is the maternal grandfather.

GRANDFATHER CLAUSE. A clause introduced into several of the constitutions of the southern states, limited the right to vote to those who can read and write any article of the constitution of the United States, and have worked or been regularly employed in some lawful employment for the greater part of the year next preceding the time they offer to register unless prevented from labor or ability to read or write by physical disability, or who own property assessed at three hundred dollars upon which the taxes have been paid; but those who have served in the army or navy of the United States or in the Confederate States in time of war, their lawful descendants in every degree, and persons of good character who understand the duties and obligations of citizenship under a republican form of government were relieved from the operation of this law. In 1902 nine-tenths of the negroes of Alabama were thereby disqualified. In Giles v. Harris, 189 U. S. 475, 23 Sup. Ct. 639, 47 L. Ed. 909, a negro filed a bill in equity praying that the defendant board of registry be required to enroll his name and those of other negroes on the voting list and that certain sections of the constitution of Alabama be declared void as contrary to the XIVth and XVth amendments to the federal constitution.

The bill was dismissed on the ground that equity has no jurisdiction over political matters; Brewer, Brown, and Harlan, JJ., dissenting.

GRANDMOTHER. The mother of one's father or mother. The father's mother is called the paternal grandmother; the mother's mother is the maternal grandmother.

GRANGE. A farm furnished with barns, granaries, stables, and all conveniences for husbandry. Co. Litt. 5 a.

A combination, society, or association of farmers for the promotion of the interests of agriculture, by abolishing the restraints and burdens imposed on it by railway and other companies, and by getting rid of the system of middlemen or agents between the producer and the consumer. Encyc. Dic.

The members of such associations are called grangers, from which was derived the name, applied to certain leading cases, of Granger Cases, which see.

GRANGER CASES. A name applied to six cases decided by the supreme court of the United States in 1876, which are reported in Munn v. Illinois, 94 U. S. 113, 24 L. Ed. 77; Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co. v. Iowa, 94 U. S. 155, 24 L. Ed. 94; Peik v. Ry. Co., 94 U. S. 165, 24 L. Ed. 97; Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co. v. Ackley, 94 U. S. 179, 24 L. Ed. 99; Winona & St. Peter R. Co. v. Blake, 94 U. S. 180, 24 L. Ed. 99; those most frequently cited being Munn v. Illinois, and C., B. & Q. R. Co. v. Iowa. They are so called because they arose out of an agitation commenced by the grangers which resulted in the enactment of statutes for the regulation of the tolls and charges of common carriers, warehousemen, and the proprietors of elevators. The enforcement of these acts was resisted and their constitutionality questioned. The supreme court affirmed the common-law doctrine that private property appropriated by the owner to a public use is thereby subjected to public regulation. They also held that the right of regulation was not restrained by the prohibition of the fourteenth amendment of the federal constitution against the taking by the states of private property without due process of law. A text writer, who was at that time a member of the court, says of these cases: "But these decisions left undecided the question how far this legislative power of regulation belonged to the States, and how far it was in the congress of the United States"; Miller, Const. U. S. 397.

As to what are public uses see EMINENT DOMAIN.

GRANT. A generic term applicable to all transfers of real property. 3 Washb. R. P. 181, 353.

A transfer by deed of that which cannot be passed by livery. Wms. R. P. 147, 149.

An act evidenced by letters patent under the great seal, granting something from the king to a subject. Cruise, Dig. tit. 33, 34.

A technical term made use of in deeds of conveyance of lands to import a transfer. 3 Washb. R. P. 378; Harlowe v. Hudgins, 84 Tex. 107, 19 S. W. 364, 31 Am. St. Rep. 21.

"This word is taken largely where anything is granted or passed from one (the grantor) to another (the grantee). And in this sense it doth comprehend feoffment, bargains and sales, gifts, leases, charges, and the like; for he that doth give or sell doth grant also. . . . And so some grants are of the land or soil itself; and some are of some profit to be taken out of, or from the soil, as rent, common, etc.; and some are of goods and chattels; and some are of other things, as authorities, elections, etc."; Shepp. Touchst. 228.

The term grant was anciently and in strictness of usage applied to denote the conveyance of incorporeal rights, and it is the appropriate word for that purpose. Such rights are said to lie in grant, and not in livery; for, existing only in idea, in contemplation of law, they cannot be transferred by livery of possession. Of course at common law, a conveyance in writing was necessary; hence they were said to lie in grant, and to pass by the delivery of the deed. By the act of 8 & 9 Vict. c. 106, § 2, and also by statute in some states, as New York, Maine, and Massachusetts, all corporeal hereditaments are said to lie in grant as well as in livery. See Sandford v. Travers, 40 N. Y. 140; Bates v. Foster, 59 Me. 160, 8 Am. Rep. 406. Grant is now therefore both sufficient, and technically proper, as a word of conveyance of a freehold estate, and in the largest sense the term comprehends everything that is granted or passed from one to another, and is now applied to every species of property. But although the proper technical word, its employment is not absolutely necessary, and it has been held that other words indicating an intention to grant will answer the purpose; Wms. R. P. 6th Am. ed. 201; 5 B. & C. 101. As to the effect of the word grant in conveyances and how far any covenant is implied therefrom, see COVENANT.

Grant was one of the usual words in a feoffment; and a grant differed but little from a feoffment except in the subject-matter; for the operative words used in grants are dedi et concessi, "have given and granted." But the simple deed of grant has superseded the ancient feoffment, leases, and releases which were used to convey freehold estates in possession. See, generally, 1 Dav. Conv. 73; 2 id. 76.

The word is also applied in the case of copyholds to indicate the acceptance by the lord of a person as tenant. It is termed an ordinary grant when the tenant is admitted in pursuance of a surrender by the preceding tenant; and voluntary grant when the land is in possession of the lord discharged from all rights of any tenant, or as it is termed "in hand;" in that case the lord regrants the land to the new tenant to be holden by copy of court roll.

A grant of personality is a method of transferring personal property, distinguished from a gift, which is always gratuitous, by being founded upon some consideration or equivalent. Such grants are divided as to their subject-matter into grants of chattels real, which includes leases, assignments, and surrenders of leases, and grants of chattels personal, which consist of transfer of the right and possession of them whereby one renounces and the other acquires all title and interest therein. 2 Sharsw. Bla. Com. 440, and see also id., notes 1, 2, and 3. Such a grant may be by parol; 3 M. & S. 7; but they are usually by assignment or bill of sale in writing. The proper legal designation of such a grant is an "assignment" or bargain or sale; 2 Steph. Com. 102.

Office grant applies to conveyances made by some officer of the law to effect certain purposes where the owner is either unwilling or unable to execute the requisite deeds to pass the title.

Among the modes of conveyance included under office grant are levies and sales to satisfy execution creditors, sales by order or decree of a court of chancery, sales by order or license of court, sales for non-payment of taxes and the like. See Blackw. Tax Title, passim; 3 Washb. R. P. 208.

Private grant is a grant by the deed of a private person. See DEED.

Public grant is the mode and act of creating a title in an individual to lands which had previously belonged to the government.

The public lands of the United States and of the various states have been to a great extent conveyed by deeds or patents issued in virtue of general laws; but many specific grants have also been made, and were the usual method of transfer during the colonial period. See 3 Washb. R. P. 181; Johnson v. McIntosh, 8 Wheat. (U. S.) 543, 5 L. Ed. 681; Worcester v. Georgia, 6 Pet. (U. S.) 548, 8 L. Ed. 483. Nothing passes by implication; New York v. Tax Com'rs, 199 U. S. 37, 25 Sup. Ct. 705, 50 L. Ed. 65, 4 Ann. Cas. 381. See LAND GRANT.

Uninterrupted possession of land for a period of twenty years or upward, has been often held to raise a presumption of a grant from the state; Tubbs v. Lynch, 4 Harr. (Del.) 521; Doe v. Roe, 20 Ga. 467, 65 Am. Dec. 633; Barclay v. Howell, 6 Pet. (U. S.) 498, 8 L. Ed. 477; Scales v. Cockrill, 3 Head (Tenn.) 432; Von Rosenberg v. Haynes, 85 Tex. 357, 20 S. W. 143; Brown v. Oldham, 123 Mo. 621, 27 S. W. 409.

By the word grant, in a treaty, is meant not only a formal grant, but any concession, warrant, order, or permission to survey, possess, or settle, whether written or parol, express, or presumed from possession. Such a grant may be made by law, as well as by patent pursuant to a law; Strother v. Lucas, 12 Pet. (U. S.) 410, 9 L. Ed. 1137. See 9 Ad. & E. 532; Dudley v. Sumner, 5 Mass. 472; TREATY.

The term grant is also applied to the creation or transfer by the government of such rights as pensions, patents, charters, and franchises. See Chit. Prerog. 384; and also these several titles.

The word grant is also sometimes used with reference to the allowance of probate, and the issue of letters testamentary, and of administration, as to which see the several titles relating thereto.

GRANT AND DEMISE. In a lease for years these words create an implied warranty of title and a covenant for quiet enjoyment; Stott v. Rutherford, 92 U. S. 107, 23 L. Ed. 486. See COVENANT.

GRANT, BARGAIN AND SELL. Words used in instruments of conveyance of real estate. See CONSTRUCTION. From these words, in many states, is implied a covenant of seisin. See COVENANT.

GRANTEE. He to whom a grant is made.

GRANTOR. He by whom a grant is made.

GRANTZ. In Old English Law. Grandees or noblemen. Jac. L. Dict.

GRASS WEEK. Rogation week. A term anciently used in the inns of court and chancery.

GRASSHEARTH. In Old English Law. The name of an ancient customary service of tenants' doing one day's work for their landlord.

GRASSUM. See GRESSOME.

GRATIFICATION. A reward given voluntarily for some service or benefit rendered, without being requested so to do, either expressly or by implication.

GRATIS (Lat.). Without reward or consideration.

When a bailee undertakes to perform some act or work gratis, he is answerable for his gross negligence if any loss should be sustained in consequence of it; but a distinction exists between non-feasance and misfeasance,—between a total omission to do an act which one gratuitously promises to do, and a culpable negligence in the execution of it: in the latter case he is responsible, while in the former he would not, in general, be bound to perform his contract; Thorne v. Deas, 4 Johns. (N. Y.) 84; 5 Term 143; 2 Ld. Raym. 913.

An appearance gratis is one entered without service of process.

GRATIS DICTUM (Lat.). A saying not required; a statement voluntarily made without necessity.

Mere naked assertions, though known to be false, are not the ground of action, as between vendor and vendee. Thus it is not actionable for a vendor of real estate to affirm falsely to the vendee that his estate is worth so much, that he gave so much for it, etc. But fraudulent misrepresentations of particulars in relation to the estate, inducing the buyer to forbear inquiries he would otherwise have made, are not gratis dicta; Medbury v. Watson, 6 Metc. (Mass.) 246, 39 Am. Dec. 726.

GRATUITOUS. Without valuable or legal consideration. A term applied to deeds of conveyance.

In Old English Law. Voluntary; without force, fear, or favor. Bract. fols. 11, 17.

GRATUITOUS BAILMENT. See BAILMENT.

GRATUITOUS CONTRACT. In Civil Law. One the object of which is the benefit of the person with whom it is made, without any profit, received or promised, as a consideration for it: as, for example, a gift. It is sometimes called a contract of beneficence. It is the result of a classification of contracts, in relation to the motive for making them, under which they are termed either gratuitous or onerous. A contract is onerous when a party is required by its terms or nature to do or give something as a consideration. Howe, Studies in the Civil Law 107.

GRATUITOUS DEED. One made without consideration. 2 Steph. Com. 47.

GRATUITY. See BONUS; BOUNTY.

GRAVAMEN (Lat.). The grievance complained of; the substantial cause of the action. See Greenl. Ev. § 66. The part of a charge which weighs most heavily against the accused. In England, the word is specially applied to grievance complained of by the clergy to the archbishop and bishops in convocation. Phill. Eccl. 1944.

GRAVATIO. An accusation or impeachment. Leg. Ethel. c. 19.

GRAVE. A place where a dead body is interred.

The violation of the grave, by taking up the dead body, or stealing the coffin or grave clothes, is a misdemeanor at common law; 1 Russ. Cr. 414; In re Wong Yung Quy, 6 Sawy. 442, 2 Fed. 624; and has been made the subject of statutory enactment in some of the states. See 2 Bish. Cr. L. § 1188; Dearsl. & B. 169; Com. v. Slack, 19 Pick. (Mass.) 304; State v. McClure, 4 Blackf. (Ind.) 328; DEAD BODY.

When a body has once been buried, no one has the right to remove it without the consent of the owner of the grave, or leave of the proper ecclesiastical, municipal, or judicial authority; Weld v. Walker, 130 Mass. 423, 39 Am. Rep. 465; Wynkoop v. Wynkoop, 42 Pa. 293, 82 Am. Dec. 506.

A singular case, illustrative of this subject, occurred in Louisiana. A son, who inherited a large estate from his mother, buried her with all her jewels, worth two thousand dollars: he then made a sale of all he inherited from his mother for thirty thousand dollars. After this, a thief broke the grave and stole the jewels, which, after his conviction, were left with the clerk of the court, to be delivered to the owner. The son claimed them, and so did the purchaser of the inheritance: it was held that the jewels, although buried with the mother, belonged to the son, and that they passed to the purchaser by a sale of the whole inheritance; Ternant v. Boudreau, 6 Rob. (La.) 488. See 23 Ir. L. T. 405; CEMETERY; DEAD BODY; EXHUMATION.

GRAVIS. Grievous; great. Ad grave damnum, to the grievous damage. 11 Coke 40.

GRAVIUS. A graf; a chief magistrate or officer. A term derived from the more ancient "grafio" and used in combination with various other words as an official title in Germany; as Margravius, Rheingravius, Landgravius, etc. Spel. Gloss.

GRAY'S INN. See INNS OF COURT.

GREAT ASSIZE. An edict of Henry II. of unknown date but probably issued during the first years of his reign. It related to the trial of causes. Green, 1 Sel. Essays in Anglo-Amer. L. H. 125. See GRAND ASSIZE.

GREAT BRITAIN. See UNITED KINGDOM OF GREAT BRITAIN AND IRELAND.

GREAT CHARTER. See MAGNA CARTA.

GREAT LAKES. A name commonly used to designate the five great lakes, viz., Superior, Michigan, Huron, Ontario, and Erie.

The open waters of the Great Lakes are "high seas" within the meaning of the Revised Statutes; U. S. v. Rodgers, 150 U. S. 249, 14 Sup. Ct. 109, 37 L. Ed. 1071. It had been held otherwise in Ex parte Byers, 32 Fed. 406. The common-law doctrine, as to the dominion, sovereignty, and ownership of lands under tide waters on the borders of the sea applies equally to the lands beneath the navigable waters of the Great Lakes; Illinois C. R. Co. v. Illinois, 146 U. S. 387, 13 Sup. Ct. 110, 36 L. Ed. 1018.

See ADMIRALTY; LAKE.

GREAT LAW, THE, or "The Body of Laws of the Province of Pennsylvania and Territories thereunto belonging, Past at an Assembly held at Chester, alias Upland, the 7th day of the tenth month, called December, 1682."

This was the first code of laws established in Pennsylvania, and is justly celebrated for the provision in its first chapter for liberty of conscience. See Linn's Charter and Laws of Pennsylvania (Harrisburg, 1879), pp. 107, 478, etc.

GREAT ROLL. See PIPE ROLL.

GREAT SEAL. A seal by virtue of which a great part of the royal authority in England, is exercised. The appointment of the lord high chancellor, or lord keeper, is made by the delivery of the great seal into his custody. There is one great seal for all public acts of state which concern the United Kingdom. The seal of the United States, or of a state, used in the execution of commissions and other public documents is usually termed the great seal of the United States, or of the state, as the case may be.

GREAT TITHES. In Ecclesiastical Law. The more valuable tithes: as, corn, hay, and wood. 3 Burn, Eccl. Law 680, 681; 3 Steph. Com. 127. See TITHE.

GREE. Satisfaction for an offence committed or injury done. Cowell.

GREECE. A kingdom of Europe. A constitutional monarchy which exists under a constitution framed by a national assembly elected in December, 1863, and adopted October 29, 1864. It is hereditary in the male line, or failing that, in the female line. The king, whose title is King of the Hellenes (by decision of the Conference of London, 1863), was elected by National Assembly in March, 1863. He was the second son of the king of Denmark. The legislative power is vested in the Boulé, now consisting of members elected by manhood suffrage for a term of four years. There must be an attendance of at least one-half of the members to give legality to the proceedings, and no bill can become law without the consent of an absolute majority of members. The assembly has no power to alter the constitution itself. The executive power is vested in the king and a responsible ministry, who are ex officio members of the Boulé.

The supreme court of justice is called, as in ancient Athens, the Areopagus.

GREEN CLOTH. An English board or court of justice, composed of the lord steward and inferior officers, and held in the royal household; so named from the cloth upon the board at which it was held. Cowell.

GREEN SILVER. A feudal custom in the manor of Writtel, in Essex, where every tenant whose front door opens to Greenbury shall pay a half-penny yearly to the lord, by the name of "green silver" or "rent." Cowell.

GREEN WAX. In English Law. The name of the estreats of fines, issues, and amercements in the exchequer, delivered to the sheriff under the seal of that court, which is made with green wax. Cowell.

GREENBACK. This term is the ordinary name popularly applied to some United States treasury issues, and is not applied to any other species of money; Hickey v. State, 23 Ind. 21; but this term alone is not a proper denomination for these notes; Wesley v. State, 61 Ala. 282. See LEGAL TENDER.

GREENHEW. In Forest Law. The same as vert (q. v.). Termes de la Ley.

GREFFE. The register of the court of a fief. Jenks, 1 Sel. Essays Anglo-Amer. L. H. 43.

GREFFIERS. In French Law. Registrars, or clerks of the courts. They are officials attached to the courts to assist the judges in keeping the minutes, writing out judgments, orders, and other decisions given by the tribunals, and deliver copies thereof to the applicants.

GREGORIAN CODE. See CODE.

GREGORIAN EPOCH. The time from which the Gregorian calendar or computation dates; i. e. from the year 1582.

GREMIO. In Spanish Law. The union of merchants, artisans, laborers, or other persons who follow the same pursuits and are governed by the same regulations. The word guild, in English, has nearly the same signification.

GREMIO (Lat.). Bosom. Ainsworth, Dict. De gremio mittere, to send from their bosom; used of one sent by an ecclesiastical corporation or body. A latere mittere, to send from his side, or one sent by an individual: as, a legate sent by the pope. Du Cange. In English law, an inheritance is said to be in gremio legis, in the bosom or under the protection of the law, when it is in abeyance. See IN NUBIBUS.

GRENVILLE ACT. The statute 10 Geo. III. c. 16, by which the jurisdiction over parliamentary election petitions was transferred from the whole house of commons to select committees. Repealed by 9 Geo. IV. c. 22.

GRESSOME (variously spelled Gressame, Grossome; Scotch, grassum). A fine due from a copyholder on the death of his lord. Plowd. fol. 271, 285; 1 Stra. 654. Cowell derives it from gersum.

In Scotland. Grassum is a fine paid for the making or renewing of a lease. Paterson.

GRETNA GREEN. A farmsteading near the village of Springfield, Dumfriesshire, Scotland, eight miles northwest of Carlisle. Cent. Dict. The name was afterward applied to the village which became notorious for the celebration of irregular marriages. By the law of Scotland nothing was required to constitute a marriage but the mutual declaration of the parties in the presence of witnesses—a ceremony which could be performed instantly, and it was immaterial whether or not the parties were minors. These conditions afforded an easy method of evading the Marriage Act, 26 Geo. II. c. 33, which required the publication of banns or a license. By act 19 & 20 Vict. c. 96, § 1, no irregular marriage in Scotland is now valid unless one of the parties had at the date thereof his or her usual place of residence there, or had lived in Scotland for twenty-one days next preceding such marriage.

GREVA. In old records. The seashore, sand, or beach. 2 Mon. Angl. 625; Cowell.

GREVE. A word of power or authority. Cowell.

GRIEVED. Aggrieved. 3 East 22.

GRITH. Peace; protection. Termes de la Ley.

GRITHBRECH (Sax. grith, peace, and brych, breaking). Breach of the king's peace, as opposed to frithbrech, a breach of the nation's peace with other nations. Leges Hen. I. c. 36; Chart. Willielm. Conq. Eccles. S. Pauli in Hist. ejusd. fol. 90.

GRITHSTOLE. A place of sanctuary. Cowell.

GROCE. In Old English Law. A merchant or trader who engrossed all vendible merchandise; an engrosser (q. v.). St. 37 Edw. III. c. 5.

GROCERIES. Articles of provision; the wares of a grocer; general supplies for table and household use.

Shovels, pails, and buckets have been held not to be groceries, although usually kept in a country grocery shop; Gay v. Southworth, 113 Mass. 335. It is a question of fact whether wines and liquors are groceries; Niagara Fire Ins. Co. v. De Graff, 12 Mich. 135. A grocery has been held to be an "offensive trade or calling" within a prohibition of use of a dwelling-house; Dorr v. Harrahan, 101 Mass. 531, 3 Am. Rep. 398. Groceries kept as part of the stock, by a merchant, are not "provisions found on hand for family use," within the meaning of an exemption law; State v. Conner, 73 Mo. 575. See PROVISIONS.

GROOM OF THE STOLE. In England an officer of the royal household who has charge of the king's wardrobe.

GROOM PORTER. An officer belonging to the royal household. Jacob.

GROSS. Absolute, entire. A thing in gross exists in its own right, and not as an appendage to another thing. See IN GROSS.

GROSS AVERAGE. That kind of average which falls on the ship, cargo, and freight, and is distinguished from particular average. See AVERAGE.

GROSS EARNINGS. Earnings of a railroad company while performing work incident to transportation, and reasonably with-

In its corporate power, including the amount received from its equipment (steam shovels, work trains, etc.), but not from the sale of old equipment and surplus supplies and from the repair of cars, were so considered; State v. Ry. Co., 106 Minn. 176, 118 N. W. 679, 1007, 16 Ann. Cas. 426.

GROSS NEGLIGENCE. The omission of that care which even inattentive and thoughtless men never fail to take of their own property. Jones, Bailm.; Neal v. Gillett, 23 Conn. 437; 3 Hurlst. & C. 337.

Such as evidences wilfulness; such a gross want of care and regard for the right of others as to justify the presumption of wilfulness or wantonness. 2 Thomp. Neg. 1264, § 52; such as implies a disregard of consequences or a willingness to inflict injury. Deering, Neg. § 29; Lake Shore & M. S. Ry. Co. v. Bodemer, 139 Ill. 596, 29 N. E. 692, 32 Am. St. Rep. 218.

Lata culpa, or, as the Roman lawyers most accurately called it, dolo proxima, is, in practice, considered as equivalent to dolus, or fraud itself. It must not be confounded, however, with fraud; for it may exist consistently with good faith and honesty of intention, according to common-law authorities; 32 Vt. 652; Shearm. & Red. Neg. § 3; Webb, Poll. Torts 538, n.

The distinction between degrees of negligence is not very sharply drawn in the later cases. See BAILMENT; NEGLIGENCE.

The intentional failure to perform a manifest duty, in reckless disregard of the consequences as affecting the life or property of another; a thoughtless disregard of consequences without the exertion of any effort to avoid them. McDonald v. Ry. Co. (Tex.) 21 S. W. 775; Schindler v. Ry. Co., 87 Mich. 400, 49 N. W. 670. It has been held to have no legal significance which imports other than a want of due care; Stringer v. R. Co., 99 Ala. 397, 13 South. 80.

GROSS RECEIPTS. See TAX.

GROSS WEIGHT. The total weight of goods or merchandise, with the chests, bags, and the like, from which are to be deducted tare and tret.

GROSSE AVENTURE, CONTRAT À LA. (Fr.). In French Marine Law. The contract of bottomry. Ord. Mar. liv. 3, tit. 5.

GROSSEMENT (L. Fr.). Largely; greatly. Grossement enciente or ensient. Big with child; in the last stage of pregnancy. Plowd. 76.

GROSSOME. In Old English Law. A fine paid for a lease. Corrupted from gersum. Plowd. fol. 270, 285; Cowell.

GROUND. Land; soil; earth. See LAND. It may include an improved town lot; Ferree v. School Dist., 76 Pa. 378.

GROUND ANNUAL. In Scotch Law. An annual rent of two kinds; first, the feu-duties payable to the lords of erection and their successors; second, the rents reserved for building-lots in a city, where sub-fcus are prohibited. This rent is in the nature of a perpetual annuity. Bell, Dict.; Erskine, Inst. 11. 3. 52.

GROUND LANDLORD. The grantor of an estate on which a ground-rent is reserved.

GROUND OF ACTION. The foundation, basis, or data, upon which a cause of action rests. See CAUSE OF ACTION.

GROUND RENT. A rent reserved to himself and his heirs, by the grantor of land in fee-simple, out of the land conveyed. See Keneg v. Elliott, 9 Watts. (Pa.) 262; Bosler v. Kuhn, 8 W. & S. (Pa.) 185.

In Pennsylvania it is real estate; Cobb v. Biddle, 14 Pa. 444. See Hirst's Estate, 147 Pa. 319, 23 Atl. 455. The interest of the owner of the rent is an estate altogether distinct and of a very different nature from that which the owner of the land has in the land itself. Each is the owner of a fee-simple estate. The one has an estate of inheritance in the rent, and the other has an estate of inheritance in the land out of which the rent issues. The one is an incorporeal inheritance in fee, and the other is a corporeal inheritance in fee; Irwin v. Bank, 1 Pa. 349; Taylor v. Taylor, 47 Md. 300. So, the owner of the rent is not liable for any part of the taxes assessed upon the owner of the land out of which the rent issues; Philadelphia Library Co. v. Ingham, 1 Whart. (Pa.) 72. Being real estate, it is bound by a judgment, and may be mortgaged like other real estate. It is a rent-service; Ingersoll v. Sergeant, 1 Whart. (Pa.) 337.

A ground-rent, being a rent-service, is, of course, subject to all the incidents of such a rent. Thus, it is distrainable of common right, that is, by the common law; Co. Litt. 142 a; Keneg v. Elliott, 9 Watts (Pa.) 262. So, also, it may be apportioned; Ingersoll v. Sergeant, 1 Whart. (Pa.) 337; Myers v. Silljacks, 58 Md. 323. And this sometimes takes place by operation of law, as when the owner of the rent purchases part of the land; in which case the rent is apportioned, and extinguished pro tanto; Littleton 222. And the reason of the extinguishment is that a rent-service is given as a return for the possession of the land. Thus, upon the enjoyment of the lands depends the obligation to pay the rent; and if the owner of the rent purchases part of the land, the tenant, no longer enjoying that portion, is not liable to pay rent for it, and so much of the rent as issued out of that portion is, consequently, extinguished. See 2 Bla. Com. 41; St. Mary's Church v. Miles, 1 Whart. (Pa.) 235; Ingersoll v. Sergeant, id. 352.

At law, the legal ownership of these two estates—that in the rent and that in the land out of which it issues—can coexist only while they are held by different persons or in different rights; for the moment they unite in one person in the same right, the rent is merged and extinguished; Phillips v. Bonsall, 2 Binn. (Pa.) 142; Penington v. Coats, 6 Whart. (Pa.) 283. But if the one estate or interest be legal and the other equitable, there is no merger; Penington v. Coats, 6 Whart. (Pa.) 283. In equity, however, this doctrine of merger is subject to very great qualification. A merger is not favored in equity; and the doctrine there is that although in some cases, where the legal estates unite in the same person in the same right, a merger will take place against the intention of the party whose interests are united (see Helmhold v. Man, 4 Whart. (Pa.) 421, and cases there cited), yet, as a general rule, the intention, actual or presumed, of such party will govern; and where no intention is expressed, if it appears most for his advantage that a merger should not take place, such will be presumed to have been his intention; and that it is only in cases where it is perfectly indifferent to the party thus interested that, in equity, a merger occurs; Dougherty v. Jack, 5 Watts (Pa.) 457, 30 Am. Dec. 335; Helmhold v. Man, 4 Whart. (Pa.) 421; Richards v. Ayres, 1 W. & S. (Pa.) 487.

A ground-rent being a freehold estate, created by deed and perpetual by the terms of its creation, no mere lapse of time without demand of payment raises, at common law, a presumption that the estate has been released; Trustees of St. Mary's Church v. Miles, 1 Whart. (Pa.) 229. But this is otherwise in Pennsylvania now, by act of April 27, 1855, sec. 7, P. L. 369, whereby a presumption of a release or extinguishment is created where no payment, claim, or demand is made for the rent, nor any declaration or acknowledgment of its existence made by the owner of the premises subject to the rent, for twenty-one years. This applies to the estate in the rent, and comprehends the future payments. And this act makes no exception in behalf of persons under disability when the title accrues, nor of persons taking as heirs at law or distributees; where a life tenant in ground rent released the same absolutely, as against the remainderman the limitation commenced to run from the date on which the first payment thereafter became due and unpaid, rather than at the death of the life tenant; Wallace v. Church, 152 Pa. 258, 25 Atl. 520. It has been held that this act, affecting the remedy merely, is not unconstitutional as impairing the obligation of a contract; Biddle v. Hooven, 120 Pa. 221, 13 Atl. 927; Clay v. Iseminger, 190 Pa. 580, 42 Atl. 1039, affirmed in Wilson v. Iseminger, 185 U. S. 55, 22 Sup. Ct. 573, 46 L. Ed. 804. Independently of this act of assembly, arrears of rent which had fallen due twenty years before commencement of suit might be presumed to have been paid; Trustees of St. Mary's Church v. Miles, 1 Whart. (Pa.)

229. These arrears are a lien upon the land out of which the rent issues; but, as a general rule, the lien is discharged by a judicial sale of the land, and attaches to the fund raised by the sale. See Bantleon v. Smith, 2 Binn. (Pa.) 146, 4 Am. Dec. 430; Sands v. Smith, 3 W. & S. (Pa.) 9; Buck v. Fisher, 4 Whart. (Pa.) 516; Catlin v. Robinson, 2 Watts (Pa.) 378; Irwin v. Bank, 1 Pa. 349.

Ground rents in Pennsylvania were formerly made irredeemable, usually after the lapse of a certain period after their creation. But now the creation of such is forbidden by act of 22 April, 1850. But this does not prohibit the reservation of ground-rents redeemable only on the death of a person in whom a life interest in the rents is vested; Skelley's Appeal, 11 W. N. Cas. (Pa.) 11. The act of April 15, 1869, providing for the extinguishment of irredeemable ground-rents, theretofore created, by legal proceedings instituted by the owner of the land, without the consent of the owner of the ground-rent, was declared unconstitutional; Palairot's Appeal, 67 Pa. 479, 5 Am. Rep. 450.

As ground-rent deeds are usually drawn, the owner of the rent has three remedies for the recovery of the arrears, viz., by action (of debt or covenant; but debt is now seldom employed), distress, and (for want of sufficient distress) the right to re-enter and hold the land as of the grantor's former estate.

As used in a 99-year lease renewable forever, it includes not only the rents but includes the reversion; Camp v. Boyd, 229 U. S. 530, 33 Sup. Ct. 785, 57 L. Ed. 1317.

See 2 Am. L. Reg. 577; 3 id. 65; Cadw. Gr. Rents; Mitch. R. P.

GROWING CROPS. Growing crops raised by the cultivation of man, are in certain cases personal chattels, and in others, part of the realty. A crop is to be considered as growing from the time the seed is put in the ground, at which time the seed is no longer a chattel, but becomes part of the realty, and passes with a sale of it; Wilkinson v. Ketler, 69 Ala. 435. If planted by the owner of the land, they are a part of the realty, but may by sale become personal chattels, if they are fit for harvest, and the sale contemplates their being cut and carried off, and not a right in the vendee to enter and cultivate. So even with trees; Claffin v. Carpenter, 4 Metc. (Mass.) 580, 38 Am. Dec. 381; 9 B. & C. 561; Olmstead v. Niles, 7 N. H. 522; 11 Co. 50. The distinction has been made that growing crops of grain and annual productions raised by cultivation and the industry of man are personal chattels; while trees, fruit, or grass and other natural products of the earth are parcel of the land; Green v. Armstrong, 1

Den. (N. Y.) 550. Matured apples are held personally; Doty v. R. Co., 136 Mo. App. 254, 116 S. W. 1126. But if the owner in fee conveys land before the crop is severed, the crop passes with the land as appertaining to it; Powell v. Rich, 41 Ill. 466; Backinstoss v. Stahler's Adm'rs, 33 Pa. 254, 75 Am. Dec. 592; Bludworth v. Hunter, 9 Rob. (La.) 256; and the same rule applies to foreclosure sales; Lane v. King, 8 Wend. (N. Y.) 584, 24 Am. Dec. 105; Bittinger v. Baker, 29 Pa. 68, 70 Am. Dec. 154; Sherman v. Willet, 42 N. Y. 150. But before the foreclosure sale is confirmed, the purchaser has no title, with right to possession in the crops growing on the land at the time of sale, that will entitle him to maintain replevin therefor after they have been severed by the person in possession; Woehler v. Endter, 46 Wis. 301, 1 N. W. 329, 50 N. W. 1099. Though growing crops, unless reserved, pass under a conveyance of the land; Carpenter v. Carpenter, 154 Mich. 100, 117 N. W. 598; In re Andersen's Estate, 83 Neb. 8, 118 N. W. 1108, 131 Am. St. Rep. 613, 17 Ann. Cas. 941; they are subject to levy and sale the same as other personal property; Erickson v. Paterson, 47 Minn. 525, 50 N. W. 699. If a tenant, who holds for a certain time, plant annual crops, or even trees in a nursery for the purposes of transplantation and sale, they are personal chattels when fit for harvest; Miller v. Baker, 1 Metc. (Mass.) 27; Whitmarsh v. Walker, 1 Metc. (Mass.) 313; 4 Taunt. 316. If planted by a tenant for an uncertain period, they are regarded, whether mature or not, in many respects as personal property, but liable to become part of the realty if the tenant voluntarily abandons or forfeits possession of the premises; 5 Co. 116 a; Debow v. Colfax, 10 N. J. L. 128; Co. Litt. 55; Whipple v. Foot, 2 Johns. (N. Y.) 418, 421, note, 3 Am. Dec. 442. See Craddock v. Riddlesbarger, 2 Dana (Ky.) 206; Stambaugh v. Yeates, 2 Rawle (Pa.) 161; 1 Washb. R. P. 3.

See as to validity and effect of mortgages on crops planted and unplanted, MORTGAGE.

Between the lessor of lands and his lessee on shares, growing crops are personal property, and they may be sold by parol as against a subsequent grantee, especially where the latter has notice of such sale; Nuernberger v. Von Der Heidt, 39 Ill. App. 404. The grantor of farm lands may reserve the growing crops by oral agreement; Kluse v. Sparks, 10 Ind. App. 444, 36 N. E. 914, 37 N. E. 1047.

A successful plaintiff in ejectment is entitled to a standing crop; Hartshorne v. Ingels, 23 Okl. 535, 101 Pac. 1045, 23 L. R. A. (N. S.) 531; Craig v. Watson, 68 Ga. 115; Cox v. Hamilton, 69 N. C. 30; Carlisle v. Killebrew, 89 Ala. 329, 6 South. 756, 6 L. R. A. 617; but not where he has recovered rent for the current year; Gardner v. Kersey, 39 Ga. 664, 99 Am. Dec. 484.

The measure of damages for the destruction of a crop planted, but not yet up, is the rental value of the land and the cost of the seed and labor; but when the crop is somewhat matured, so that the product can be fairly determined, the value thereof when destroyed is the measure of damages; Ohio & Mississippi Ry. Co. v. Nuetzel, 43 Ill. App. 108. Where a crop is lost through the wrongful act of another, the measure of damages is the market value of the crop less the cost of producing, harvesting, and marketing it; Shotwell v. Dodge, 8 Wash. 337, 36 Pac. 254; Gulf, C. & S. F. Ry. Co. v. Haskell, 4 Tex. Civ. App. 550, 23 S. W. 546.

See AWAY-GOING CROPS; EMBLEMENTS; WAY-GOING CROPS.

GROWTH HALFPENNY. A rate paid in some places for the tithe of every fat beast, ox, or other unfruitful cattle. Clayt. 92.

GRUARII. The principal officers of a forest. Cowell.

GUADALUPE HIDALGO, TREATY OF. A treaty between the United States and Mexico, terminating the Mexican War, dated February 2, 1848. It was communicated by the president to the senate on February 23, 1848, and having been amended by the senate and ratified, it was afterwards ratified by the Mexican congress, both houses of which were required to concur. It was somewhat modified by the treaty with Mexico of 1853, by which a large territory was acquired from Mexico. See GADSDEN PURCHASE.

GUADIA. A pledge; a custom. Spel. Gloss; Calv. Lex.

GUAM. The largest and most populous of the Ladrone Islands. It was occupied by the Spaniards in 1688, was captured by the United States steamship Charleston in June, 1898, and was ceded to the United States by the treaty of Paris, December 10, 1898. It is governed by a "Naval Governor," an officer of the United States navy who is commandant of the naval station. It has a court of appeal and courts of first instance.

GUARANTEE. He to whom a guaranty is made. Also, to make oneself responsible for the obligation of another.

The guarantee is entitled to receive payment, in the first place, from the debtor, and, secondly, from the guarantor. He must be careful not to give time, beyond that stipulated in the original agreement, to the debtor, without the consent of the guarantor. The guarantor should, at the instance of the guarantor, bring an action against the principal for the recovery of the debt; King v. Baldwin, 17 Johns. (N. Y.) 384, 8 Am. Dec. 415; Cope v. Smith, 8 S. & R. (Pa.) 116, 11 Am. Dec. 582; 2 Bro. C. C. 579, 582. But the mere omission of the guarantee to sue the principal debtor will not, in general, discharge the guarantor; Cope v. Smith, 8 S. &

R. (Pa.) 112, 11 Am. Dec. 582. See GUARANTY.

GUARANTOR. He who makes a guaranty.

GUARANTY. An undertaking to answer for another's liability, and collateral thereto. A collateral undertaking to pay the debt of another in case he does not pay it. Shaw, C. J., Dole v. Young, 24 Pick. (Mass.) 252.

A provision to answer for the payment of some debt, or the performance of some duty in the case of the failure of some person who, in the first instance, is liable for such payment or performance; Gallagher v. Nichols, 60 N. Y. 438; Bayl. Sur. & Guar. 2.

A promise to answer for the debt, default, or miscarriage of another person. First Nat. Bank v. Babcock, 94 Cal. 96, 29 Pac. 415, 28 Am. St. Rep. 94. See Gridley v. Capen, 72 Ill. 13.

It is distinguished from suretyship in being a secondary, while suretyship is a primary, obligation; or, as sometimes defined, guaranty is an undertaking that the debtor shall pay; suretyship, that the debt shall be paid. Or again, a contract of suretyship creates a liability for the performance of the act in question at the proper time, while the contract of guaranty creates a liability for the ability of the debtor to perform the act; Bayl. Sur. & Guar. 3. Guaranty is an engagement to pay on a debtor's insolvency, if due diligence be used to obtain payment. Reigart v. White, 52 Pa. 440. But if the principal debtor is insolvent, the creditor need not pursue him before suing the guarantor; National Bank of Chester County v. Thomas, 220 Pa. 360, 69 Atl. 813.

The undertaking is essentially in the alternative. A guarantor cannot be sued as a promisor, as the surety may; his contract must be specially set forth. A guarantor warrants the solvency of the promisor, which an indorser does not; President, etc., of the Oxford Bank v. Haynes, 8 Pick. (Mass.) 423, 19 Am. Dec. 334.

The distinction between suretyship and guaranty has been thus expressed: A surety is usually bound with his principal by the same instrument, executed at the same time, and on the same consideration. He is an original promisor and debtor from the beginning, and is held, ordinarily, to know every default of his principal. Usually, he will not be discharged, either by the mere indulgence of the creditor to the principal, or by want of notice of the default of the principal, no matter how much he may be injured thereby. On the other hand, the contract of the guarantor is his own separate undertaking, in which the principal does not join. It is usually entered into before or after that of the principal, and is often supported on a separate consideration from that supporting the contract of the principal. The original contract of his principal is not his contract, and he is not bound to take notice of its non-performance. He is often discharged by the mere indulgence of the creditor to the principal, and is usually not liable unless notified of the default of the principal. Brandt, Sur. & Guar. § 1. See also, Markland Min. & Mfg. Co. v. Kimmel, 87 Ind. 560; White's Adm'r v. Life Ass'n, 63 Ala. 419, 35 Am. Rep. 45; Chatham Nat. Bank v. Pratt, 135 N. Y. 423, 32 N. E. 236. A written guaranty which fails to show on its face the person to whom the guaranty is made is void; Marston v. French, 17 N. Y. Supp. 509; and where a contract contains no guaranty, parol evidence of one is inadmissible; Van Winkle v. Crowell, 146 U. S. 42, 13 Sup. Ct. 18, 36 L. Ed. 880.

At common law, a guaranty could be made by parol; but by the Statute of Frauds, 29 Car. II. c. 3, re-enacted almost in terms in the several states, it is provided that "No action shall be brought whereby to charge the defendant upon any special promise to answer for the debt, default, or miscarriage of another person, . . . unless the agreement upon which such action shall be brought, or some memorandum or note thereof, shall be in writing, signed by the party to be charged therewith, or by some person thereunto by him lawfully authorized." While, under this statute "no action shall be brought" on a contract not in writing, etc., yet such a contract may be enforced by a court against an attorney, by summary proceedings; 1 Cr. & J. 374.

"Any special promise" in the act does not apply to promises implied in law; Brandt, Sur. & Guar. § 53.

The following classes of promises have been held not within the statute, and valid though made by parol.

First, where there is a liability pre-existent to the new promise.

1. Where the principal debtor is discharged by the new promise being made; Gleason v. Briggs, 28 Vt. 135; Walker v. Penniman, 8 Gray (Mass.) 233; 1 Q. B. 933; Skelton v. Brewster, 8 Johns. (N. Y.) 376; Browne, Stat. Fr. §§ 166, 193; and an entry of such discharge in the creditor's books is sufficient proof; Corbett v. Cochran, 3 Hill (S. C.) 41, 30 Am. Dec. 348. This may be done by agreement to that effect; Wood v. Corcoran, 1 Allen (Mass.) 405; by novation, by substitution, or by discharge under final process; 1 B. & Ald. 297; Blankenship & Co. v. Tillman (Tex.) 18 S. W. 646; but mere forbearance, or an agreement to forbear pressing the claim, is not enough; 1 Sm. L. Cas. 387; Harrington v. Rich, 6 Vt. 666.

2. Where the principal obligation is void or not enforceable when the new promise is made, and this is contemplated by the parties. But if not so contemplated, then the new promise is void; Burge, Surety 10; 1 Burr. 373. But see, on this point, Nabb v. Koontz, 17 Md. 283; Nelson v. Dubois, 13

Johns. (N. Y.) 175; Connerat v. Goldsmith, 6 Ga. 14.

3. So where the promise does not refer to the particular debt, or where this is unascertained; 1 Wils. 305.

In these three classes the principal obligation ceases to exist after the new promise is made.

4. Where the promisor undertakes for his own debt. But the mere fact that he is indebted will not suffice, unless his promise refers to that debt; nor is it sufficient if he subsequently becomes indebted on his own account, if not indebted when he promises, or if it is then contingent; Suydam v. Westfall, 4 Hill (N. Y.) 211. See Morris v. Gaines, 82 Tex. 255, 17 S. W. 538. The provision of the statute does not apply whenever the main purpose of the promisor is not to answer for another, but to subserve some pecuniary or business purpose of his own, although it may be in form a promise to pay the debt of another; Davis v. Patrick, 141 U. S. 479, 12 Sup. Ct. 58, 35 L. Ed. 826. So, if the vendee of land promise to pay the purchase-money on a debt due by the vendor; Morris v. Gaines, 82 Tex. 255, 17 S. W. 538.

5. Where the new promise is in consideration of property placed by the debtor in the promisor's hands; Alger v. Scoville, 1 Gray (Mass.) 391; Maxwell v. Haynes, 41 Me. 559; Meyer v. Hartman, 72 Ill. 442. And where the new promise is made in a transaction which is in substance a sale to the promisor; Brandt, Sur. & Guar. § 65.

6. Where the promise does not relate to the promisor's property, but to that of the debtor in the hands of the promisor.

7. Where the promise is made to the debtor, not the creditor; because this is not the debt of "another" than the promisee; Alger v. Scoville, 1 Gray (Mass.) 391; 11 Ad. & E. 438.
